ATALANTA in CALYDON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

CHASTELARD: a Tragedy. Crown 8vo, 7s.

POEMS and BALLADS. First Series. Crown 8vo, or fcap. 8vo, 9s.

NOTES on POEMS and REVIEWS. Demy 8vo, 1s.

POEMS and BALLADS. Second Series. Crown 8vo, or fcap. 8vo, 9s.

POEMS and BALLADS. Third Series. Crown 8vo, 7s.

SONGS BEFORE SUNRISE. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BOTHWELL: a Tragedy. Crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.

SONGS of TWO NATIONS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GEORGE CHAPMAN. (Introduction to Vol. II. of GEORGE CHAPMAN'S WORKS) Crown 8vo, 6s.

ESSAYS and STUDIES. Crown 8vo, 12s.

ERECHTHEUS: a Tragedy. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SONGS of the SPRINGTIDES. Crown 8vo, 6s.

STUDIES in SONG. Crown 8vo, 7s.

MARY STUART: a Tragedy. Crown 8vo, 8s.

TRISTRAM of LYONESSE. Crown 8vo, 9s.

A CENTURY of ROUNDELS. Small 4to, 8s.

A MIDSUMMER HOLIDAY. Crown 8vo, 7s.

MARINO FALIERO: a Tragedy. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A STUDY of VICTOR HUGO. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MISCELLANIES. Crown 8vo, 12s.

LOCURINE: a Tragedy. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A STUDY of BEN JONSON. Crown 8vo, 7s.

THE SISTERS: a Tragedy. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

NATIONAL APPROACHING DIVISION OF PROFITS.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. PROVIDENT INSTITUTION. PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED, £4,000,000.
INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.
PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

The Next Division of Profits will be made as at 20th November, 1892, and all persons now insuring will participate.

Messrs. HUTCHINSON beg to announce that the SECOND EDITION of Mrs. OLIPHANT'S New Novel The CUCKOO in the NEST, in 3 vols., was immediately exhausted. A THIRD EDITION is now ready.

A SECOND EDITION this day of The JAPS AT HOME, By DOUGLAS SLADEN. With over 50 Full-Page and other Illustrations. In demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

A New Novel, in 3 vols., by the late Mrs. LOCKETT (of Sydney), entitled JUDITH GRANT, is ready this day at all the Libraries.

BY DARLEY DALE.
THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH. In 3 vols.

The National Observer says: "Darley Dale has achieved a considerable success. If taste, style, and humour go to the making of a good novel, then 'The Village Blacksmith' ought to rank high. Every chapter has the great attraction of novelty, all the characters are well drawn, and many of them felicitous conceptions."

THE HON. MRS. CHETWYND'S NEW NOVEL.
A BRILLIANT WOMAN. In 3 vols.

The Manchester Guardian says: "There is excellent work in 'The Brilliant Woman.' Mrs. Chetwynd shows great skill."

HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

NEW EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE CANONS of the FIRST FOUR GENERAL COUNCILS of NICEA, CONSTANTINOPLE, EPHEBUS, and CHALCEDON. With Notes. By WILLIAM BRIGHT, D.D., Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Oxford.

"RULERS OF INDIA."

A Popular History of the Indian Empire, in a Series of Half-Crown Political Biographies.

Edited by Sir WILLIAM WILSON HUNTER, K.C.S.I., &c.

NEW VOLUME, crown 8vo, blue cloth, gilt lettered, with Portrait and Map, 2s. 6d.

ALBUQUERQUE, and the EARLY PORTUGUESE SETTLEMENTS IN INDIA. By H. MORSE STEPHENS, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford, Author of "A History of the French Revolution," "The Story of Portugal," &c.

"A pleasantly written and trustworthy book on an interesting man and time."

Saturday Review.

READY IMMEDIATELY.

LORD LAWRENCE: and the Reconstruction of India under the Crown. By Sir C. U. ARCHIBSON, K.C.S.I., LL.D.

OTHER VOLUMES NOW PUBLISHED.

AKBAR: and the Rise of the Mughal Empire. By Colonel MALLESON, C.S.I.

MADHUJI SINDHIA: and the Hindu Re-conquest of India. By H. G. KEENE, Esq., M.A., C.I.E.

DUPLEIX: and the Struggle for India by the European Nations. By Colonel MALLESON, C.S.I.

WARREN HASTINGS: and the Founding of the British Administration. By Captain L. J. TROTTER.

THE MARQUESS of CORNWALLIS: and the Consolidation of British Rule. By W. S. SETON-KARR, Esq.

MOUNTSTUART ELPHINSTONE: and the Making of South-Western India. By J. S. COTTON, Esq., M.A.

LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK: and the Company as a Governing and Non-Trading Power. By DEMETRIUS BOULGER, Esq.

VISCOUNT HARDINGE: and the Advance of the British Dominion into the Punjab. By his Son and Private Secretary, the Right Hon. VISCOUNT HARDINGE.

RANJIT SINGH: and the Sikh Barrier between our Growing Empire and Central Asia. By Sir LEPEL GRIFFIN, K.C.S.I.

THE MARQUESS of DALHOUSIE: and the Final Development of the Company's Rule. By Sir WILLIAM WILSON HUNTER, K.C.S.I., M.A.

CLYDE and STRATHNAIRN: and the Suppression of the Great Revolt. By Major-General Sir OWEN TUDOR BURNE, K.C.S.I.

EARL CANNING: and the Transfer of India from the Company to the Crown. By Sir HENRY S. CUNNINGHAM, K.C.I.E., M.A.

THE EARL of MAYO: and the Consolidation of the Queen's Rule in India. By Sir WILLIAM WILSON HUNTER, K.C.S.I.

Volumes on AURANGZEB, LORD CLIVE, the MARQUESS of WELLESLEY, and the MARQUESS of HASTINGS, are in active preparation.

A COMPANION VOLUME TO "RULERS OF INDIA."

Twenty-eighth Edition, Revised. Seventy-eighth Thousand.

Ready immediately, crown 8vo, cloth, superfine paper, 3s. 6d.

A BRIEF HISTORY of the INDIAN PEOPLES,

from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Sir W. W. HUNTER, K.C.S.I., M.A., LL.D., &c., Editor of the "Rulers of India" Series.

Just published, medium 8vo, half-roan, gilt top, 8s. 6d.

THE TABLE TALK of JOHN SELDEN. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by S. H. REYNOLDS, M.A., late Fellow and Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford; Editor of "Bacon's Essays."

Just published, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 32s.

NOTES on the NICOMACHEAN ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. By J. A. STEWART M.A., Student and Tutor of New College, Oxford.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

GRAMMAR of the DANO-NORWEGIAN LAN-GUAGE. By J. Y. SARGENT, M.A., Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford.

FULL CATALOGUES ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE,
AMEN CORNER, E.C.

BLACKIE & SON'S
NEW ILLUSTRATED STORY BOOKS.

NEW BOOKS BY G. A. HENTY.

BERIC the BRITON: a Story of the Roman Invasion. By G. A. HENTY. With 12 Page Illustrations by W. Parkinson. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

IN GREEK WATERS: a Story of the Grecian War of Independence (1821-1827). By G. A. HENTY. With 12 Page Illustrations by W. A. Stacey, and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

CONDEMNED as a NIHILIST: a Story of Escape from Siberia. By G. A. HENTY. With 8 Page Illustrations by Walter Paget. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

Also by the SAME AUTHOR.

The Dash for Khartoum. 6s.

Redskin and Cowboy. 6s.

By Right of Conquest. 6s.

By England's Aid. 6s.

With Lee in Virginia. 6s.

By Pike and Dyke. 6s.

The Lion of St. Mark. 6s.

Captain Bailey's Heir. 6s.

Bonnie Prince Charlie. 6s.

For the Temple. 6s.

The Young Carthaginian. 6s.

With Wolfe in Canada. 6s.

The Lion of the North. 6s.

With Clive in India. 6s.

In Freedom's Cause. 6s.

Through the Fray. 6s.

Under Drake's Flag. 6s.

True to the Old Flag. 6s.

Held Fast for England. 6s.

Maori and Settler. 6s.

One of the 25th. 5s.

In the Reign of Terror. 5s.

Orange and Green. 5s.

Bravest of the Brave. 5s.

A Final Reckoning. 5s.

The Cat of Bubastes. 5s.

For Name and Fame. 5s.

Dragon and the Raven. 5s.

St. George for England. 5s.

By Sherluck. 5s.

Facing Death. 5s.

A Chapter of Adventures. 5s. 6d.

Sturdy and Strong. 2s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY ROBERT LEIGHTON.

THE THIRSTY SWORD: a Story of the Norse

Invasion of Scotland (1242-1263). By ROBERT LEIGHTON. With 8 Page Illustrations by Alfred Pearce, and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

NEW BOOK BY ANNE BEALE

THE HEIRESS of COURTLEROY. By Anne

BEALE, Author of "Squire Lisle's Bequest," "Queen of the May," &c. With 8 Page Illustrations by T. C. H. Castle. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

NEW BOOK BY ANNIE E. ARMSTRONG.

A VERY ODD GIRL; or, Life at the Gabled

Farm. By ANNIE E. ARMSTRONG. With 6 Page Illustrations by S. T. Dadd. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY C. J. HYNE.

THE CAPTURED CRUISER; or, Two Years from Land. By C. J. HYNE. With 6 Page Illustrations by F. Brangwyn. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY EDGAR PICKERING.

AN OLD - TIME YARN. Containing the Adventures of Anthony Ingram and his Shipmates in the West Indies and Mexico with Hawkins and Drake. By EDGAR PICKERING. Illustrated by 6 Page Pictures drawn by Alfred Pearce. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES AT 3s.

Patience Wins; or, War in the Works. By G. MANVILLE FENN. With 6 Page Illustrations. New Edition.

Mother Carey's Chicken; Her Voyage to the Unknown Isle. By G. MANVILLE FENN. With 6 Page Illustrations by A. Forrester. New Edition.

The Missing Merchantman. By HARRY COLLINGWOOD. With 6 Page Illustrations by W. H. Overend. New Edition.

NEW VOLUMES AT 2s. 6d.

A Rough Road; or, How the Boy made a Man of Himself. By Mrs. G. LINN-EL'S BANKS. Illustrated by Alfred Pearce.

Penelope and the Others: a Story of Five Country Children. By AMY WALTON. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke.

A Cruise in Cloudland. By HENRY FRITH. Illustrated by W. S. Stacey.

The Two Dorothy's: a Tale for Girls. By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN. Illustrated by Gordon Browne.

NEW VOLUMES AT 2s.

An Unexpected Hero. By ELIZ. J. LYSAGHT. With 3 Page Illustrations by S. T. Dadd.

The Bushranger's Secret. By Mrs. HENRY CLARKE, M.A. With 3 Page Illustrations by W. Stacey.

The White Squall: a Story of the Sargasso Sea. By JOHN C. HUTCHESON. With 3 Page Illustrations by John Schonberg. New Edition.

The Wreck of the "Nancy Bell"; or, Cast Away on Kerguelen Land. By JOHN C. HUTCHESON. With 3 Page Illustrations by W. S. Stacey. New Edition.

The Joyous Story of Toto. By LAURA E. RICHARDS. With 30 Humorous Illustrations by E. H. Garrett. New Edition.

NEW VOLUMES AT 1s. 6d.

Phil and His Father. By ISMAI THORNE. Illustrated by S. T. Dadd.

Prim's Story. By L. E. TIDDMAN. Illustrated by T. H. Wilson.

Blackie & Son's New Illustrated Catalogue of Books suitable for Presentation, School Prizes, Rewards, &c., with Synopses of their Contents, sent post free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 49 AND 50, OLD BAILEY.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW AND FORTHCOMING WORKS.

NEW VOLUME OF POEMS BY LORD TENNYSON.

Now ready.

THE DEATH OF OENONE, AKBAR'S DREAM,
AND OTHER POEMS.

By ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON, Poet-Laureate.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVELS.

HELEN TREVERYAN; or, the Ruling Race. By JOHN ROY. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.SCOTSMAN.—"The story is bright and interesting. Indian life and scenery and Anglo-Indian types are described with life-like sincerity and a convincing air of first-hand knowledge."
GUARDIAN.—"By no means an ordinary novel.... A clear and well-drawn picture of Indian life, and of good men and women there; one that aptly reminds us that the old-fashioned traditions of truth and honour are not by any means extinct in our distant empire."THE HEIR-PRESUMPTIVE and the HEIR-APPARENT. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. 3 vols., crown 8vo. [Immediately.]DON ORSINO. By F. MARION CRAWFORD. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d. [November 8.]UNDER PRESSURE. Scenes from Roman Life. By the MARCHESA THEODOLI. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.
GLASGOW HERALD.—"A singularly fresh and well-written novel. A very distinct air of reality pervades the entire book."NEW VOLUMES OF MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.THE RAILWAY MAN and his CHILDREN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.THE MARRIAGE of ELINOR. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.THAT STICK. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE. Illustrated by J. W. HENNESSY.DOMBEY and SON. By CHARLES DICKENS. 52 Illustrations.CHRISTMAS BOOKS. By CHARLES DICKENS. 65 Illustrations.SKETCHES by BOZ. By CHARLES DICKENS. 44 Illustrations. [November.]

NEW VOLUME OF THE CAMBRIDGE SHAKESPEARE.

THE WORKS of WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT. In 9 vols. Vol. VIII. Containing "King Lear," "Othello," "Anthony and Cleopatra," "Cymbeline." 8vo, 10s. 6d.NOTES and QUERIES.—"The best and most authoritative text of Shakespeare yet produced, or, indeed, likely to be produced. No Shakesperian scholar since Dyce has had sounder judgment or more unerring instinct, while none has shown a finer temper."

NEW BOOK BY SIR JOHN LUBBOCK.

THE BEAUTIES of NATURE; and the Wonders of the World we Live In. By the Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.LALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Is eminently readable. His wide range of knowledge gives him the means of telling us the effect and present position of the latest scientific discoveries.... Will be widely read, we have little doubt; and that it will well deserve the popularity in store for it is equally evident."TIMES.—"Contains delightful gossip about the fairyland of the animal and plant world, the mountains, the sea, the air, and the stars."

NEW BOOK BY MR. FRANCIS GALTON.

FINGER PRINTS. By FRANCIS GALTON, F.R.S. With numerous Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

WITH NEW PREFATORY CHAPTER.

HEREDITARY GENIUS: an Enquiry into its Laws and Consequences. By FRANCIS GALTON, F.R.S. New Edition. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. net.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE GOLDEN TREASURY" SERIES.

LYRIC LOVE: an Anthology. Edited by WILLIAM WATSON. With a Steel Vignette after Stothard, engraved by W. Ridgway. 18mo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S NEW STORY BOOK.

THE GIRLS and I. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH, Author of "Carrots," &c. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.SCOTSMAN.—"The simplicity, naturalness, and good nature of the girls, and the character of their actions makes the book always interesting and charming."MORNING POST.—"Cherry and full of life as Mrs. Molesworth knows how to make her tales, it is likely to be a favourite."

BY THE LATE BISHOP LIGHTFOOT.

DISSERTATIONS on the APOSTOLIC AGE. By the late J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Bishop of Durham. Published by the Lightfoot Trustees. 8vo, 14s.

Containing the Dissertations which are included in the well-known Commentaries upon certain of St. Paul's Epistles.

THE EARLY NARRATIVES of GENESIS. By Professor H. E. RYLE, B.D. Crown 8vo, 3s. net.

Their object is to discuss the contents of the opening chapters of Genesis in a simple and untechnical style, with special reference to the modifications of view which the frank recognition of the claims of Science and criticism seems to demand.

SCOTSMAN.—"This courageous little book will do more to reconcile science with true religion than half the treatises which have been written with that object."GLASGOW HERALD.—"In this admirable little book we have an excellent illustration of the new methods of believing criticism."

BY THE LATE FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE.

CHRISTMAS DAY; and other Sermons. By the late FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.THEOLOGICAL ESSAYS. By the Same Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
* * * The first two volumes of a cheaper edition of the collected works uniform with the Lincoln's Inn Sermons already published.

NEW VOLUME OF MACMILLAN'S SHILLING PRIMERS.

PRIMER of DOMESTIC ECONOMY. By EDITH A. BARNETT and H. C. O'NEILL. 18mo, 1s.SATURDAY REVIEW.—"A capital little book for the young householder.... It is the excellent merit of this handbook that its teaching takes a most practical form, and is strictly elementary. It lays down a sure foundation of first principles for the use of the beginner, and altogether we do not know a better little book on a great subject than this."

EDITION DE LUXE.

THE MAKERS of VENICE. Doges, Conquerors, Painters, and Men of Letters. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. With Illustrations by R. R. Holmes, F.S.A., and 30 additional Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s. net.

* * * This Edition is limited to 500 copies.

UNIFORM WITH "CRANFORD" AND THE "VICAR OF WAKEFIELD."

DAYS with SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY. Reprinted from the Spectator. With Illustrations by Hugh Thompson. New Edition. Crown 8vo, elegant, 6s.

SIR JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN, BART.

HORÆ SABBATICÆ. Reprint of Articles contributed to the Saturday Review by Sir JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN, Bart., K.C.S.I. Third Series. Globe 8vo, cloth, 5s.

* * * The First and Second Series still on sale.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

THE LIBRARY. By ANDREW LANG. With a Chapter on Modern English Illustrated Books by AUSTIN DOBSON. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

* * * EDITION DE LUXE (limited to 300 copies, 75 of which are for America) printed on hand-made super-royal and bound in buckram, 21s. net.

LARGE PAPER EDITION.

THE POEMS of WORDSWORTH. Chosen and Edited by MATTHEW ARNOLD. With Steel Portrait engraved by C. H. Jeens. Printed on India paper, and mounted on Title. The Text printed on Dutch hand-made. 8vo, buckram, 10s. 6d. net.

* * * This Edition is limited to 250 copies, 50 of which are for America.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CHEAPER RE-ISSUE OF "THE GOLDEN TREASURY" SERIES.

LETTERS of WILLIAM COWPER. Edited, with Introduction, by the Rev. WILLIAM BENHAM, B.D., F.S.A., Rector of St. Edmund the King, Lombard Street. 18mo, 2s. 6d. net.

BY THE LATE JOHN RICHARD GREEN.

STRAY STUDIES from ENGLAND and ITALY. By JOHN RICHARD GREEN. Second and Cheaper Edition. Globe 8vo, cloth, 5s.DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Take the volume as a whole, and it will be found to be one of the most lively and delightful little books which has appeared among us for a long time past."

THE "ENGLISH CITIZEN" SERIES.

A New and Cheaper Edition in Monthly Volumes, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

CENTRAL GOVERNMENT. By H. D. TRAILL.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE No. 397, NOVEMBER, 1892.

CONTENTS.

- 1.—DON ORSINO. By F. MARION CRAWFORD. Chaps. XXVI., XXVII.
- 2.—BINDON HILL. By W. WARDE FOWLER.
- 3.—THE AWKWARD SQUADS.
- 4.—AN OLD FRENCH PRINTER. By H. C. MACDOWALL.
- 5.—THE STORY of a FREE LANCE. By CHARLES EDWARDS.
- 6.—ROUSSEAU'S THEORY of EDUCATION. By A. E. STREET.
- 7.—A DEBT of HONOUR.
- 8.—THE TWO FOUDROYANTS.
- 9.—THE DEATH of TENNYSON. By the Rev. Canon AINGER.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE for NOVEMBER, 1892, price Sixpence, contains—

- 1.—ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON. Engraved by W. DISCOMBE GARDNER after the Picture by G. F. WAITS, R.A. Frontispiece.
- 2.—HOW I FOUND the OUTCAST SIBERIAN LEPERS. An Interview with Miss KATE MARSDEN.
- 3.—SALLY DOWS. Chaps. II., III. (To be continued.) DRET HARTZ. Illustrated by W. D. ALMOUND.
- 4.—OTTER HUNTING. W. C. A. BLEW. Illustrated by H. Fidler.
- 5.—ON A GRAIN of MUSTARD SEED. JOSEPH HATTON. Illustrated by W. H. MARGETSON.
- 6.—THE GREEN ROOM of the COMEDIE FRANCAISE. FREDERICK HAWKINS. Illustrated.
- 7.—THE FATE of GUY DARRRELL. R. M. STODOLG.
- 8.—THE CRIES of LONDON. GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA. Illustrated.
- 9.—NEW YORK as a LITERARY CENTRE. DOUGLAS SLADEN. With Portraits.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1071.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MESSRS. PERCIVAL'S LIST. DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand.

Just published, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FAITH. Eleven Sermons, with a Preface.

By the Rev. H. C. BEECHING, M.A., Rector of Yattendon, Berks.

Just ready, in 2 vols., sold separately, crown 8vo, 6s. each.

THE VICTORIAN AGE of ENGLISH

LITERATURE. By Mrs. OLIPHANT and F. R. OLIPHANT, B.A.

VOL. I.—The State of Literature at the Queen's Accession, and of those whose work was already done—Men who had made their Name, especially John Gibson Lockhart, Walter Savage Landor, Leigh Hunt—Thomas Carlyle and John Stuart Mill, and other Essayists and Critics—Macaulay and the other Historians and Biographers in the early part of the reign—The Greater Poets—Dickens, Thackeray, and the older Novelists—Index.

VOL. II.—Writers on Religious and Theological Subjects—Scientific Writers—Philosophical Writers—The Younger Poets—The Younger Novelists—Writers on Art—Later Historians, Biographers, Essayists, &c., and the Present Condition of Literature—Journalists—Index.

In the press, demy 8vo, with Maps.

VENICE: an Historical Sketch of the REPUBLIC. By HORATIO F. BROWN, M.A., Author of "Life on the Lagoons."

Just ready, in 2 vols., printed on hand-made paper, bound in buckram, and published in a limited edition, large post 8vo, 21s. net.

A PARADISE of ENGLISH POETRY.

By the Rev. H. C. BEECHING, M.A., Rector of Yattendon, Berks.

The Poems in this Collection comprise the following subjects:—Love—Domestic Affection and Friendship—Death—Nature—Classical—Romance—Pastoral—Art—Man—Patriotism—Religion—Reflective.

Just ready, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HISTORY of ENGLISH: a Sketch of the Origin and Development of the English Language, with Examples, down to the Present Day. By A. C. CHAMPNEYS, M.A., Assistant Master at Marlborough College.

Just published, demy 16mo, 2s. 6d.

A CALENDAR of VERSE.

Being a Short Selection for every day in the year from Twelve Poets, one for each month. With an Introduction by GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

Nearly ready, crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations.

THE EVOLUTION of DECORATIVE

ART: an Essay upon its Origin and Development as illustrated by the Art of Modern Races of Mankind. By HENRY BALFOUR, M.A., F.Z.S., Curator of the Ethnographical Department (Pitt Rivers Collection), University Museum, Oxford.

Just ready, crown 8vo.

BRITISH COLONISATION in OUTLINE.

By the Rev. WILLIAM PARR GRESSWELL, M.A., Author of "Our South African Empire," "A History of the Dominion of Canada," and "Geography of Africa South of the Zambesi," &c.

Just published, demy 16mo, 3s. 6d.

ELIZABETHAN and JACOBÆAN

PAMPHLETS. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

Forming a new Volume of the Pocket Library of English Literature.

Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

THE FRENCH WARS of RELIGION.

Their Political Aspects. By EDWARD ARMSTRONG, M.A., Fellow, Lecturer, and Senior Bursar of Queen's College, Oxford.

Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

THE HYGIENE, DISEASES, and MOR-

TALITY of OCCUPATIONS. By J. T. ARLIDGE, M.D., A.B. (Lond.), F.R.C.P. (Lond.), Consulting Physician to the North Staffordshire Infirmary, late Milroy Lecturer at the Royal College of Physicians, &c., &c.

LONDON: PERCIVAL & CO., KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Issued to Subscribers on the 12th inst.

BIBLIOTHEQUE de CARABAS. Vol. VI.—THE

ATTIS of CAIUS VALERIUS CATULLUS. Translated into English Verse with Dissertations on the Myth of Attis, on the Origin of Tree Worship, and on the Galliambic Metre, by GRANT ALLEN, B.A. Crown 8vo, xii.-156 pp.

With the issue to subscribers the subscription price lapses. The price of the remaining copies is fixed at 7s. 6d. net.

In addition to the ordinary issue of the Bibl. de Carabas, limited to 550 copies, 60 copies are printed in royal 8vo, on Dutch hand-made paper, 50 of which are for sale. Nos. 13, 15, 25, 44, 57, and 58 have not been taken up by purchasers of previous volumes, and are offered at 21s. net.

Purchase of a large-paper copy gives the purchaser the right of refusal of the same number in all the succeeding volumes of the series.

The following works will appear shortly in the Bibl. de Carabas.

PLUTARCH'S ROMANE QUESTIONS. Translated A.D. 1603, by PHILEMON HOLLAND. Now again Edited by FRANK BYRON JEVONS, M.A., Classical Tutor to the University of Durham. With Dissertation on Italian Cults, Myths, Taboos, Man-worship, Aryan Marriage, Sympathetic Magic and the Eating of Beans. Upwards of 300 pp. Subscription price before publication, 7s. 6d. Prospectus will be sent out shortly. [To be ready by Dec. 10.]

R. KIRK'S SECRET COMMONWEALTH; or, a

Treatise on the Invisible People going under the name of Elves, Fauns, and Fairies. Reprinted from the rarest original of 1691, and Edited by ANDREW LANG. [Early in 1893.]

TWO FIFTEENTH CENTURY ENGLISH LIVES of ST. BAARLAM. Edited by JOSEPH JACOBS, with Dissertations upon the influence of Buddhist Legend upon Western Mediaeval Literature. [Early in 1893.]

REYNARD the FOXE. Reprinted from Caxton's

Edition. With a Selection of Woodcuts from the Low German Edition. Edited by JOSEPH JACOBS, with Dissertations upon the Origin and Spread of the Mediaeval Beast Epic. [Easter, 1893.]

Other volumes will be announced in due course. Prospectus of the Series on application.

Mr. NUTT is now soliciting subscriptions for Dr. Sommer's reprint of the RECUYELL of the HISTORIES of TROYE, the first English book printed by Caxton. The reprint will be on the same lines as Dr. Sommer's Edition of Maloray's Morte Darthur, i.e., word for word, line for line, page for page. The number of copies printed will be strictly limited to those actually subscribed for, and will, in no case exceed 250 copies in royal 8vo, 40 copies in 4to on Dutch hand-made paper, and 12 copies in 4to on Japanese vellum. Price of the royal 8vo copies (2 vols., upwards of 450 pp. each), 30s. net for the first 150 copies. Prospectus on application.

CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. VI., No. 8., NOVEMBER, 1s. 6d. net.

Yearly Subscription (Ten Numbers) 13s. 6d. post free.

E. S. SHUCKBURGH: PUNIC WAR in SPAIN.—H. HAYMAN: NOTES on the PASSION of ST. PERPETUA.—A FRENCH TRANSLATION of APOLLONIUS RHODIUS. R. C. SEATON.—PLAUTUS, PERSA. E. A. SONNENSCHEIN.—SKUTSCH'S STUDIES on PLAUTINE PROSODY. W. M. LINDSAY.—KELLER on LATIN POPULAR ETYMOLOGY. H. NETTLESHIP.—BONNET'S LA PHILOGIE CLASSIQUE. C. L. SMITH.—NOTES, ARCHAEOLOGY.—C. TORR on MIDDLETON'S REVIEW of MURRAY'S ARCHAEOLOGY.—MIDDLETON'S REMAINS of ANCIENT ROME. F. B. TARBELL.—SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS.—BIBLIOGRAPHY.

THE JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Vol. V., No. 1., OCTOBER, price 3s.

Annual Subscription, post free, 10s.

Contents:—M. ISIDORE LOEB. By Dr. A. NEUBAUER.—THE DIRGE of COHELETH. II. By the Rev. C. TAYLOR, D.D.—NOTES on HEBREW MSS. in the UNIVERSITY LIBRARY of CAMBRIDGE. IV. By S. SCHUCHTER.—THE LATEST RESEARCHES on PHILO of ALEXANDRIA. By Dr. LEONARD COHN.—FURTHER NOTES on the JEWS of ANGLIA IN ENGLAND. By Joseph JACOBS.—NACHMANIDES. By S. SCHUCHTER.—THE JEWS in the WORKS of the CHURCH FATHERS. By S. KRAUSS.—ANGLO-JUDAICA.—AN ANGLO-JEWISH DIVORCE, A.D. 1242: A WRIT of EDWARD I. By M. D. DAVIS.—NOTES and DISCUSSION.

Vols. I-IV, may be had in cloth; Vols. I, II., at 10s. 6d.; Vols. III., IV., at 12s. 6d. each.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

WAUGH'S STUDY OF TENNYSON, by R. LE GALLIENNE .	427
THE O'CLERY'S THE MAKING OF ITALY, by REGINALD HUGHES .	429
CRUMP'S EDITION OF LANDOR'S POEMS, by STEPHEN WHEELER .	430
CHARAVAY'S EDITION OF CARNOT'S LETTERS, by H. MORSE STEPHENS .	431
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHAAR .	431
GIFT BOOKS .	433
NOTES AND NEWS .	434
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS .	434
BIBLIOGRAPHICAL JOTTINGS .	435
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES .	435
ORIGINAL VERSE: "NOT IN VAIN," by F. P. .	435
MACAZINES AND REVIEWS .	435
MESSRS. PERCIVAL & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS .	436
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS .	436
CORRESPONDENCE—
A Letter attributed to Cromwell, by C. H. Firth; "Conrade," by the Rev. A. L. Mayhew and Dr. J. A. H. Murray .	436
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK .	438
WILKINS'S EDITION OF THE DE ORATORE, by H. RICHARDS .	438
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Soma and Rohinf, by R. Brown, Jun.; The Pronunciation and Spelling of Place-Names in Egypt, by Count d'Hulst .	439
SCIENCE NOTES .	439
PHILOLOGY NOTES .	439
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES .	440
THE CASTELLATED ARCHITECTURE OF SCOTLAND, by J. M. GRAY .	441
CORRESPONDENCE—
Aegean Pottery in Egypt, by Cecil Torr .	442
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY .	442

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND

WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—MISS ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING in all its BRANCHES.

—Authors' Manuscripts, Sermons, Specifications, Law Copying, &c. Terms cash on or before delivery.—MISS C. HYDE WARREN, 310, Strand, W.C.

UNIVERSITY TYPE-WRITING

OFFICE, OXFORD (16, King Edward Street).—MSS. of all descriptions typed and prepared for the press. Literary, Scientific, Medical, and Foreign MSS. carefully copied and revised by experienced typists. Notes taken at the Bullfinch. Shorthand Clerk and Typist sent any distance by train. Translations.—For price list and information address the Secretary.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

DAVID NUTT, 270-271, Strand, London, W.C.

NEW CATALOGUES of OLD and

RARE BOOKS just out and to be had free on application.

No. 31. WORKS ON IRELAND, AMERICA, AFRICA, a Collection of Dances of Death, Oriental History, Travels, and Languages, Theology, Mathematics, Folk-Lore, &c. 625 lots.

No. 32. WORKS OF THE GREEK and LATIN WRITERS, and Books Relating to the Study of Classical Antiquity and Languages. Many fine copies in fine bindings, 823 lots.

CATALOGUE 235 just out.—SPANISH

BOOKS and BOOKS relative to SPAIN. 1,123 Nos. (Bibliography.—Literature.—History.—Genealogy.—Spanish Protestants.—Fine Arts.—Music.—Discoveries and Possessions in America and the Philippine Islands, &c.).—MARTINUS NIJHOFF, The Hague (Holland).

LIVRES CURIEUX des XVe et XVIe

Siècles, traduits pour la première fois: l'Hermaphrodite de Panormita—le Marelchal, comédie de P. Aretino, &c.—ISIDORE LIEUX, 25, Rue Bonaparte, Paris.

AUTOGRAPHES.

SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED AUTO-

GRAPH CATALOGUE and Collector's Guide to the present value of Autographs, 80 pages, crown 4to, on antique paper, containing over 2,000 letters, including the finest Collection of Mendelssohn's Original Music Manuscripts and Letters ever offered for Sale—the earliest known Dickens Manuscript—Letters, &c., by Thackeray, George Eliot, Tennyson, Browning, Bach, Beethoven, Haydn, Cromwell, Queen Elizabeth, Charles I., James I., Nelson, &c., illustrated with a number of interesting Facsimiles. Post-free, 1s. 6d.

NOEL CONWAY & Co., 50B, New-street, Birmingham.

THE ARCHITECTURAL PUBLICATION SOCIETY.

THE DICTIONARY OF ARCHITECTURE.

SUBSCRIBERS and others DESIROUS to COMPLETE their SETS by the acquisition of the later parts are requested to apply at once to Mr. ARTHUR CATES, Hon. Sec., No. 7, Whitehall Yard, S.W. A few complete copies are available for new Subscribers.

Just issued, price 4d.; by post, 5d.

MISS NADEN'S "WORLD-SCHEME"; an Essay. By G. M. McCUR, Editor of "Further Reliques of Constance Naden."

London: WATTS & Co., 171, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Fourth Edition, pp. 399, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

NOTICE is HEREBY GIVEN, that the NEXT HALF-YEARLY EXAMINATION for MATRICULATION in this University will commence on MONDAY, the 9th of JANUARY, 1893. In addition to the Examination at the University, Provincial Examinations will be held at Queen's College, Birmingham; the Merchant Venturers' School, Bristol; Danvers College (for University College), Cardiff; the Royal Medical College, Ipswich; the Training College, New City Road, Glasgow; the Yorkshire College, Leeds; the Wyggeston Schools, Leicester; the School of Science and Art, Newcastle-on-Tyne; the High School, Oswestry; the Athenaeum, Plymouth; and the Grammar School, Portsmouth.

Every Candidate is required to apply to the REGISTRAR (University of London, Burlington Gardens, London, W.) for a Form of Entry not less than five weeks before the commencement of the Examination.

ARTHUR MILMAN, M.A., Registrar.

November 4th, 1892.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY,

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

THURSDAY, 17th NOVEMBER, at 8.30 P.M.,

The following Paper will be read:—"THE DRUIDS OF IRELAND," by Professor JULIUS VON PFUGK-HARTUNG, F.R.Hist.S.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., OULLES, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

MURRAY'S STUDENTS' MANUALS.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

WITH MAPS AND WOODCUTS.

THE STUDENT'S HUME: a History of England from the Earliest Times to the Revolution in 1688. Thoroughly Revised Edition. Continued to the Treaty of Berlin, 1878. By Prof. J. S. BREWER. (830 pp.)

Also in Three Divisions, price 2s. 6d. each. PART I.—a.c. 55—A.D. 1455. PART II.—A.D. 1455—1688. PART III.—1688—1878.

MODERN EUROPE. By R. LODGE, M.A.

EUROPE during the MIDDLE AGES. By HENRY HALLAM.

CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ENGLAND. By HENRY HALLAM.

OLD and NEW TESTAMENT HISTORY. By PHILIP SMITH. 2 vols.

ANCIENT HISTORY. To the Conquests of Alexander the Great. By PHILIP SMITH.

ECCLIASTICAL HISTORY. 2 vols. I.—A.D. 30-1003. II.—1003-1614. By PHILIP SMITH.

ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY. 3 vols. I.—596-1500. II.—1500-1717. III.—1717-1881. By Canon PERRY.

GREECE. To the Roman Conquest. By Sir WILLIAM SMITH. With Coloured Maps and Woodcuts.

ROME. To the Establishment of the Empire. By Dean LIDDELL.

GIBBON. By Sir WILLIAM SMITH.

FRANCE. To the Fall of the Second Empire. By W. H. JERVIS.

ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY. By Canon BEVAN.

MODERN GEOGRAPHY. By Canon BEVAN.

GEOGRAPHY of BRITISH INDIA. By Dr. GEORGE SMITH.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE: its Origin and Growth. By GEORGE P. MARSH.

ENGLISH LITERATURE. With Biographical Notices of the Authors. By T. B. SHAW.

SPECIMENS of ENGLISH LITERATURE. By T. B. SHAW. 5s.

MORAL PHILOSOPHY. By Dr. FLEMING.

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S SMALLER HISTORIES.

These Smaller Histories have been drawn up chiefly for the lower forms in Schools, at the request of several teachers, who require for their pupils more elementary books than the Student's Histories of England, Greece, and Rome. The tables of contents present a full analysis of each work, and have been so arranged that the teacher can frame from them QUESTIONS for the EXAMINATION of his CLASS, the answers to which will be found in the corresponding pages of the volume.

MAPS, PLANS, AND WOODCUTS.

16mo, 3s. 6d. each.

ENGLAND, from the Earliest Times to 1887.

SCRIPTURE HISTORY, continued down to A.D. 70.

ANCIENT HISTORY, down to the Conquests of Alexander the Great.

ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY.

MODERN GEOGRAPHY, Physical and Political 2s. 6d.

ROME, to the Establishment of the Empire.

GREECE, to the Roman Conquest.

CLASSICAL MYTHOLOGY. For Ladies' Schools and Young Persons.

ENGLISH LITERATURE With Lives of our Chief Writers.

SPECIMENS of ENGLISH LITERATURE.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

STANDARD ENGLISH DICTIONARIES.

NEW, ENLARGED, AND CHEAPER EDITION.

Just published, in 1 large vol., super-royal 8vo, 1,384 pp., with 900 Illustrations, cloth, price 12s. 6d.; library sheep, 17s. 6d.; half-russia, 20s.

OGILVIE'S COMPREHENSIVE ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

This DICTIONARY has long been known as one of the most valuable works of reference in the English language. It is now issued, with a large Supplement of additional words and many valuable appendices, at the low price of 12s. 6d.

The SPECIAL FEATURES of the DICTIONARY are:—

- Its full vocabulary and encyclopedic character.
- All important words connected with the arts and sciences, and technology.
- Obsolete words occurring in old standard authors.
- Foreign words frequently met with in English books and periodicals.
- Synonyms, or words closely allied in meaning.
- The definitions and the various shades of meaning belonging to each word are rendered clearer by short examples or quotations.
- The pronunciation of each word shown on an exceedingly simple system.

In the SUPPLEMENT are gathered together a large number of additional words, among which are many recently added to the English language.

The APPENDICES comprise—

- Pronouncing Lists of Greek, Latin, Scriptural, and other Ancient Names; of Modern Geographical Names; and of Modern Biographical Names.
- A Key to noted Names in Fiction, Mythology, Poetry, &c.
- A List of prominent English Writers, with dates of birth and death.
- Words, Phrases, and Noteworthy Sayings, from the Latin, Greek, and Modern Languages, met with in Current English.
- Abbreviations and Contractions commonly used in Writing and Printing.
- Forms of Address in ceremonious communications with Persons of Title or Official Position.
- Tables of the Principal Monies of the world, and their equivalents in English currency.

In 1 vol., fcap. 4to, 864 pp., containing over 80,000 entries, cloth, coloured edges, 5s.; half-Roxburgh, 6s. 6d.; half-morocco, 9s.

A CONCISE DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE,

Etymological and Pronouncing, Literary, Scientific, and Technical.

By CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.,

Editor of Ogilvie's "Imperial Dictionary," New Edition, "Blackie's Modern Cyclopædia," &c.

"We can heartily recommend this neat and handy volume to all who want a copious and trustworthy English dictionary of reasonable dimensions."—Athenæum.

In 4 vols., imperial 8vo, cloth, £5; or half-morocco, £6 6s.

THE IMPERIAL DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A Complete Encyclopædic Lexicon, Literary, Etymological, Scientific, Technological, and Pronouncing.

By JOHN OGILVIE, LL.D.

New Edition, carefully Revised and greatly Augmented. Edited by CHAS. ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.

Illustrated by above 3,000 Engravings on Wood.

"So far as vocabulary and treatment are concerned, we should not wish for anything better than the new 'Imperial.' The etymology is clear and concise, and the illustrations are copious, appropriate, and well executed."—Times.

"It is the best English lexicon of the time."—Spectator.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 49 AND 50, OLD BAILEY.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

TWO NEW BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

- (1.) SKETCHES of LIFE and CHARACTER in Hungary. By MARGARET FLETCHER. Illustrated throughout by Rose le Quesne. Large Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Ready.]

A bright and graphic account of a little-known but very interesting country, by two young English ladies in quest of the picturesque travelling alone and with a great capacity for enjoyment. "Try Hungary is the advice we would give to any one in search of a pleasant place in which to spend his holiday," says the Pall Mall Gazette.

- (2.) FROM ADAM'S PEAK to ELEPHANTA (Ceylon and India). By EDWARD CARPENTER. Fully Illustrated. 8vo. [Shortly.]

The INDUSTRIAL ARTS of the ANGLO-SAXONS. By Baron J. DE BAYE, Correspondent of the National Society of Antiquaries of France and of the Ministry of Public Instruction. With 17 4to Steel Plates (containing 114 Figures) and 31 Woodcuts in the Text. Royal 4to, 21s. [Shortly.]

PREFERENCES in ART, LIFE, and LITERATURE, including Essays on the HISTORY of PRE-RAPHAELITISM and on CONTEMPORARY ENGLISH ART. With 61 Full-page Plates by many of the leading Artists of the day (including 5 R.A.'s, and 9 A.R.A.'s). Imperial 8vo. Exquisitely bound, 21s. [November 15.]

LARGE PAPER EDITION (225 copies), 8ts. net. Nearly all sold.

TEXT-BOOK of EMBRYOLOGY of MAN and MAMMALS. By Dr. OSCAR HERTWIG (Berlin). Translated by EDWARD L. MARK, Ph.D., Hersey Professor of Anatomy in Harvard University. With 339 Figures in the Text and 2 Coloured Plates. 8vo, 21s. [This day.]

BIOLOGY: Text-Book of Elementary. Adapted for the Use of Students for the Examination presented by the conjoint Board of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons. By H. J. CAMPBELL, M.D., Senior Demonstrator of Biology in Guy's Hospital. 136 Cuts. 6s.

PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY: Introduction to. By Dr. THEODOR ZIEHEN (Jena). Translated by C. C. VAN LIEW and Dr. OTTO BEYER. 21 Illustrations, 6s.

"We want such a book badly. We can recommend Ziehen as exceedingly well adapted to give the student a clear idea of the scope and the methods of the new science of physiological psychology."—Nature.

PETROLOGY: Text-Book of. A Description of the Rock-forming Minerals, and a Synopsis of the Chief Types of Igneous Rocks. By F. H. HATCH, Ph.D., F.G.S. of the Geological Survey of U.K. With 86 Cuts. 7s. 6d.

GEORGE ELIOT'S TRANSLATION OF STRAUSS' "JESUS."

THE LIFE of JESUS. By David Friedrich STRAUSS. Translated by GEORGE ELIOT. New Edition, in 1 vol. With an Introduction by OTTO PFLEIDERER, Professor of Theology in the University of Berlin. Large 8vo, 15s. [Shortly.]

HISTORY of the ENGLISH LANDED INTEREST. By RUSSELL M. GARNIER, B.A. (Oxon). 421 pp., 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Mr. Garnier is intimate in his subject. Mr. Kenelm Digby has dealt with its legal aspects; the late Prof. Rogers, Mr. Ashley, Mr. Seebohm, Mr. Cunningham, and a host of writers have written of it as economists, and the literature of the subject in all its many sides is prodigious. It was a happy thought on the part of Mr. Garnier to focus some of the scattered rays of light. He writes, it is important to note, with a living knowledge of the rural England of to-day. He has read much and widely; he has mastered most of the authorities on the subject."—Times. "Full of careful and far-reaching erudition."—Scotsman. "Eminently readable. An important contribution to economic history."—Glasgow Herald.

A BROWNING PRIMER: a Companion to the Pocket Volume of "Selections from the Poetical Works of Robert Browning." By ESTHER PHEBE DEFRIES. With an Introduction by Dr. F. J. FURNIVALL. 16mo, half-cloth, boards, 1s.

A CANAANITISH WOMAN: a Novel. By THOMAS DUNCAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

JENNY'S CASE. By Ellen F. Pinsent. A Cheap Edition of this most successful Novel. In 1 vol., 6s. [Next week.]

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., PATERNOSTER-SQUARE, LONDON.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS OF HOME. Messrs. Charles Dalton, Lionel Rignold, G. W. Cockburn, W. A. Elliott, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and W. Northcote; Miss Evelyn Millard, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Mrs. H. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jecks.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE ARABIAN NIGHTS. Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. Wyse, J. Nelson, F. Glover, and Charles Hawtrej; Misses Vane Featherston, Hend-rson, Nina Bouckault, Eva Williams, Nancy Noel, and Lottie Venne. At 8.15 MY LORD IN LIVERY.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE GUARDSMAN. Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Elliot, W. Draycott, C. P. Little, Compton Cutts, R. Nainby, E. Bertram, and Weedon Grossmith; Mesdames Ellaline Terriss, Agnes Thomas, Isabel Ellissen, Irene Rickards, and Caroline Hall. 8.30, CRAZED. Messrs. C. P. Little, Nainby, and Miss S. Grey.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER. Messrs. Henry Neville, James Fernandez, Leonard Boyne Julius Knight, J. L. Shine, Arthur Williams, Charles Doda-worth; Misses Millward, Blanche Horlock, Fanny Brough.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.

Miss Estelle Burney's Season.

THIS EVENING, at 8, DAVID. Miss Estelle Burney; Messrs. Murray Carson, H. Waring, Beauchamp, Bucklaw; Miss L. Lee and Mrs. Crowe (Miss Bateman). At 8.15, A CAPRICE.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Mrs. Langtry's Season.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, AGATHA TYLDEN, MERCHANT AND SHIPOWNER. Messrs. Lewis Waller, Cyril Maude, W. T. Lovell, P. A. Everill, Edmund Maurice, Rudge Harding, W. Cheesman; Miss Marie Linden and Mrs. Langtry.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, KING LEAR. Mr. Irving, Miss Ellen Terry; Messrs. William Terriss, Alfred Bishop, Howe, Holloway, Frank Cooper, Hague, Tyars, Percival, Haviland, Bond, Harvey, Ian Robertson, Gordon Craig, Powell, Lacey, Belmore, Tabb, Lorriss; Misses Ada Dyas and Maud Milton.

OPERA COMIQUE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, MONSIEUR JACQUES. At 8.45, YOU MUSTN'T LAUGH. Mesdames Annie Hughes, Edmund Phelps, F. Haydon, C. Bealby, F. Fordyce, Thea Lesbrooke, H. Ward, K. Bristowe, M. Vivian, and Helca Carroll; Messrs. Thalberg, Julian Cross, O. Barnett, Brunton Leigh, M'Rae, and A. Lubimoff.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. ROLLO BALMAIN.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, UNCLE TOM'S CABIN. Messrs. Chas. Hermann, Leonard Outram, Bassett Roe, S. Calhaem, M. Drew, Gilbert Yorke, Count Paolo, &c.; Mesdames Chas. Hermann, Nellie Christie, E. Brunton, E. King, and Frances Ivor, &c.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, IN TOWN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, Eric Lewis, H. Gratian, E. Bantock; Misses Phyllis Broughton, Sylvia Grey, and Florence St. John, supported by a powerful company. At 8, THE WHITE LADY.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'LY CARTE.

THIS EVENING at 8.15 p.m., production of HADDON HALL, an original light English opera, the words by Sydney Grundy, the music by Arthur Sullivan.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, CIGARETTE. At 7.50, CUT OFF WITH A SHILLING. Messrs. Collette, Oswald Yorke, A. J. Evelyn, Leslie Holland, Warner, Lascelles, Fair, and Joseph O'Mara; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Amadi, Marion Eric, May Lawrie, M. Collette, H. Vicary, C. Loseby, J. Bradford, and Albu.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, A LUCKY DOG. Messrs. G. W. Anson, John Trosahr, Nicol Rutland, Charles Fawcett, Douglas, Gaytie, and Fred Thorne; Mrs. Cannings, Miss Helen Forsyth, Miss E. Faulkner, and Miss Marie Dagmar. At 8, WITHERED LEAVES. Messrs. Curzon, Pentland, Fawcett; Mesdames Faulkner, Crony.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. Levenston.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE WEDDING EVE. Mesdames Decima Moore, Mabel Love, Kate Chard; Messrs. Joseph Tapley, George Barrett, Arthur Wilkinson, Leonard Russell, and William Elton. At 7.45, THE WOODEN SPOON. Mesdames Violet Robinson, Millie Vere; Messrs. W. Philp and Leonard Russell.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Lessees and Managers.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, OUR BOYS. Mr. David James, Mr. William Farren, Mr. E. W. Gardiner, Mr. Reeves Smith, Mr. Duncan Fleet, &c.; Miss May Whitty, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Cicely Richards, and Miss Sophie Larkin.

ALEXANDER NISBET'S HERALDIC PLATES,

Originally intended for his "System of Heraldry."

WITH NOTES, GENEALOGICAL AND HERALDIC.

By ANDREW ROSS, MARCHMONT HERALD, and FRANCIS J. GRANT, CARRICK PURSIVANT.

Only 200 Copies printed for Sale, price 42s.

"Will doubtless restore Nisbet's treatise, as he himself wrote it, to more authority and his name to more honour than have hitherto been conceded."—Scotsman.

"To all who possess Nisbet's own work the present publication will be an indispensable and valuable supplement."—Glasgow Herald.

"Marchmont Herald has done well in giving to the public a clear and concise account of the life and works of a remarkable man."—The Lyon King of Arms in the Scottish Review.

"The Genealogical Notes appended to the plates are of much value, and must have entailed great research."—Dundee Advertiser.

"A book of reference, which will take its place on the shelves of all students of Scottish family history, and be frequently in their hands."—Academy.

"The plates represent a number of the old Scots families, and were well worthy of being rescued from oblivion."—Poll Mall Gazette.

GEORGE WATERSTON & SONS, London and Edinburgh

CHISWICK PRESS EDITIONS.

Just ready.

THOMAS NASH'S LIFE OF JACK WILTON.

With an Essay on the Life and Writings of Nash. By EDMUND GOSSE. Crown 8vo, paper boards. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made paper, price 7s. 6d. net, and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 15s. net.

Previously published.

JOURNAL OF A VOYAGE TO LISBON.

By HENRY FIELDING, Esq. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With engraved Portrait of Fielding. Limited Edition: 475 copies on hand-made paper, price 7s. 6d. net, and 25 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 15s. net.

SWIFT'S POLITE CONVERSATION [by

SIMON WAGSTAFF, Esq.]. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, paper boards. With engraved Portrait of Swift. Limited Edition: 450 copies on hand-made paper, price 6s. net, and 50 copies on Japanese vellum paper, price 12s. net.

Other volumes in preparation.

Ready November 1st.

SOME NOTES ON BOOKS AND PRINTING:

a Guide for Authors and Others. By C. T. JACOBI, Manager of the Chiswick Press, and Examiner in Typography to the City and Guilds of London Institute. With many typographical specimens and samples of papers. Demy 8vo, price 5s. net.

London: C. WHITTINGHAM & Co., 20, Took's Court, E.C.

Thick 8vo, pp. 318, price 7s. 6d.

FROM THE CAVES AND JUNGLES OF HINDOSTAN.

By H. P. BLAVATSKY.

A translation of Mme. Blavatsky's famous letters from India to the Russian Messenger of Moscow, in 1879; full of strange secrets of Indian life, and gorgeous pictures of Oriental nature.

"It is not necessary to be a Theosophist to admire Madame Blavatsky's letters from India."—Times.

"Brilliant passages."—Glasgow Evening News.

"The book deserves high praise. It shows a glowing imagination and a sprightly fancy, as well as much sympathy with nature, and her descriptions of scenery are often very beautiful."—Manchester Guardian.

THE THEOSOPHICAL PUBLISHING SOCIETY,
7, DUKE STREET, ADELPHI, LONDON, W.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary book illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Twenty-ninth Edition. Post free.

BLUSHING: Its Cause, Self-Treatment, and a Rapid, Permanent, and Inexpensive Cure. Varulagen's System Explained by a Specialist.

A. B. SMITH, 131, High Park Street, Liverpool.

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons' PUBLICATIONS.

NEW NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.

At all Libraries.

MONA MACLEAN, MEDICAL STUDENT. By GRAHAM TRAVERS. 3 vols, crown 8vo, 25s. 6d.

"Distinctly 'an up-to-date' novel.....This heroine is a singularly interesting and sympathetic personage, delighting in self-sacrifice,—a strange combination of astuteness and simplicity, perspicacity, and unworldliness.... All the minor characters in this clever and charming story are sketched with a strong hand, equally versed in bold outline and delicate shading. In a word, a delightful book."—Daily Telegraph.

This Day is published, Third Edition.

THE EARLY RELIGION OF ISRAEL.

As set forth by Biblical Writers and by Modern Critical Historians. By JAMES ROBERTSON, D.D., Professor of Oriental Languages in the University of Glasgow. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"A scholarly and scientific treatise.....Every student of the Old Testament, of whatever critical school, to whom truth is dearer than party, will welcome this volume as the most brilliant contribution to the controversy which has yet appeared from the Conservative side."—Thinker.

This Day is published.

OTHELLO: a Critical Study. By WILLIAM ROBERTSON TURNBULL. Small demy 8vo, 15s.

ESSAYS and SERMONS. By the late

W. ROBERTSON, B.D., Minister of the parish of Sprouston. With a Memoir and Portrait. Crown 8vo, 5s. 6d.

This Day is published.

ÆOLUS: a Romance in Lyrics. By

JEANIE MORISON, Author of "The Purpose of the Ages," "Ane Book of Ballades," "There as Here," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s.

This Day is published.

MARMORNE. By P. G. Hamerton, Author of "Wanderholme." New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"A tale of no ordinary merit. It is strong in incident and admirable in construction."—Poll Mall Gazette.
"A novel which is extremely fascinating and eminently picturesque."—Spectator.

This Day is published.

THE STORY OF VALENTINE and his BROTHER. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"This is really a charming story.... One of the very best of Mrs. Oliphant's many clever books."—Morning Post.
"As a story and a study of Scottish life, 'Valentine and his Brother' is simply a masterpiece."—British Quarterly Review.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

KATIE STEWART, and other Stories. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

This Day is published, Second Edition.

WITHIN an HOUR of LONDON

TOWN. Among Wild Birds and their Haunts. By "A SON OF THE MARSHES." Edited by J. A. OWEN. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A real lover of nature cannot but be charmed with the intimate and faithful descriptions of the wild creatures of wood and heath to which 'A Son of the Marshes' has given such devoted study."—Morning.

This Day is published, New and Cheaper Edition.

ANNALS of a FISHING VILLAGE.

By "A SON OF THE MARSHES." Edited by J. A. OWEN. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"It is full of painting from nature that charms by its fidelity and freshness."—Scotsman.

This Day is published, an entirely New Edition.

JOHNSTON'S CATECHISM of AGRI-

CULTURAL CHEMISTRY. From the Edition by Sir CHARLES A. CAMERON, M.D., F.R.C.S.I. Revised and Enlarged by C. M. AIKMAN, M.A., B.Sc., &c., Lecturer on Agricultural Chemistry, West of Scotland Technical College. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 1s.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MESSRS. LUZAC & CO.'S LIST

(Publishers to the India Office).

JUST PUBLISHED.

ASSYRIAN AND BABYLONIAN LETTERS

Belonging to the K Collection of the British Museum. Part I.

By ROBERT FRANCIS HARPER, of the University of Chicago.

Post 8vo, cloth, 25s. net.

NOW READY.

ORIENTAL DIPLOMACY:

Being the Transliterated Text of the Cuneiform Despatches between the Kings of Egypt and Western Asia in the 15th Century before Christ, discovered at Tell el-Amarna, and now preserved in the British Museum.

With Full Vocabulary, Grammatical Notes, &c., by CHARLES BEZOLD.
Post 8vo, cloth, 18s. net.

NEW WORKS JUST PUBLISHED.

Johnston's Sanskrit Nouns and Verbs.

In English Letters. Compiled by CHARLES JOHNSTON, B.C.S., Dublin University Sanskrit Prizeman, India Civil Service Sanskrit Prizeman. Small 4to, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

Beal's Suh-Ki-Li-Lih-Kiu: the Suhrillekha or "Friendly Letter," written by Lung shu (Nāgārjuna), and addressed to King Sadvaḥa. Translated from the Chinese Edition of I-TSING. By the late Rev. SAMUEL BEAL, M.R.A.S. With the Chinese Text. 8vo, price 5s.

Discovery (The) of Secrets, attributed to Geber, from the MS. Arabic Text. With a Rendering into English by ROBERT R. STEELE, F.C.S. 8vo, price 1s.

NEARLY READY.

Prof. Gray's Buddhaghosa: the Historical Romance of the Rise and Career of Buddhaghosa. Pali Text and Translation. By Prof. JAMES GRAY.

Dr. Oudemans' The Great Sea Serpent.
Price about 25s.

NEW WORKS JUST PUBLISHED.

NINTH ORIENTAL CONGRESS (London, Sept., 1892)

Prof. Max Müller's Address delivered at the Opening of the Ninth International Congress of Orientalists. Price 1s. 6d.

Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's Address on "ARCHAIC GREECE and the EAST." Price 1s.

Prof. A. H. Sayce's Address to the ASSYRIAN SECTION of the Ninth International Congress of Orientalists. Price 1s.

Sir Raymond West's Address: Higher EDUCATION in INDIA: its Position and Claims. Price 1s.

Bibliographical List of Books on Africa and the East, published in England between the Meetings of the Eighth Oriental Congress at Stockholm, in 1889, and the Ninth Oriental Congress in London, in 1892. Systematically Arranged, with Preface and Authors' Index. Royal 12mo, price 1s.

IN PREPARATION.

Sir Monier Monier-Williams' Indian WISDOM. New Revised Edition.

LUZAC & CO.'S ORIENTAL LIST, containing Notes and News on, and a Bibliographical List of, all New Publications on Africa and the East, published Monthly, sent post free on receipt of 1s. 6d.

LUZAC & CO., 46, GREAT RUSSELL STREET (opposite British Museum), W.C.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S LIST.
NEW BOOKS AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

FIFTH EDITION NOW READY.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE SECRET SERVICE.
THE RECOLLECTIONS OF A SPY.

By Major HENRI LE CARON,

With Portraits and Facsimiles of Original Documents. Demy 8vo, 14s.

Times.—"The portraits which the author draws of the Irish-American leaders, the late associates and paymasters of the Parliamentary party which has converted the Gladstonians to Home-rule, are vigorous and lifelike; but the interest inspired by this whole gallery of unscrupulous and venal patriots pales before that created by the unconscious sketches afforded us of the man who fought and beat them all."

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON:

A STUDY OF HIS LIFE AND WORK.

By ARTHUR WAUGH, B.A., Oxon.

With Portraits and Twenty-one Illustrations, from Photographs specially taken for this Work. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

Times.—"It contains evidence of faithful study of Tennyson's literary career; it displays an intimacy with Tennyson's poems, such as we should expect from one who aspires to be his biographer; and Mr. Waugh's discriminating judgments have evidently cost time and thought, and proceed from a critical faculty of no mean order."

THE NEW EXODUS: a Study of Israel in Russia.

By HAROLD FREDERIC.

With Portraits. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, price 16s.

Athenaeum.—"The New Exodus" tells of a frightful persecution of which the witnesses and the victims are here at our doors, in the city in which we write. The book takes hold of the reader, convinces him of its sincerity, and makes him burn with shame that such things should be possible in Christian Europe."

THE REALM OF THE HABSBURGS.

By SIDNEY WHITMAN, Author of "Imperial Germany," &c.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE NEW VOLUME OF "THE GREAT EDUCATORS SERIES"

ALCUIN, AND THE RISE OF THE CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS.

By Professor ANDREW F. WEST, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Mr. Gladstone, at Oxford, said:—"Alcuin, English born and reared in his teaching united the best elements accessible to him of Divine and human knowledge."

THE JEW at HOME: Impressions of a Summer and Autumn spent with him in Russia and Austria. By JOSEPH PENNELL. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. Small 4to, cloth, 5s.

THE GREAT WAR of 189—: a Forecast. By Rear-Admiral COLOMB; Colonel MAURICE, R.A., Staff College; Captain MAUDE; ARCHIBALD FORBES; CHARLES LOWE; D. CHRISTIE MURRAY; F. SCUDAMORE; and Sir CHARLES DILKE. 1 vol. Large 8vo. Illustrated. [Shortly.]

STUDIES OF RELIGIOUS HISTORY. By ERNEST RENAN. [Shortly.]

THE WORKS OF HEINRICH HEINE. Translated by CHARLES GODFREY LELAND. Vols. VII. and VIII.—FRENCH AFFAIRS. 2 vols. Vol. IX.—The SALON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. each volume. [In the press.]

REMINISCENCES OF COUNT LEO NICHOLAEVITCH TOLSTOI. Translated from the Russian by Prof. C. E. TURNER. 1 vol. [In the press.]

ADDRESSES. By HENRY IRVING. Fcap. 8vo, rough edges, with Portrait, by J. M'NEIL WHISTLER. [Shortly.]

QUEEN JOANNA I. of NAPLES, SICILY, and JERUSALEM, COUNTESS OF PROVENCE, FORCALQUIER, and PIEMONTE: an Essay on her Times. By ST. CLAIR BADDELEY. With numerous Illustrations. Imperial 8vo. [In the press.]

NEW FICTION AT ALL LIBRARIES.

READY NOVEMBER 14.

THE TOWER OF TADDEO.

BY OUIDA.

In 3 vols.

A KNIGHT of the WHITE FEATHER. By "TASMA," Author of "The Penance of Portia James," &c. In 2 vols.

CHILDREN of the GHETTO. By I. ZANGWILL, Author of "The Old Maid's Club." In 3 vols.

Athenaeum.—"The chief interest in the book lies in the wonderful description of the Whitechapel Jews. Mr. Zangwill brings out with great force the hospitality and generosity to one another; their sense of humour and its invariable accompaniment, tact. The vividness and force with which he brings before us the strange and uncouth characters with which he has peopled his book are truly admirable."

VANITAS. By VERNON LEE. Author of "Hauntings." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s. (Crown Copyright Series.)

THE O'CONNORS of BALLINAHINCH. By Mrs. HUNOERFORD. (Crown Copyright Series.) [In the press.]

AVENGED on SOCIETY. By H. F. WOOD, Author of "The Englishman of the Rue Cain," "The Passenger from Scotland Yard," &c. In 1 vol. Crown 8vo. [Immediately.]

THE NAULAHKA: a Story of West and East. By RUDYARD KIPLING and WOLCOTT BAILESTER. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NOT ALL in VAIN. POPULAR 3s. 6d. NOVELS. By ADA CAMBRIDGE, Author of "A Marked Man," "The Three Miss Kings," &c.

TWEEN SNOW and FIRE. By BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of "A Romance of the Cape Frontier," &c.

MAMMON. By Mrs. ALEXANDER, Author of "The Wooing o't," &c.

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS.

NOW READY.

THE LIFE of JOHN LINNELL.

By ALFRED T. STORY. With Numerous Illustrations from paintings or sketches by Linnell. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

NOW READY.

RED-LETTER DAYS of MY LIFE. Reminiscences and Anecdotes of Coleridge, Charles Lamb, Theodore Hook, Crabb, Robinson, Babbage, Rogers, Mrs. Proctor, Faraday, Louis Philippe, Nasmyth, Cobden, Tenyson, Sir Roderick Murchison, Landor, Shelley, Sir Robert Peel, Dr. Buckland, Buckle, Dr. Livingstone, and many other Persons of Note. By CORNELIA A. H. CROSSE, Author of "Memorials of Andrew Crosse, the Electrician." 2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.

NOW READY.

MEMOIRS of EIGHTY YEARS.

By GORDON HAKE. Including Recollections and Anecdotes of Count Pozzo di Borgo, Faraday, Rossetti, Sir Benjamin Brodie, Monckton Milnes, Sir Frederick Pollock, Sir Henry Cole, George Borrow, Mr. Delane, Lord Elgie, Mr. Mozley, Sir Thomas Troubridge, Edmund Keao, Sir Henry Bunbury, M. Waddington, and others. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

NOW READY.

CONVERSATIONS of DR. DOLLINGER.

Recorded by LOUISE von KOBELL, and Translated from the German by KATHARINE GOULD. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

IN SAVAGE ISLES AND SETTLED LANDS.

A Record of Personal Experiences in Europe, Egypt, Ceylon, India, Australia, New Zealand, Java, &c., in 1888-91. By B. F. S. BADEN-POWELL, Scots Guards, F.R.G.S. With Maps and Illustrations. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 21s.

NOW READY.

EGYPT TO-DAY. The First to the Third Khedive. By W. FRASER RAE. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

"Mr. Fraser Rae's 'Egypt To-Day' is a profoundly interesting book, by a practised literary hand, about a country which is now, as it has been for long past, one of the most interesting in the world. It is much more than this, it is an admirable treatise on one of the most vital subjects in our foreign policy. It is a satisfaction that a book so sane, so clear and convincing, should appear on one of the burning questions of the day, by a writer who has studied the whole subject for himself, and who has come to hold very strong convictions with regard to it. Mr. Rae's book comes at a very timely moment, and it is to be hoped that it may influence widely the minds of Englishmen on the vital question of Egypt."—Observer.

NOW READY.

IN an ENCHANTED ISLAND:

a Visit to Cyprus in 1889. By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK, Author of "Is Life Worth Living?" &c. A New Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVELS at THE LIBRARIES

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NANCY."

MRS. BLIGH. By Rhoda Broughton.

Second Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo.

JUST READY.

THE STEP-SISTERS. By E.

McQUEEN GRAY, Author of "Elsa," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH."

GOD'S FOOL. By Maarten

MAARTENS, Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NELLIE'S MEMORIES."

SIR GODFREY'S GRAND-

DAUGHTERS. By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL."

THE SILENT SEA. By Mrs.

ALICK MACLEOD. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

Notice.—The Fourth Edition of AUNT ANNE, by Mrs. Clifford, may now be obtained, in 2 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S LIST.

NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "BOGLAND STUDIES."

IRISH IDYLLS.

By JANE BARLOW.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MR. J. M. BARRIE'S WORKS.

AULD LICHT IDYLLS. Eighth

Edition. Buckram, gilt top, crown 8vo, 6s.

A WINDOW in THRUMS. Tenth

Edition. Buckram, gilt top, crown 8vo, 6s.

MY LADY NICOTINE. Fourth

Edition. Buckram, gilt top, crown 8vo, 6s.

WHEN a MAN'S SINGLE: a

Tale of Literary Life. Sixth Edition. Buckram, gilt top, crown 8vo, 6s.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

QUEST AND VISION.

By W. J. DAWSON.

CONTENTS:—Shelley.—Wordsworth and his Message.—Religious Doubt and Modern Poetry.—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.—George Eliot.—George Meredith.—The New Realism: Olive Schreiner, Mark Rutherford, Rudyard Kipling.—J. M. Barrie.—The Poetry of Despair.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

1.—THE REDEMPTION OF EDWARD STRAHAN:

A Social Story.

Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A powerful book with a pure and high aim."

Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE.

2.—THE MAKERS OF MODERN ENGLISH:

A Popular Handbook to the Greater Poets of the Century.

Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"We have found Mr. Dawson well balanced in his critical judgments, neither betrayed into rhapsody by his admiration, nor sacrificing an intelligent and appreciative sympathy to a just reserve."—Daily News.

MACKAY OF UGANDA.

1.—A. M. MACKAY,

Pioneer Missionary of the Church Missionary Society to Uganda.

By his SISTER.

Twelfth Thousand. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d, with Etched Portrait.

2.—THE STORY OF THE LIFE OF MACKAY OF UGANDA.

Told for Boys. By his SISTER.

Sixth Thousand. Handsomely bound in cloth, 8vo, gilt edges, 5s. With Portrait and Illustrations.

"A veritable romance of noble self-sacrifice."—Times.

TENNYSON MEMORIAL NUMBER.

The BOOKMAN, for November,

Price 6d.

Contains:—A Memorial Poem.—A Critical Estimate of the late Laureate. The Tennysons. By Miss Florence Peacock.—Early Recollections of Tennyson.—Tennyson and his Publishers.—Personal Reminiscences.—Facsimile of a Page in "Idylls of the King."—The Laureateship. By Four well-known Poets.

And Portraits of LORD TENNYSON, LADY TENNYSON, LORD TENNYSON'S MOTHER, and Rev. CHARLES TENNYSON-TURNER.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

Ready next Tuesday, at all Libraries.

WILLIAM BLACK'S

NEW NOVEL,

"WOLFENBERG."

3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOTICE.—The THIRD EDITION of MAJOR WINGATE'S Book, "TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP," has been almost subscribed for before publication. A FOURTH EDITION is now at press. Demy 8vo, fully illustrated, cloth, One Guinea.

"A book of very unusual and manifold interest and value. In the first place it is an interesting book to read; in the second, it is an historical document of the first importance; and in the third, it has an extraordinary appositeness at the present moment."—Saturday Review.

STORIES TOLD in an AFRICAN FOREST

by GROWN-UP CHILDREN of AFRICA. By A. J. MOUNTNEY, JEPHSON, one of Mr. Stanley's officers, and Author of "Emin Pasha and the Rebellion at the Equator. With numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Walter W. Buckley. 8vo, cloth, price 8s. 6d.

*A Collection of Zanzibar Tales told in the Forest by the men of the Emin Relief Expedition during the march across Africa.

ARTISTIC TRAVEL: a Thousand Miles towards the Sun. NORMANDY, BRITANNY, the PYRENEES, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. By HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Academy Notes," Author of "The Memoir of Ralph Caldecott," &c. With 139 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

HOLIDAY WANDERINGS in MADEIRA.

By A. E. W. MARSH. With many Full-page and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

FREDERIC CHOPIN: a Biography.

By CHARLES WILLEBY. With Photographic Portrait, Facsimile of Autograph, and Illustrations of his Music. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

"One of the most fascinating musical biographies that have come before our notice."—Morning Post.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT in OLD ENGLISH

VERSE. By Rev. G. J. ABBEY, Rector of Cheekendon, Oxon. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

*An attempt to trace the changing manifestations of the spiritual life in the realm of sacred poetry through the long periods of 1,100 years which elapsed between Cadmoa and the end of the last century.

THEORY and ANALYSIS of ORNAMENT, applied to the Work of Elementary and Technical Schools. By FRANCOIS LOUIS SCHAUERMANN, for eight years Head Master of the Wood and Carving Department, Royal Polytechnic, Regent Street. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 13s.

The Oxford Local and College of Preceptors Exams. 1893.

SHAKESPEARE'S TEMPEST. With Inroduction, full Explanatory and Critical Notes, Glossary, Examination Papers, &c. By DAVID BAIN, M.A., LL.D., Head Master, Waterloo College, Liverpool. Crown 8vo, 192 pp., cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE STUDENT'S CHEMISTRY. By R. L.

TAYLOR, F.I.C., F.C.S., of the Central Higher Grade Board School, Manchester. Fully illustrated. Crown 8vo, 360 pp., cloth, 5s.

THE CLOCKS of RONDAINE. and other

Stories. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange," &c. Illustrated. Square 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"The whole book is admirable."—Scotsman.

THE FEVER of LIFE. By Fergus Hume.

Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

HYPOCRITES. By Hugh Colman Davidson,

Author of "The Old Adam," &c. Illustrated. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 8s.

"A capital volume of light literature."—Pall Mall Gazette.

OUT of the GROOVE: a Romance of Australian Life. By E. B. KENNEDY, Author of "Blacks and Bushrangers." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW BOYS' BOOKS JUST READY.

MISTRESS BRANICAN. By Jules Verne.

Author of "The Lottery Ticket," "Five Weeks in a Balloon," &c. Fully illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

AXEL EBERSEN, the Graduate of Upsala.

By ANDRE LAURIE, Author of "The Conquest of the Moon," "The Secret of the Magian," &c. Fully illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

SANDY CARMICHAEL. By C. J. Hyne.

Author of "Four Red Nightcaps," "Stimson's Reef," "A Matrimonial Mixture," "The Captured Cruiser," &c. With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1892.

No. 1071, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Alfred, Lord Tennyson: a Study of his Life and Work. By Arthur Waugh. (Hoinemann.)

MR. WAUGH brings to the writing of biography a delicacy of feeling not too common among modern biographers. He is the first man I remember meeting who has paid any attention to the "Shakspeare's curse" of dead greatness on those who will not let their ashes rest. The average literary trouble-tomb has probably never given it a thought, but for Mr. Waugh it is a real trouble. Is it to be heeded or not? He ventures gently to remonstrate with the irate shades. "Such a sentiment may, one feels, be uttered with all sincerity at the moment, yet with no intention of giving it the authority of an ultimatum." Mr. Waugh would plead, too, the reverence of his intention, and especially the nature of the life with which he has to deal—one in which there is nothing to be hidden, nothing of which the poet or his friends had need to be ashamed. Mr. Waugh may be comforted. It was not on such as he that the curse was invoked, though one cannot but wish, for the sake of those for whom it was intended, that it had the malign potency it threatens. Would it might be a real curse, rather than an impotent scream of anger from the tomb! Alas! the anger of dead men is as that of children. Who heeds it?

No signs of the times are more dispiriting than the real irreverence, side by side with a prying inquisitiveness, towards greatness. We see it not only among the bourgeois, but even among seeming literary persons. Who does not know men who gravely "collect" this or that great writer, without having in their natures the smallest affinity to those excellences which made the writers great—absolutely unpoetical men who collect Tennyson, men without an inkling of humour who collect Dickens? Such men stultify, make us ashamed of, our enthusiasms. They are the marine-store dealers of letters, who accumulate as much trivial unessential "ana" as they can pick up; and it was contempt of such, as of the gaping curiosity of the crowd, that made the late Lord Tennyson so restive under popular hero-worship, and accounts for the many legends concerning his reception, not exactly genial, of chance callers. Carlyle was no less restive, and for the same reason. What could a man who seriously appreciated their work want with their cast-off waistcoats, or why should those gape who never read?

But I digress, wandering far indeed from

Mr. Waugh. Mr. Waugh has, I said, that first quality of the true biographer, delicacy; he has, likewise, so far as one can say without verifying fact by fact, the gift of accuracy, and he is able to tell his story pleasantly and with some skill. So much of the story has so long been common property that it was almost impossible to invest it with much freshness, though Mr. Waugh's industry and opportunities have resulted here and there in suggestive anecdotes new to print. Even the comparative freshness of these has by this time been staled by the daily papers; but two of them at least we cannot pass unquoted. The first has reference to the poet's early intimacy with "natural" things, and also bears upon his remarkable gift of onomatopoeia:

"One of the rooms on the second floor," at Somersby, "was set apart as his den, and here he would sit of an evening pondering his verses. One night, as he leant from the window, he heard an owl hooting; and, with a faculty of imitation which was strong in him, he cried back to the bird. The poet's 'tu-whit, tu-whoo,' was so natural that the owl flew to the window, and into the room, where it was captured and kept for a long time as a pet"—

"I would mock thy chaunt anew;
But I cannot mimic it;
Not a whit of thy tuwhoo,
Thee to woo to thy tuwhit,
Thee to woo to thy tuwhit,
With a lengthen'd loud halloo,
Tuwhoo, tuwhit, tuwhit, tuwhoo-o-o."

The other story relates to the publication of "Poems by Two Brothers":

"Charles and Alfred were never supplied with a surplus of pocket-money. Now and then, when money was needed for some excursion or other amusement, they were sorely put about to scrape together enough for their purpose: and, on one occasion, when they were discussing ways and means in the saddle-room, they were overheard by the family coachman. Appreciating the position at once, and racking his brains for a plan, the servant bethought himself of the verses which his young masters were always writing—they could not be much good, still they might serve."

From which we gather that a coachman's high opinion of himself is occasionally justified. The result was the preparation of the MS. of the "Poems by Two Brothers," and that remarkable bargain with the Jacksons of Louth. That provincial printers should be found to give ten pounds for poetry by two unknown boys has been a puzzle of Tennysonian biography. Few modern publishers would be satisfied with taking ten pounds towards such an adventure. One has been inclined to regard the affair as a prophecy of that eminent business success for which Tennyson was afterwards to be remarkable, or to credit the Jacksons with a gift of critical second-sight rare indeed among publishers. However, great is common sense; and Mr. Robert Roberts, in some interesting reminiscences contributed to the current number of the Bookman, may fairly claim to have resolved the difficulty. Mr. Roberts's note is so interesting that it can hardly be out of place to quote it here:

"I knew these printers," he says, "and very respectable, prosperous, shrewd tradesmen they were, but not educated men in the modern sense of the word, and, as it seemed to me, quite incapable of judging of the merit of a volume of poems. Then how came they to give ten pounds, and afterwards a second ten pounds, for a volume of poems by two schoolboys? I think the explanation is this: I have said they were very 'shrewd' men; and these schoolboys were the grandsons of the Rev. Stephen flytche, vicar of Louth, one of the richest and most influential men of the place. In a country town like Louth the vicar can put much good business in the hands of any printer whom he favours. No doubt the Jacksons had received in this way substantial benefits from the vicar, and, partly out of good feeling and partly out of policy, behaved liberally to the two youths with such influential connexions. And the printing of the book would be a very inexpensive affair, as it could be done in slack time, when auctioneers' bills and such like miscellaneous printing was scarce. Then, again, the acquaintances and friends of the vicar were sure to take a good quantity, so that there could be very little risk in the transaction."

Mr. Roberts is a loss to realistic fiction. To me there is something almost impressive in his thorough-going common-sense. And how much saner the story seems after his explanation. The Jacksons become possible inhabitants of earth; one sees their phantasmal forms growing ruddy with humanity as step by step Mr. Roberts relates their action to that commercial basis, on which alone it is realisable. Mr. Roberts applies his reagent to one or two other points of the Tennysonian legend with similarly refreshing effect; but I must leave the reader to follow him in the Bookman.

Mr. Waugh gives us some interesting quotations from that earliest volume. The usual octogenarian attitude of youth is most humorously illustrated in his extracts. These lads of eighteen and twenty are found lamenting their "vices," and sighing over their blighted lives in true Byronic fashion:

"The vices of my life arise,
Pourtrayed in shapes, alas! too trae,
And not one beam of hope breaka through
To cheer my old and aching eyes."

And again:

"Memory! dear enchanter!
Why bring back to view
Dreams of youth, which banter
All that e'er was true."

* * * * *
Round every palm-tree, springing
With bright fruit in the waste,
A mournful asp is clinging
Which sours it to our taste.

* * * * *
I stand like some lone tower
Of former days remaining,
Within whose place of power
The midnight owl is plaining."

Mr. Waugh is, of course, right in saying that the volume contained little beyond echoes; but I think he might have found a few lines which, even thus early, bore the unmistakable characteristics of the Tennysonian manner. Such are "the glutting wave

That saps eternally the cold gray steep," which reminds one of

"I heard the water lapping on the crag," or,

"Thy cold gray stones, O sea!"

and again :

"The tolling of thy funeral bell,
The nine low notes that spoke thy knell,
I know not how I bore so well,
My Brother !"

while the phrase "holds communion with the dead" was to be used up again, word for word, in "In Memoriam." For these references I am indebted to Dr. Van Dyke's study of the poet. There was, as we know, but one review of the volume, that in the Literary Chronicle and Weekly Review, to which Mr. Waugh refers, though without quoting. There was nothing very characteristic in the notice, which might have well been kept up in type for any volume that came for review:—"This volume exhibits a pleasing union of kindred tastes and contains several little pieces of considerable merit." Perhaps the only point on which Mr. Waugh seems less informing than he might have been is in the matter of those early reviews, "cobwebs of criticism," which are always especially suggestive. I think, too, he has rather missed an opportunity in not giving us a fuller account of Arthur Hallam's "Remains," a volume now excessively scarce. It would have been interesting to have had an extract from Hallam's "Timbuctoo" to compare with his friend's more successful poem. It would have been interesting, too, to have had in full that poem, "A Scene in Summer," a few lines of which are quoted by Mrs. Ritchie. Two or three other sonnets, besides "Lady, I bid thee to a sunny dome," were no less worth quoting. Having, through the kindness of a friend, a copy of the "Remains" in my possession, I will quote the "Scene in Summer" at length, more for its association than for its poetical value:—

"Alfred, I would that you beheld me now,
Sitting beneath a mossy ivied wall
On a quaint bench, which to that structure old
Winds an accordant curve. Above my head
Dilates immeasurable a wild of leaves,
Seeming received into the blue expanse
That vaults this summer noon: before me lies
A lawn of English verdure, smooth and bright,
Mottled with fainter hues of early hay,
Whose fragrance, blended with the rose perfume
From that white flowering bush, invites my sense
To a delicious madness—and faint thoughts
Of childish years are borne into my brain
By unforgotten ardours waking now.
Beyond, a gentle slope leads into shade
Of mighty trees, to bend whose eminent crown
Is the prime labour of the pettish winds,
That now in lighter mood are twirling leaves
Over my feet, or hurrying butterflies."

Leaving these earlier associations far behind, one comes to the anecdote of the rescue of the MS. of "In Memoriam" by Mr. Coventry Patmore, which is quite new to print, though the reader probably has now known it for some days through the morning papers. However, it is not my business to assume that, so I must quote it once more. About the time of the publication of "The Princess," Mr. Coventry Patmore and Tennyson were constant companions.

"One morning Mr. Coventry Patmore, then occupied at the British Museum, received a letter from his friend saying that he had left in the drawer of his lodging-house dressing-table the entire and only manuscript of "In Memoriam," begging Patmore, moreover, to rescue it for him. Patmore hurried to the lodgings, to find the room in the possession of a new tenant and the landlady very unwilling to have cupboards and drawers ransacked. It was not without much persuasion that Patmore was admitted to the room, where he found the manuscript still untouched."

The story, as I once heard it, was rendered more vivid still by the substitution of "the cupboard where I kept my butter and eggs" for the less exciting dressing-table drawer.

To refer to an incidental matter, Mr. Waugh is a little hard on Alexander Smith. In describing him and his shortlived fame, Mr. Waugh is unsparing in his diminutives—"this ephemeral little meteor in verse," "the little plagiarist," "the tiny triumph"—and he speaks with evident approval of William Allingham's somewhat unworthy exposure of "Smith's wholesale imitations and occasional thefts." Though Smith, in the character of the latest "new poet," did lose his head and behave like a fool, yet the impression to-day, I rather think, is that he was hardly treated; and if, indeed, there is little in his poetry that remains, his charming essays in Dreamthorp should keep his memory green as a very fine writer of prose. I think it is Mr. Ashcroft Noble who has said that he was an earlier Stevenson; and certainly there is much in Dreamthorp to strikingly remind us of Virginibus Puerisque—though Mr. Stevenson, of the two, has his fancy more under control. Taking down my copy of Dreamthorp, recalled to it by Mr. Waugh, I open on a passage which, curiously enough, one might have made certain was Mr. Stevenson's—"We know the ships that come with streaming pennons into the immortal ports; we know but little of the ships that have gone on fire on the way thither—that have gone down at sea." The first sentence seems as pure Stevenson as writing could well be. The explanation, doubtless, is that both writers studied the same fine old writers. Another passage in the same essay, on "Men of Letters," is more pertinent to our subject—"the lark is only interesting while singing; at other times it is but a plain brown bird." Would that biographers and hero-worshippers generally would master and remember that. Indeed, average biography might be described as, emphatically, the history of the lark when it is not singing.

Another man on whom Mr. Waugh is also a little hard is Edward Fitzgerald. He is evidently irritated by Fitzgerald's continuous depreciation of Tennyson's later work, and his constant preference for the earlier. Fitzgerald was somewhat of a crank in his critical judgments, and his iteration in his letters of this particular opinion was a little monotonous; but, after all, I am afraid his preference will be found nearer to the general feeling of lovers of poetry than Mr. Waugh's for the "Idylls of the King"—"the most characteristic and perhaps the most permanent of Tennyson's contributions to English literature." In saying this I by no means join in the narrow and ill-considered depreciation of the "Idylls," which has for some time been the fashion. To my mind the "Idylls" are a fine achievement, and will remain memorable if only for their characteristic blank verse—often, I admit, somewhat emasculate, but more often truly masculine. The condemnation of them in high critical quarters seems to me to have arisen from the prevalent misconception that poetry and drama are not two arts, but one. Arthur is a shadow, we are told; most of the other dramatis personae are shadows also. The thing is a tapestry. Well, and who has laid down that a poem may not be a tapestry, if the poet chooses? "The Fairie Queen" is a tapestry, the only poem with which it is proper, in aim as in achievement, to compare "The Idylls." In writing them, Tennyson's aim was allegory, not drama, though no fair-minded reader can deny that his figures, even the shadowiest of them, live in a way that makes Spenser's mere phantoms at cockerow. Indeed, as a matter of fact, "The Idylls" are full of vivid action and portraiture, and we constantly forget that the actors are types made flesh. It is only those who won't see who can deny this; and they can hardly deny the great wealth of the poems in lovely nature pictures, and passages of high reflective verse, while the allegory of the later poet is surely handled in a firm artistic fashion, to which the rambling inconsequence of Spenser is a maze indeed. Mr. Waugh is right, I think, in claiming "The Holy Grail" as one of the finest spiritual poems in the language. He writes particularly well upon it, and says truly of Arthur that "he stands as a great, luminous background to the story of his knights; as a wide, bright sky that shows up against the breadth and brilliance of its purity the darker shadows that move before it." Arthur is quite properly an abstraction, the abstract "gentleman, or noble person," whom Spenser declared it the end of his book "to fashion in virtuous and gentle discipline." Even the detractors of "The Idylls" allow "The Passing of Arthur," or, one should say, the earlier "Morte D'Arthur" to be a fine thing.

But fine as "The Idylls" are, they are not the poet's finest work, for the reason that they are not of the finest genre. To talk of Tennyson's special gift is unprofitable, for he had so many gifts. Like most great poets, he had, in addition to his genius, superabundant talent. There was hardly anything in literary art to which his talent was unequal; but his genius, one can hardly doubt, was lyrical. That is what Fitzgerald meant in so constantly dwelling upon his earlier work; and, it will be remembered, he became, in a measure, reconciled to "The Princess" when the lyrics were interspersed through it. Indeed "Tears, idle Tears" was one of the poems he was always quoting.

Mr. Waugh holds a higher opinion of the dramas than usually obtains. There is no doubt that they contain much fine unappreciated stuff; but can there be any question that the years devoted to drama would have been far more fruitfully employed in the poet's more proper sphere? That dramatic superstition, growing more and more rampant, is responsible for fruitlessly diverting the poetic energy of several fine poets of our generation. It was the ignis fatuus of Browning, masterly as he, like Tennyson, was in single dramatic episodes, or revolutions of character; and it has turned awry some of the best years of Mr. Swinburne. The sooner we recognise that poetry and drama are two arts seldom combined in one man the better. We shall gain no little poetry by the recognition.

Some of Mr. Waugh's concluding remarks are worth quoting. Speaking of Tennyson's continuance of the tradition of English poetry, he says:

"Tennyson stands, as it were, midway upon a mountain, catching the echoes from afar, and passing on the melody to his followers on the hillside. Every now and again such a poet takes his stand upon the height, and preserves to us the spirit of our song, so that the new and old are never altogether out of harmony."

Again, speaking of Tennyson in relation to the spirit of the age:

"... Tennyson is never with the revolutionist, nor yet with the dullard; he is never in the forefront, but always among the first to enter the stormed citadel. As each bold theory of science was established by evidence, he accepted it in a mitigated form. As each new political change broadened down to the level of calm freedom, he welcomed it as a wholesome precedent. . . . Truth, he knew, lay not in instant acceptance of the unproven hypothesis, nor in blind adherence to outward form and ceremonial."

"The calm energy of will, the troubled but unbroken faith, the wide-souled sympathy with mankind, the scorn of things little and of low repute, the reticence towards publicity, the love of love—all these things were written in Tennyson's poetry. . . . His was a life that chose to stand apart from the hue and cry of the age, that walked in fullentis semita vitæ by paths of seclusion and peace. But the quiet way was not solitary. It ran, step by step, beside the high-road of the century, within hearing of the struggling multitude."

Mr. Waugh's book tells us admirably all that is essential about that life. We shall, doubtless, have an "official" biography, though the student of poetry perhaps hardly feels the need of it. The one hope from it is that it may give us some of the poet's letters. But in any case it is between the familiar green covers, as Mr. Waugh remarks, where the life of Tennyson is best sought. William Howitt once said of him: "You may hear his voice, but where is the man?" But of him more than of any other poet, the voice was the man.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

The Making of Italy, 1856-70. By The O'Clery. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

THE story of a victory told by one of the vanquished is invariably interesting and almost invariably untrustworthy, and this account of the fall of the small Italian despotisms from the pen of a servant of one of the fallen despots is not in truth an exception to the rule. But although in matters of inference, such as cause, motive, and credibility of testimony, the prepossessions of the writer have always to be reckoned with; yet, as a chronicler of res gestæ, he is painstaking, lucid, and accurate. His book, moreover, is the first complete and consecutive record of Italian events from the Congress of Paris to Cadorna's entry into Rome, and as such deserves a place on the shelves of the student.

It is unfortunate that the writer of The Making of Italy should have started with the conviction that the makers of Italy, "Cavour and his fellow conspirators," as he calls them, were rascals, because it has given his book the air of an indictment rather than that of a history. There is no diplomatic irregularity of theirs, no military excess, no pressure, or violence, or stratagem, however inevitable or venial, which is not held up to reprobation. Most of these charges are not now stated for the first time, and to most of them the defence is not a traverse but a justification. The worthiness of the end in view is the only thing that can justify a war, for every war is full of horrors that no modern man, not even M. Zola, dare write in full; but to make Italy a kingdom and Italians freemen has been accepted as a worthy end, not in Italy only, but generally throughout Europe. Of course the author does not accept the soundness of this view, asserting that unification was not desired by the Italians, that it was the act of a few, effected by foreign aid in the interest of a party, and against the wishes, he does not quite say of the majority, but at any rate of whole districts or provinces. Nobody disputes the foreign assistance, and nobody disputes that many Neapolitan nobles and many Roman descendants of the nephews of Popes were opposed to the change. Nobody disputes that the lowest orders in the brigand-harboured villages of the Abruzzi and Calabria were indifferent, and some of them actually hostile. But the fox-chase between the armies at Naseby does not prove that England was not deeply stirred in the fight between Parliament and King, nor does the existence of a Jacobite party in the middle of the eighteenth century show that Englishmen had not made up their minds to have done with the Stewarts. But we are asked to believe that a few unprincipled conspirators, chiefly Piedmontese, imposed a united Italy on Lombardy and the Duchies, on the Legations and the Two Sicilies, and that a population who loved their Austrian and Bourbon lords were cajoled or frightened into voting for annexation. There is a comforting and wise doctrine of the Catholic Church that leaves hope for the virtuous heretic by referring his heresy to incurable moral blindness. We are tempted to think a similar defect in the historical sense afflicts the author, though some part of the scales must certainly have fallen had he less imperfectly grasped the history of Italy since 1815. For, indeed, the treaty of Vienna explains the outcome of that of Villafranca; what took place after Laibach in 1821 illuminates Neapolitan history in 1860. Events in Rome from 1848 to 1850 give the key to what happened in 1859 and in 1870. Of all this earlier history the writer makes no account whatever.

There is not much that is new to be told of the Congress of Paris, a seat at which was bought by Italy's participation in the Crimean war; but the arts by which Cavour secured the French alliance and then provoked Austria into aggression are lucidly stated by The O'Clery. Here and elsewhere he stops to slay the slain, and labours to convince a world that needs no convincing that in his adherence to the doctrine of "qui veut la fin veut les moyens," Cavour was entirely unscrupulous. The war in Lombardy, with its battles from Montebello to Solferino, and indeed the fighting generally, is well and on the whole fairly described, though it is quite needless to be so emphatic about the military inferiority of the Piedmontese, or to explain that if the Austrian had played his cards better the game might not have been won by the French. It is, however, impossible to notice without a smile the author's belief that the Piedmontese peasantry were favourably disposed to Gyulai's soldiery, and that the astonishing ignorance of the Austrian commander of the enemy's movements arose, not from the unwillingness of the Lombards to give information, but from the Count's indifference to the advantage of obtaining it.

The victories of the Allies were the signal for popular explosions in Parma, in Modena, and in the Papal provinces. These, we are told, were due to the intrigues of Piedmont. If that means that the national committees throughout Central Italy were emboldened by the consciousness of support in Turin to fire their mines, it is not an unfair statement. But it entirely fails to explain how the explosive came to be there, and in such quantity and of such force as to blow the Austrian and Bourbon and Papal governments into the air. That is to be understood only by examining what was the previous record of those governments whose "just rights" the author takes under his protection. He certainly makes it quite clear that the taxation, which was light, had nothing to say to it; but when did the amount of taxation ever change the heart of a people?

One must go back some little way to realise how essentially unstable were all these thrones. To begin with, the dynasties that had been forced on the people after 1815 were rooted neither in popular affection nor in national tradition. With the exception of the Pope, these rulers were all practically foreigners, the creation, if not the creatures, of a foreign government, and that the government of the traditionally hated Tedesco. Austria had received Lombardy and Venetia, while the Duchies of Tuscany, Parma, Modena, and Lucca had been allotted to families either members of or closely connected with the house of Hapsburg. The right of keeping garrisons even in the Papal States had been given to Austria, so that the Italians might and did feel that the Austrian soldiery were the police of the peninsula. We do not suppose that a Papal officer like The O'Clery will refuse to admit that the best of the petty sovereigns were the popes; but they were ill-served and ill-informed, and such spectacles as a Savelli (known as "the Corsican mad dog") dismissed for infamy by Gregory XVI., yet receiving a Cardinal's hat from Pius IX., can hardly be considered reassuring. The follies and cruelties of such men as Francis of Modena, and Charles of Parma, stabbed in 1854 (by his brother?), the broken oaths of Francis and Ferdinand of Naples, and of Leopold II. of Tuscany, above all, the Pope's desertion of the Italian cause at the very turning-point of the campaign of 1848, were not things that could be forgotten. Yet we are told that the plebiscitary voting in these provinces was a mere farce, the result of Cavour's intrigues; and it is not obscurely hinted that votes were obtained by fear of the soldiery. The author forgets that on the eve of Novara, in 1849, when there was no Cavour to intrigue, and no soldiery to dragoon, Lombardy, Parma, and Modena, had decreed their annexation to the kingdom of Carlo Alberto. He omits to mention that in the Legations, at Forlì and Cesena, for example, great Papalino landowners threatened the peasants with eviction, and that priests thundered anathemas in the churches. None the less the peasants crowded to the urns as if it had been a fiesta. No doubt there was some manoeuvring of the votes in Nice and Savoy—where the upper classes were opposed to incorporation with France; but this does not prove that manoeuvring went on where no conceivable need for it existed. The details of one episode—the recapture of Perugia by the Papal soldiery, in which several women and children were killed, have been much disputed. We have the authorised Roman version, which, of course, makes light of them. There is the account of an American traveller, named Perkins, an eye witness, who, as a civilian, probably exaggerated the horrors of the storm. The truth probably lies about halfway between the two accounts, for there is no reason to suppose that Perkins was the unmitigated liar that The O'Clery suggests. After telling us that the insurgents were hardly any of them Perugians or even Papal subjects, he adds that few rebellions were ever repressed with less bloodshed, and that there were "no after executions for complicity like those carried into effect (among other instances) by the English themselves on a grand scale in India." This comparison of Italian volunteers, bent on liberating their brethren, with the torturers of women and children in Cawnpore is worth noting, not because of its questionable taste, but because it gives the keynote to the spirit in which this history is written. The O'Clery carries his defence of the powers that be to such a length as even to defend the Neapolitan prisons mainly on the strength of a letter from Poerio, showing that in prison he was allowed to receive fruit and other luxuries from his friends. The corruption of the jailors in Italy is, however, universally admitted, and the evidence of Catholic Italians and Protestant Englishmen leaves no doubt that many of the dungeons were absolutely unfit for human beings. The late Lord Llanover was not an excitable person, but he testified that the cell where Saro was confined for more than a year (though he had not been tried) was so low that he could not stand upright, so that when released he was unable to walk. In other lately occupied cells, prisoners had been severely bitten by rats. Others smelt horribly, though they had been cleansed for many months; and these dens at Santa Maria Apparente and Saint Elmo were, according to the prison officials, paradise compared with those of Sicily.

One of the very best chapters in the book describes the final act, the capture of Rome, by Cadorna, in 1870. This is in large part the narrative of an eye witness, and it is a very spirited account. He has all our sympathy in his defence of the courage and conduct of the Pontifical Zouaves, and we may congratulate him on having cleared the character of brave and chivalrous men from the aspersions of irresponsible and ill-informed correspondents. In this case, at any rate, the author feels strongly that to deny all merit to an adversary is unfair as well as foolish.

REGINALD HUGHES.

Poems, Dialogues in Verse, and Epigrams. By Walter Savage Landor. Edited with Notes by Charles G. Crump. In 2 Vols. (Dent.)

THE belief entertained in some quarters, that Mr. Crump would follow up his edition of the Imaginary Conversations with an equally complete edition of the poems, turns out to be illusory. These two volumes only contain a portion of the poetry printed in Forster's edition of Landor's Works; and although a few pieces are included which Forster did not reprint, most of the pieces he omitted are also omitted by Mr. Crump. The fact that merely a selection was to be looked for should have been clearly stated on the title-page. Here, however, there is no hint of selection, and a fly leaf inscribed "Landor's Poems," &c., distinctly conveys the opposite impression. In the first volume of "dramatic scenes," the pieces entitled "Íñez de Castro," "Beatrice Cenci," and three or four others are omitted. In the second volume the omissions are even more disappointing. Mr. Crump gives us "Gebir" and "Chrysaor" and three other long poems; but "we pour the Greek honey of Landor," if one may quote Mr. Austin Dobson, out of an amphora that leaks, for the Hellenics are woefully cut down. Most distressing excision of all, a large number of the very best of Landor's shorter poems are cut out. Mr. Crump writes:—

"I have preferred to run the risk of making a selection from Landor's poems, hoping that, if by so doing I fall into some errors, I at least avoid the guilt of reprinting what Landor in his wiser moments would never have published."

If there is any guilt in knowing by heart more than two or three of the perfect poems which Mr. Crump prefers to ignore, then is one humble admirer of Landor damned irrevocably.

Mr. Crump might at least have seen that his selection was free from misprints. In the verses to Lady Charles Beauclerk we find:

"He knows you lovely, thinks you wise,
And still shall think so, if your eyes.
Seek not in noisier paths to roam."

In the pretty ode to Hesperus, written, Cleone told Aspasia, by some confident man on a doubtless feigned occasion, a stanza is made to run thus:

"Phryne heard my kisses given Acte's rival bosom.
'Twas the buds, I swore my heaven,
Bursting into blossom."

The lines are properly printed both in the Collected Works and in Mr. Crump's edition of Pericles and Aspasia; though not in the cheap Camelot Series reprint. The apostrophe to the "wandering Muses" prefixed to the Hellenics contains a blunder:

"Or would ye rather choose the grassy vale
Where flow Anapos thro' anemones."

It is not always easy to find which edition Mr. Crump has followed. In some cases, however, he states plainly that it is an earlier edition of the Hellenics—that is to say, he does not give us Landor's poems with the author's final corrections. It is unlikely that the earlier version will be generally preferred. Take, for instance, "The Sons of Venus," which begins in Mr. Crump's version:

"Twain are the sons of Venus: one beholds
Our globe in gladness, while his brother's eye
Casts graver glances down, nor cares for woods
Or song."

In the 1859 edition of the Hellenics the poem is called "The Boys of Venus," and begins:

"Twain are the boys of Venus: one surveys
Benignly this our globe, the other flies
Cities and groves, nor listens to their songs."

The last line, besides being more elegant, gets rid of an obscurity. In the Latin it runs:

"Nec nemora, aut urbes, aut vatam carmina curat."

There is not much to be said about Mr. Crump's introduction, except that it rather reminds one of Landor's epigram, omitted in these volumes:

"And when (as well as he might) he hit
Upon a splendid piece of wit,
He cried, 'I do declare now, this
Upon the whole is not amiss.'
And spent a good half hour to show
By metaphysics why 'twas so."

Among other things Mr. Crump would have us believe that Landor "in his inmost heart mistrusted his success as a poet." Ranking himself as the best of living prose writers, Landor, Mr. Crump says, "in poetry felt that there were men living who were his masters." Therefore of his verse Landor never speaks so confidently as of his prose. So Mr. Crump opines. But among the poems he omits is one which, beginning with a reference to Milton, proceeds:

"I on a seat beneath, but on his right,
Neither expect nor hope my verse may lie
With summer sweets, with album gaily drest . .
A few will cull my fruit and like my taste,
And find not overmuch to pare away."

Mr. Crump has pared away ruthlessly and, I think, unwisely.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

THE LETTERS OF CARNOT.

Correspondance Générale de Carnot. Publiée, avec des Notes historiques et biographiques, par Etienne Charavay. Vol. I., August 1792—March 1793. (Paris: Imprimerie Nationale).

ONCE again the French government is earning the gratitude of all students of the history of the French Revolution. The publication of the Register of the Committee of Public Safety, which is being so admirably carried out by M. Aulard, is to be supplemented by a complete edition of the letters of the great Carnot. It is by the publication of such documents that the real history of the Revolution can alone be discovered. Hitherto writers on the subject have been dependent too much upon files of contemporary newspapers, and upon the often untrustworthy memoirs of actors on the political stage. What all students have been longing for are the authentic documents. These the French government is now publishing on an extensive scale and in sumptuous style; and it is devoutly to be wished that the English government would follow suit. If it would only publish Pitt's despatches, what an enormous amount of misconception would be swept away?

The name of Lazare Nicolas Marguerite Carnot is generally identified with the military successes of the First Republic. He was added to the Committee of Public Safety for the express purpose of directing the military operations of the armies on the frontiers. The Committee based its authority, and was endured by the people, on the ground that a strong government was necessary to enable France to fight the rest of Europe. Carnot had the good fortune to be attached to the department which shed glory on the government of the Committee. Others, such as Billaud-Varenne and Robespierre bear the obloquy of inaugurating and carrying out the Terror; whereas Carnot has associated his name with the victories won by France, and not with the horrors of the guillotine. Yet Carnot would have been one of the first to have insisted upon the solidarity of the Committee of Public Safety. His signature is attached to some of the most sanguinary of its resolutions. It is idle to say that he ought not to bear the responsibility for his share in the Terror: the whole system must be judged together; rightly or wrongly, all the members of the Committee considered that the ravages of the guillotine in Paris were indispensable for military success upon the frontiers. Carnot did not himself try to shirk this responsibility, and the attempt to separate the military from the administrative measures of the Terror must always fail. Nevertheless, the work of the Committee of Public Safety can be looked at from both sides with advantage, as long as the two departments are recognised as closely united. M. Charavay's edition of Carnot's Letters will therefore be an indispensable supplement to M. Aulard's Acts of the Committee of Public Safety.

Carnot has been called the "organiser of victory." The title is deserved; but just as people are apt to disregard the co-operation of his colleagues on the Committee, so popular opinion has largely neglected the measure of assistance given by his military advisers. The direction of fourteen armies was too much for any single man. Some modern writers, actuated by a malicious desire to belittle the services of Carnot, have exaggerated those of his principal helpers. The Topographical Committee worked out indeed the details of Carnot's military plans; but he was the real master of the situation, and the ability of his military advisers should not be used as an argument for depreciating the man on whom rested the responsibility. Some of Carnot's coadjutors ranked among the most distinguished officers of monarchical France. Among them may be specially cited the name of the engineer, D'Arçon, who invented the use of red-hot shot in the siege of Gibraltar. Even greater was the assistance given to Carnot by his colleague in the Committee of Public Safety, Prieur of the Côte d'Or. Prieur, like Carnot, had been an officer in the Royal Engineers, and he took charge of the important and difficult work of providing the armies with the munitions of war. France became a vast workshop, and Prieur managed to supply in abundance every requisite for the efficient discharge of military operations, leaving Carnot free to direct the strategy of the several campaigns.

In later volumes we shall be able to study Carnot's military plans, and we shall then be able to form an opinion whether or no he was a great military innovator. We shall be able to judge how far he deserves his reputation as one of the greatest soldiers of the world, the destroyer of the old system of Frederick the Great, and the forerunner of Napoleon. But in this first volume, which contains Carnot's correspondence from August, 1792, to March, 1793, we see him only as a deputy on mission. He did not enter the Committee of Public Safety until August, 1793, and by that time he had had during his missions plenty of opportunities to study the condition of the armies of the Republic in the field. This experience was most useful to him, for it enabled him to see that the old strategy was quite unsuited for the enthusiastic but undisciplined masses of the new levies. He also learnt one important lesson, that the soldiers were more willing to trust and obey the deputies sent on mission by the Convention than their own generals. It was by means of the deputies on mission that Carnot at a later date was able to impress his views upon the French armies; and the situation of the deputies with regard to generals, officers, and soldiers was well known to him, from the experience he had gathered during his own missions.

The name of M. Charavay on the title page is a guarantee for the excellence of this edition of Carnot's Letters. Not only has he made extensive use of the public records at the Archives, but he has also been permitted to consult the family papers. In addition, he is well known by his catalogues of the collections of autographs, which he has prepared for sale, notably of those rich in revolutionary documents. A vast number of autographs have passed through his hands, some of which, as all readers of La Révolution Française (the monthly periodical devoted to the history of the Revolution) are well aware, are of unique importance. The biographical notes appended by him to this volume are peculiarly full and extremely valuable, for M. Charavay is, as he himself confesses, almost a fanatic on such minute questions of accuracy as the spelling of names, and the exactness of dates. It goes without saying that the volume is produced, like all those proceeding from the Imprimerie Nationale, with every advantage of paper and printing. It is hardly necessary to add, also, that this collection of Carnot's Letters must form an indispensable part of every library which professes to collect books bearing upon the history of the French Revolution.

H. MORSE STEPHENS.

NEW NOVELS.

- A Woman's Ambition.* By Henry Cresswell. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)
The Village Blacksmith. By Darley Dale. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)
Under Pressure. By the Marchesa Theodoli. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)
Etelka's Vow. By Dorothea Gerard. (Eden, Remington & Co.)
Syringa. By Arthur Nestorien. (Digby, Long & Co.)
The Downfall. By Emile Zola. Translated. (Chatto & Windus.)
A Saint, and Others. By Paul Bourget. Translated. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)
A Little Norsk. By Hamlin Garland. (Fisher Unwin.)
The Runaway Browns. By H. C. Bunner. (Brentanos.)
A Modern Romance. By Laurence Bliss. (Methuen.)

It is the present reviewer's misfortune not to have come across any of the numerous novels which, he learns from the forepage, Mr. Henry Cresswell has written. He is, therefore, unable to say whether A Woman's Ambition is an advance or a falling-off compared with previous productions. The story is none the worse for its commonplaceness of general details, but it suffers from a conventionality of treatment. Though often brightly and pleasantly written, and occasionally with an ease and mastery of dramatic effect which is at once welcome and a surprise, the style is strangely unequal. At times it is pompous and inflated; then the author seems to have mentally shaken himself, and for the ensuing few pages, or even for a chapter or two, all goes crisply and well. But, if much of the background, and frequently the manner and method, be commonplace, the central motive certainly is not. There are few Mrs. Kings, even in that strange world of fiction which constitutes the limbo between the impossible and the possible; fewer still, fortunately, in real life. She is, as Mr. Cresswell shows her to us, in many respects an excellent and even admirable woman, so far as the main course of her life is concerned; but, with regard to the two young men whom she has brought up as her own sons, though she is neither wife nor widow, and has never borne children, she is practically a monomaniac. There is one notable scene in the book, where the old maid, whose passion of repressed motherhood has made her commit folly after folly, and at last actual crime, tries to strangle a man who had guessed what she had so long kept secret, and this in the presence of her two "sons." A Woman's Ambition is much too long. Told in a third of its present length, the story would be an interesting one, though even then the strain upon the reader's credulity would need to be lightened. If the story, which will no doubt appeal to a large section of Mr. Mudie's public, appear later in a one-volume edition, Mr. Cresswell might with advantage prune the excess of latinised words. Here is a sentence at random (vol. iii.):

"No long process of ratiocination led her from those various considerations to a resolution to listen. The consciousness of all those ideas was a simultaneous and momentary one; and it was in obedience to them in the aggregate that she replied," &c.

There is an interesting fact connected with Mr. Dale's novel, The Village Blacksmith, which may be noted, although it has nothing to do with the story itself. I see by the imprint that the book has been printed at a Dutch press. This is the third or fourth novel which has come to me for review with this identical imprint. The fact goes to substantiate what has of late been so vigorously denied, that much of the printing work of the London publishing firms is now being done abroad. Certainly the neat type and pleasant setting are, in the present instance, more attractive than one finds in the common run of novels; and if this result is to be obtained with less than the usual outlay, it is perhaps as well that a timely lesson should be brought home to English printers. Mr. Dale's romance, unfortunately, hardly lives up to its "type." The story is by no means uninteresting, and to those who love the sentimental (the genuine, not [the merely foolish sentimental]) it will or ought to afford a good deal of pleasure. For others, I fear, there is too much of this kind of thing:—

"The next thing of any interest to other people which occurred was Vera's hat came off. How it happened has never transpired; but after its loss was discovered, which was not immediately, and the hat had been readjusted by Captain Raleigh, which was a somewhat lengthy proceeding, the conversation assumed a less fragmentary nature than it had partaken of during this little interlude."

This is bad enough for ear and eye and human patience generally: but when the author takes to apostrophising in this fashion:—

"And now, ye angels, who stand with folded wings beside that innocent mother and still more innocent child—shield them: for a sudden fierce angry rose in the heart of the father as," &c.—

thereafter, the reader can but—well, can refrain without deep regret from ordering from the library the other two novels, "&c., &c.," which, I see from the title page, Mr. Darley Dale has already fathered.

An exceptional interest attaches to the "Scenes from Roman Life," to give the Marchesa Theodoli's supplementary title to Under Pressure. The book, avowedly a first venture, is dedicated to Mr. Marion Crawford, to whose "friendly incitement" it would seem to be due. The author, who bears an honoured name in Rome, is an American who, "by marriage and earliest associations, is capable of describing some of the customs, prejudices, and virtues still subsisting in a portion of Roman society" to which she belongs. Despite the opening sentences, which are composed in a stiff self-conscious fashion, the novel is well written. Its paramount interest, however, does not lie in the style, which is in no way distinctive or specially attractive; and still less in the plot, which is feeble; but in the fact that we have here a presentment of social life in an Italian city of to-day from the Italian point of view. No one who has lived in Rome and had access to Roman society can fail to recognise the essential truth of the Marchesa Theodoli's delineations of persons, ideals, manners, and habits: though no one, in certain respects, not even Mr. Marion Crawford, could produce such a record unless born to or brought up among the advantages which the author of Under Pressure has enjoyed. Her strength lies in portraiture, rather than in dramatic representation. Her Princess Agnese Astalli and Signora Camilla Segni are true in every line and touch; it is when the plot has to be woven, and incidents evolved, and divers temperaments to be depicted in active and passive states, that she is less satisfactory. It is doubtful if a heroine such as Bianca Astalli can appeal to English readers—to those, at any rate, to whom the conventual life presents no aspect that is either reasonable or alluring. But the story of her own and her sister's love experiences is sympathetically told; and that, after all, is what the ordinary reader will care most for in Under Pressure.

Miss Dorothea Gerard's Austrian stories are always welcome. If not one of her most successful, Etelka's Vow is a very readable and even engrossing tale. Its weakness lies in the radical unlikelihood of the actions of more than one of the characters. Etelka has vowed to avenge the man who caused the death of a lover who, by an act of inexcusable folly—though in Austria it seems it would be, to say the least of it, condoned—takes his life on the eve of his great happiness. The man to whose criminal or indefensibly weak negligence this death is due ultimately becomes the husband of Etelka. Here is the germ of the story: it would be unfair to say more. Perhaps Etelka's action, when the inevitable discovery comes, will be to many as credible as that of Lieutenant Paloghy in committing suicide: to me, the supreme acts of both seem inconsistent with their respective characters. But that is a matter of opinion. There can, on the other hand, scarcely be two opinions regarding the charm of Miss Gerard's background touches. In this respect Etelka's Vow is as delightful as any of its predecessors.

Mr. Arthur Nestorien has a fondness for peculiar names for his personages, such as Mooton, Vailesborough, Gioval. He affects a staccato system of punctuation and a spasmodic collocation of words. He sometimes indulges in sentences certainly succinct, if that be a saving merit, but barbarous of appearance, e.g., the complete, enigmatical, daringly original sentence, "They bewared"; again, in other sentences, long and perplexing to an extraordinary degree, as the hundred and eleven words that—on p. 324—hang together on twenty commas and a semicolon. Finally—no, not so, for he has many strange predilections—say, rather, to conclude with, he hankers after uncanny adjectives, as the misbegotten term that looms through this sentence: "And the smoke hung thick in the mist, nubigenous, dense." Mr. Nestorien, too, does not disdain to show his prejudices. Scotland (to be exact, the northern portion of it) "is a country where every woman looks and behaves half like a man" (p. 236): the universities may have justification for their existence, but they do not enable a man to learn French: "Already he saw his paragraphs . . . full of suggestions and of French words mostly spelt wrong (sic) (for Mooton's French was of the best university commong-ctes-ré style)" (p. 123). The story of Syringa is worthy of the author of these "elegances."

It is a relief to turn to two such books as The Downfall and A Saint, translations though they be. It would be out of place for me to say much at this late date on the new novel by M. Zola. I may mention, however, that I took up Mr. Ernest Vizetelly's translation of La Débâcle almost immediately after perusal of the original, and read the greater portion for a second time with an enhanced sense of the power and sweep of M. Zola's genius. It has always seemed to me that Germinal is one of the great books of the age; it is saying much, then, to affirm that La Débâcle is not unworthy to rank with it. It is an overwhelming argument against war: a more damning and conclusive arraignment than any poetical or philosophical tirade that has ever been penned. And this is so because it is written with the blood of the ignobly slain and the miserably martyred. Those who do not read French, or who prefer an English version if tolerable, may be sure that Mr. Vizetelly's rendering is in all respects trustworthy as well as scholarly. The volume has the additional attraction of elucidatory notes by the translator, who, it may perhaps not be superfluous to add, was a war correspondent during the Franco-German struggle for supremacy.

Very different in method and manner is the work of M. Paul Bourget, prince des psychologues. But in truth this volume is not a novel, or even a series of tales, but rather a long fictitious narrative of the author's visit to another such monastery as that of Monte Oliveto in Umbria, and its priestly sovereign (of both, though it is scarce pertinent, the present writer also has the liveliest recollection), with, for padding, three supplementary little stories. M. Bourget is often accused by M. Lemaitre, and other ultra-patriotic scribes, of Anglomania. But he is no lover, at least, of the unprotected female tourist who dauntlessly, "without good looks, good manners, or good dressing," sallies abroad to the confusion of foreign males. This is how the gallant author of the Physiologie de l'Amour Moderne chronicles a certain meeting in the Pisan Campo Santo:—

"In the course of my visits to the Campo Santo I had noticed a couple of elderly English maiden ladies, who, by their singular ugliness and their utilitarian strangeness of attire, were a living illustration in caricature of the beautiful verse of a poet to a corpse:—

'Thou hast no longer sex nor age.'"

Mr. John Gray's translation is generally fluent and literal—sometimes too literal; and, apart from a few strange lapses, is pleasing and even graceful, particularly when it is remembered what an exceptionally individual and delicate writer M. Bourget is.

I have more than once drawn attention in the ACADEMY to the admirable work of a young American romancist, Mr. Hamlin Garland. This small book of his, A Little Norsk, is a delightful story, full of humour of the finest kind, genuine pathos, and enthralling in its vivid human interest. The Norse orphan lass, who, both as child and woman, wins the hearts of the two great Missourians, is a welcome change after the usual three-volume heroine. As for Bert and Anson, they are heroes and fit to be fathers of kings, though it would have amazed them to hear it.

Mr. H. C. Bunner has a very pretty reputation for humour—to say nothing of the bays he gained by his Airs from Arcady—won, so to say, off his own bat, and also as editor of the generally delightful Puck, which, somewhat ineptly, has been called the Punch of America. The Runaway Browns is a dainty and amusing comedy-burlesque. The story is told with grace and verve: one smiles at every page and often laughs genially. What more is wanted? It is certainly an added incitement to possess oneself of this "Brown Study" that it is so charmingly illustrated, printed, and generally "set forth."

The publishers of Mr. Bliss's romance have hit upon a novel method of attraction. The delicate etching by Mr. Sainton, which ordinarily would be a frontispiece, is here imprinted on the outside parchment cover. The effect, in this instance at any rate, is pleasing: though, scarcely necessary to say, such a method of illustration might readily become positively offensive. Mr. Bliss's story is not so distinctly modern as to justify its title, but it is an interesting if painful study of the development along unusual lines of a morbid temperament. The author will do better when he has learned to distinguish between the vraie vérité of life and mere literary realism.

WILLIAM SHARP.

GIFT BOOKS.

Indian Fairy Tales. Selected and edited by Joseph Jacobs. Illustrated by John D. Batten. (David Nutt.) The Green Fairy Book. Edited by Andrew Lang. With illustrations by H. J.

Ford. (Longmans.) Mr. Jacobs and Mr. Lang progress with equal steps in their agreeable task of making children of to-day familiar with fragments of the oldest literatures of the world. Each has produced his third volume. Mr. Jacobs, after "collecting" English, and "editing" Celtic fairy tales, now passes to India, where (like most other scholars) he finds the original home of this class of folk-lore; and there seems no reason why his geographical tour should not be productive of many future results. Mr. Lang, on the other hand, announces that he knows when to stop; and that the coloured series of "Fairy Books" will not go beyond Blue, Red, and Green. However, we may trust his ingenuity to provide a substitute for next Christmas. So much for general introduction. Of the two collectors, Mr. Jacobs, as usual, is the more stimulating. He has cast his net wider, and dressed up his catch with a more piquant sauce. Here you will find nursery stories told by an ayah to English girls only a few years ago, side by side with translations of Buddhist Jatakas, which certainly date back for two millenniums; and both alike are written in the same crisp style that shows their substantial identity of source. At the same time, he has enriched his text with analytic and comparative notes (carefully placed at the end), which contain more matter for argument than a volume of the Folk-Lore Journal. As in his first volume he claimed to have traced to his mythological source the Childe Roland of Shakspeare and of Browning; as in his second volume he tore to pieces the Welsh associations of Gelert; so now, he yet more boldly declares that Brer Rabbit himself, like St. Joseph, is merely a negro incarnation of Gautama Buddha. All will not accept Mr. Jacobs's conclusions—and some of them are perhaps incapable of demonstration; but for ourselves, we shall continue to believe that his is the only fertile method of reasoning in comparative folk-lore. Mr. Lang—who, on other occasions, is not afraid to argue about mythology—leaves speculation altogether on one side when he has the pleasure of boys and girls to consult. He takes his goods where he finds them (though it happens that most are either French or German), being satisfied with their merit as stories; and then he sets his company of fair translators to work, for our benefit. Many will prefer this mode, and we will not quarrel with their tastes. So, too, we do not intend to draw any invidious comparison between the two illustrators, each of whom stands head-and-shoulders above the average. Mr. Batten, in particular, has caught the charm of Eastern decoration and Eastern dress; but he is not always successful in his faces, and sometimes fails in his animals. On the plate opposite p. 120, he has a bullock that is worthy of Mr. Kipling père, though it is out of place.

Master Bartlemy. By Frances E. Crompton. With illustrations by T. Pym. (Imes.) The series of "The Dainty Books" to which Miss Crompton's new story belongs starts with an ideal which we hope it will realise—a promise which it may not always be easy to perform. Miss Crompton's story of "Master Bartlemy" is, however, dainty enough to encourage expectation. It is a very sweet and pure story of a very nice little girl called Nancy, who we are glad to find was not too good to live. We feared that she was going to be at one time, because she had such a very nasty attack in her "throat"; but she pulled through, and everybody was very glad, including the poor men and women of the village. But why they should be glad, and who Master Bartlemy was, and what is the secret of The Thankful Heart we shall leave the reader, old or young, to discover. The illustrations though not very extraordinary are nice, and so is the binding.

Crow's Nest and Bellhaven Tales. By Mrs. Burton Harrison. (Fisher Unwin.) Why Crow's Nest should come first in the title and Bellhaven Tales in the book is a question which perhaps only the author could tell. If it is a sign of a contest as to which should precede the other in order of merit, we are not surprised at traces of difficulty. Both are excellent in their kind. One is a terrible incident in the war of North and South told admirably. The picture of Fink "come to claim her dead," will live long in the imagination of the reader, and the charming vision of the old Virginian household so soon to be desolated will not easily be forgotten. As for the Bellhaven tales they want little of perfection either in matter or manner. It is here we think of Mrs. Gaskell. Old Alexandria, though in the United States, is the next neighbour of Cranford in the literary world. It is sufficient praise for Mrs. Harrison to say that the two pictures stand comparison. Whether or not an old bundle of love letters provided some of the material for the story of Lucilla, called "When the Century Came in," it is full of the fragrance of a past age, admirably simple and quaint in its language, charming in the truth of its human feeling. Next to this we place "Monsieur Alcibiade" (which by-the-by does not remind us of Cranford in the least), a story of much humour and pathos also. The book winds up with another story of the war called "Una and King David," in which the reader is introduced to a young lady and an old nigger whose acquaintance they will be very pleased to make.

Brownies and Roseleaves. By Roma White (Blanche Oram). With numerous illustrations by L. Leslie Brooke. (Imes.) These stories and poems are decidedly ingenious; there is no doubt about the excellence of their morals, and both the prose and verse are above the average. But somehow the stories are not convincing: no one, we fear, not even the most fanciful and credulous children, will quite believe in the story of the White Violets, or the story of the Silver Bowl. Perhaps also the pitch of self-denial throughout the book is just a little too high. But still we must not be hypercritical, and there are many nice things in the book. "Mrs. Tomtit's 'At Home'" is particularly good, with its humorous (daintily humorous) bird songs. Master Thrush's solo is delightful, and so is the song about the Cowardly Wren, who would not take her first flight until she had been pushed off the bough by her mother.

"Then came a sudden chirp of fright!

The wren? O, where was she?

She'd taken an unwilling flight

From that old apple tree;

And sitting gasping on the ground,

Her breath entirely spent,

Confessed, with pride, that she had found

A new accomplishment!"

If Miss Blanche Oram could cultivate this vein she might achieve a real success.

Fairy Tales in other Lands. By Julia Goddard. (Cassells.) With eighty-six illustrations; and all of these are good, some very good, reminding one quite of the old days when spirit and character were thought of more importance than size and the cutting of tints. And Miss Goddard has the pen of the real storyteller. It was a happy thought, a diversion in more than one sense, to treat the old tales geographically. The stories which we all know and love—Jack the Giant-Killer, Beauty and the Beast, the Sleeping Princess, and several more—are retold with fresh impulse of imagination without complete loss of the old charm. Those who don't and those who do know the originals will read the book with pleasure. Those who do will, however, have some cause for remonstrance with Miss Goddard. Is she a man-hater or a prude, or does she think matrimony one of those things that children should not think about? However that may be, there is no marrying or giving in marriage in her chaste volume. Jack (or Jan) may kill any amount of giants, but he will not win a bride; Magnus may release the beautiful lady who has been transformed into a bear, but he may not wed her; Beauty may brave the Beast, but he will turn out no beautiful Prince, but—an uncle! Some of her stories begin in the good old way, "Once upon a time," but they never end with "they were married and lived happily ever after." There will be no new generation of heroes and princesses if this sort of thing goes on.

The Feather. By Ford H. Madox Hueffer, with frontispiece by F. Madox Brown. (Fisher Unwin.) The story begins well and goes on pretty well and ends in absurdity. It is a pity, for Mr. Hueffer is not without imagination, and there are some parts of the story—as the carrying off of the princess and the voyage to the moon—which are very cleverly done. The rock he splits upon is humour, or what the author takes for it. Bandyng of old puns and farcical incidents of the horse-collar order are introduced without any sense of literary propriety: and the tale ends with a sort of harlequinade, which is neither clever nor amusing. The author seems to have breakfasted with Lemprière, dined with W. S. Gilbert, and supped with Jerome K. Jerome; and the result is a nightmare in which many good things are jumbled incongruously. Perhaps this is the mark at which the author aimed. If so, we are sorry, as he could do much better if he chose.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Hon. Alicia M. T. Amherst and Mr. Percy E. Newberry have in preparation a work on the History of English Gardening. The first part of the book, that dealing with the period extending from the Roman Conquest to the end of the sixteenth century, will be a republication in chapter form, and with considerable additions, of a series of articles by Mr. Newberry which appeared in the Gardener's Chronicle in 1888, 1889, and 1890. The work will appear early next year, and will be published by Mr. Quaritch.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish next month a volume of essays by Mr. J. W. Cross, the editor of George Eliot's Life, entitled Impressions of Dante and the New World.

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON will issue immediately Red-Letter Days of my Life, by Mrs. Andrew Crosse, containing reminiscences and anecdotes of men and women of letters of the middle of the present century, and of the scientific personages who founded the British Association. Readers of Temple Bar know how wide was Mrs. Crosse's circle of acquaintances, and how pleasantly she can tell a story. The book will be in two volumes.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER & Co. announce for immediate publication a facsimile of the original English edition of The Kalender of Shepherdes (1506), with prolegomena, index, and glossary by Dr. H. Oskar Sommer, the editor of Malory's Morte Darthur. We may be permitted to add that Dr. Sommer, to whom we owe so much for the illustration of the sources of our early literature, has during the present week taken to himself an English wife.

MR. J. F. HOGAN, author of The Irish in Australia, has completed a study of the public life of the late Robert Lowe, Viscount Sherbrooke, in both hemispheres. Mr.

Hogan has devoted particular attention to Mr. Lowe's Australian career, concerning which he has unearthed a quantity of interesting information concerning him in his threefold capacity of politician, journalist, and barrister.

THE subscription list for London City Suburbs, of which the Queen has accepted the dedication, will close on November 30.

THE Bishop of Worcester has resigned the general editorship of the Cambridge Greek Testament for Schools and Colleges; and the Rev. J. Armitage Robinson, fellow of Christ's College, has been appointed by the Syndics of the University Press to edit the remaining volumes of the series. The Book of the Revelation, with a commentary by the late Rev. W. H. Simcox, edited by his brother, Mr. G. A. Simcox, is now in the press.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication a reprint from the Encyclopædia on "The Properties of Things," by Bartholomew Anglicus. It will be entitled Mediæval Lore, and will be edited by Mr. Robert Steele, with a preface by William Morris.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish immediately a volume entitled More Wild Nature, by Mrs. Brightwen, a vice-president of the Selborne Society, and author of "Wild Nature Won by Kindness," to which the present work is a pendant. The volume is illustrated by the author.

The Story of the Golden Owl, by Mrs. Dora Greet, provokes examination, both the text and Mr. Ambrose Dudley's illustrations in black and white chalk being on brown paper. Mrs. Greet's story and Mr. Andrew Tuer's Book of Delightful and Strange Designs, being One Hundred Facsimile Illustrations of the Art of the Japanese Stenciller, appear to-day from the Leadenhall Press.

MESSRS. EDEN, REMINGTON & Co. will issue immediately Masterpieces of Crime, by Mr. Albert D. Vandam; and Too Easily Jealous, by Mrs. H. G. Russell.

Paul's Prayers, and other Sermons is the title of a new volume by the Rev. Alex. Maclaren, shortly to be issued by Messrs. Alexander & Shephard.

AMONG the articles to appear in the forthcoming issue of the Religious Review of Reviews will be "Tennyson—In Memoriam," by Canon Fleming; "Crossing the Bar," rendered into Latin verse by Mr. Oswald A. Smith; and "Ernest Renan from a French Protestant's Point of View."

DR. STALKER'S Life of Christ has been translated into Japanese, and his Life of St. Paul into Spanish.

THE well-known embossed binding which has distinguished Bohn's Libraries from the earliest issues will be abandoned with the new year, in favour of the new style, which for some time past has been obtainable as an alternative. As Messrs. Bell will in future keep this only in stock, those who wish to complete sets of any particular subject or author in the old binding, should lose no time in ordering the necessary volumes.

ON November 8, Prof. T. Hayter Lewis was installed as master of the Quatuor Coronati Lodge, in the place of Mr. W. H. Rylands. The wardens are Dr. W. Wynn Westcott and the Rev. C. J. Ball; the treasurer, Mr. Walter Besant; and the secretary, Mr. G. W. Speth. The publications of this body of freemasons extend to some eight volumes, and comprise many valuable reproductions of ancient MSS. The outer circle of the Lodge, composed of subscribers to its Proceedings, now number about 1400 members.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

DR. ERWIN GRUEBER, reader in Roman law at Oxford, has been appointed deputy regius professor of civil law, for the special purpose of delivering certain lectures. Prof. Bryce had offered to resign the chair; but it appears that All Souls College is not yet able to provide the full endowment contemplated under its new statutes.

DR. G. BIRKBECK HILL, the editor of Boswell and Johnson, has been elected an honorary fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford, Johnson's old college.

SIR JOHN STAINER, professor of music at Oxford—who has just been elected to an honorary fellowship at Magdalen College, where he was formerly organist—was to deliver a public lecture to-day (Saturday), in the Sheldonian Theatre, upon "Lute, Viol, and Voice," with musical illustrations.

THE Rev. Dr. Joseph Edkins, of Peking, will deliver two public lectures at Oxford, at the Indian Institute, on Wednesday and Saturday next, upon "Sources of the Ideas of the Chinese on God, of their Mythology, of their Ethics, and of their Views of the Future State."

PROF. T. MCKENNY HUGHES has been elected president of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, in succession to Prof. G. H. Darwin.

THE faculty of natural science at Oxford has adopted a resolution recommending that their subject should form a part of the first public examination. Apparently, this means—not that all candidates for moderations should possess an elementary knowledge of science—but that there should be a third list of honours in moderations, in addition to classics and mathematics.

AT St. John's College, Cambridge, one of the vacant fellowships has been awarded for mathematics, and two for classics. The dissertation submitted by Mr. G. T. Bennett (senior wrangler in 1890, and first Smith's prizeman, 1892) was on "The Residues of Powers of Numbers for any Composite Modulus, Real or Complex." This paper is in course of publication in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society. Mr. H. D. Darbishire (first class in Part II. of Classical Tripos, 1888, and M'Mahon Law Student) sent in "Notes on the Spiritus Asper," "Contributions to Greek Lexicography," on ἐπιδείξις, ἐπιδείξια, εὐδείξις, εὐδείξια; also "Studies on Sanskrit L and R," and on "The Indo-European Words for fox and wolf." Of these papers, the first two have already been published by the Cambridge Philological Society. Mr. T. R. Glover (medallist for Greek epigram, 1890, 1891; Person prizeman, 1891; first Chancellor's classical medallist, 1892; and first class in both parts of the Classical Tripos, 1891-2) wrote on "The Tenure of Land in Ancient Greece."

AT the meeting of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society on Wednesday next, Mr. W. H. St. John Hope will read a paper on "The Armorial Ensigns of the University, the Colleges, and the Regius Professors," illustrated with a large number of seals, original grants of arms, and other documents.

THE Romanes Lecture which Mr. Gladstone delivered at Oxford on October 24 is now published (Henry Frowde) under the modest title of An Academic Sketch. The author has added footnotes, giving some of his authorities; and an appendix, correcting one or two matters of fact. We do not propose to criticise either the general argument or the details of an essay which will at least have the effect of arousing popular interest in the history of our universities. We must, however, protest against the phrase "Francis, Lord Bacon" on

p. 19. "Lord Bacon" alone is bad enough, though it has received the sanction of Macaulay. But "Francis, Lord Bacon" is doubly offensive, as presenting the spurious appearance of accuracy. It is as if one should say, "Benjamin, Lord Disraeli."

A SPECIAL course of three lectures on "Tennyson and his Poems" will be delivered by Prof. J. W. Hales, at the Ladies' Department of King's College, Kensington-square, on Mondays, at 3 p.m., beginning on November 28.

THE death is announced of the Rev. A. W. Wratislaw, sometime fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, and afterwards headmaster of Bury St. Edmund's School. In 1877 he delivered a course of lectures on the Ilchester foundation at Oxford, upon The Native Literature of Bohemia in the Fourteenth Century (Bell, 1878).

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL JOTTINGS.

MESSRS. SOTHEY have already begun dispersing the library of Count Louis Apponyi, brought over from Hungary for the purpose; but still we may mention it, as the sale will continue till next Tuesday. The collection was formed by the great-grandfather of the present Count, at the same period as the Althorp library. It is particularly rich in first editions of the classics, printed in the fifteenth century; in the finest illustrated works on natural history; and in heraldic MSS. Among Bibles, there are the Complutensian Polyglott, on vellum; the Piacenza Latin Bible (1475); the suppressed Aldine Vulgate (1590), and the fifth German Bible (Augsburg, 1473-75). The Botticelli Dante unfortunately has only copies of the original engravings by Baldini. A special curiosity is the MS. of Ptolemy, from which the Roman edition of 1478 was printed, with maps and illuminations.

MESSRS. ELKIN MATTHEWS & JOHN LANE, of the Bodley Head, Vigo-street—who are not only publishers of the newest poetry, but also collectors of the rarities of an earlier generation—have acquired some copies of the four-leaf sheet in which Tennyson first issued his "Welcome to Alexandra." In its original form, the poem had about eight lines less than as now reprinted, that fine line—being notably absent. But it is interesting to observe that no change whatever has been made in punctuation and such like details, to which Tennyson (unlike Browning) is known to have always paid the most scrupulous attention.

"Clash, ye bells, in the merry March air"—

THE third part of Mr. Bernard Quaritch's Contributions towards a Dictionary of English Book-Collectors has followed quickly after the second. All the notices are contributed by Mr. Michael Kerney. They include Thomas Allen, a last-century collector of early English books, of whose personality practically nothing is known; Horne Tooke, whose annotated copy of the first edition of Johnson's Dictionary sold for the enormous price of £200; and Benjamin Heath Malkin, whose translation of Gil Blas passes under the name of Smollett (see ACADEMY, October 8). But by far the largest space is devoted to the Althorp Library, which was sold the other day to Mrs. Henry Rylands for a quarter of a million of money. Here will be found some interesting details about that historic transaction; and also a list of some of the books (chiefly Bibles) which Mrs. Rylands had previously purchased. Of the Althorp Library itself, and of the Earl Spencer who formed it, we have a concise account; and also a catalogue of the chief rarities, arranged under five headings: ante-typographic, Bibles, books printed before 1469, Caxtons (fifty-six in number, of which at least four are unique), and other notable books and editions. The illustrations given with this number are—the engraving of the portrait of Lord Spencer, from Dibdin; and two of Mr. Griggs's marvelous facsimiles in chromolithography, representing the first page and the colophon of the Mentz Psalter, taken from the copy on vellum of the 1459 edition in the possession of Mr. Quaritch.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & BOWES have issued Part B. of their Catalogue of Cambridge Books, covering the whole of the eighteenth century. A former part dealt with the period from the earliest issue of the Cambridge Press in 1531; a third, announced as in preparation, will carry the work down to the present time; while a fourth will comprise addenda, MSS., maps, engravings, &c. Though intended, in the first place, as a sale catalogue, the large number of the entries and the accuracy of the details given raise this work to a high place among local bibliographies. For the eighteenth century, we find here recorded just 500 books printed at Cambridge, besides as many more that have some connexion with the university, the town, or the county. Here we find the echoes of old academical controversies, associated with the names of Bentley, Whiston, and Friend. Here are a long series of the Seatonian poems by Christopher Smart, on the attributes of the Supreme Being. Here, too, is Coleridge's early drama, The Fall of Robespierre, with proposals on the fly-leaf for publishing by subscription imitations from the Modern Latin Poets; and also numbers of the Cambridge Intelligencer, with verses by "S. T. C., Jes. Coll." The set of the Cambridge University Calendar is complete, from its first issue in 1796; and it is interesting to learn that the name of Deighton appears continuously among its publishers, except for a gap of two years. Lord Brabourne would be interested in the University Poll-books of the time of William Pitt; and there is a sermon preached by one Thomas Hough, in 1728, which we commend to the notice of the librarian of St. Paul's School.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

THE one hundred and thirty-ninth session of the Society of Arts will be opened on Wednesday next, November 16, with an address by Sir Richard E. Webster, chairman of the council.

THE first meeting of the present session of the Royal Statistical Society will be held at the Museum of Practical Geology, Jernyn-street, on Tuesday next, at 7.45 p.m., when the president, Mr. Charles Booth, will deliver his inaugural address on "Dock Labour."

THE winter lectures at the London Institution, Finsbury, will open next week, when Sir Robert Ball will lecture on Monday upon "Auriga," and Precentor Venables on Thursday upon "Lincoln Cathedral." Both these lectures will be illustrated. Among the other announcements are—"The Buried Cities of Mashonaland," by Mr. J. Theodore Bent; "Photographs of Flying Bullets," by Prof. C. V. Boys; "Reading as a Recreation," by Mr. Edmund Gosse; "A Study of Sociology and Politics among Insects," by the Rev. Dr. Dallinger; "Jewish Wit and Humour," by the Chief Rabbi; "Pepys's Diary and its Musical Notes," by Prof. Bridge; "The Women in the Buddhist Reformation of the Sixth Century B.C.," by Prof. Rhys Davids; and "The Nature and Function of Bacteria," by Dr. Klein. The Christmas course for juveniles will be delivered by Prof. Vivian Lewes, upon "Combustion: Slow, Rapid, and Explosive"; and three Travers Lectures in January, by Prof. Silvanus

Thompson, upon "Electric Lighting: Currents, Lamps, and Meters."

At the meeting of the Ethical Society, to be held on Sunday next, at 7.30 p.m. in Essex-street, Strand, Mr. Augustine Birrell will give a lecture on "Morality, Practical and Ideal."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

NOT IN VAIN.

To E. H.

"Nothing is sweeter than love; nothing stronger, nothing higher . . . nothing fuller or better in heaven and in earth."—Of the Imitation of Christ, Book III., Chapter V. Thomas A' Kempis.

Is it so hard a fate indeed,
Ever to follow where love doth lead?
Never to catch a glimpse of his face,
Yet always to feel in every place,
For ever to follow upon his track,
Knowing that never can love turn back?
But though love passeth thus on before,
Yet earth is never the same as of yore;
Never the same as before he came,
And brightened all life with his burning flame.
What though he paused not before our door,
Nor linger'd to cross our threshold o'er?
It was but an instant we saw him there,
Gazed deep in his soul, and found it fair;
Found it so fair that never again
Can we, who looked deep in love's eyes in vain,
Ever regret the days past by
Ere we heard the footstep of love draw nigh.
All our life will he lighten the way;
We follow him onwards, and brighter the day
To us who must follow where love doth go,
Than to those who never his footstep know.
To them is the loss—to us is but gain;
There is no such thing as to love in vain.

F. P.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

To the Antiquary for November, Mr. R. Curtin contributes a valuable list of the Yorkshire churches mentioned in the Domesday Survey. The compilation of this catalogue must have been attended with no little labour, but it will be of great use to future students. We heartily wish we had such a catalogue for the whole of England. Writer after writer has gone on assuming that the Domesday Book furnishes complete lists of the churches then in being for the counties it covers. Even such a scholarly person as the late Archdeacon Churton fell into this error, and published a map of Lincolnshire with the Domesday churches marked on it, for the purpose of showing what were the local centres of religion in the days of the Conqueror. It should never be forgotten that the object of Domesday was to afford a basis for taxation, not to record ecclesiastical information: it follows, therefore, that the churches which contributed nothing to the national revenue were left unrecorded. The Rev. C. F. R. Palmer continues his paper on prelates of the Order of Black Friars of England. The catalogue is not yet completed. It already contains far more names than we had counted on. Unhappily very little as to the personal history of these men has come down to us. Who, we wonder, was Friar Thomas, who died Bishop of Wisby, on the island of Gothland, about the middle of the thirteenth century? Mr. R. C. Hope furnishes yet another paper on Holy Wells, dealing this time with those of Scotland.

THE current number of the Eastern and Western Review contains the first instalment of an interesting autobiography of a Madras Sepoy "of the olden time," edited (or written?) by Sir Frederick Goldsmid.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MESSRS. PERCIVAL & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

General Literature.—"The Victorian Age of English Literature," in 2 vols., by Mrs. Oliphant and F. R. Oliphant; "A History of the Theories of Production and Distribution in English Political Economy, from 1776 to 1848," by Edwin Cannan; "The Evolution of Decorative Art," an essay upon its origin and development as illustrated by the art of modern races of mankind, by Henry Balfour, with numerous illustrations; "A Short History of the Venetian Republic," by Horatio F. Brown, with maps; "British Colonization in Outline," by the Rev. William Parr Greswell; "Technical Essays," by members of the Arts and Crafts Exhibition Society, edited with a preface by William Morris; "Periods of European History," edited by Arthur Hassall: Period I. A.D., 476-987, by C. W. C. Oman; 987-1272, by Prof. T. F. Tout; 1272-1494, by R. Lodge; 1610-1715, by H. O. Wakeman; 1715-1789, by A. Hassall; 1789-1815, by H. Morse Stephens. "Popular Lessons on Cookery," by Mrs. Boyd Carpenter; "A Paradise of English Poetry," by the Rev. H. C. Beeching; "History of English," a sketch of the origin and development of the English language, with examples, down to the present day, by A. C. Champneys; "Elizabethan and Jacobean Pamphlets," by George Saintsbury, forming Vol. VI. of the Pocket Library of English Literature.

Theological.—"Faith," eleven sermons, with a preface, by the Rev. H. C. Beeching; "The Hours of the Blessed Virgin Mary," according to the Barum Breviary, together with a brief commentary from "The Mirror of our Lady"; "The Altar Book," edited by a committee of priests, containing the order for the administration of the Holy Communion, according to the Book of Common Prayer, together with additional matter translated from the English missals of the earlier part of the sixteenth century; "High and Low Church," by Lord Norton.

Educational.—"Selections from Ovid," edited by M. J. F. Brackenbury; "Cornelius Nepos," edited by H. N. Kingdon; "The Gospel according to St. Matthew," edited by H. R. Heatley; forming 3 new vols. of the Junior Students' Classical Series; "Primary Latin Exercises," specially adapted to the New Public Schools Latin Primer, by E. P. Rooper and Francis Herring; "English Grammar," by Robert Jackson; "Raleigh's Discovery of Guiana," by A. T. Martin; "Scott's Marmion," 3 vols., by R. F. Charles; "Shorter Poems by Burns, Byron, and Campbell," by W. Marison; "Ancient Mariner and Hyperion, with Keats' Odes," "Byron's Child Harold," by E. D. A. Morshead; "Macaulay's Essay on Chatham," "Macaulay's Essay on the History of the Popes," "Malory's Morte d'Arthur," by A. T. Martin; "Pope's Odyssey," 2 vols., by H. V. Pears; "Prescott's Conquest of Peru," by H. C. Tillard; "Dampier's Voyages," by Robert Steele; "Burke's Speeches on America," by Prof. C. Vaughan; "Chaucer's Tales of the Clerke and the Man of Lawe," by Prof. C. Vaughan; "Selections from Clarendon's History of the Rebellion," by A. G. Little; "Spenser's Faerie Queene," by F. S. Boas; "Steele's Essays," by L. E. Upcott; "Macaulay's History," the first chapter, by A. G. Little; "Milton's Comus, &c.," by C. H. Spence; "Selection from Milton's Paradise Lost," 2 vols., by Miss Hughes—forming 23 new volumes of the English classics for schools; "L'Oeillet Rouge," Episode du Chevalier de Maison-Rouge, par Alexandre Dumas, edited by the Rev. W. Horsburgh, forming a new volume of the Intermediate Texts; "Exercises on French Grammar," by V. J. T. Spiers; "Introduction to French Prose Composition," by Prof. A. L. Meissner; "A Primer of German Grammar," by A. A. Somerville; "Primary German Exercises," for the use of the lower forms of public schools, adapted to the "Primer of German Grammar," by A. A. Somerville; "A Commercial German Reader," by H. Preisinger; "A German Primer and Exercise Book," by Hermann Hager and R. P. Horsley. Elementary German Texts, each containing on an average 96 pages, with notes and some with vocabularies; the general editor of these texts is R. J. Morich, each volume contains, either in excerpt or in extenso, a piece of modern German prose which, whilst continuous enough to sustain interest, will not be too long to be finished in the work of a term or two:—"Bilder aus der Türkei, from Grube, Geographische Charakterbilder, edited by W. S. Lyon; "Die Wandelnde Glocke, from Der Lehrer Hinkende Bote" (Fischer), edited by R. H. Allpress; "Der Besuch im Carcer" (Eckstein), edited by T. A. Stephens; "Episodes from Andreas Hofer" (Otto Hoffmann), edited by O. B. Powell; "Fritz auf dem Lande," edited by R. P. Horsley; "German Historical Reading Book," touching upon subjects referred to by "standard" authors, dealing with the principal great events in the history of all nations, with notes, edited by H. S. Beresford-Webb; "Outlines of Roman History," by Prof. H. F. Pelham, with maps; "An Advanced History of England," for use in colleges and upper forms of schools, by Prof. Cyril Ransome, with maps. The Glasgow Series of Elementary Geography, by Lionel W. Lyde:—"Australia," "Africa," "Minor British Possessions, Great Cities, Great Commodities." "An Epitome of Geography for Pupils," and "A Manual of Geography for Masters," by E. R. Wethey; "Notes on Lessons from the Old Testament," by the Rev. M. G. Glazebrook; "The School Euclid," by Daniel Brent; "Problems in Algebra," by A. Newell; "Lessons on Air," by A. E. Hawkins. The Beginner's Text-Books of Science, edited by G. Stallard:—"Naked-eye Botany," with illustrations and floral problems, by F. E. Kitchener; "Chemistry," by G. Stallard; "Geology," by C. L. Barnes; "Electricity and Magnetism," by L. Cumming; "Heat," by G. Stallard; "Light," by H. P. Highton; "Mechanics," treated experimentally, by L. Cumming; "Physical Geography," by L. Cumming; "Practical Physics," an introductory handbook for the physical laboratory, in three parts, by Prof. W. F. Barrett; "A Course of Study in Elements of Music, Harmony, and Musical Form," by M. I. Richardson, edited by George Riseley.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CRONAU, R. Amerika. Die Geschichte seiner Entdeckg. von der ältesten bis auf die neueste Zeit. Leipzig: Abel. 12 M.
GRAVIERE, Julien de la. Les Gueux de mer. Paris: Ollendorff. 3 fr. 50 c.
KÖSTLIN, J. Friedrich der Weise u. die Schlosskirche zu Wittenberg. Wittenberg: Herold. 2 M. 50 Pf.
MORON, C. Durch Kamerun von Süd nach Nord. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 9 M.
PERATÉ, A. L'Archéologie chrétienne. Paris: May & Motteroz. 3 fr. 50 c.
PINARD, Ernest. Mon Journal. T. 3 et dernier. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
RAUCH, H. Lenz u. Shakespeare. Berlin: Apolant. 3 M.
SENTUPÉRY, Léon. L'Europe politique en 1892. 1er Fasc. L'Allemagne. Paris: Lecène. 3 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- ANALECTA hymnica mediæ ævi. Hrg. v. G. M. Dreyes. XIII. Leipzig: Reiland. 8 M.
PROBST, F. Die ältesten römischen Sacramentarien u. Ordines, erklärt. Münster: Aschendorff. 9 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BERROHM, K. Jurisprudenz u. Rechtsphilosophie. 1. Bd. 1. Abhandlg. Das Naturrecht der Gegenwart. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 12 M. 60 Pf.

- CARDINAL V. WIDDERN, E. Der kleine Krieg u. der Etappenendienst. Leipzig: Reisewitz. 4 M. 80 Pf.
DAROUN, L. v. Studien zum ältesten Familienrecht. 1. Th. Mutterrecht u. Vaterrecht. 1. Hälfte. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 3 M. 20 Pf.
GOETTE, R. Geschichte der deutschen Einheitsbewegung im 19. Jahrh. 1. Th. Das Zeitalter der deutschen Erhebung. 1807-1815. 2. Halbbd. Gotha: Perthes. 5 M. 60 Pf.
GRÜTZMACH, Die Bedeutung Benedikts v. Nursia u. seiner Regel in der Geschichte d. Mönchtums. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 80 Pf.
LIBER Regum. Nach dem in der k. k. Universitäts-Bibliothek zu Innsbruck befindlichen Exemplare zum ersten Male hrg. v. R. Hochegger. Leipzig: Harrasowitz. 25 M.
NATZMER, G. E. v. Lebensbilder aus dem Jahrhundert nach dem grossen deutschen Kriege. Gotha: Perthes. 7 M.
PETER, H. Die Scriptores historiae Augustae. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M. 40 Pf.
SÄGMÜLLER, J. V. Die Papstwahlbulen u. das staatliche Recht der Exklusiva. Tübingen: Laupp. 6 M. 40 Pf.
SAUER, W. Das Herzogt. Nassau in den J. 1813-1820. Wiesbaden: Kreidel. 6 M.
SCHMIDT, A. B. Der Austritt aus der Kirche. Eine kirchenrechtl. u. kirchenpolit. Abhandlg. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 8 M.
SCHMIDT, R. Geschichte d. Araberaufstandes in Ost-Afrika. Frankfurt-a.-O.: Trowitzsch. 5 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BACHMANN, P. Die Elemente der Zahlentheorie. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M. 40 Pf.
ESCHENHUT, J. v. Anatomie u. Entwicklungsgeschichte. Hrg. v. F. Merkel u. R. Benet. 1. Bd. 1891. Wiesbaden: Bergmann. 25 M.
KRAEPELIN, K. Die deutschen Süswasser-Polypen. 2. Th. Hamburg: Friederichsen. 9 M.
LEFÈVRE, André. Les Races et les Langues. Paris: Alcan. 6 fr.
MÜLLER, F. Zeitfahnen zur Geschichte der Mathematik, Physik u. Astronomie bis zum J. 1500. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
REHSE, H. Neue u. wenig bekannte Korallen. Hamburg: Friederichsen. 6 M.
ROTH, M. Andreas Vesalius Bruxellensis. Berlin: Reimer. 15 M.
SCHULZE, F. E. Ueh. die inneren Kiemen der Batrachierlarven. II. Berlin: Reimer. 6 M.
TAVEL, F. v. Vergleichende Morphologie der Pilze. Jena: Fischer. 6 M.
WEISMANN, A. Aufsätze üb. Vererbung u. verwandte biologische Fragen. Jena: Fischer. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BOHNENBECKER, K. Geschichte der schwäbischen Mundart im 15. Jahrh. I. Allgemeines u. Vokale der Stammsilben. Tübingen: Laupp. 4 M.
GOURMONT, Remy de. Le Latin mystique: les poètes de l'antiphonaire et la symbolique au moyen âge. Paris: Vanier. 12 fr.
HEINZE, R. Xenokrates. Darstellung der Lehre u. Sammlung der Fragmente. Leipzig: Teubner. 5 M. 60 Pf.
LUCANI, M. A. de bello civili libri X. G. Steinhart aliorumque ceptis usus ed. C. Hesius. Leipzig: Teubner. 3 M. 60 Pf.
NOVATI, Fr. La Navigatio Sancti Brendani in antico Veneziano. Paris: Welter. 10 fr.
SIMON, R. Das Amuratsaka in seinen Beziehungen dargestellt. Kiel: Haeseler. 9 M.
SYRIANI in Hermogenem commentaria, ed. H. Rabe. Vol. I. Leipzig: Teubner. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A LETTER ATTRIBUTED TO CROMWELL.

Oxford: Oct. 26, 1892.

I wish to call attention to Letter 200 in Carlyle's Cromwell. Under the impression that it was genuine, I quoted a phrase from it in the Life of Cromwell in the Dictionary of National Biography (xiii. 178); but a closer examination of the letter leads me to believe that it is an eighteenth-century forgery.

The history of the letter is as follows:—In 1753 a certain Leonard Howard published "A Collection of Letters from the original manuscripts of many princes, great persons, and statesmen, with some curious and scarce tracts and pieces of antiquity." The collection, which was published by subscription, was intended to consist of two volumes, but one only was actually published. It is utterly chaotic in arrangement, and from its pagination evidently incomplete. Howard prints at p. 406, "A remarkable letter from O. Cromwell to the governor of Edinburgh Castle," but that letter had already been printed twice before—in 1650 in a pamphlet, and in 1742 in Thurloe's State Papers (i. 160). There is no sign that he had any MSS. of Cromwell; nor does he assert that he had. In 1758, however, the two documents printed below appeared in the Annual Register, with a note stating that they were derived from the collection compiled by Howard, and had been published in the last year.

"The character of Oliver Cromwell may be seen in the following extract from the said state papers :

"To his highness the Lord Protector of the commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

The humble petition of Marjery, the wife of William Beacham, mariner,

SHREWETH,

That your petitioner's husband hath been active and faithful in the wars of this commonwealth both by sea and land, and hath undergone many hazards by imprisonment and fights to the endangering of his life, and at last lost the use of his right arm, and is utterly disabled from future service, as doth appear by the certificate annexed, and yet he hath no more than forty shillings pension from Chatham by the year :

That your petitioner having one only sonne, who is tractable to learn, and not having wherewith to bring him up, by reason of their present low estate, occasioned by the publique service aforesaid :

Humbly prayeth, That your Highness would vouchsafe to present her said sonne Randolph Beacham, to be scholler in Sutton's hospital called the Charter-house.

OLIVER, P.

We referre this petition and certificate to the commissioners of Sutton's hospital.

July 28, 1655.

"Copy of a letter sent by Oliver to his secretary on the above petition.

You receive from me this 28th instant, a petition of Marjery Beacham, desiring the admission of her son into the Charter-house. I know the man who was employed one day in a very important secret service, which he did effectually to our great benefit, and the commonwealth's. The petition is a brief relation of a fact, without any flattery. I have wrote under it a common reference to the commissioners, but I mean a great deal more, that it shall be done, without their debate or consideration of the matter, and so do you privately hint to

I have not the particular shining bauble or feather in my cap, for crouds to gaze at, or kneel to ; but I have power and resolution for foes to tremble at ; to be short, I know how to deny petitions : and whatever I think proper, for outward form, to refer to any officer or office, I expect that such my compliance with custom shall be also looked upon as an indication of my will and pleasure to have the thing done. See, therefore, that the boy is admitted.

Thy true friend,

OLIVER, P.

July 28, 1655."

(Annual Register, 1758, pp. 266-268.)

The petition itself and the reference appended to it appear to be genuine, and may possibly have been derived from the collections made by Howard for his second volume. They are not printed in any copy of Howard's Collection which I have seen. On the other hand, the letter to Thurloe is more than suspicious. There is no external evidence in its favour. The original of the supposed letter has never been heard of from 1758 to the present day, and there is no proof that it existed in 1758. Carlyle introduces it thus :—

"Here, fluttering loose on the dim confines of Limbo, and the Night-realm, is a small note of Oliver's, issuing one knows not whence, but recognisable as his, which we must snatch and save."

In a note written later, after he had discovered the origin of the letter, he pronounces it still "by internal evidence a genuine note." Both in substance and style, however, there is much that should have caused its rejection rather than such ready acceptance. It is difficult to see why Cromwell should write thus to Thurloe, instead of writing directly to the Commissioners. A few words added to the reference, or a letter to the Commissioners themselves, would have effected his purpose at once. Examples of such intervention on behalf of individuals may be found in letters 195 and 211 in Carlyle's collection, and there are several of the kind among the Irish State Papers. It is also strange that the petitioner's husband should have performed an important service to the State, and that the petitioner should make no reference to it in her petition.

The wording of the letter is as suspicious as the substance. Phrases such as "a very important secret service," "a common reference," "privately hint," are none of them usual seventeenth century forms of speech, and the construction of the sentences is also modern. The form of subscription "thy true friend" is not employed in any of Cromwell's letters. To an official in Thurloe's position the Protector would probably have signed himself "Your very loving friend," or, "Your very assured friend," or, "Your very affectionate friend." He employs the forms "thy" and "thine" only in letters to his wife, or his daughter, or his bosom friend Robert Hammond (see Letters 41, 52, 85, 171, 173, in Carlyle's collection). Still more suspicious is the protestation about the crown, "Though I have not the particular shining bauble, or feather in my cap." Why should Cromwell make this protestation in 1655, nearly two years before Parliament had offered him the crown? The phrases employed are worth examining. The second of the two was first used by Cromwell in his speech to the hundred discontented officers, February 28, 1657, when they came to urge him to refuse the title of king. "For his own part," he told them, "he loved the title—a feather in a hat—as little as they did" (Burton's Diary i. 383). The phrase was quickly caught up. Henry Cromwell, in a letter to Thurloe, on April 8, 1657, terms the name of king "a gaudy feather in the hat of authority" (Thurloe vi. 183). Titus wrote to Hyde on April 10, telling him that Cromwell would refuse the crown: "They say that speaking of the title of king, he said he was now an old man, and cared not for wearing a feather in his cap" (Clarendon State Papers iii. 336). Ludlow made the phrase generally known to posterity by inserting it in his Memoirs, where he says that Cromwell "began to droll" with Fleetwood and Desborough "about monarchy, and speaking slightly of it said it was but a feather in a man's cap" (p. 586). In short, though the phrase is Cromwell's, he first employed it in 1657, and it would have had no meaning in 1655. The phrase "shining bauble" also needs examination. "Bauble" is, of course, a reminiscence of the term applied by Cromwell to the mace, also recorded by Ludlow. "Shining bauble" is a term which only occurs in another pseudo-Cromwellian document—viz., a speech supposed to have been made by Cromwell at the expulsion of the Rump, printed in the Annual Register for 1767 (see the ACADEMY, March 22, 1890).

One of these phrases by itself would not be sufficient reason for rejecting the letter, even though the occurrence of either might make it suspected. But the combination of the two phrases to make up this pleonastic protestation about kingship is a very strong argument against the genuineness of the letter. It is too Cromwellian by half. It is just in this way that an imitator overdoes his characteristic touches. Even Carlyle perceived that this combination would not do. Accordingly, he rejected the words "or a feather in my cap," as "an impertinent interpolation," which he attributed to Leonard Howard. He omitted also the bit of bombast about "power and resolution for foes to tremble at," and improved the style by some minor alterations. He did not think it necessary to point out these alterations and omissions to his readers. The strange thing is that he never saw that, by admitting the necessity of such omissions, he was destroying the credit of his authority. For as there is no external evidence in favour of its authenticity, it must either be "by internal evidence a genuine note," or else a forgery.

C. H. FIRTH.

"COUVADE."—THE GENESIS OF AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL TERM.

Oxford: Nov. 6, 1892.

Dr. E. B. Tylor, in his very interesting letter in reply to Dr. Murray, shows clearly that in his Early History of Mankind, published in 1865, he had carried back the history of the phrase "faire la couvade" to the year 1658; and he reminds us that at that date the phrase is mentioned by Rochefort, as being used by the peasants of a certain province of France (so at least Rochefort had heard), to describe the curious custom to which Dr. Tylor has given the excellent and widely known name of "couvade." Dr. Murray, through not paying sufficient attention to a footnote in the Early History, had not been able to trace the use of the phrase in this specific sense farther back than the year 1829.

But really this additional light thrown upon the history of the phrase has very little to do with the matter under discussion. I understand that Dr. Murray's contention is, that the word "couvade" as applied in a specific sense to the curious custom is an English use due originally to Dr. Tylor, and made popular by his reviewer, Prof. Max Müller; and that no French authority can be found for its use in this specific sense before the translation of Prof. Max Müller's review into French. Well, I cannot see that Dr. Tylor, in his letter in the ACADEMY, has brought forward any evidence which renders this position of Dr. Murray's untenable. He has produced no quotation from any French author before 1865, in which the word "couvade" is used in the technical sense in which he has employed it. The occurrence of the phrase, "faire la couvade" in a French author in the seventeenth century does not really help his case at all. The verb "faire" is used in combination with numbers of nouns and adjectives, in phrases describing all manners of customs: for instance, "faire maigre" means to fast, and "faire queue" means to stand in a long line. But we are not allowed to infer from these locations that "le maigre" may mean by itself the custom of fasting, or that "la queue" may stand alone for the admirable French custom of standing patiently in a long line. No, there is no doubt whatever that Dr. Tylor and Prof. Max Müller share the glory of having given a new technical sense to an old provincial French word, and of seeing it accepted in France, and safely enshrined in the great dictionary of Littré.

From some expressions which occur in Dr. Tylor's letter, it would seem that he imagines that the Oxford lexicographer does not like the word "couvade." I would gladly take this opportunity of disabusing Dr. Tylor's mind on this point. I have had some talk with the editor of the New English Dictionary about this word, and I may truly say that in our familiar converse about Dr. Tylor's foster-child I have never heard a word fall from Dr. Murray's lips which could hurt the feelings of the most sensitive parent. He has taken the utmost interest in the word, and is extremely anxious to know as much as possible about its history. There has never been any question of excluding it from the asylum of the Dictionary. One word more. Dr. Tylor expresses a hope that "Dr. Murray will not go out of his way to become a supervisor of new words," and adds, "he is not the editor of the English language, but of an English dictionary." The fact is, there is no ground whatever for this paradoxical antithesis. The editor of the New English Dictionary cannot shrink from the task of editing the English language. It is his business not only to register words, and to explain their meanings, but, as in the case of "couvade," to ascertain by careful inquiry under what circumstances foreign words have crossed the water, and to find out on which side of the channel any special usage may have sprung up. Of course, if any word has gained currency, he will take it, "liking" having nothing in the world to do with the matter; but in spite of any hopes to the contrary, he will, I expect, go on calling an anthropological use of a word an "abuse," should he think it a perversion of the original sense of the word. In using the word "abuse" he would of course employ it in its strict scientific sense without the slightest suspicion of disrespect for any fellow scholar.

A. L. MAYHEW.

Oxford: Nov. 8, 1892.

Want of time, consequent upon unexpected absence from home and from my books, prevents me from continuing my communication on couvade, and from dealing with that of Dr. Tylor. With your permission, I shall hope to do so next week.

J. A. H. MURRAY.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, NOV. 13, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "Colour Blindness," by Mr. R. Brudenell Carter.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Morality, Practical and Ideal," by Mr. Augustine Birrell.

MONDAY, NOV. 14, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Auriga," illustrated, by Sir Robert Ball.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Upper Extremity," II., by Mr. W. Anderson.

8 p.m. Library Association: "How to Procure Full Names for Author Entries," by Prof. Dickson; "A Subscription Library in connexion with a Public Library," by Mr. J. K. Waite; "Pamphlets," by Mr. G. Wakeling.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "A Proposed Expedition across the North Polar Region," by Dr. Fridtjof Nansen.

TUESDAY, NOV. 15, 7.45 p.m. Statistical: Inaugural Address by the President, Mr. Charles Booth, on "Dock Labour."

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "Graving Docks," by Messrs. C. R. Parsons, E. W. Young, W. R. Kelly, and R. Pickwell.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Some Cases of Variation in Secondary Sexual Characters statistically Examined," by Messrs. W. Bateson and H. H. Brindley; "Testudo grandidire, a New Fossil Giant Tortoise from a Cave in South-West Madagascar," by Mr. G. A. Boulenger; "Description of a New Monkey of the Genus Sennopithecus from Northern Borneo," by Mr. O. Thomas.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 16, 7 p.m. Meteorological: "Thunderstorm, Cloudburst, and Flood at Langtoft, East Yorkshire, July 3, 1892," by Mr. John Lovel; "The Measurement of the Maximum Wind Pressure, and Description of a New Instrument for indicating and recording the Maximum," by Mr. W. H. Dines.

8 p.m. Microscopical: "Foraminifera of the Gault of Folkestone," by Mr. F. Chapman; "Fungoid Growths on Diatoms," by Mr. C. Haughton Gill; "Notops ruber, a New Rotifer," by Mr. John Hood.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Opening Address by the Chairman of Council, Sir R. E. Webster.

THURSDAY, NOV. 17, 6 p.m. London Institution: "Lincoln Cathedral," illustrated, by Precentor Venables.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Upper Extremity," III., by Mr. W. Anderson.

8 p.m. Linnean: "A Theoretical Origin of Endogens through an Aquatic Habit," by Prof. Henslow; "The Buprestidae of Japan and their Coloration," by Mr. G. Lewis.

8 p.m. Chemical: "Fluosulphonic Acid," by Prof. Thorpe and W. Kirman; "The Interaction of Iodine and Potassium Chlorate," by Prof. Thorpe and Mr. G. H. Perry; "Magnetic Rotation of Sulphuric and Nitric Acids and their Solutions, also of Solutions of Sodium Sulphate and Lithium Nitrate," by Mr. W. H. Perkin; "The Refractive Indices and Magnetic Rotation of Sulphuric Acid Solutions" and "Hydrates of Alkylamines," by Mr. S. N. Pickering; "The Atomic Weight of Boron," by Prof. Ramsay and Miss Emily Aston.

8 p.m. Viking Club: "Similarity of Incident in Norse and other European Folk-Tales and in Indian and Persian Fictions," by Mr. W. A. Clouston.

8.30 p.m. Historical: "The Druids of Ireland," by Prof. J. von Pflugk-Harttung.

SCIENCE.

M. Tulli Ciceronis De Oratore Libri Tres.
With Introduction and Notes by A. S. Wilkins. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

In this country the De Oratore of Cicero has perhaps always been, and, in spite of Prof. Wilkins's excellent edition, is likely to remain, a book more praised than continuously read. On the one hand, though we are always delivering or listening to speeches, sermons, and lectures, we pay very little attention to the theory of speaking. No one attempts to teach it. We seem to think that a man must be either able to speak or unable, and that in either case teaching is useless. Treatises on the art are not in demand. Whately's excellent Rhetoric is much less read even than his Logic; and no one can say of the former, what may be said with some plausibility of the latter, that it has been superseded. The De Oratore, therefore, from its very subject, fails to interest us much. On the other hand, Cicero's own art and method of treatment are in fault. The book is neither one thing nor the other: neither a systematic and scientific treatise nor a gracefully and skilfully written dialogue. How it may have compared with the Aristotelian dialogues which Cicero seems to have taken as his model, we are unable to say, though further discoveries in Egypt may possibly tell us; but it has neither the solid worth of such a treatise as the Rhetoric nor the charm of such a dialogue as the Phaedrus or Gorgias. As a treatise, it is almost spoiled by the false form into which it is thrown; as a work of literary art it wants the ease, the lightness of touch, the true tone of conversation, the dramatic skill, which we find in Plato. Of course, Cicero could not write so long a dialogue without its becoming to us in some ways a model of pure Latin; and that there is much excellent Latin to be learned from it, especially with the help of Prof. Wilkins' notes, no one will deny. Equally of course, the greatest of Roman orators could not write so much on his own art without saying a good deal that was interesting and valuable both technically and historically. But, students of Latin and students of rhetoric (if there are any) apart, it must be admitted to be a very dull dialogue.

Prof. Wilkins has edited it with great care, much learning, and good judgment. It seems with him to have been a labour of love, for he has had it in hand something like fifteen years. His edition of Book I. appeared first in 1879 and again in 1888; that of Book II. in 1881 and again in 1890. These appear again now in one volume with Book III., which can also be had separately. The long time spent upon the work has no doubt contributed to its exceptional soundness and exhaustiveness, and helped to make it what it is, a most complete and trustworthy edition. At the end of the Introduction he indicates that "the illustration of Cicero's diction" is the object at which he has more especially aimed in his commentary; and this has been done thoroughly well. Both vocabulary and syntax are the subject of constant care, and Prof. Wilkins seems to have overlooked nothing in the way of old writers or modern critics that can throw light upon them. He is, indeed, singularly well equipped at all points—a scholar with no gaps in his knowledge. If one were to make any complaint of his notes, it would rather be on the ground of their fulness and for what they contain than for scantiness and omissions. Perhaps he has not exercised quite sufficient self-restraint in what he has put into them.

Among other treatises, a short but useful treatise might be written on the theory of notes. It would comprise various distinctions and divisions, but the main object would be to settle what sort of comment or information the notes on some given author ought to contain. It is too often the case that commentaries contain a great deal of unnecessary matter, by which their size and price are very unduly increased. I ought really to apologise to Prof. Wilkins for enlarging on the subject in speaking of his book; for, in comparison with many editors of classical authors, his excesses, if I may call them so, are as nothing. But the topic may be illustrated from his notes. Remarks on the etymology of words, for instance, are surely out of place in such notes, unless the meaning of the word is doubtful and the etymology might help to fix it. Why should Prof. Wilkins write on the derivation of such well-known words as vestibulum (p. 180) or elementum (p. 153)? A book of a quite different kind is the proper place for these discussions. A commentary on Cicero is no more called upon to discuss such a word than a commentary on Burke to discuss the origin of "bonfire." The etymologist and the reader of Cicero should be kept distinct. Again, if Cicero happens to mention the centumviral courts, it is hardly necessary for his editor to write a long note (p. 158) on that obscure subject, even if he can correct what other writers have said. A dictionary of antiquities or some such book is the proper place for this information. When, again, Cicero speaks of the license enjoyed by comic poets at Athens, surely a reference to one or two books would be better than the details given in the long note on pp. 482-3. A commentary ought not to contain all the information on biography, history, and antiquities that any one can possibly desire. There are recognised places where such information is to be found; and in the case of young students (the only persons, presumably, who want most of it) it is much better that they should be taught to go in search of it when necessary. Moreover, if they can understand the author pretty well without the information, they will not read it, though it stare them in the face.

But in Prof. Wilkins's commentary, copious as it is, I should be sorry to give the idea that there is a large proportion of this superfluous matter. Some there is, but not very much. The greater part of the notes is devoted to the legitimate explanation and illustration of Cicero's language and subject. What strikes the reader most, perhaps is the careful and painstaking way in which the editor has evidently gone to work. He remarks in one place that all the previous editors have borrowed a certain quotation, but that "not one of them has taken the trouble to verify it or supply the reference." We feel quite sure that nothing of this kind could be said truly of him: that he has left no reference unverified, no book or article unread, no source of information unexplored. All that industry and conscientiousness could do, he has done. He has had also the valuable aid of Mr. Roby on questions of Roman law, and his notes contain many ingenious and brilliant conjectural emendations contributed by Dr. Reid.

Scholars are aware that the three older MSS. of the De Oratore are incomplete, and that certain parts of the dialogue do not appear in any of them. The omissions were first supplied from a complete MS. discovered at Lodi in 1422 by the then bishop of that see; but this MS. is not now known to be in existence, and we are uncertain in what precise relation later complete MSS., which the early printed editions followed, stand to it. Where they differ from the three older ones or from any of them, we cannot say whether they are following the codex Laudensis or not, for we have no assurance that it was ever carefully collated throughout. There is a third class of MSS. also to be taken into account, namely, defective MSS. of a much later date than the three chief authorities. The relation of those to the three, like the relation of the three to one another, is a matter of considerable doubt, and scholars who have investigated it are by no means agreed. Of the three old MSS., the Harleian in the British Museum, which Prof. Wilkins has once more collated, and the Abrincensis (Avanches) are judged by him to be of about equal value, and the Erlangensis to be somewhat inferior. An account of the MSS. is given in the Introduction, which also contains, in addition to a full account of the persons who take part in the dialogue, a very good sketch of the history of rhetoric in Greece and at Rome down to Cicero's time, including an analysis of the treatise ad Herennium. If Prof. Wilkins has occasion to revise his book for yet another edition, it may be suggested that a tolerably full analysis of the De Oratore itself might usefully be placed in the Introduction. The notes do contain a sort of running analysis; but it is very brief, and would certainly be more serviceable if it were made continuous as well as copious. The index seems excellent. There are a few misprints, such as "bidua" for "biduo" (p. 450), "wittingly" for "wittily" (p. 338), "poem" for "paean" (p. 31); and the Greek accents have occasionally got wrong, especially in the notes to Book I.

HERBERT RICHARDS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOMA AND ROHINI.

Barton-on-Humber: Nov. 7, 1892.

In reply to Prof. Max Müller's query (ACADEMY, November 5, 1892, p. 413), "Why should Soma have dwelt with Rohini [= Aldebaran] only?" I would suggest that—assuming we have here no traces of Western (i.e., Euphratean) influence—the answer is mythological. Soma, later the moon, has already been connected in idea with the bull.

Thus, he tosses his horns like a bull, lord of the herd (Rig-veda, ix. xv. 4); he lows, and the cows flock round him (ib. lxix. 4); he bellows, sharpening his horns (ib. lxx. 7); he moves like a bull (ib. lxxi. 3); he bellows like a bull approaching the herds (ib. 9); the milch kine approach him (ib. lxxxvi. 25); he hastens like a buffalo sharpening his horns (ib. lxxxvii. 7), for he is "the buffalo of wild animals" (ib. xevi. 6); and "the moon is said [in the Rāmāyana, v. 11] to shine like a white bull with a sharpened horn, with a full horn" (Gubernatis, Zoo. Myth. ii. 58). Soma is also the generator of kine (Rig-veda, i. xci. 22). The moon thus regarded, i.e., the Bull-moon, will naturally prefer "the Red Cow" (= Rohini) to his other wives. The myth, an explanation of "Soma dying of consumption," suggests that he was punished for misconduct. But what could he have done amiss? He must, at some period, have "walked disorderly," like the planets in early Iranian idea. In this case he could not have treated his moon-stations with that equality which is equity = (mythologically) he must have loved one wife above another. Whom, then, could he have preferred? Why, as he was a bull, he must have preferred the cow—Rohini.

Weber thought that the Hindu "lunar mansions" are of Chaldaean origin, and that from the Chaldeans they passed to the Hindus" (Hist. Ind. Lit., Eng. edit., p. 248); but he does not strengthen the suggestion by the erroneous supposition that the Μαζουπῶδες (Job xxxviii. 32), the signs of the Zodiac, are the moon-stations. At the same time, we cannot now say that "in spite of repeated researches no trace of a lunar [Euphratean] Zodiac has been found" (Max Müller, India, what can it teach us? p. 126). For the Tablet W. A. I. v. xlvii. No. 1, although not absolutely containing a lunar zodiac, practically very nearly supplies one (vide R. B. Jun., "Remarks on the Tablet of the Thirty Stars," in Proc. Soc. Bib. Archaeol., January, 1890); and it is almost impossible that the moon's monthly course should not have been mapped out in all archaic civilisations. Again, although there certainly was a very early intercourse between Babylonia and India (cf. Sayce, Rel. Ant. Bab., 137-8), yet the Hindus were quite competent to have mapped out a lunar zodiac for themselves, and at present there seems to be no sufficient evidence of borrowing. At first sight it may appear singular that the same star (Aldebaran), or rather asterism (α, β, γ, δ, and ε Tauri), should be connected in both places with the same animal, in the Euphrates Valley with a bull, and in India with a cow; but the singularity disappears when we observe, with Aratos, that the stars themselves supply the idea of this particular animal (vide R. B. Jun., Remarks on the Zodiacal Virgo, fig. xx., The Zodiacal Taurus), for "Very like him lie the stars;

This is his head distinguished; other mark
Is needless to discern the head, since stars
On both sides shape it as they roll along."
(Phaenomena, 168-71.)

The red Aldebaran (δ λαμπρὸς τῶν ἑσθῶν ἐπὶ τοῦ νοτίου ὀφθαλμοῦ ὑποκρίθης, Ptolemy) similarly suggests the red eye of a bull or cow. In fact, Rohini being a cow, not a bull, seems to show the same natural basis-concept worked out in a slightly different way.

ROBERT BROWN, JUN.

THE PRONUNCIATION AND SPELLING OF PLACE-NAMES IN EGYPT.

Cairo: Oct. 29, 1892.

Having been on my way to Egypt, the ACADEMY of October 8 only now comes to hand.

I can confirm, so far as my experience goes, what Col. Ross says (p. 315) concerning the difference between kom and tell, in place-names, according to the origin of the elevation. Bubastis was certainly founded on black soil. There is, however, at present a tendency among the natives to use the two words indiscriminately to indicate an elevation.

I also fully agree with Prof. Sayce and Col. Ross as to the gasped Qaf being common all through the Delta.

R. D'HULST.

SCIENCE NOTES.

At the general monthly meeting of the Royal Institution on Monday, the special thanks of the members were returned to the Goldsmiths' Company for their generous grant of £1000

"for the continuation and development of the valuable original research which the society is engaged in carrying on; and especially for the prosecution of investigations on the properties of matter at temperatures approaching that of the zero of absolute temperature."

At the last meeting of the Zoological Society, a communication was read from Sir Edward Newton and Dr. Gadow, describing a collection of bones of the Dodo and other extinct birds of Mauritius, which, having been recovered from the Mare aux Songes in that island by the exertions of Mr. Theodore Sauzier, had been by him entrusted to them for determination. The collection contained examples of the atlas, metacarpals, prepelvic vertebra, and complete pubic bones of the Dodo, which had before been wanting, as well as additional remains of Lophopsittacus, Aphanapteryx, and other forms already known to have inhabited Mauritius. Besides these there were bones of other birds, the existence of which had not been suspected, and among them of the following, now described as new: Strix (?) sauzieri, Astur alphonsoi, Butorides mauritianus, Plotus nanus, Sarcidiornis mauritianus, and Anas theodori, the whole adding materially to the knowledge of the original fauna of Mauritius.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE September number of the Indian Antiquary (Kegan Paul & Co.) contains a recension of the Mungir copper-plate grant of Devapaladeva, by Prof. Kielhorn, of Göttingen. It possesses an historic interest as being the first Sanskrit inscription that was ever brought to the notice of European scholars. It was translated by Wilkins, and published, with a lithographed facsimile, in the Asiatic Researches for 1788. The original plate is now lost, so that the text can only be restored from the not very accurate lithograph. The grant is dated in the thirty-third year of the reign of Devapaladeva, which may be assigned to the end of the ninth century A.D. He belongs to the Pala dynasty, who maintained the Buddhist faith in Bengal until the Muhammadan invasion. The same number also gives the conclusion of the translation by Mr. Grierson of M. Senart's work on the Asoka inscriptions, in which he attempts to restore the early linguistic history of India from the evidence of the monuments. First, as to the religious language of the Vedas, the inscriptions show that, at the beginning of the third century B.C., it was the object of a certain amount of culture, purely oral. Second, the elaboration of Classical Sanskrit commenced shortly afterwards, though its official use is not earlier than the first century A.D.; and no work of the classical literature can have been written before this date. Third, Mixed Sanskrit is only a mode of writing Prakrit, following the orthography and etymological forms of the religious language. It was contemporaneous with the first attempts at writing, was used specially by the Buddhists, and finally disappeared before the formation by the Brahmins of profane or literary Sanskrit. Fourth, the Prakrits were formed, under the inspiration of Sanskrit, between the end of the second and the end of the fourth century A.D. No Prakrit grammar or Prakrit book can be of earlier date.

PROF. JULIEN VINSON has had printed, but not for sale, at Chalons-sur-Saône, seventy-five copies of the inedited Petites Œuvres Basques de Sylvain Pourreau. They date from the middle of the seventeenth century. The contents are a portion of a Basque Grammar, a few Fragments, a Sermon for Whit-Sunday in Basque; but the longest piece is "Andre Dana Maria Prini-legiatua: Les Privilèges de la V. Mère de D." of which a French translation is given at the bottom of each page. By printing these MSS., Prof. Vinson had rendered a signal service to all students of "Eseuara."

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Thursday, Oct. 27.)

PROF. JEBB, president, in the chair.—The Rev. W. C. Green read a note on bjskip in a passage of the Egilsaga. In stanza 17 of Sonatorrek, Egil, lamenting for Bodvar, his young son, says: er bjskipis i þe kominn, "he is gone to the dwelling of the bjskip." Doubtless he means that he is gone to Valhalla, the heathen heaven. But what is bjskip? Commentators explain "ship of bees, i.e., place of bees, air, heaven." But "ship" is a curious word thus used, nor do bees fly in heaven. I suggest an explanation from English. Skep or skip is common provincial for basket; skep is "beehive," so are bee-skep and bee-skip. Though bjskip be not an Icelandic word for "bee-hive" (Icelanders, indeed, kept no bees), yet the English word may have been known. There was much trade in Saga times between England and Iceland; honey especially was brought from England. Egil our poet had been much in England. Assuming, then, that he means "bee-hive" by bjskip, why does he call Valhalla "the bee-hive"? Not probably as the sky, but because of the swarming numbers of the dead: a point dwelt on by Virgil, Dante, Milton, and others. This better suits the whole tone of the poem. Egil complains that he is left alone; brother, father, mother, kin, friends, and now his best-loved son gathered to the numerous company in the shade-thronged beehive.—Mr. Conway read (i) a note on the name Veseris, the site of the "devotion" of P. Decius Mus the elder in 340 B.C. (Liv. 8. 8), which till recently had not been identified. Dr. Imhoof-Blumer (Nunismatische Zeitschr., Vienna, 1886, p. 206 ff.) had shown, from the types of certain Oscan coins with the legends veserip and fensernum, that these must come from a town in the neighbourhood of Nola, just where Livy placed the battle of Veseris. Mr. Conway, after pointing out in passing that the discovery of the value of the sign ϵ in the Tonic alphabet as used in South Italy (= Osc. f) gave at once the solution of two Brutian helmet inscriptions (Zvet. Inscr. Ital. Infer. Dial. 246, 247) which had hitherto been unintelligible—endeavoured to support Dr. Blumer's identification of Veseris with Veseris, by suggesting that the abnormal representation of Oscan f by Latin v was due to a mistake in spelling, the mere omission of the n being a matter of common occurrence. The nature of the Latin tradition (always and only ad Veserim pugna) pointed to the Annules Maximi or other equally curt records as the first authority for the name. It was conceivable that the annalist who first embodied the name in a continuous story had simply mistaken the value of the letter F , and interpreted it by v because he had found it necessary to do so at earlier points of the tables he was copying. The Nimastioi inscription, by using FH for Lat. f , showed that F had still its Greek value in the fifth century B.C., while the Duenos-inscription at the end of the fourth century showed it completely naturalised as f ; so that it was quite reasonable to suppose that the record of 340 B.C. may have been one of its earliest occurrences in public documents with that value. Its mis-interpretation as v would be all the more likely if the reader were a Greek (Ounarepis* instead of Φησπεis*); and in fact Livy's chief authority in the eighth book appeared to be Claudius (Quadrigrarius?), whom Livy himself stated to have translated the Greek annals of Aelius. The introduction of G by Appian Claudius the Censor in 312 B.C. pointed to just the same epoch as that in which the alphabet took a settled form.—(ii.) A note on the citius-inscriptions of Pompeii (Zvet. Ital. Infer. Inscr. Dial. 80-83), which Nissen (Pompeian. Stud. p. 492 ff.) had interpreted as road directions ("Wegweiser"), painted on the walls for the benefit of country soldiers quartered in the town during its siege in the Social War (90 B.C.). Mr. Conway felt bound to reject this theory, on the grounds (1) that it failed to explain the position of the inscriptions, (2) that there were no examples of inscriptions with such an object, (3) that the paint had been in excellent preservation ("glänzend") when it was first uncovered (from 1819 onwards), and therefore could neither have been exposed to the weather for 168 years when Pompeii was overwhelmed (78 A.D.), nor (4) have been tolerated so long in notices of this size in one of the chief streets of the town, at a time when it was being continuously embellished with new buildings, some of which were immediately adjacent to the inscriptions, see Nissen, l.c. p. 671 ff. (especially at the dates 20 B.C. and 15 A.D.). These considerations, Mr. Conway held, gave about 20 A.D. as the superior limit of date; and he pointed out that all four inscriptions were in the N.W. corner of the town, the nearest to the pagus outside the walls where, according to Nissen and Mommsen, the Oscan-speaking inhabitants had settled after being expelled to make room for Sulla's veterans. Further, the four inscriptions were all painted at the corners of streets which led from the Forum or the Strada dei Terme directly to the west and north walls respectively, and they all concluded with the name of some person, three out of the four specifying his abode as immediately within the wall, close to the end of the streets at whose corner they stood. Hence clearly they must be advertisements of something to be found there. Now we know from C. I. L. x. 1061 and 4660 that visarii, "cabmen," "a cabstand," were regularly stationed near the gates of Caesars and Pompeii, just as we know that cisia were forbidden within the walls of Rome; and the trade was just such an one as the Roman "colonists" would leave in the hands of the Oscan population. Mr. Conway, therefore, proposed to translate citius (= a Latin citōnes*) by "cisiarii" or "lecticarii," both of which (Suet. Jul. 57) were regularly for hire. The word would mean "roadmen, roadsters," and be parallel to campō, &c., or might possibly denote the vehicles themselves (cf., temō, &c.). It would be derived from a word eitō* "road" cf. Umbr. etatians, Gr. ἑταῖρος, ἑταῖρος, and for the grade of ablaut cf. Goth. hlub, Av. sraotem, or German kind (kleutōm*, gentōm*), Lat. lectum, Vesta.

ELIZABETHAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, Nov. 2.)

SIDNEY LEE, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. Edmund K. Chambers read a paper on "Samuel Daniel." "Read Daniel—the admirable Daniel," said Coleridge. But few people do read Daniel. This is a reversal of the contemporary verdict, for he was popular in his day. Yet Ben Jonson was a dissentient voice who, Mr. Fleay thinks, satirised him on the stage. He is no typical Elizabethan; serene and dignified, rather than full-blooded and passionate. But he is full of felicities of phrase, and has the genius of friendship with the living. Little is known of his life, spent in the shadows of the court and of the great houses, Herbert's and Clifford's. Nor is his poetical achievement very large, the sonnets and verse-letters being the most characteristic part of it. The sonnets are complaints of unrequited love, writ in a melancholy but chivalrous vein, with musings on the transitoriness of beauty and promises of immortality for the fair in his verse. Doubtless they express a real passion. Delia was perhaps Elizabeth Carey, perhaps the Countess of Pembroke. Daniel, both in form and matter, gave a model to Shakspeare for his sonnets. The verse-letters show Daniel at his best in his unrivalled faculty of ethical exposition. His civil wars have ceased to please, his masques are trifles, his tragedies belated specimens of the Senecan drama. Daniel opposed Campion's heresy of "English Versifying," but was himself a metrical reformer. He replaced couplets in his long poems by quatrains and irregular verse, partly rhymed, partly unrhymed.—A discussion followed, which was opened by Mr. Sidney Lee and continued by Mr. Arthur Dillion, Mr. Frederick Rogers, Mr. W. H. Cowham, Mr. James Ernest Baker, and other members of the society.

VIKING CLUB.—(Thursday, Nov. 3.)

THE Rev. A. Sandison, Vice-Jarl, in the chair. Mr. Edward Blair read a paper on "Some Aspects of Toleration in the Closing Years of the Nineteenth Century," in which he referred at length to John Stuart Mill's Essay on Liberty. Mr. A. W. Johnston, Law-man (Hon. Sec.), made an explanation regarding the objects of the Viking Club, in the course of which he stated that, in whatever part of the world Orcadians and Shetlanders might settle, they retained a very strong attachment for their native islands, and a great desire to associate exclusively with their fellow-countrymen, invariably banding themselves together in societies. Orkney and Shetland were not mere Scottish counties, but had a distinct social and political history of their own. The club was founded as a social and literary society in London, for persons connected with or specially interested in these islands. The papers to be read would largely deal with northern subjects. In order to maintain their local character, and to keep up the traditions and recollections of the North, the names used for members, officials, meetings, &c., were borrowed, and the constitution in a measure copied, from the old Norse government of the islands. Their Home Rule was partially overturned in 1614, and lingered on till the end of last century, when the islands were finally absorbed in the Scottish counties. The annual general meeting has been called the Al-Thing, the name of the ancient annual parliaments in Orkney and Shetland, which consisted of all the Udalers or freeholders and their kindred; the club members have been consequently styled Udalers; the president, Jarl, the head of the old government; the secretary, Law Man, the keeper and expounder of the island law-book; the treasurer, Great Foud, the collector of skatt or taxes; the annual subscription, skatt, the tax paid by the Udalers, and still exacted in the islands, a grievance which had been repeatedly brought under the notice of the late government. The title "Viking Club" had been chosen as a short, characteristic name for Orkney and Shetland, the home of the Vikings, the wickings or dwellers on the wicks or bays, who were at the same time sea rovers.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Friday, Nov. 4.)

MR. BRADLEY, vice-president, in the chair.—Prof. Skeat read a paper on "New Rime-Tests for Chaucer," taking the material from his forthcoming "Rime-Index to Chaucer's Troilus" for the Chaucer Society. Ten Brink has shown that Chaucer, in many cases, distinguishes between the long open e and the long close e . The former arises from A.S. \bar{e} and (sometimes) from A.S. long \bar{e} . The latter arises from A.S. \bar{e} or eo . But Ten Brink has not given a sufficiently full account of the variable e . This arises not only (as he says) from A.S. long \bar{e} when it corresponds to Goth. \bar{e} (not to Goth. \bar{a}), but also from the A.S. vowel which occurs as the mutation of ea or eo , and is variously written as \bar{e} , \bar{y} , and \bar{v} . Hence some mistakes have arisen which can be corrected. Chaucer's rimes are, usually, etymologically correct. A list of riming words can be made, in which he always treats the e as long and open, and such words never rime with close e . In a few cases he allows them to rime with original short e ; but the latter are usually kept apart. Another list can be made of riming words which always have close e . A third list can be made of words which have variable e , riming with e of either quality. A very short list gives the few exceptions, and we then have all the facts. Hoccleve usually observes Chaucer's habits, but Lydgate and all other writers of the fifteenth century usually contradict them recklessly. Several other rime tests occur beside the above. Prof. Skeat also restored from the MSS. the noun voidee as the wine or dessert after the dinner-table was voided or cleared, which editors have always turned into the verb voide.

FINE ART.

The Castellated and Domestic Architecture of Scotland. By David MacGibbon and Thomas Ross, Architects. Vols. IV. and V. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.)

Messrs. MACGIBBON and ROSS are to be congratulated upon the appearance of the two volumes which complete their extensive and beautiful work upon the Castellated and Domestic Architecture of Scotland. Its small beginnings arose in a series of papers prepared by its authors, from time to time, for the Edinburgh Architectural Association—a society which, for many years past, has been doing much to spread a knowledge of the art and of its existing remains in Scotland; and which, in conjunction with the Board of Manufactures, has organised a system of practical training for the architects and allied art-workers of the North, now in operation. The materials that Messrs. MacGibbon and Ross had accumulated in this way were gradually expanded, till the scheme was conceived of producing a work which should trace the historical sequence of the various phases of architecture that have prevailed in Scotland, and “define and explain the different styles of buildings adopted at different periods from the twelfth century till the revival of classical architecture in modern times.”

Mr. Billings had already glanced at the subject, from the point of view of a practical architect, and illustrated some of the examples with much pictorial finish and elaboration; and the remains of special districts had been described in somewhat more popular fashion in such works as Sir Andrew Leith Hay’s pleasant volume upon the castles of Aberdeenshire. But nothing, for completeness and systematic method, approaching to the work now under review has hitherto been attempted.

Opening, for comparison, with a sketch of English and French domestic architecture, based upon Clark and Viollet-le-Duc, our authors in their first volume proceed to describe the castles of Scotland under four periods; and here I can only very briefly and inadequately indicate the characteristics which they assign to each. Their earliest period is coincident with the thirteenth century, and embraces structures founded during the prosperous reigns of Alexander II. and Alexander III., roughly equilateral in plan, with strong lofty walls frequently connected by round or square angle-towers. The castles of Inverlochy in Inverness-shire and Lochmaben in Dumfriesshire are typical buildings of this period, and probably Bothwell Castle, Lanarkshire, with its great donjon-keep, is its most important surviving example.

In the second period, comprising the fourteenth century, we have a time when Scotland was suffering from the effects of the English invasion of 1296, and when Bruce had destroyed many of the Scottish strongholds lest they should afford foothold to the enemy. The square or oblong tower, familiar to the Scots during their sallies into England, then became the model of their national architecture, sometimes with a wing added at right angles, forming what our authors designate “the L plan.”

Lochloven Castle, Threave Castle, Clackmannan Tower, and Noidpath Castle are instances of this method; and Craigmillar is one of numerous examples of such a keep, afterwards extended by buildings arranged round three sides of a courtyard.

In the beginning of the third period, 1400-1542, we have castles, where the keep is larger than was the case during the fourteenth century, and has towers attached, for defence and in order to furnish additional apartments. Castles like those of Doune and Tantallon, and the rebuilt Dirleton and Caorlaverock, surrounding a courtyard or quadrangle, now begin to be erected: and as time goes on, more complex and ornate features are introduced in such royal residences as the castles of Stirling, Falkland, and Linlithgow, the state rooms being on an ampler scale, and the first traces of the Renaissance becoming visible in the rough imitations of classic sculpture that are introduced as enrichments.

During the fourth period, 1542-1700, many causes operated to produce a break of continuity in Scottish architecture. The troubled minority and reign of Queen Mary were unfavourable to the erection of important buildings; and in the reign of James VI. we reach a time when artillery had become a thoroughly effective agent in warfare, and when, accordingly, the nobility abandoned the idea of producing strongholds capable of resisting prolonged sieges; and—leaving this to the crown—devoted the riches which they had acquired by the confiscations of church lands to the erection of commodious and seemly dwellings, in which “the machiolated corbel table, the embrasured parapet and bartizan, and the lofty towers for defence and observation, gave place to ornamental representations in the shape of picturesque and fanciful corbellings, angle turrets with conical tops, lofty roofs broken up and adorned with numerous dormers, finials, and clustered chimneys.” Castles in which the features associated with this period are prominently introduced, such as Glamis, Huntly, Wintoun, and Eyvil, and—passing to the seventeenth century, when the classic style had thoroughly asserted itself—Drumlanrig, receive careful description, and are illustrated, not only with plans and elevations, but, in some cases, with drawings of the elaborate plaster work, which now comes to form an important part of interior decoration.

The third volume, published in 1889, dealt, under the above periods, with examples of Scottish domestic architecture which had come under the notice of the authors since the commencement of the work; and the first of the two final volumes now issued continues the review of buildings of the fourth period. We may refer particularly to the admirable account of Holyrood Palace, of which only the north-west portion is anterior to the reign of Queen Mary, and to the elaborate description of George Heriot’s Hospital, exceptionally rich in the number and beauty of its illustrations. The old Glasgow College is also fully treated; and a chapter is devoted to examples of the ancient street architecture of Edinburgh, a subject often dealt with from the literary and the pictorial side, but here handled in a somewhat more definitely scientific manner, and with stricter reference to its connexion with architectural style and history. Among the more striking illustrations of this chapter are those that reproduce the fine plaster ceilings in Bailie Macmorran’s house in Kiddle’s-close; and it may be noticed that the letterpress upon John Knox’s house in the High-street embodies the results of recent investigations by Mr. Peter Miller and Mr. C. J. Guthrie, as to the occupation of this dwelling by the celebrated reformer.

In the concluding volume the review of Scottish street architecture is continued. The quiet, old-fashioned towns that border the Firth of Forth and line the east coast of Fife have been explored, and have yielded many picturesque examples: Haddington is represented by its “Bothwell Castle” and the quaint structures in Poldrait-street, the Newgate, and at Gifford Gate; and we have a particularly curious chapter dealing with twenty-two of the Tolbooths and Town-halls of old Scottish burghs, which show many features of interest, especially in their richly varied towers and spires. A few churches have been selected for description, as illustrating the influence of castellated architecture upon ecclesiastical work—churches like that of Dysart, where the tower is a square, battlemented pele, or like Pittenween and Anstruther Easter, where the pele-tower is surmounted by a pointed spire; and the fine galleries and curious monuments in such churches as those of Bowden, Pitligo, Kilbirnie, Haddington, and Dunbar, are figured in interesting plates.

Next follows a supplement, describing some sixty castles and mansions, of which information had been quite recently received by the authors, and a valuable monograph upon Scottish sundials, an amplification of a paper contributed by Mr. Ross to the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, the number of its illustrations being extended to nearly two hundred and fifty. The volume concludes with a chapter upon “Early Scottish Masters of Works, Master Masons, and Architects,” by far the most complete treatment of this subject that has yet appeared, the published records of the country, and also—through the aid of Dr. Thomas Dickson, of the Register House—those not yet printed, having been carefully consulted in its preparation.

The range and comprehensiveness of the work will be apparent even from such a slight summary of its contents as I have been able to give. Between eight and nine hundred buildings are described, and the five volumes contain not far short of four thousand illustrations, including numerous accurate and helpful ground-plans. The authors have made evident how much beautiful and picturesque material still exists among the old civil and military edifices of the country. It may be noted that they have established their position, that Scottish castellated architecture owes far less to French influence than has commonly been assumed; and this they have done, not only by a general comparison, but also by the more definite method of placing side by side views of specific buildings that have been erroneously paralleled by former writers. The work is one of national importance, and will long remain the standard book of reference on the subject with which it deals. In former times an undertaking such as this would have been subsidised by Government, or carried out under the auspices of some learned society; and its successful completion is not only a monument to the knowledge, enthusiasm, and patient industry of the joint authors, but also speaks well for the enterprise and public spirit of Mr. Douglas, the publisher, whose name is already associated with the issue of much of interest in connexion with Scottish history and archaeology.

J. M. GRAY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AEGEAN POTTERY IN EGYPT.

London: Nov. 7, 1892.

In a letter published in the ACADEMY of November 5, Mr. Petrie writes:—

"As to the Aegean pottery, so long discussed in the ACADEMY, there is much fresh material to be considered; but I have preferred not to bring it forward in the present circumstances, as the flat contradiction of facts, and the weight which has been thrown on the darkest hearsay evidence, do not seem to favour the consideration of scientific conclusions."

Permit me to point out that there has not been any contradiction of facts on my part. My contention has always been that, assuming the facts to be exactly as Mr. Petrie states them, his facts will not establish his conclusions. I have left his facts alone, and dealt only with his logic.

If his fresh material consists of facts, he ought not to flinch from an inquiry into them should anybody call them in question. And if it consists of facts intermixed with inferences, he ought not to flinch from an examination of the reasoning which he bases on the facts.

He complains of the weight that has been attached to what he calls the darkest hearsay evidence—namely, a statement by the responsible officers of the British Museum that a certain vase in their custody came from a certain tomb in Egypt. But if too much weight had really been attached to this piece of evidence against his theory, that would be a reason for bringing forward the further evidence in its favour, not a reason for keeping that evidence back, as he suggests.

CECIL TORR.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHIEIN & Co. will publish next week Mr. Harry Quilter's Preferences in Art, Life, and Literature, containing an essay upon the history of pre-Raphaelitism, a review of the exhibitions of the Royal Academy from 1872 to 1890, and a number of miscellaneous papers. There will be two editions: one illustrated with sixty engravings which originally appeared in the Universal Review; the other containing in addition fifty-seven colotype plates from pictures or drawings by modern artists, which are either in the author's possession or have been lent to him for the purpose. This latter edition, which is specially printed and bound, so as to be "the most beautiful book that has issued of late years from the English press," is limited to 225 copies for subscribers in this country.

MR. BERNHEIM, JUN., will have on view next week, in Piccadilly, a collection of pictures and drawings by the late Th. Ribot and other members of the modern French school.

At the annual public meeting of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, which was held on October 29, M. Gérôme, the new president, commemorated the members lost by death during the past twelve months; and Comte Delaborde, the permanent secretary, read a notice of the life and works of Meissonier.

For the benefit of those who have not access to the magnificent folio describing in detail the sarcophagi found some five years ago at Sidon, M. Théodore Reinach, one of the contributors to that volume, has reprinted from the Gazette des Beaux-Arts an article on the subject, illustrated with heliogravure and other engravings, which clearly explains the archaeological importance of the discovery. The total number of sarcophagi found in the catacomb of Saïda was no less than twenty-two, all of which are now on view in an annexe to the Tchinit-Kiosk Museum, under the charge of Hamdy-Bey, at Constantinople. The great majority of these belong to the Egyptian class of sarcophagi called "anthropoid," which are interesting mainly from their inscriptions, showing that they have been used for Phoenician kings. But four of them are pure Greek, of a period hitherto unrepresented in our museums. One, of the style called Lycian, recalls the sculptures of the Parthenon; another, "The Mourners," suggests the funerary bas-reliefs of the Cerameicus. That, however, which has deservedly excited most interest is one covered with the Asiatic exploits of Alexander the Great. As it contains several portraits of Alexander, and one scene closely resembling the mosaic of the battle of Issus at Naples, it was natural to jump to the conclusion that we had before us the actual tomb of the son of Philip. Some have thought that it might be the tomb of one of his generals, perhaps Perdicas. But M. Reinach adduces ingenious arguments for thinking that it belonged to a Persian satrap, who survived the war and became hellenised. It remains only to add that the traces of colour on the sculpture help to determine many questions in this vexed problem.

MR. J. ROCHELLE THOMAS, of Worthgate House, Highbury Park, has produced a large bronze medal of Lord Tennyson. The portrait is very fairly executed; but the exceeding poorness of the obverse proves to what a low point the fine art of medal engraving has sunk in this country. It looks like the advertisement on a cake of chocolate.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Cairo:

"The authorities of the Gizeh Museum have, on the suggestion of Johnson Pasha, caused excavations to be made at Meir, near Deirut, in Upper Egypt, which have already resulted in the discovery of some tombs of the XIth Dynasty. It is intended to continue these excavations.

"M. Philippe, the Cairo dealer in antiquities, is, with permission from the Gizeh Museum, carrying on excavations at Heliopolis, which have brought to light some tombs of the Saitic period."

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S
NEW BOOKS.

OLD ITALIAN MASTERS. By W. J. STIGLMAN. Engravings and Notes by T. Col. Royal 8vo, cloth elegant, price £2 2s. Also an Edition de luxe, in two portfolios; size 13 in. by 18 in.; printed on India paper, text bound separately; hand-pulled Proofs of the 68 Illustrations from the Original Wood-Blocks, printed on Japan paper, and mounted on thick Japon mat paper, and signed by the Engraver and Printer; the Illustrations have Outline at foot, showing tale of picture. Price £30. This edition is limited to 125 Copies, 12 only being for sale in England. [Next week.]

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. Described by Mrs. VAN RENSSELAER, and Illustrated by Joseph Pennell. Royal 8vo, cloth elegant, 25s. Also an Edition de Luxe, in 2 vols., 20 sets only being for sale in England; size, 10 in. by 14 in.; printed on fine plate paper; the Illustrations from the Original Wood-Blocks, the Full-Page ones, and the Seals of the Cathedrals (printed in appropriate Colours), on Separate Sheets; each Copy Signed. Price £6 6s. each. [Next week.]

THE TUSCAN REPUBLICS and GENOA. By BELLA DUFFY. (A Volume of "The Story of the Nations.") Maps, Illustrations, and Index, large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

ETRUSCAN ROMAN REMAINS in POPULAR TRADITION. By CHARLES GODFREY LELAND, Hon. F.R.S., President of the Gypsy-Lore Society, &c. With many Illustrations, and copiously decorated with Head and Tail Pieces by the Author, Illustrative of Etruscan Art. (Uniform with "Gypsy Lore," by the same Author.) Small 4to, cloth, 21s. Also an Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 copies, with an Original Drawing by Mr. Leland, Numbered and Signed, price £1 11s. 6d.

REVELATION and the BIBLE. By R. F. HORTON, M.A., Author of "Inspiration and the Bible," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

Scotsman.—"The book is written with the author's heart, and is diffused with a glow of, and pervaded by a sense of, reality which make it interesting and attractive. . . . It is eminently a book for the times."

FAITH-HEALING, CHRISTIAN SCIENCE and KINDRED PHENOMENA. By Rev. J. M. BUCKLEY, LL.D. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Next week.]

PLAY in PROVENCE. By Joseph and ELIZABETH ROBINS PENNELL. With nearly 100 Illustrations by Joseph Pennell. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. [Next week.]

THE NATIONALISATION of HEALTH. By HAVELOCK ELLIS, Editor of "The Contemporary Science Series." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CONTENTS—The Treatment of Disease—The Present Position of the Hospital—The Hospital of the Future—The Poor Law Infirmary—The Report of the Hospitals Committee (1892)—Typhoid Fever—Blindness and Short-sight—Maternity and its Perils—The Dentist's Place in Health Nationalisation—The Registration of Disease—The Inspection of Industries—Workers in Lead—The "Laissez-Faire" System.

THE LIFE of WILLIAM COWPER. By THOMAS WRIGHT, Principal of Cowper School, Olney, Author of "The Town of Cowper," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth 21s. With 21 Full-page Illustrations. Also an Edition de Luxe (the number of which is strictly limited) printed on Dutch hand-made paper, and bound in parchment, price 36s. net.

SIXTY YEARS of an AGITATOR'S LIFE: the Autobiography of GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE. In 2 vols., with Photogravure Frontispiece. Portrait to each, demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

A PARTICULAR ACCOUNT of the EUROPEAN MILITARY ADVENTURERS of HUN DUSTAN, from 1781 to 1803. Compiled by HERBERT COMPTON, Editor of "A Master Mariner," &c. Maps and Illustrations, demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

THE FISHGUARD INVASION by the FRENCH in 1797. Some Passages taken from the Diary of the Reverend DANIEL ROWLANDS, sometime Vicar of Llanfangelpenybont. Illustrated, and cared, by permission, to the Right Honourable the Earl of CAWDER. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LONDON:

FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

MESSRS. SEELEY & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, price 7s. 6d.

STUDIES in MODERN MUSIC.

Berlioz, Schumann, and Wagner. By W. H. HADLOW, M.A., Fellow of Worcester College, Oxford. With 5 Portraits.

Scotsman.—"His sketches of the lives of his subjects are as bright and entertaining as his criticisms of their works and his estimates of their influence are stimulating and suggestive."

Glasgow Herald.—"Mr. Hadlow has produced a book which is both readable and scholarly."

Now ready, price 21s.

THE INNS of COURT and

CHANCERY. By W. J. LOFTIE. With 12 Copper-plates and many smaller illustrations by Herbert Railton and other artists. Large-paper copies (100 only) 42s. net.

Times.—"Few writers are better qualified than Mr. Loftie to do justice to these sources of interest."

Daily Telegraph.—"The illustrations are of the highest type of excellence."

At every Library. Price 12s. 6d.

SACHARISSA: some Account of Dorothy Sidney, Countess of Sunderland, her Family and Friends. By JULIA CARTWRIGHT (Mrs. Henry Ady). With Portrait.

National Observer.—"A thoroughly interesting book, with selections sometimes most felicitous."

Saturday Review.—"Mrs. Ady is much to be congratulated on this volume, in which she collects and gives to the world all that can be gathered together concerning the times of a most delightful and remarkable woman."

Pall Mall.—"A valuable history of the great people of the time; it is thoroughly interesting reading throughout."

Now ready, price 5s.

STORIES from the GREEK COMEDIANS.

By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH. With Sixteen Coloured Illustrations.

Now ready, price 5s.

THE REFOUNDING of the GERMAN EMPIRE.

By Colonel MAILLON, C.S.I. With Portraits and Plans. Large Paper Copies (200 only), Roxburgh, 10s. 6d.

Now ready, price 6s.

CHARING CROSS to ST. PAUL'S.

By Justin MCCARTHY. Illustrated by Joseph Pennell. New Edition.

"Mr. Pennell's sketches are simply admirable."—Times.

Now ready, price 5s.

THE GREAT WORLD'S FARM; or, How Nature

Grows her Crops. By SELINA GAYE. Author of "The Great World's Lumber-room." With a Preface by Professor BOULGER, and Sixteen Illustrations.

"A fascinating volume of popular science."—Times.

Now ready, price 7s. 6d.

THOMAS and PAUL SANDBY, ROYAL

ACADEMICIANS: their Lives and Works. By WILLIAM SANDBY. With Five Portraits on Copper and Twelve other Illustrations.

"Will be read with interest and pleasure by all who are attracted to the history of art in England."—Saturday Review.

Now ready, price 5s.

IN the SERVICE of RACHEL, LADY RUSSELL.

By Mrs. MARSHALL. With 8 Illustrations.

Now ready, price 5s.

THE SIEGE of NORWICH CASTLE: a Story of the Last Struggle against the Conqueror. By M. M. BLAKE. With 12 Illustrations.

"Contains some admirably life-like pictures of that epoch."—Daily Telegraph.

"One of the most vigorous and attractive books of the season."—Norwich Mercury.

Now ready, price 5s.

ADRIFT in a GREAT CITY: a Story.

By M. E. WINCHESTER. With Illustrations by Jacob H. Hood.

"One of Miss Winchester's pleasantly-written tales....in its descriptions of life in Liverpool it is equal to any of her previous efforts."—Daily Telegraph.

Now ready, price 5s.

ST. DUNSTON'S CLOCK: a Story of 1666.

By E. WARD. With 8 Illustrations.

"As a picture of Old London, and a thrilling narrative of the events of the Great Fire, this work is to be highly commended."—Glasgow Herald.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

FRESH from the FENS: a Story of Three Lincolnshire Lassies. 5s.

A PAIR of ORIGINALS: a Story. 5s.

SEELEY & CO., LIMITED, ESSEX STREET, STRAND.

THE LEADENHALL PRESS, LIMITED,

50, LEADENHALL STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Subscription List Closes November 30.

LONDON CITY SUBURBS. A splendidly illustrated Large Quarto to be published at 42s. One Guinea to Subscribers, a list of whose names and addresses will be printed in the Text. Finely illustrated Prospectus post free.

COUNSEL to LADIES and EASY-GOING

MEN on their BUSINESS INVESTMENTS, and Caution against the Lures of Wily Financiers and Unprincipled Promoters.

[Three-and-Sixpence.

BRIC-A-BRAC BALLADS. By Goosestep,

Author of "Splay-Foot Splashtings in Divers Places." [One Shilling.

THE FIRST CENTURY and the NINE-

TEENTH. By THE WANDERING JEW. [Three-and-Sixpence.

MRS. DORA GREETS STORY OF

THE GOLDEN OWL. Illustrated by

Ambrose Dudley. [Six Shillings.

A remarkable work both in matter and manner.

JOE MILLER in MOTLEY, being the Cream of Joe's Jest. Compiled by W. CAREW HAZLITT.

THE VISIBLE TO-BE: a Story of Hand-

Reading. [Three-and-Sixpence.

TRICKS and TRICKSTERS. Tales founded on Fact from a Lawyer's Note-Book. By JOSEPH FORSTER, Author of "Some French and Spanish Men of Genius," "Four Great Teachers: Carlyle, Ruskin, Emerson, and Browning," "Duty Wins," &c. [One Shilling.

THE BOOK of DELIGHTFUL and STRANGE

DESIGNS. Being One Hundred Facsimile Illustrations of the Art of the Japanese Stenciller, to which the Gentle Reader is introduced by one ANDREW W. TIER, F.S.A., who knows nothing at all about it. [Six Shillings.

THE BEST BOOK OF ALPHABETS PUBLISHED.

A NEW SHILLING BOOK of ALPHABETS

Plain and Ornamental, Ancient and Modern. For the Use of Architects, Clergymen, Decorators, Designers, Draughtsmen, Teachers, &c. With a curiously interesting Alphabet (Capitals and Small Letters) in Facsimile from an Original MS. written by Charles I. [One Shilling.

THE STAGE in the DRAWING-ROOM:

Short One-Act Sketches for Two and Three Players. By MILLIE SELOUS. [Half-a-Crown.

THE LEADENHALL PRESS, LIMITED,
50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.

NATIONAL

APPROACHING DIVISION OF PROFITS.

FOR MUTUAL
LIFE ASSURANCE.

PROVIDENT

PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED,
£4,000,000.

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.

PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.

INSTITUTION.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

The Next Division of Profits will be made as at 20th November, 1892, and all persons now insuring will participate.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled:

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists, London

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £10.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

PROP. LOISELLE'S DISCOVERIES. THE PHYSIOLOGICAL
ART of NEVER FORGETTING—unlike mnemonic laws memories restored—the worst made good, and the best better, by book learned in one reading, speaking without notes. A self-correcting method for all subjects. Indispensable to the Legal, Medical, Clerical, Musical, Dramatic, and all other Professions and Businesses. Last Edition contains

ONE THOUSAND APPLICATIONS!!!

PROSPECTUS POST FREE.
With opinions of MR. R. A. PROCTOR,
DR. ANDREW WILSON, &c.

Great inducements to Correspondence Classes in
NEVER FORGETTING and CURE for MIND WANDERING
Also taught in Classes or Privately at the address below.
PROF. LOISELLE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NEW AND FORTHCOMING PUBLICATIONS.

THE GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE in MODERN TIMES. By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D., Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge, Tooke Professor in King's College, London. Demy 8vo, 18s.

"It is one of the most important contributions to the history of economies that have yet appeared in England, and will be indispensable to all students."—Guardian.

The GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE during the EARLY and MIDDLE AGES.

By the SAME AUTHOR. Demy 8vo, 16s.

THE STANFORD DICTIONARY of ANGLICISED WORDS and PHRASES. Edited for the Syndics of the University Press, by C. A. M. FENNEL, D. Litt., late Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge; Editor of "Pindar." Demy 4to, pp. xvi.—826, half-buckram, 31s. 6d.

"To give the work its due praise, it is one which every library, club, and similar institution is bound to possess, and one, moreover, which no scholar or student will ever be without. The whole constitutes delightful reading, and has more picturesqueness, variety, information, and interest than almost any book we can name."—Notes and Queries.

SOPHOCLES.—The PLAYS and FRAGMENTS. With Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation in English Prose. By R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., LL.D., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge.

Part V.—TRACHINIZÆ. 12s. 6d.

Part VI.—ELECTRA.

[In the press.]

THE CAMBRIDGE HOMER.—HOMER'S ODYSSEY. The Text Edited in accordance with Modern Criticism by ARTHUR PLATT, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; strongly half-bound, 6s.

"We have a text of the 'Odyssey,' very well printed on good paper, and in a handy form, with an introduction (pp. i.—xxii) and a short apparatus criticus at the foot of the page. To lovers of Homer there is no text which we would recommend more heartily, both for what it contains and what it omits. We hope the 'Iliad' will soon follow."—Journal of Education.

THE CAMBRIDGE HOMER.—HOMER'S ILIAD. By the Same Editor.

[In the press.]

THE NEW HISTORY (TARIKH-I-JADID): a Circumstantial Account of the Babi Movement in Persia, from its First Beginnings till the Death of the Founder (A.D. 1844—1850), chiefly based on the Contemporary History of Hajji Mirza Jān of Kāshān. Translated into English from a Text prepared by collation of the only two Complete Manuscripts known to exist in Europe, and supplemented by Original Historical Documents, Plans, and Facsimiles. By EDWARD G. BROWN, M.A., M.B., Fellow of Pembroke College, and Lecturer in Persian in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

[Nearly ready.]

A TREATISE on the THEORY of FUNCTIONS of a COMPLEX VARIABLE. By A. R. Forsyth, Sc.D., F.R.S., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo.

[In the press.]

A TREATISE on ANALYTICAL STATICS. Vol. II. By E. J. Routh, Sc.D., F.R.S., Fellow of the University of London, Honorary Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 10s.

TEXTS and STUDIES: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature. Edited by J. Armitage ROBINSON, B.D., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge.

Vol. II.—No. 3. THE RULES of TYCONIUS. Freshly Edited from the Manuscripts, with an Examination of his Witness to the Old Latin Version. By F. C. BURKITT, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge.

[In the press.]

Vol. II.—No. 4. APOCRYPHA ANECDOTA. Containing the Latin Version of the Apocalypse of Paul, the Apocalypses of the Virgin, of Eudrach, of Zosimus, &c. By M. R. JAMES, M.A.

[In the press.]

THE JURASSIC ROCKS of CAMBRIDGE: being the Sedgwick Prize Essay for the Year 1886.

By the late T. ROBERTS, M.A. Demy 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FOSSIL PLANTS as TESTS of CLIMATE: being the Sedgwick Prize Essay for the Year 1892.

By A. SEWARD, M.A., St. John's College. Demy 8vo, 5s.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS MATHEMATICAL SERIES.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on PLANE TRIGONOMETRY. By E. W. HOESON, Sc.D., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, and University Lecturer in Mathematics; and C. M. JEFFOT, M.A., Fellow of Clare College, and Assistant Master at Reading School. 4s. 6d.

THE ELEMENTS of STATICS. Second Edition. (Being Part I. of "Elements of Statics and Dynamics.") By S. L. LONEY, M.A., late Fellow of Sidney Sussex College. 4s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

PLUTARCH'S LIFE of DEMOSTHENES. With Introduction, Notes, and Indexes. By Rev. HUBERT A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D., Hon. Litt.D., Dublin, Fellow of the University of London, sometime Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

[In the press.]

MILTON'S PARADISE LOST. Books V. and VI. With Introduction, Notes, and Indexes, by A. WILSON VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. 2s.

BOOKS I. and II.

[In the press.]

"Mr. Verity is an admirable editor of Milton."—Athenæum.
"Our gratitude for the excellent edition before us is accompanied by a lively hope that we shall in due course receive the rest of the work annotated by the same able pen."—Guardian, September 14, 1892.

ARISTOPHANES.—VESPÆ. With Introduction and Notes by C. E. GRAVES, M.A., Classical Lecturer and late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

[In the press.]

ELEMENTARY COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY: a Sketch of the Commodities and the Countries of the World. By H. R. MILL, Sc.D., F.R.S.E. With List of Recent Changes added July, 1892. 1s.

LIVY. BOOK VI. With Notes and Introduction by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., formerly Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d. (Subject for Oxford and Cambridge Certificate Examination, July, 1893.)

CORNEILLE.—POLYEUCTE. With Introduction and Notes by E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French. (Subject for Cambridge Previous Examinations, 1893.)

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

GLASGOW: 263, ARGYLE STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1072.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1892.

PRICE 3s.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES.

William Black's New Novel, "Wolfenberg,"

IN THREE VOLUMES, Crown 8vo.

FOURTH EDITION, NOW READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwalder, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan; who recently escaped, with two Sisters of Mercy, on Camel, from the Mahdi. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A., Director of Military Intelligence, Egyptian Army, and Author of "Mahdism and the Egyptian Sudan." Illustrated by Photographs, Maps, and Special Drawings by Walter C. Horsley. Demy 8vo, 600 pp., cloth extra, 21s.

"A book of very unusual and manifold interest and value. In the first place it is an interesting book to read; in the second, it is an historical document of the first importance, and in the third, it has an extraordinary appositeness at the present moment."—Saturday Review.
"The narrative is deeply interesting, and throws much light on the present condition and future possibilities of the provinces subjugated by the Mahdi and now under the rule of his successor."—World.

STORIES TOLD in an AFRICAN FOREST by GROWN-UP CHILDREN of AFRICA. By A. J.

MOUNTENEY JEPHSON, one of Mr. Stanley's officers, and Author of "Emin Pasha and the Rebellion at the Equator." With numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Walter W. Buckley. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.
"A collection of Zanzibar tales told in the Forest by the men of the Emin Relief Expedition during the march across Africa."

"SHEPHERD" SMITH, the UNIVERSALIST: the Story of a Mind. Being a Life of the Rev. JAMES E. SMITH, M.A. By W. ANDERSON SMITH. With Photogravure Portrait and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

The book throws considerable light on the character of the Rev. Edward Irving, and contains some interesting reminiscences of the socialistic dreams and schemes of Robert Owen and his followers. James Smith was a determined advocate of the liberty of the newspaper press, and his literary experiences in Edinburgh and London, in the earlier years of the century when he was fighting the battle for bread at the point of the pen—are of more than passing moment. His association with the first Lady Lytton forms not the least interesting episode in the book; and some of her unpublished letters are included in it.

ARTISTIC TRAVEL: a Thousand Miles towards the Sun. Normandy, Brittany, the Pyrenees, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. By HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Academy Notes," Author of "The Memoir of Randolph Caldecott," &c. With 130 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d. "A most agreeable and handsome record of diversified voyages in search of the picturesque."—Daily Telegraph.

HOLIDAY WANDERINGS in MADEIRA. By A. E. W. Marsh. With many Full-page and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. "A pleasant record of a happy time."—Daily Telegraph.

A TRAMP ACROSS the CONTINENT: from Ohio to California on Foot, 3,507 Miles. By Charles F. LUMMIS, Author of "A New Mexico David," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THROUGH the LAND of the AZTECS: Seven Years' Life and Travel in Mexico. By a "Gringo," Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT in OLD ENGLISH VERSE. By Rev. C. J. Abbey, Rector of Checkendon, Oxon. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Mr. Abbey brings to his task the three essential qualifications of fine poetic sensibility, genuine piety, and extensive theological learning."—Times.
"Must be bought, kept, and loved."—Daily Chronicle.

FREDERIC CHOPIN: a Biography. By Charles Willeby. With Photogravure Portrait, Facsimile of Autograph, and Illustrations of his Music. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d.

"Will be appreciated by the great musician's admirers."—Times. "One of the most fascinating musical biographies that have come before our notice."—Morning Post.

THE CLOCKS of RONDAINE, and other Stories. By Frank R. Stockton, Author of "Rudder Grange," &c. Illustrated. Square 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"Stories in which there is playful humour and poetic fancy always; the whole book is admirable. It is excellently illustrated."—Scotsman.

THE FEVER of LIFE. By Fergus Hume, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," &c.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.
"Even the reader who is well trained in detective romance will find no clue till the secret is sprung upon him in the last pages. To baffle the reader thus is the highest aim of writers of such stories, and we heartily congratulate Mr. Hume on his success."—Manchester Guardian.

HYPOCRITES. By Hugh Colman Davidson, Author of "The Old Adam," &c. Illustrated.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "A capital volume of light literature."—Pall Mall Gazette.

OUT of the GROOVE: a Romance of Australian Life. By E. B. Kennedy, Author of "Blacks and Bushrangers." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Out of the Groove" is really a good story, founded on fact. There are no incidents which are in themselves incredible. Some of the scenes are well and graphically described."—Illustrated London News.

MISTRESS BRANICAN. By Jules Verne, Author of "The Lottery Ticket," "Five Weeks in a Balloon," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"A writer without a book by Jules Verne would scarcely be intelligible... This is a romance which will, no doubt, please the girls as thoroughly as the boys."—Globe.

AXEL EBERSEN, the GRADUATE of UPSALA. By

ANDRE LAURIE, Author of "The Conquest of the Moon," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"It is so admirably constructed a story that no reader—no matter what his age—will read it without a keen interest and admiration."—Scotsman.

SANDY CARMICHAEL. By C. J. Hyne, Author of "Four

Red Nightcaps," &c. With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.
"The action of this romance is laid in the middle of last century, and follows three Britons out to the South Sea Islands, where they find and rule a people of Polynesian cannibals. The story is full of exciting adventure, and will be read with interest by every boy who takes it up."—Scotsman.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

FASHIONS OF TO-DAY.

A HIGH-CLASS ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY MAGAZINE
FOR GENTLEWOMEN.

"It is a work of art, as well as of fashion, the illustrations, especially those in colour, being simply admirable. At present, at any rate, we have nothing in England like it."

By J. T. ...

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

STEPHENS'S ORATORS OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION, by E. PURCELL	449
LE GALLIENNE'S ENGLISH POEMS, by E. K. CHAMBERS	450
TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY IN THE MAHDI'S CAMP. By Prof. SALMON	451
A. K. H. B.'S REMINISCENCES, by W. WALLACE	452
SWIFT'S POLITE CONVERSATION, by C. E. DOBLE	453
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	454
SOME BOOKS ON ANCIENT HISTORY	455
RECENT THEOLOGY	455
NOTES AND NEWS	456
TENNYSONIANA	456
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	457
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	457
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TO BERNARDINE," by J. C. B.	457
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	457
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	458
CORRESPONDENCE—
"Covade," by Dr. J. A. H. Murray; A Prayer Book of Edward VI. by the Rev. J. T. Fowler; The Obit of St. Columba, by A. Anselme; English Women's Literary Work at Chicago, by Mrs. J. E. H. Gordon; Transylvania, by A. Vaughan; E. H. Blakeney	458
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	461
SIR JOHN LEBROCK'S BEAUTIES OF NATURE, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS	461
A NEW CHINESE DICTIONARY	462
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"Upjick," by Skt. "Upjick," by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris	462
SCIENCE NOTES	463
PHILOLOGY NOTES	463
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	463
THE SCOTTISH PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS	463
CORRESPONDENCE—
Filippo Scolari, by Andrea del Castagno, by W. Mercer	464
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	465
"KING LEAR" AT THE LYCEUM, by F. WEDMORE	465
STAGE NOTES	466
MASCAGNI'S "I RANTZAU," by J. S. SHEDLOCK	466

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING in all its BRANCHES.
Authors' Manuscripts, Sermons, Specifications, Law Copying, &c. Terms cash on or before delivery.—Miss C. HYDE WARREN, 310, Strand, W.C.

UNIVERSITY TYPE-WRITING
OFFICE, OXFORD (16, King Edward Street). MSS. of all descriptions typed and prepared for the press. Literary, Scientific, Medical, and Foreign MSS. carefully copied and revised by experienced typists. Notes taken at the Balliol. Shorthand Clerk and Typist sent any distance by train. Translations.—For price list and information address the Secretary.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

LIVRES CURIEX des XVe et XVIIe
Siècles, traduits pour la première fois: l'Hermaphrodite de Panormita—Le Maréchal, comédie de P. Aretino, &c.—Isidore Liseux, 25, Rue Bonaparte, Paris.

CATALOGUE OF BRITISH and FOREIGN PORTRAITS of general interest.
GUSTAV LAUSER, 25, GARRICK STREET, LONDON, W.C.
Post free on application.

CATALOGUE (82 pp.) of SECOND-HAND BOOKS, comprising First Editions of Browning, Dickens, Dobson, Jeffries, Lang, Morris, Sturtevant, Tennyson, Alpine and Mountaineering Books, and Works illustrated by Crane, Caldecott, Cruikshank, Greenaway, Leech, Thomson, &c. Post free.
MATTHEWS & BROOKS, Sand Buildings, Bradford.

BRIGHTON BOOK CIRCULAR
No. 106.—Special Item on Angling, Art, Architecture, Chess, Comic Literature, Cruikshank, Dore, Electricity, Ireland, Natural History, Sports, Trials, &c.
W. J. SMITH, 41-43, North Street, Brighton.

MISS NADEN'S "WORLD-SCHEME": an Essay. By G. M. McCrie, Editor of Further Reliquies of Constance Naden.
London: WATTS & Co., 171, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

BREAKFAST OR SUPPER.

EPPS'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING
COCOA
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

MARK TWAIN says
OF PROF. LOISETE'S SYSTEM OF MEMORY—
"I had before been able, like most people, to store up and lose things in the dark cellar of my Memory, but he showed me how to light up the cellar. It is the difference—to change the figure—between having money where you can't collect it, and having it in your pocket. The information costs me but little, yet I value it at a prodigious figure."—Prospectus post free from Prof. A. LOISETE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

NATIONAL APPROACHING DIVISION OF PROFITS.

FOR MUTUAL PROVIDENT LIFE ASSURANCE.

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.
PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.

PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED:
£4,000,000.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

The Next Division of Profits will be made as at 20th November, 1892, and all persons now insuring will participate.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE EXTERNAL EXAMINERS OF THE UNIVERSITY.

James Adam, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, Examiner in Greek.
Archibald Barr, D.Sc., Professor of Engineering in the University of Glasgow, Examiner in Engineering.
Marcus Beek, M.D., F.R.C.S., Professor of Surgery in University College, London, Examiner in Surgery.
Cloris Elyenot, M.A., Professor of French in Mason College, Birmingham, Examiner in French Language and Literature.
Karl Bredl, Ph.D., M.A., University Lecturer in German, Cambridge, Examiner in German Language and Literature.
D. J. Cunningham, M.D., Professor of Comparative Anatomy in the University of Dublin, Examiner in Anatomy.
Sir Bruce Dickson, M.P., Edin., F.R.C.P., Lecturer on Clinical Medicine in St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, Examiner in Medicine.
R. T. Glazebrook, M.A., F.R.S., Demonstrator in the Cavendish Physical Laboratory, Cambridge, Examiner in Physics.
A. H. Green, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Geology in the University of Oxford, Examiner in Geology and Palaeontology.
Alexander Henry, M.A., LL.B., Professor of Jurisprudence in University College, London, Examiner in Law.
C. H. Herford, LL.D., Professor of English Literature in University College, Aberystwyth, Examiner in English Language and Literature.
W. M. Hicks, M.A., Principal of Firth College, Sheffield, Examiner in Mathematics.
G. B. Howes, F.Z.S., Assistant Professor of Biology, Royal College of Science, London, Examiner in Zoology.
Robert Macquie, M.D., F.R.C.P., Lecturer on Pathology, St. Mary's Hospital, London, Examiner in Pathology.
George R. Murray, F.R.S., Senior Assistant, Department of Natural History, British Museum, Examiner in Botany.
Rev. T. L. Parnham, M.A., Late Fellow and Tutor of New College, Oxford, Examiner in Latin.
William Ramsay, Ph.D., F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in University College, London, Examiner in Chemistry.
Charles S. Sherrington, M.B., Lecturer on Physiology in St. Thomas's Hospital, London, Examiner in Physiology.
A. R. Simpson, M.D., F.R.C.P., Professor of Midwifery in the University of Edinburgh, Examiner in Obstetrics and Diseases of Women.
Arthur L. Smith, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford, Examiner in History.
Theodore Stevenson, M.D., F.R.C.P., Lecturer on Chemical and Medical Jurisprudence, Guy's Hospital, London, Examiner in Forensic Medicine and Public Health.
Ralph Stockman, M.D., Examiner in Materia Medica and Pharmacy and in Pharmacology and Therapeutics. (Eligible for re-election.)
James Ward, M.A., Sc.D., Lecturer on Philosophy in Trinity College, Cambridge, Examiner in Philosophy and Political Economy.
The Examiners against whose names a dagger (†) is placed retire at the end of November. APPLICATIONS are invited for the posts they now fill, which should be sent in on or before Nov. 29, and may be accompanied by testimonials (copies only) or references at the candidates' discretion. The appointments will be for three years. Examiners who have served a full term are not eligible for re-election.—For further particulars apply to A. T. BENTLEY, M.A., Registrar.
Manchester, October, 1892.

BIRMINGHAM SCHOOL BOARD.

The Board requires the services of a CHIEF ASSISTANT MASTER for the new Scientific and Technical School in Waverley-road, Small Heath. The successful Candidate will be expected to take the greater part of the responsibility of the Girls' Classes under the Superintendence of the Head Master. Salary £180 per annum. Applicants should be good practical Teachers, with a sufficient knowledge of French and the Sciences underlying Domestic Economy in addition to the usual English Subjects. For Form of Application apply, by letter, addressed to the CLERK of the School Board, Birmingham.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

DEPARTMENT OF CIVIL, MECHANICAL, AND ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING.

No further entries of Day Student for the Engineering Laboratories or Drawing Office can be taken until next Session, when the number will be limited to Sixty: applications for admission will be received up to September 30th, 1893. A Paper in Elementary Mathematics will be set for all candidates, except such as have passed the Victoria Preliminary or the London Matriculation, or other approved Examination. Those who have passed the Victoria Preliminary Examination will be in a position to proceed, if they so desire, to the B.Sc. Degree in Engineering (Honours or Pass). Prospectus may be obtained from the Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.—

The PROFESSORSHIP OF HISTORY will be vacant at Christmas by the resignation of Professor Lecky.—Applications will be received up to NOVEMBER 30TH. For further information apply to J. M. HONSBROUGH, M.A., Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different standard subjects, the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Torquay, &c.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.E.

THE BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

The FIRST MONTHLY MEETING will be held on MONDAY, NOVEMBER 21st, at 20, HANOVER SQUARE, W., at 7.30 p.m., when the President's inaugural Address will be delivered by Mr. W. A. CHURCHILL.

First Portion of the Valuable Fine Art Publications and Reminders, Steel and Copper Plates of Messrs. HENRY SOTHERAN & Co., consequent on Rebuilding of the Premises No. 135, Strand.

MESSRS. HODGSON will SELL BY AUCTION, at their ROOMS, 115, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C., on TUESDAY, Nov. 22, and three following days, at 1 o'clock, by order of Messrs. H. Sotheran & Co., the First Portion of their Valuable FINE ART PUBLICATIONS and REMAINERS, removed from No. 135, Strand, including 165 Nash's Mansions, 4 vols. (£16 8s.), and 20 coloured (221)—135 Baronial Halls, 2 vols. (large paper £14 14s.), 10 coloured (221)—Scottish Clans, 2 vols. (£21)—35 Cassell's, Hertfordshire, 3 vols. (£16 16s. and £33 12s.)—45 Flaxman's Drawings (£10 10s.)—45 King's Study-Book of Architecture, 4 vols. (£12 12s. and £16 16s.)—1015 Ainsley's Polychromatic Decoration (£3)—47 Ainsley's Ceramic Art of Japan and Japanese Marks, 2 vols. (£4 4s.)—2 Racine, Le Costume Historique (£10 10s. and £21)—33 Burnet's Painting (£4 10s.) and 21 on large paper (£8 8s.)—20 Wood's Index Entomologicus (£4 4s.), 12 Wood's Index Testaceologicus (£13s. 6d.), and the Copper-plates of both works—14 Pope's Game Birds (£6)—11 Buller's Birds of New Zealand (£12 12s.)—Copies of Crowe's Flemish Painters—Whymper's Great Auk—La Croix's Middle Ages—Woodward's Works, 11 vols. Amongst the copper-plates are Caricatures by Gillray, Rowlandson, &c. Claude's Liber Studiorum—Lewis's Rivers of England—Vestiges of Old London, &c. To which are added 80 Hestley's Wild Flowers of New Zealand (£13 13s. 6d.)—110 Agassiz Cruise of the Blake, 2 vols. (£2 2s.)—20 Melville's Antarctic Voyage (£2 2s. 6d.)—75 Sheridan's Rivals (£5 5s. and £2 12s. 6d.)—6 Cozzens's American Yachts (£21 and £31 10s.), &c.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE,
20, HANOVER SQUARE, W.—On WEDNESDAY 23rd inst. at 8 p.m. W. WATKISS LLOYD, Esq., will read a Paper on "THE EASTERN GROUPS OF THE FRIEZE OF THE PARTHENON."

Peacy W. Ames, Secretary.

THE ART UNION OF LONDON,
112, STRAND.

President: The EARL OF DERBY, K.G. Established 1837.

SUBSCRIBERS for the current year are entitled to an ORIGINAL ETCHING by ROBERT MACLEITH, A.R.A., entitled "LATE for the FERRY," in addition to a chance of one out of many Valuable Prizes in Pictures, and other Works of Art. ORDINARY SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA. SUBSCRIPTIONS for PROOFS, SEVEN, FIVE, THREE, and TWO GUINEAS. The Society issues this year, in two states only, a Fine Mezzotint Engraving of Sir JOHN MILLAR'S Picture "A SOUVENIR OF VIELASQUEZ." The Engravings and full particulars may be obtained at the Society's House, 112, Strand, London, W.C.

THE ARCHITECTURAL PUBLICATION SOCIETY.

THE DICTIONARY OF ARCHITECTURE.

SUBSCRIBERS and others DESIROUS to COMPLETE their SETS by the acquisition of the later parts are requested to apply at once to Mr. ARTHUR CATES, Hon. Sec., No. 7, Whitehall Yard, S.W. A few complete copies are available for new Subscribers.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

JAMES NISBET & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.AUTOBIOGRAPHY of the LATE REV.

DONALD FRASER, D.D., and a Selection from his Sermons. With a Preface by J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CHRISTUS MAGISTER: some Teachings from the Sermon on the Mount. By ALFRED PEARSON, M.A., Incumbent of St. Margaret's Church, Brighton. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"We regard the book as one of the best popular expositions of our Lord's sermon on the Mount."—Book.NEW VOLUME OF THE "CHRISTIAN UNDER REVIEW"*SERIES.*THE CHRISTIAN'S INFLUENCE. Bythe Ven. WILLIAM MACDONALD SINCLAIR, D.D., Archdeacon of London. Small crown 8vo, 2s."The book throughout is pointed, practical, and evangelical, and will be helpful alike to young and old."—Dundee Advertiser.NEW BOOK BY THE LATE REV. J. JACKSON WRAY,*BETWIXT TWO FIRES. By the lateRev. J. JACKSON WRAY, Author of "Nestleton Magna," "Matthew Mellowdew," "Light from the Old Lamp," "Honey from the Comb," &c. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.STRANGE YET TRUE: Interesting andMemorable Stories Retold. By JAMES MACAULAY, M.D., Editor of the Leisure Hour, &c. With many Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s."Among the five and twenty true stories in this book none are trifling, and many are of the highest interest."—Athenaeum.THE HOT SWAMP: a Romance of OldAlbion. By R. M. BALLANTYNE. With 6 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s."Full of action and adventure."—Scotsman.NEW RELATIONS: a Story for Girls.By EMMA MARSHALL. With 6 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s."Written in Mrs. Marshall's most attractive style. The charming picture it gives of family life impresses one with its photographic accuracy."—Record.VIKING BOYS. By Jessie M. E. Saxby,Author of "The Lads of Lunda," "The Yarl's Yacht," &c. With 4 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d."Wholesome and manly in tone, the book is thoroughly fresh and natural."—Morning Post.STEADY YOUR HELM; or, StowedAway. By WM. CHARLES METCALFE, Author of "Alcive Board," "Frank Weatherall," &c. With 6 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s."A bright picture of sea-life."—Morning Post.BARON and SQUIRE: a Story of theThirty Years' War. From the German of N. NOELDECHEN.
By SARAH M. S. CLARKE (Mrs. Pereira). With 16 Illustrations.
Extra crown 8vo, 5s."The story is well written, and abounds in dramatic incidents."
Manchester Examiner.NEW VOLUME OF THE "GOLDEN LADDER" SERIES.*A CANDLE in the SEA; or, Winter atSeal's Head. By Rev. A. E. RAMP, Author of "A Knight that Smote the Dragon," &c. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, gilt edges, 3s. 6d."A capital lighthouse story."—Record.JAMES NISBET & CO., 21, BERNERS STREET, W.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype IllustrationsSelected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S*Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs,
Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

Twenty-ninth Edition. Post free.

BLUSHING: Its Cause, Self-Treatment, and a Rapid, Permanent, and Inexpensive Cure. Varnhagen's System Explained by a Specialist.

A. B. SMITH, 131, High Park Street, Liverpool.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 3s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.By LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NOW READY, THIRD EDITION, 8vo, 14s

CIVILISATION AND PROGRESS.

By JOHN BEATTIE CROZIER.

REVISED AND ENLARGED, AND WITH NEW PREFACE.

More fully explaining the nature of the New Organon used in the solution of its problems.

The Rev. H. R. HAWKES, M.A., says: "This is the most remarkable and important work of the last twenty years. It is not too much to say that Mr. Crozier can enter the lists with men like Carlyle, Comte, Herbert Spencer, and John Stuart Mill, all of whom he treats sympathetically, and hold his own."The Spectator says: "The book of a very able man..... The testimony which we are compelled to give to the high ability of this ambitious work is completely impartial..... Full of original criticism..... Great literary faculty..... A book for less superficial than Mr. Buckle's."Mrs. LYNN LINTON says: "The book seems to me to be one of the most original and remarkable of the present day.
There is not a dry page from cover to cover."Knowledge says: "No one can rise from the perusal of this work without the conviction that its author has established a claim to stand high among the most profound and original thinkers of the day..... He has set himself an ambitious task, and he has very narrowly indeed escaped entire success..... Will repay perusal and re-perusal."VERNON LEE says: "The ability of Mr. Crozier consists in a remarkable clearness of detail vision, singular acumen of distinction—the power, so to speak, of seeing through milestones, of being in a manner clairvoyant..... This accurate and subtle thinker."THE RUINED CITIES of MASHONALAND: being a Record ofExcavation and Exploration in 1891. By J. THEODORE BENT, F.S.A., F.R.G.S. With a Chapter on the Orientation and Mensuration of the Temples by R. M. W. SWAN. With 5 Maps and Plans, 13 Plates, and 101 Illustrations in the Text. 8vo, 18s.TWELVE ENGLISH AUTHORESSES: Hannah More—FannyBurney—Maria Edgeworth—Harriet Martineau—Jane Austen—Felicja Hemans—Mary Somerville—Jane Taylor—
Charlotte Brontë—Elizabeth Gaskell—Elizabeth Barrett Browning—"George Eliot." By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," &c. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.A SELECTION from the LETTERS of GERALDINE JEWsburyto JANE WELSH CARLYLE. Edited by Mrs. ALEXANDER IRELAND, Author of "The Life of Jane Welsh Carlyle," and Prefaced by a Monograph on Miss Jewsbury by the Editor. 8vo, 16s."These letters have a double interest. They reveal in Miss Jewsbury herself a highly-strung and fascinating personality; and they give us glimpses of the real Mrs. Carlyle..... The pervading note of the correspondence is vivacity."—Times.LETTERS to YOUNG SHOOTERS. Second Series. On the PRO-DUCTION, PRESERVATION, and KILLING of GAME. With Directions in Shooting Wood-Pigeons and Breaking-in Retrievers. By Sir RALPH PAYNE-GALLWEY, Bart. With Portrait of the Author, and 103 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.FIRST SERIES—On the CHOICE and USE of a GUN. With numerous Illus- trations and Diagrams. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE TOILERS of the FIELD. By RICHARD JEFFERIES. With a Portrait from the bust in Salisbury Cathedral. Crown 8vo, 6s.

105 copies will be printed on Large Paper. Price on application to the Booksellers.

BUDDHISM—PRIMITIVE and PRESENT in MAGADHA and inCEYLON. By REGINALD STEPHEN COPESTON, D.D., Bishop of Colombo, President of the Ceylon Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society. 8vo, 10s."A book which will attract the attention of students of comparative religion."—Times.MORALITY in DOCTRINE. Sermons by WILLIAM BRIGHT, D.D.,Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Honorary Canon of Cumbria. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.THE MARRIAGE of NEAR KIN, considered with respect to theLaw of Nations, the Result of Experience, and the Teachings of Biology. By ALFRED H. RUTH.
Royal 8vo, 21s.THESAURUS of ENGLISH WORDS and PHRASES. Classifiedand Arranged so as to Facilitate the Expression of Ideas and Assist in Literary Composition. By P. M. ROGET, M.D. Recomposed throughout, Enlarged, and Improved, partly from the Author's Notes, and with a full Index, by the Author's Son, JOHN LEWIS ROGET. Crown 8vo, 16s. 6d.MEMOIRS of the VERNEY FAMILY during the CIVIL WAR.By Lady VERNEY. Compiled from the Letters and Illustrated by the Portraits at Claydon House, Bucks. With a Preface by S. R. GARDINER, M.A., LL.D. With 38 Portraits, Woodcuts, and Facsimiles. 2 vols., royal 8vo, 12s.AFTER TWENTY YEARS, and other Stories. By JULIAN STURGIS, Author of "Thralldom," "John Maidment," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"An Unimportant Person" and "The Romance of an old Don" are capital, and there are few more delightful persons to be met with, each in his own way, than the young whirlwind, Martin Carter, and the prim, undergrown, and unselfish Stanley Betel."—Bookman.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN WARD."

THE STORY of a CHILD. By MARGARET DELAND, Author of

"John Ward," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"The thread of the story is admirably interwoven through the gossip conversations of the children and their elders."
Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY.

THE LIFE of JOHN LINNELL.

By ALFRED T. STORY. With Numerous Illustrations from paintings or sketches by Linnell. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

"A perfect treasury of anecdotes."—Daily Telegraph.
"Will be valuable to all who wish to inform themselves of the history of a great artist."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW READY.

CHARLES KNIGHT: a Memoir.

By his Grand-daughter, ALICE A. CLOWES. With Two Portraits. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 12s.

NOW READY.

RED-LETTER DAYS of MY

LIFE. Reminiscences and Anecdotes of many Persons of Note. By CORNELIA A. H. CROSSE, Author of "Memorials of Andrew Crosse, the Electrician." 2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.

NOW READY.

MEMOIRS of EIGHTY YEARS.

By GORDON RAKE. Including Recollections and Anecdotes of many Eminent Persons. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 10s.

NOW READY.

EGYPT TO-DAY. The First to the Third Khedive. By W. FRASER RAE. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

NOW READY.

IN SAVAGE ISLES AND

SETTLED LANDS. A Record of Personal Experiences in 1888-91. By B. F. S. BADEN-POWELL, Scots Guards, F.R.G.S. With Maps and numerous Illustrations from Sketches by the Author. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 21s.

"We can heartily recommend this handsome and well illustrated book to those who can enjoy the record of impressions in many lands, told without fear or favour, and without any attempt at 'fine writing.'"—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

CONVERSATIONS of DR. DOL-

LINGER. Recorded by LOUISE von KOBELL, and Translated from the German by KATHARINE GOULD. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

THIRD EDITION.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "COMETH UP AS A FLOWER."

MRS. BLIGH. By Rhoda Brough-

TON, Author of "Good-bye, Sweetheart," "Nancy," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo.

"No one of Rhoda Broughton's stories has given us so much pleasure as this; not even 'Nancy,' which is probably her best; and not even 'Dr. Cupid,' which is, no doubt, the most interesting of her novels."—Pall Mall Gazette.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH."

GOD'S FOOL. By Maarten

MAARTENS, Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ELSA."

THE STEP-SISTERS. By E.

McQUEEN GRAY. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS."

SIR GODFREY'S GRAND-

DAUGHTERS. By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY, Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW EDITION.

CLEVEDEN. By Mary Linskill

("Stephen Yorke"), Author of "Between the Heather and the Northern Sea," and "The Haven Under the Hill." 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Publications of the Clarendon Press.

NEW BOOKS.

Demy 8vo, half-roan, gilt top, 8s. 6d.

THE TABLE-TALK of JOHN SEL-

DEN. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by S. H. REYNOLDS, M.A., late Fellow and Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford; Editor of the Clarendon Press Edition of "Bacon's Essays."

"One of the finest gems of our literature."—Times.
"Undoubtedly the best edition."—Scotsman.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with Map, 2s. 6d.

A NEW VOLUME OF "RULERS OF INDIA."

LORD LAWRENCE; and the Reconstruction of India under the Crown. By Sir CHAS. UMPHERSTON AITCHISON, K.C.S.I., LL.D., formerly Foreign Secretary to the Government of India, and late Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.

"* This Series is edited by Sir W. W. Hunter, and forms a Popular History of the Indian Empire, in Half-Crown Political Biographies. The following Volumes have already been published:—Akbar, Albuquerque, Madhaji, Shodha, Dupleix, Warren Hastings, Cornwallis, Elphinstone, Bentinck, Hardinge, Ranjit Singh, Dalhousie, Clyde and Strathnairn, Canning, Lawrence, and Mayo.

Volumes on Aurangzeb, Lord Clive, the Marquess of Wellesley, and the Marquess of Hastings will be ready shortly.

A COMPANION VOLUME TO "RULERS OF INDIA."

Twentieth Edition, Revised. Seventy-eighth Thousand.
Crown 8vo, cloth, superfine paper, 3s. 6d.

A BRIEF HISTORY of the INDIAN

PEOPLES. From the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Sir W. W. HUNTER, K.C.S.I., M.A., LL.D., &c., Editor of the "Rulers of India" Series.

"By far the best manual of Indian History that has hitherto been published."—Times of India.

Square 8vo, cloth, 5s.

HYMNS and CHORALES for SCHOOLS and COLLEGES. By JOHN FARMER, Organist of Balliol College, Oxford.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE WORKS of VIRGIL. With an

Introduction and Notes by T. L. PAPHILLON, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of New College, and A. E. HAIGH, M.A., late Fellow of Hertford, Classical Lecturer at Corpus Christi and Wadham College, Oxford.

2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 32s.

NOTES on the NICOMACHEAN

ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. By J. A. STEWART, M.A., Student and Tutor of Christ Church, Oxford.

"* The Text adopted in these 'Notes' is that of Mr. Bywater's Edition of the Nicomachean Ethics, published at the Clarendon Press in 1890.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

GRAMMAR of the DANO-NOR-WEGIAN LANGUAGE. By J. Y. SARGENT, M.A., Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford.

Part I., 8vo, cloth, 21s., with 8 Plates.

CATALOGUE of EASTERN and

AUSTRALIAN LEPIDOPTERA HETEROCERA in the OXFORD UNIVERSITY MUSEUM. By Col. C. SWINHOE, F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.E.S. Part I.—Sphinxes and Bombyces.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

HYDROSTATICS and ELEMENTARY

HYDROKINETICS. By GEO. M. MINCHIN, M.A., Professor of Applied Mathematics in the Royal Indian Engineering College, Cooper's Hill.

NEW EDITIONS.

Nearly ready, Revised and Augmented, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE LOGIC of HEGEL. Translated from the Encyclopaedia of the Philosophical Sciences. By WILLIAM WALLACE, M.A., LL.D., Fellow of Merton College and Whyte's Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Oxford.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE CANONS of the FIRST FOUR

GENERAL COUNCILS of NICAEA, CONSTANTINOPLE, EPHESUS, and CHALCEDON. By WILLIAM BRIGHT, D.D., Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Oxford.

FULL CATALOGUES ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,

CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.

THIRD EDITION OF

MR. SANTLEY'S REMINISCENCES.

NOTICE.—MR. SANTLEY'S

REMINISCENCES. Two Editions having been recently exhausted, a Third Edition is now ready at all Libraries and Booksellers. Demy 8vo, 16s.

The TIMES.—"It would be difficult to enhance the value of the Reminiscences, whether for the musician or the general reader."

The GLOBE.—"A treasury of delightful anecdote about artists, as well as of valuable pronouncements upon art."

The MORNING POST.—"The whole work is rich in entertaining and really interesting anecdotes. It gives the echoes of brilliant voices that have charmed the world—now, alas! silent for ever—and brings its writer before the public in a new character, in which he excels."

FIRST EDITION, NOVEMBER 8th.

SECOND EDITION, THIS DAY.

THE MEMORIES OF DEAN HOLE.

With Illustrations from Original Sketches by LEECH and THACKERAY, and a Photogravure Portrait of the Author.

Second Edition, demy 8vo, 16s.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"One of the most delightful collections of reminiscences that this generation has seen, full of homely wisdom, long experience, wide cultivation, infinite sympathy, delicious humour—the very mirror of the most charming of men."

DAILY GRAPHIC.—"Dean Hole has written a delightful book. There is not a dull page from the first to the last. It consists of reminiscences chiefly anecdotic, which are always interesting and always brightly told, and which serve, incidentally if not directly, to bring out the attractive personality of the author."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"As the author has been acquainted at one time or another with celebrities in almost every rank of life, the result is a volume full of first-rate entertainment."

MANCHESTER EXAMINER.—"A delightful book, full of anecdotes of Dickens and Thackeray and John Leech and Dr. John Brown, all of whom the Dean of Rochester has known personally."

FIRST EDITION, NOVEMBER 17th.

SECOND EDITION, IN THE PRESS.

LARGE-PAPER EDITION, NEARLY READY.

ECHOES OF OLD COUNTY LIFE.

Being Recollections of Sport, Society, Politics, and Farming in the Good Old Times.

By J. K. FOWLER,

Formerly of the White Hart Hotel and Prebendal Farms, Aylesbury.

Illustrated. Price 10s. 6d.

Large-Paper Edition of 200 copies only, 21s. net.

The book contains Two Photogravures—one a group from Grant's famous picture of the Royal Hunt; the other a Portrait of the Author. Also a fine reproduction from an admirable drawing by Harrison Weir, of the Author's Short-horn Bull, King Charming, and an Engraving of the famous "Dinner Table Jump." Inserted in the text are many small humorous pictures characteristic of the scenes described.

The Author tells interesting Personal Reminiscences and Anecdotes of numerous Celebrities, among whom are Lord Beaconsfield, Count D'Orsay, the Rothschilds, Bishop Wilberforce, and many others. Life in the "Good Old Times" is depicted in all its varieties by the sympathetic pen of one who has witnessed and enjoyed to the full the amenities of Sporting, Agricultural, and Political Society in a typical English County.

LONDON:

EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

Publisher to the India Office.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1892.

No. 1072, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Orators of the French Revolution. Edited by H. Morso Stephens. In 2 vols. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

SOME such book as this has long been needed. The delivery of each of the more effective speeches is a marked event in every History of the Revolution, but for the orations themselves we had to consult the files of the Moniteur or the various Collected Works of the orators, of which few libraries contained a complete series. In fact, the speeches of Mirabeau alone in their entirety were accessible to the average English student. The present editor has reprinted in convenient form the most important harangues of the olean best-known statesmen and orators, and his samples of the vast torrent of French eloquence ought to satisfy, if they do not precisely intoxicate, every reader. His list might no doubt have been considerably extended, but his principles of exclusion seem reasonable. On the one hand, many speeches and speakers of renowned eloquence exerted no political influence, and therefore have no historical import; on the other, the most effectual utterances of certain statesmen can hardly be classed as professed oratory. To this last rule one exception is admitted, the extempore speeches of Danton, without which the collection would have been useless.

These revolutionary orations are not the most delightful of reading, but they have to be read, and read carefully, for several reasons. In the first place, they were in themselves factors of history; they influenced votes; they modified policies; they shaped events. For better or for worse, we have changed all that. Party oratory with us partakes of the nature of cross-actions for libel and false pretences, each side being both accuser and accused, while the audience within and without Parliament follows with languid interest the unscrupulous dexterity of the advocates. As for being persuaded or convinced—why, who but a juryman is taken in by the simulated whines and thunders of Buzfuz? It was not thus under the Constituent nor even in the earlier days of the Legislative Assembly. Everything was new, parties were as yet loosely ranged, opinions were unformed or fluctuating, a child-like ingenuous curiosity swayed most minds in their honest desire to find out the strongest nostrum for la Patrie moribonde. A confirmed lunatic would have found a following if only he could dignify his patriotic transports with a fair tincture of that spurious logic which the Goddess of Reason was supposed to inspire. What then must have been their docility to men of brilliant powers and strong convictions who addressed them with all the seduction of academic rhetoric? Any clever speaker could persuade or frighten them into stultification, so long as he made no anti-revolutionary slips, nor outraged their vanity by the truth.

Secondly, apart from their practical effects, these speeches are historical monuments; they represent a distinct epoch—the reign of talk which culminated under the Legislative Assembly. The phrase-makers who had pushed France to the brink of the precipice elaborated and perfected their fatal art up to the moment when the men of action thrust them aside. But even these could not afford to dispense with phrases. Hence the Committee of Safety included two or three talking members to tickle the ears of the Convention; hence, too, Barère's reports were adorned by the most ambitious and flowery eloquence. Since Robespierre's and many another facile tongue ceased to wag, France has been less and less governed by the talkers, though its rulers and pretenders have never disdained the aid of phrases; but it was only for the brief period, covered by this collection, that oratory actually reigned supreme. In his Introduction, Mr. Stephens traces the rise of French eloquence, and suggests several reasons for its popular influences, none of them without due weight. But though they elucidate, they do not probe the depths of that problem—by far the most interesting which this volume, nay, any modern French History, presents—the appetite for eloquent claptrap. The difficulty does not lie in the bombast which is but perverted poetry, nor in the self-glorification which may be only obstreperous patriotism, but in the absolute, formal disregard of truth. Were falsehood banished from the earth, she would find a refuge in the mouth of the French orator. There is no shame, no reproach, no moral taint in this; it is purely professional. French historians of the new school are every day exposing the old lies and printing the most damning truths. Their compatriots do not blame them; nay, rather honestly pride themselves on the veracity and acumen of their historians. Let the savants go their way and the orators go theirs—why need they clash? Facts are highly respectable things, but phrases are much more agreeable. So the Gaul celebrates with offusion and moral incolumity the centenary of lies, such as that of the Vengeur, which he knows all the time were sily concocted by politicians to hoodwink his grandfather. His sense of the ridiculous is suspended. Not long ago at Domrémy, after a gallant struggle between the Clericals and Republicans to "capture" the statue movement, it was decided to combine two myths, and more than fifty of Jane's "authenticated lineal descendants" sat in state on the platform and listened gravely to the episcopal panegyric of the "virgin martyr." Why, only yesterday, the centenary of Valmy, I find the Minister of Public Instruction going down there to set up an image of Kollermann, and publicly instructing an audience about the heroes of '92, "unshaken under fire" &c. Now I do not presume to doubt that M. Bourgeois has been privately instructed enough to know that his tale of killed and wounded is at least dubious, and that in this artillery duel—for there was no actual fighting at all—the French heroes repeatedly ran away, and had to be driven back by their officers. In short, from this battle, lost solely by the unmasterly inactivity of the Prussians, the French reaped absolutely no laurels whatever, though doubtless no small political advantage. Yet no one sees anything wrong or anything funny in these proceedings. Whence, then, this complacent toleration of falsehood by the French, and in a lower form by the Irish? Are the French fools and gulls? By no means. Are they liars? Not more than other men. It is easy for us, turning over Mr. Stephens's collection, or glancing at a French journal, to sneer at their musical nonsense and sonorous mendacity, but I doubt if we are capable of a fair judgment. Our idea of oratory is utterly different. When we flock to hear a speaker we at least profess to expect—I do not refer to a mob-audience—some instruction, to learn something both new and true. He is at least supposed—even the advocate in court—to mean all he says. Doubtless, in party speeches of late years, there is a growing tendency to effrontery of misstatement, but as yet it is conventionally reprobated and disavowed. With us hearing orations is a serious, dreary business; to the Frenchman it is an artistic pleasure and a holiday function, even though it be at a graveside, or in the throes of a revolution. Fine language, whether in a speech or book, he welcomes as an aesthetic luxury and emotional stimulant, the fineness being of course proportioned to his degree of cultivation; for Academicians have been found to own that some phrases, highly effective in their day, are only vulgar fustian. He views the eloquence of the rostrum much as we do that of the stage, as a professional art, whereof he is a sharp and enthusiastic critic. Truth, cold veracity, naked fact, prosaic reason, is not what he seeks, but inspiring themes clothed in grand words. Jane's virginity and Valmy's Spartans he accepts as conventionally as we do Mr. Irving's wigs. Grand language must be based on grand stories; and if the stories are false, they are none the less grand. It is this spice of the heroic, this homage to exalted ideals, which we English fail to understand. When they rear statues to the wrong people—nonentities, exploded charlatans, pinchbeck Molochs, and the like; when they celebrate the anniversaries of events which never happened, they care less than nothing for historical accuracy, but everything for the grandiose and inspiring sentiments which their myths embody. Granted a strong tincture of national and personal vanity, there remains that generous readiness to do honour even where it is not due, and that universal homage to splendid virtues which has made France great, and in spite of everything will revive her after each fall. Nor should we forget that exquisite capacity for holiday enjoyment, even at weddings and funerals and political meetings, that volition of amusement to us so unattainable. When Jules puts on his smiles and new gloves for a function, he will have no skeletons at the feast; oratory is part of the programme, like the procession and fireworks, and that oratory must soothe his feelings with pleasing images and flattering fictions. In all this there lurks no doubt a serious danger whenever speech is translated into action. Such is the moral of the book now before us. The cumulative effect of these harangues is appalling. Successful as they were at the time, they now read but poorly. Much, regarded simply as art, is contemptible, and few speeches are worthy of their extravagant fame. In what makes for true eloquence—reasonable argument, dignity and charm—political oratory has not decayed at all; the statesmen of the Third Republic are by no means inferior in eloquence to those of the First, though their audiences are less inflammable.

But what is most fatal to the permanence of these old harangues is their tremendous moral tension, their continuous appeal to the loftiest principles and most celestial ideals. The orator exhausts his stock of grand sentiments and glowing words in palming off some brazen lie, or dirty job, or paltry treachery; when he comes to attack a great theme, he cannot increase the pressure. The result is bathos. A whole volume of incorruptible patriotism sniffs strongly of hypocrisy or, at least, of conventionalism.

Again, the speeches which Mr. Stephens has so judiciously selected are invaluable from a biographical point of view, especially those of Danton and Robespierre. Their study is much facilitated by his adequate sketches of each orator, and by the useful introductions he has prefixed to the several speeches.

Lastly, we must note that all these orations are literature, though not perhaps of the highest order. They were carefully composed, written out, read in the tribune, and revised for the press. Danton is the only exception. All are absolutely free from sans-culotisme and the ordures du Père Duchesne. The Revolution preserved intact the traditions of decency, as well as the artificiality of the grand siècle.

The book presents so many facts and opens up so many controversies, that I have refrained from more detailed comments. But attention should be drawn to the new light Mr. Stephens has thrown upon the character and career of Barère, both here and in his History of the French Revolution. He has now reprinted (for the first time in France or England) a few specimens of Barère's remarkable reports, a complete edition of which would be invaluable as elucidating the Reign of Terror. Much pains have been taken with the texts. Those of St. Just, Cambon, and Louvet are for the first time reprinted from the originals published by the Convention, and two speeches of Robespierre omitted by Vermorel have been rescued from the British Museum. The three separate indices—of biographical notes, of proper names, and of events—are admirably copious and correct. In an Appendix, Mr. Stephens reprints in full from a copy of the rare pamphlet of 1841 lent him by Dr. Robinet, who has done so much for the memory of Danton, the secret notes furnished by Robespierre to St. Just for his famous accusation of the Dantonists. Their authenticity is well established, and they deepen the darkest shades of infamy which obscure the last years of the Incorruptible. Both as an academical manual, a book of reference, and an historical monument, this work is of the greatest importance, and is hardly likely to be superseded.

E. PURCELL.

English Poems. By Richard Le Gallienne. (Elkin Mathews and John Lane.)

A VOLUME of verse by the author of The Book-bills of Narcissus could not but be of welcome promise. Not merely because of the snatches of song scattered throughout the prose of that delightful sketch, but also because of the unmistakably poetic nature of its whole conception. "Narcissus poeticus," said a sympathetic reviewer thereof; and the pretty nomenclature was not undeserved. The book was a record of a poet's soul, moving among masterpieces and through life. A poet's imagination took the place of Dr. Heidegger's caldron, and made the rose of Narcissus to bloom again. It is as well, therefore, to say frankly at the beginning that English Poems comes as a disappointment. I have faith: I still think that Mr. Le Gallienne has the root of the matter in him; but all is so experimental, so much more immature than one had hoped. There is so much need of self-criticism, of strenuous art, of a widened outlook; and in that judgment you have the first and last word of this review.

It is worth while to quote a few of the passages which convince me that, if he only knew how to use it aright, Mr. Le Gallienne has somewhere a genuine singing gift. There are the opening lines of an Apologia, to his wife, for "light loves in the portal." The sentiment is perhaps audacious, but the expression is happy:

"Dear wife, there is no word in all my songs
But unto thee belongs:
Though I indeed before our true day came
Mistook thy star in many a wandering flame,
Singing to thee in many a fair disguise,
Calling to thee in many another's name,
Before I knew thine everlasting eyes."

There is a fragment in description of "Love's Worship." It is Venus who is addressed:—

"For, Lady, thou dost know I ne'er did tire
Of thy sweet sacraments and ritual;
In morning meadows I have knelt to thee,
In noontide woodlands hearkened hushedly
Thy heart's warm beat in sacred slumbering,
And in the spaces of the night heard ring
Thy voice in answer to the spherial lay."

And there are the lines from "The Desk's Dry Wood," which appeared in Narcissus, but which one is glad to have now in their proper context:—

"How many queens have ruled and passed
Since first we met; how thick and fast
The letters used to come at first, how thin at last;
Then ceased, and winter for a space!
Until another hand
Brought spring into the land,
And went the seasons' pace."

'Tis a haunting rhythm.

Unfortunately, Mr. Le Gallienne so seldom writes up to his highest level, and he does not seem to know when he has fallen beneath it. There are numbers—such as those entitled "Hesperides," "The Wonder-Child," "Never-Ever," and the like—which are really quite impossible. They might pass as versified love-letters to a not very critical mistress, but in print they can only raise a smile. If the book had been shortened by about two-thirds—above all, if the whole of the section called "Love Platonic," and nearly the whole of that called "Cor Cordium," had been ruthlessly cut out, then it would have made rather a graceful volume, "a box where sweets compacted lie." I need not finish the quotation, but no doubt Mr. Le Gallienne will be the first to admit that most modern verse is necessarily as fleeting as the roses of "Ausonius."

I have an impression that Mr. Le Gallienne fancies himself at his best in lilting linnnet-like songs. If so, I venture to think that it is a mistake. He seems to me much more successful where he is grappling with complicated stanza-forms. The very exigencies of metre force him to self-criticism; he is compelled to weigh and reject, to forge and hammer the music, instead of letting it lie just as it comes red-hot from the furnace of his brain. Here is an example, from an elegy on a dead friend:

"For what can tears avail you? The spring rain
That softly pelts the lattice, as with flowers,
Will of its tears a daisied counterpane Weave for your rest, and all its sound of showers
Make of its sobbing low a cradle song:
All tears avail but these salt tears of ours,
These tears alone 'tis idle to prolong."

It is, perhaps, hardly fair to a poet that he should be represented only by stray lines and stanzas. For sustained excellence, Mr. Le Gallienne's happiest effort is a poem on Autumn. I may find room for it here:

"The year grows still again, the surging wake
Of full-sailed summer folds its furrows up,
As after passing of an argosy
Old Silence settles back upon the sea,
And ocean grows as placid as a cup.
Spring, the young morn, and Summer, the strong noon,
Have dreamed and done and died for Autumn's sake:
Autumn that finds not for a loss so dear
Solace in stack and garner hers too soon—
Autumn, the faithful widow of the year."

"Autumn, a poet once so full of song,
Wise in all rhymes of blossom and of bud,
Hath lost the early magic of his tongue
And hath no passion in his failing blood.
Hear ye no sound of sobbing in the air?
'Tis his. Low bending in a secret lane,
Late blooms of second childhood in his hair,
He tries old magic, like a dotard mage;
Tries spell and spell, to weep and try again:
Yet not a daisy hears, and everywhere
The hedgerow rattles like an empty cage."

"He hath no pleasure in his silken skies,
Nor delicate ardours of the yellow land;
Yea, dead, for all its gold, the woodland lies,
And all the throats of music filled with sand.
Neither to him across the stubble field
May stack or garner any comfort bring,
Who loveth more this jasmine he hath made,
The little tender rhyme he yet can sing,
Than yesterday, with all its pompous yield,
Or all its shaken laurels on his head."

"Keats," you will say. Of course, but it is true discipleship, not plagiarism; tho influence is in the spirit more than in the matter. Keats, too, is apparent in the most ambitious poem of the volume, a version, in Spenserian stanzas, of the story of "Paolo and Francesca." It is ill work following after Dante; but Mr. Le Gallienne has discreetly avoided comparisons by the choice of a far other style, and presents the wind-swept lovers in an atmosphere as of "The Pot of Basil." The weakest part of the poem is the tragic close: the narrative is too gentle, too diffuse, for tragedy; but the story of Love's dawning in the heart of youth and maiden is told with many gracious touches.

Some misunderstanding has always hung about the meaning of the word "cockney" in the criticism of Keats. As I conceive it, it does not in the least imply vulgarity of sentiment, but rather a want of scholarship, what Matthew Arnold would have called provincialism, an imperfect acquaintance not only with the classical models of poetry, but also with some of the elements of a liberal education. In this sense, and with no desire to offend, I use the epithet of Mr. Le Gallienne. Wider reading would have given him a surer faculty of self-criticism; it would also have saved him from certain irritating solecisms into which, in the absence of it, he has fallen. He would not have given the title "Love Platonic" to a series of poems dealing with "love that never found his earthly close"; he would not have misused the ethnic dative in such a phrase as "I rise me"; he would not have rhymed "Beatrice" with "his"; he would not have confused the nature of Phrygian and of Lydian music; he would not have dowered the lily with seven stamens; he would not have made Mnemosyne a synonym of Lethe. These things may appear trifles, but the great poets of our day are not guilty of them. Art, as well as Nature, must go to the making of the modern singer.

There is another point. The title of Mr. Le Gallienne's book is designed, one gathers, to be a protest against certain latter-day tendencies in literature; and the protest is amplified in an address "To the Reader," and in a very striking, clever poem called "The Décadent to his Soul." Mr. Le Gallienne wishes us clearly to understand that he is on the side of the angels, that he is not tarred with the brush of Verlaine, that his inspiration is manly and normal, not abnormal and morbid. He laments that "youngsters blush to sing an English song," that Art has become "a lazar-house of leprous men," that the nightingale of English poetry is "hush't at last!

For, not of thee this new voice in our ears,
Music of France that once was of the spheres;
And not of thee these strange green flowers that spring

From daisy roots and seem to bear a sting."

He paints the typical Décadent as one who—

"used his soul

As bitters to the over dulcet sins,
As olives to the fatness of the feast—
She made those dear heart-breaking ecstasies
Of minor chords amid the Phrygian lutes,
She sauced his sins with splendid memories,
Starry regrets and infinite hopes and fears;
His holy youth and his first love
Made pearly background to strange-coloured vice."

But whom is Mr. Le Gallienne attacking? Is the note of decadence so strong in our younger poets, in those in whose hands the future of our poetry rests? If Mr. Le Gallienne will look for a moment beyond the borders of the Rhymers' Club he will surely see that it is not. Mr. Robert Bridges, Mr. William Watson, Mr. Alfred Austin, Mrs. Woods—they are sane and healthy and "English" enough; they have not made Cayenne pepper of their souls. And what has Mr. Le Gallienne to say for "Beauty Accurst"—la très belle Beauté maudite? Then, again, the antithesis of "English" and "Décadent" is not a true one. We have a national character, more or less, but our literature is cosmopolitan. Take away what it owes to foreign sources—Classical, French, Italian, Celtic—and its whole nature would be completely changed. A new element, introduced from whatever quarter, can only be judged on its own merits, and not by its conformity or want of conformity with a supposed "national" standard.

EDMUND K. CHAMBERS.

Ten Years' Captivity in the Mahdi's Camp, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwalder. By Major F. R. Wingate. With Maps and Illustrations by Walter C. Horsley. (Sampson Low.)

It cannot be said that Major Wingate's second work is of the same value and importance as his previous one, which was reviewed by the present writer in the ACADEMY of December 5, 1891. In that he gave a comprehensive history of the rise and fall of the Mahdi's power; while the volume under notice is merely a record of the adventures of Father Ohrwalder, the Austrian priest, during his ten years' captivity in the Mahdi's camp. At the same time it must be confessed that the book fascinates the reader, and rivets his attention from the moment he takes it up. The most interesting part of all is the graphic account of the hardships and sufferings endured by the European and native Christians who had fallen into the hands of the victorious Mahdi and his lieutenants.

Father Ohrwalder was precluded from keeping a regular diary during his captivity, owing to the circumstances in which he was placed. Moreover, he doubtless thought that it would serve no end—expecting as he did a violent death at any moment. The present narrative, however, was written while the horrors he had experienced were fresh in his memory. His account of some of the events not only corroborates the facts recorded by Major Wingate in his Mahdism and Egyptian Sudan, but throws much light upon certain obscure passages in that period of Sudanese history.

In his Preface, Major Wingate modestly disclaims all originality in the work. We are informed that Father Ohrwalder first wrote his narrative in German, which was afterwards rendered into English by a Syrian. This fact, by the way, seems somewhat strange; apparently Major Wingate was unable to find an Englishman in Egypt sufficiently acquainted with German to do the translation.

"This," he says, "I entirely re-wrote in narrative form. The work does not, therefore, profess to be a literal translation of the original manuscript, but rather an English version, in which I have sought to reproduce accurately Father Ohrwalder's meaning in the language of simple narration."

That Major Wingate has succeeded in presenting the narrative to the public in a readable form none can deny. The art of good composition includes—in addition to grammatical accuracy, clearness of expression, rhythmical sound, and what is commonly called style—the placing of facts and ideas in appropriately consecutive order, which has certainly been observed in the book before us. The editor of the interesting history, although by profession a soldier, is also unquestionably a master of the pen, which he wields with ability and force.

Some of the chapters contain a detailed account of incidents with which those interested in the subject are familiar. To the average reader, however, there is much that is not only exceedingly interesting but instructive. So long as the people of this country have any connexion with Egypt, so long will the Sudan command attention. It is not part of our duty to discuss here the advisability of rescuing the Sudan by annexation. But, it may be permitted us to say that most people who are acquainted with the character of the country and its inhabitants unanimously agree that, unless some serious effort be made by the Egyptian Government (aided by England) to regain possession of the important positions on the Upper Nile, it is idle to entertain any hope of introducing civilisation into that country. Missionary work, commercial enterprise, literary or scientific research must until then be wholly impracticable. No one can but feel sympathy with Father Ohrwalder in his impassioned appeal to England to rescue the land and people—especially after having read a picture of the condition of the country at present, so full of horrors, crimes, and savagery, that even the most impervious to humane considerations could hardly remain untouched. He ends by saying:

"How long shall this condition of affairs continue? Negotiation with Abdullah [the Khalifa] is hopeless—that has been proved by many well-intentioned efforts; but shall savagery and desolation continue for ever? Shall the roads remain always closed that lead from Italia and Sawakin to the richest provinces of Africa? The Sudan has lost faith in the humanity of Europe, nor does it cease from wonder why Europe has not yet stepped in. Consuls of the greatest nations have been murdered, their flags torn down, their agents kept in slavery.

"Interference while the revolt was its height could not perhaps be efficient—that is understood. But now the face of things is changed. The Sudanese have been heavily punished for their mistaken trust; they have suffered to the bitter end. Where may they look for a deliverer? . . . How long shall Europe—and, above all, that nation which has first part in Egypt and the Sudan, which stands deservedly first in civilising savage races—how long shall Europe and Great Britain watch unmoved the outrages of the Khalifa and the destruction of the Sudan people?"

To the present writer the most interesting passage in the work is the description given of the Mahdi. It confirms what he was told by leading natives who knew intimately the would-be champion of Islam. In addition to its giving further proof of the power of strong individuality exercised over the masses by persons who possess innate knowledge of human character, it further shows that in many parts of the East—especially in the Sudan—there still lingers among the people the servile adulation of a self-created leader. Indeed, the history of the Mahdi's rise to power differs in no way from that of the first founder of Islam. The same means have been employed, and the same credulity existed among the followers.

Referring to the Mahdi's personal appearance, our author says :

"Mohammed Ahmed was a powerfully-built man, of dark-brown complexion and carefully-kept skin; he had a pleasant smile, which showed to advantage the curious slit between his front teeth. By constant training, he had acquired a gentle manner in speaking, and, with these exceptions, there was nothing unusual in his appearance. He wore a dirty jibbeh [cloak], on which parti-coloured strips of cotton had been sewn; on his head the white skull cap or tukia, round which a broad white turban was bound; he also wore a pair of loose drawers and sandals."

There can be no doubt that the Mahdi was firmly convinced that he had a divine mission to perform. While giving special attention to the organisation of his army, he spared no effort to introduce a reform of political abuses. True, the measures he employed were of a severe nature, but his apologists may plead justification. He had to deal with a wild and savage people, who are only subjugated by an iron rule and led by emotion. Reasoning with them was out of the question.

Much that is brought forward in this book goes to favour the idea that the Mahdi felt persuaded of the decay of the Mohammedan religion, and honestly desired to remove those abuses which he deemed the outcome of a half-understood civilisation, and which had serious ill effects on the people.

"His primary object was to be a religious reformer, and to preach that to him was confided the task of bringing back the religion now polluted by the Turks to its original purity."

According to our author, the Mahdi certainly effected some improvement during his brief rule. Among other things, he entirely forbade the use of alcoholic drink, as well as smoking and chewing tobacco. Any infringers of these rules were severely chastised. Even words of abuse were punishable with twenty-seven lashes. He also issued many new regulations concerning marriage. Immorality in some cases was punished by death of a revolting nature. He further prohibited weeping and wailing for the dead. Those who have resided in the East will doubtless remember that this ancient custom still prevails—not only among Mohammedan, but also among the Christian population.

Although, when taken captive, Father Ohrwalder and the two nuns were at first subjected to the most severe hardships, and on refusing to become Muslims were ordered to be executed, it seems that the Mahdi hesitated to carry out his threat on the ground that according to Moslim law it is not lawful to kill religious servants who have not offered armed resistance. Thus they escaped death; but it must always remain a wonder how they were able to live through all they had undergone. Death would have been thought at that time a happy release. Finally, owing to the instrumentality of the Latin Archbishop of Egypt, aided by the friendly assistance of those in authority, their rescue was effected.

It is hardly possible to imagine more blood-curdling atrocities than those that were enacted after the fall of Khartum. The following will give an idea of what took place :

"The ruthless bloodshed and cruelty exercised by the Dervishes in Khartum is beyond description. I will briefly describe the deaths of the best-known people. Nicola Leontides, the Greek Consul, who, on account of his amiable character, was much respected in Khartum, had his hands cut off first, and was then beheaded. Martin Hansel, the Austrian Consul, who was the oldest member of the European colony, was alive up till 2 p.m., when some Arabs from Buri, led by his chief Kavass, who was on bad terms with him, entered the courtyard of the house, and on Hansel being summoned to come down, he was at once beheaded. At the same time, Mulatte Skander, a carpenter, who lived with him, was killed in the same way. His body, together with that of his dog and parrot, were then taken out, alcohol poured over them, and set fire to. After a time, when the body had become like a red-hot coal, it was thrown into the river."

There are even worse pictures of butchery and inhuman cruelty given; but the above will suffice to show the mad blood-thirstiness of the Arabs after the fall of Gordon's city.

The book contains a valuable index and some useful maps. It must be admitted, however, that it is difficult to understand why a "sketch-map showing correct position of the I.B.E.A.Co.'s forts and boundary of Uganda" is interpolated. Surely it is out of place in a work of this character. There are a few interesting illustrations, those reproduced from photographs being especially good.

H. ANTHONY SALMONÉ.

Twenty-five Years of St. Andrews. By A. K. H. B. In 2 Vols. Vol. II. (Longmans.)

THE second volume of the Country Parson's Reminiscences is in some respects less readable than its predecessor, while in others it is to be preferred, at least as a literary performance. The earlier volume was dominated by nothing and nobody but the curious half-impersonal egotism of the author; the later is distinctly dominated by Anglicanism impersonated by Bishop Thorold. It is tolerably evident, from what Dr. Boyd says, that in spite of his being a Scotch son of the manse, he would have been much more at home in the Church of England than in the other Establishment of whose Assembly he has been Moderator. In the second last chapter of this volume he says :

"I attach not the smallest importance to Presbytery. The tie I acknowledge is to the National Establishment. When in England, I belong to the Church of England, and that most heartily."

This is, to say the least of it, surely a rather curious statement to come from one who is understood to be in the first instance a Presbyterian. When in Italy, does Dr. Boyd belong to the Church of Rome, and that most heartily? When in Russia, does Dr. Boyd belong to the Greek Church, and that most heartily? Even non-Scotch and non-Calvinistic readers of his book would have been glad if he had defined his theological position instead of merely indicating his ecclesiastical attitude.

Apart from this, however, there is a certain amount of pathetic seriousness in the second volume, which, although it is unfortunately allied with sloppiness of style, gives it an air of gravity that was not possessed by its predecessor. Dr. Boyd loses his chief St. Andrews friends—Principals Tulloch and Shairp among the number—by death; and before the volume opens, he himself appears to have had a rather alarming illness. Of course he never ceases to be self-complacent, while persistently proclaiming himself to be in no sense an egotist. Thus he notes with evident satisfaction that one of Mr. Smiles's books was for a time advertised by its publishers with the notices he had written of it for two periodicals, and that "an animal of extraordinary value and beauty appeared in the published record of high-bred cattle as bearing my odd initials." Dr. Boyd's alter ego secured a prize at many shows.

"But the last mention of him was tragic. The murrain got into that unpurchaseable herd, and they had to perish. A paragraph said 'A. K. H. B. is still alive, but he is to be killed to-morrow.' I heard no more."

Had, indeed, Dr. Boyd been capable of taking a deeper interest in humanity than he has done, and of cherishing a Swift's or a Balzac's contempt for it, he would have played with considerable success that rôle, which all self-conscious folk try at one time or another to play, of Mephistopheles to his own Faust. But Mephistopheles Boyd has a very good opinion—perhaps a trifle too good—of Faust Boyd. He takes note of all the kind things that editors and publishers have said of the various books, full of neat morality and still neater religiosity that have been published by the author of Recreations of a Country Parson. It may, indeed, be doubtful whether Mephistopheles Boyd means to take Faust Boyd down with him below at all. The latter gentleman, if I remember aright, took good care to intimate in the first volume of his Reminiscences that he had in advance secured a mansion in the sky, like his predecessors in the first charge of St. Andrews.

This second volume of Twenty-five Years of St. Andrews will be read, like the first, mainly for the good stories told of celebrities of almost every sort and intellectual size. Nearly all of them have already been made as much as possible of in the daily papers. There is a legend, it seems, that "Carlyle, being told I was minister of St. Andrews and its parish church, shook his head and said sorrowfully, 'God help them!'"

"The truth," says Dr. Boyd, "is that he had come to St. Andrews in his last visit to Scotland; and, of course, had gone into the parish church, whose severe plainness pleased him. Then he asked who was minister of the church; and, being told, said 'God bless him.'"

Here is an excellent example—Dr. Boyd is indebted to Mr. Froude for it—of a man looking at a matter from only one point of view.

"A youth at Oxford being examined in Paley, was asked if he could mention any instance of the Divine goodness which he had found out for himself. 'Yes; the conformation of the nose of the bull-dog. Its nose is so retracted that it can hang on to the bull and yet breathe freely. But for this it would soon have to let go.' The bull's point of view was not regarded at all.

Again—

"There must be a great deal of religious zeal in this town," said somebody seated on the box to the driver of a four-horse coach, 'there are so many churches.' But the shrewd old Scotchman said with much contempt, 'It's no religious zeal ava', it's just cursedness of temper.'"

In these later years Dr. Boyd would seem to have set himself deliberately to collect, treasure in note-books, and publish after-dinner anecdotes, chiefly about his contemporaries both in Scotland and in England. He says that his admiration of the late Lord Westbury was "intense"; and it is at least possible that he may have been led unconsciously to imitate his hero. He is at his best when saying a drily malicious, but polite, thing of some one for whom he has what he styles an elective antipathy. These two volumes must contain in effect all that Dr. Boyd has to say of the folk he has come in contact with during the last quarter of a century. A still more interesting, and probably even more Westburian, book would be one indicating what these folk think of Dr. Boyd.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

Polite Conversation in Three Dialogues by Jonathan Swift. With Introduction and Notes by George Saintsbury. (The Chiswick Press.)

THE form of this reprint is very satisfactory, and the reproduction of Swift's text leaves little to be desired, though a collation with the second edition would probably have been useful in its bearing on one or two passages. The Hints towards an Essay on Conversation might with advantage have been prefixed. It is an interesting little treatise, and contains a brief and sober statement of Swift's positive views on the subject; while the Polite Conversation, as we cannot but think, is rather of the nature of an object-lesson, showing by example what should be most strenuously avoided in ordinary social intercourse, and is wholly ironical throughout. Swift's love of proverbs is well known to every reader of the Journal to Stella; and it is difficult to believe that so much superficial brilliance could have characterised the average talk of the upper or middle classes at any epoch. Mr. Saintsbury points out that Thackeray has conveniently ignored Swift's explanation with regard to the strangely disordered details of the banquet of which the great humorist has made so much. But Mr. Saintsbury, in arguing against Scott in favour of the Dean's "actual truth of reporting," seems in his turn to have passed over too lightly Swift's own distinct confession that his work is but a highly exaggerated abstract, and not a typical reproduction, of the "polite conversation of the day."

"I am far [he writes, p. 27] from desiring, or expecting, that all the polite and ingenious Speeches, contained in this Work, should, in the general Conversation between Ladies and Gentlemen, come in so quick and so close as I have here delivered them. By no means: on the contrary, they ought to be husbanded better, and spread much thinner. Nor do I make the least Question, but that, by a discreet thrifty Management, they may serve for the entertainment of a whole Year, to any Person, who does not make too long or too frequent Visits in the same Family."

And the astonishing statement (p. 9) that proverbs have been rejected in the composition of these Dialogues is delightfully ironical. A very large proportion of these "polite speeches which beautify conversation" will be found in the Elizabethan dramatists, in Camden's Remains, and in Ray's Proverbs; and doubtless the origin of all will some day be traced when we possess a trustworthy historical guide to the "philosophy of the British vulgar." A good edition of the works of Swift, and a good lexicon of British proverbs and proverbial sayings arranged "on historical principles," are among the most obvious needs of the student of English literature. For instance, we find here (p. 111) the phrase "something like a tansy," concerning which Mr. Saintsbury gives a very uncertain sound. It occurs in Beaumont and Fletcher, in Motteux' translation of Rabelais, and in Tristram Shandy. It certainly refers, not to the plant, but to the pudding of many ingredients which figures in most old English cookery books; but whether it is used here in a complimentary or uncomplimentary sense of the result of Miss Neveront's attempt to mend her lace, it is, with our present books of reference, difficult to decide.

There is one very important point with respect to this treatise which we must ask Mr. Saintsbury to reconsider. It was first published in 1738; but the editor writes that "the composition dates, as is known to a practical certainty, many years earlier," and he attributes it to "the first decade of the eighteenth century." On the contrary, the whole atmosphere seems to us to be that of George II. rather than that of Anne.* The reference to Burnet's History cannot have been written before 1723, when vol. i. was published; the second volume did not appear till 1731. Mr. Saintsbury suggests that Hoadly may have been the "infamous Court-Chaplain," who "fully convinced the Maids of Honour that there was no such place as Hell." The reference could scarcely have been to Hoadly in any case; but we know from Swift's Directions for making a Birthday Song (1729) that Samuel Clarke was the divine intended:

* The language, however, altered but slowly; and most of the solecisms mentioned at p. 32 Swift had already satirised in the Tatler for September 28, 1710.

"Tis grown the choicest wit at court,
And gives the maids of honour all sport;
For, since they talk'd with Doctor Clarke,
They now can venture in the dark:
That sound divine the truth has spoke all,
And pawn'd his word, Hell is not local.
This will not give them half the trouble
Of bargains sold, or meanings double."

Both in the Introduction and in the Dialogues, Quadrille is the favourite game of cards. It only succeeded after many years to the Ombre of Queen Anne and of the "Rape of the Lock." In the Suffolk Correspondence (i. 257), in a letter of 1726, it is spoken of as a "new" game. At p. 41 "Simon Wagstaff" introduces Gildon, Ned Ward, and John Dennis, "those" of them "who are still alive"—with an obvious hint that they were all dead. Gildon died in 1723, Ned Ward in 1731, Dennis in 1731. Mr. Saintsbury speaks of Col. James Graham as a "shadowy personage."† But Col. Graham, of Levens, was a very real person indeed, whose life has been separately written, and who has his place in the Dictionary of National Biography. We know from the Journal that he was an acquaintance of Swift's; but Swift would scarcely have written of him as he does before his death, which occurred in 1730. Captain John Stevens, whom Mr. Saintsbury has forgotten, is obviously introduced here on account of his "New Dictionary of Spanish and English. With Fast Numbers of Proverbs," published in 1726. So, too, the allusions to Charles XII. (d. 1718), to Sir Isaac Newton (d. 1727), to the controversy on drinking to the memory of the dead, with which the Introduction concludes, and to Hanover-square (p. 134), must all be considerably later than the age of Anne. Grimston, who is referred to at p. 79, is apostrophised in the Rhapsody on Poetry (1733) as "Great poet of the hollow tree." But we have Swift's direct authority for the later date. The Dean, in a letter to Gay and the Duchess of Queensberry, dated August 28, 1731, states that he then had two great works in hand: "one to reduce the whole politeness, wit, humour, and style of England into a short system, for the use of all persons of quality, and particularly the maids of honour." This is certainly the Polite Conversation; the second being the Directions to Servants. And Mrs. Laetitia Pilkington relates an anecdote which may be true (Memoirs iii. 146): "—on you, you slut, said the Dean, you gave me a Hint for my Polite Conversation, which I have pursued. You said it would be better to throw it into Dialogue; and sup-

* The Miscellaneous Works of Dr. William Wagstaffe, in which Swift was undoubtedly concerned, though probably to a less extent than Mr. Dilke maintained, were published in 1726.

† It may not be too rash to hazard a conjecture that Lord and Lady H—, at p. 17, may be the Herveys.

poso it to pass amongst the Great; I have improved by you." There can, I think, be little doubt that this treatise, as we possess it, was substantially written by Swift some fifteen or twenty years after the death of Queen Anne.

C. E. DOBLE.

NEW NOVELS.

Rosni Harvey. By Hannah Lynch. In 3 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

The March of Fate. By B. L. Farjeon. In 3 vols. (White.)

Whither? By M. E. Francis. In 3 vols. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

The Fate of Herbert Wayne. By E. J. Goodman. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Germ Growers. By Canon Potter. (Hutchinson.)

Ida's Mistake. By V. G. F. (Digby, Long & Co.)

How I became Eminent. By Jean Middlemass. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

MISS LYNCH's first novel, Prince of the Glades, was a work of considerable promise, and we can congratulate her on now having left it far behind in Rosni Harvey. It is true the story is not without defects, including too great a straining after intellectual effect; but the personages are well conceived, and their conduct all through is in harmony with their mental and moral characteristics. Their is something truly pathetic about the central figure. Rosni Harvey is the daughter of an Irish gentleman of good estate, but she stands utterly isolated from her relatives and the world. Her life is loveless, save for the affection given to, and returned by, a child-brother, who prematurely dies. Her mother was cruel and her father unsympathetic. She nourished her youth in utter loneliness, and her one great pleasure lay in study. While secretly inclined to Positivism, she was not very clear upon the matter, for "her attitude towards Rousseau was that of disciple to master." Life to such a girl, amid commonplace surroundings, was of course simple torture; and her lack of orthodox religion scandalised her parents and the neighbouring families. Rosni was not beautiful in appearance, but there was a fascination about her and a higher grace which completely conquered all with whom she came into contact. Life suddenly opened out new possibilities for her when Randal Lismore, a handsome student, came to act as tutor to her brother. He assisted her in her recondite studies, and of course they gradually fell in love. Randal was banished by the irate parents, but in their final interview the lovers vowed eternal fidelity. Rosni's was a high, proud, and self-contained nature, and she long kept her vow; she did not give her affection lightly, but when once she had bestowed it she was changeless, if the object proved faithful. Randal, on the contrary, was weak, showy, volatile; he forgot his promise and married a rich Greek. The rest of his life was spent in remorse; for one after-sight of Rosni convinced him that his heart was irretrievably hers. But we get a better impression of him at the last, where he is nobly endeavouring to requite his wife's affection after the death of their child. Rosni, who had never quite the same love to give again, nevertheless married another Greek who would have worshipped her without return of any kind; but ultimately she discovered his true worth, and found that he was a hero as compared with the pinchbeck Randal. As a girl-character, Rosni is just a little overdrawn on the intellectual side; for we can hardly conceive a young lady of nineteen turning for consolation in the troubles of life to such compositions as Marcus Aurelius's Meditations and the philosophical disquisitions of Descartes. This novel is very suggestive, and full of thought. If not wholly elaborated with the care which such great writers as George Eliot bestowed upon their productions, it at any rate compels attention for its grasp of character and its descriptions of natural scenery.

Mr. Farjeon seems to have succeeded to the mantle of the late Wilkie Collins. He employs to a great extent the same literary methods, and creates his effect by letters, diaries, private inquiries, &c. The March of Fate has plenty of mysteries, and the developments of the story will be followed with keen interest. Mr. Haldane, of Manor Hall, Chudleigh Park, is a man who has led a dual existence. In his youth, as Mr. Julius Clifford, he betrayed a trusting woman, and cruelly abandoned her and her child to their fate. The daughter reappears when this narrative opens, and is in turn betrayed by Haldane's friend, Louis Redwood. In the monetary clutches of the latter, Haldane is obliged to favour his suit for the hand of his legitimate daughter, Agnes Haldane. The latter, however, loathes Redwood; and rather than accept his advances she allows herself to be driven from home and to fall into the direst depths of poverty, in which she is sustained by her devoted maid, Rachel Diprose. At last her own faithful lover, Frederick Palmer, comes from the Antipodes to rescue her. There are some smart episodes relating to horse-racing and the shadier sides of fashionable life. It would be unfair to the author further to disclose the ramifications of the plot, which is one of the best ever constructed by Mr. Farjeon. The moral of the story may be found in some remarks by Mr. Barlow, the private detective. When assured that human lines which lie far apart can never cross each other, he replies:

"It is those lines that lie so far apart that so often cross when least expected. High and low are closer together than you suspect. Life's a chess-board; move a pawn wrong and your king's in danger."

The first volume of Mrs. Francis's Whither? is unusually good. The interest of the reader is excited to its utmost tension by the strangling of wealthy old Mr. Whitworth, and the trial of his beautiful niece, Virginia Whitworth, for the murder. She could not hurt a fly; but owing to the machinations of a Doctor Roberts—son of her grandfather's steward—whose addresses she indignantly scorns, she is made to appear almost guilty in the eyes of the world, and barely escapes the condemnation of the law. The second volume effects a transmigration in the heroine. She now becomes Mary Graham, a governess, and endeavours to throw over the old life altogether. This portion of the story is tedious and long drawn out; though in the yeoman, Jonathan Byres, it probably introduces us to the best character in the book. He falls in love with Mary, but soon discovers that she is far beyond him; moreover, he has a powerful rival in Geoffrey Plunkett, the nephew of Squire Plunkett. The latter Mary cannot regard with indifference, but because of the indelible stain upon her life she crushes the new-born affection. The villain, Roberts, discovers her in her northern retreat, and threatens to expose her if she will not marry him or share Mr. Whitworth's fortune with him. The rest of the story is occupied with Jonathan Byres's plans to foil the conspirator; but just when everything is being cleared up, and the difficulties removed from the heroine's path, the author very illogically makes her die. There was no necessity whatever for this step, as happiness and a good name were within Miss Whitworth's reach, and we imagine that readers will be disappointed with the abrupt termination of her life's history.

It was quite right that Mr. Goodman should not lose his labour in The Fate of Herbert Wayne, because another writer had already hit upon a similar idea. Original ideas are so few, and they are getting used up at such a rapid rate, that critics should be careful how they charge with plagiarism independent workers who unconsciously travel upon the same lines. Mr. Goodman's story is entertaining, and is well and naturally told. The affliction of Oscar Ford, who has lost his friend Wayne under mysterious circumstances, and who cries for vengeance upon his supposed murderer, commands our sympathy. He forms a pathetic figure, and his case recalls that of Charles Lamb's sister.

Canon Potter has produced a remarkable work in The Germ Growers. The mystery and origination of evil have exercised philosophic minds from the earliest ages. There is something weird in our author's suggested explanation of it. He conceives a means by which, even in the flesh, utterly wicked men may produce the germs of physical, mental, and spiritual evil. But all men change into spirits of ether, and become dwellers in space; only those who have sold themselves to the Prince of Darkness become the germ growers of crime and suffering. Very graphically he takes us through the various stages of those who begin under the present human conditions to bind themselves to the Evil One. There is a plausibility in the narrative which almost makes us believe in an Infernal Crime and Pestilence Manufacturing Company, with the Son of Perdition as chairman.

Life is all too short for books like Ida's Mistake: or Realities and Trivialities, where the trivialities are greatly in excess of the realities. No doubt if the story had been compressed into one third of its present length, it would have been very readable, for we now and again get some natural glimpses into child life. But as the thing stands, it is inordinately drawn out, so that we are tempted to complain that "Ida's mistake" is nothing compared with that of the author.

Is Miss Middlemass poking fun at the way in which some dramatic stars have made their fame in How I Became Eminent. There is certainly a considerable element of burlesque in this clever little story. Harry Hervey, alias Harry Vandeleur, is seized with a craze for the stage, and gives up the certainty of a large commercial income for the glory of playing Hamlet and other great tragedies for a few pounds a week. He is also cut off for a time from the love of his youth in consequence. Vandeleur becomes a leading star in the provinces, but he never gets beyond a certain point. He has talent and excellent execution, but is a stranger to the divine afflatus. Dave Appleton, an enterprising Yankee, finds him out and exploits him, under an absurd agreement, which enables the American to do what he likes with the tragedian. We shall not reveal the startling surprises he goes through, but eventually both manager and actor make their fortune in an extraordinary manner.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME BOOKS ON ANCIENT HISTORY

THE "STORY OF THE NATIONS."—Sicily: Phœnician, Greek, and Roman. By E. A. Freeman. (Fisher Unwin.) The last volume in the "Story of the Nations" series is one of the best. Prof. Freeman's tried skill as a writer of, on the one hand, large works, and, on the other, magazine articles, enabled him to strike an excellent mean in the composition of a short and popular history. It was a favourite saying of his that "in order to write a small history you must first write a large one," and readers of his large History of Sicily will recognise the views and even the phrases of it in this smaller version. It should, however, be added that the present volume comes lower down than the History has yet done, for it ends with the time of Constantine the Fifth. Thus we get in it at least an outline of the historian's treatment of his subject for some centuries after the Athenian attack on Syracuse, with which the third volume of the large History dealt. The lives of Dionysius the Elder and the Younger, the adventures of Timoleon and Agathokles, the times of Pyrrhus and Hieron, the Punic wars, and the obscure period of subjection to Rome, are outlined with masterly brevity. Prof. Freeman had intended to write for the "Story of the Nations" a sequel, beginning with the coming of the Saracens, and carried on at least till "the Wonder of the World is laid in his tomb at Palermo." The illustrations are numerous, fairly good, and to the point; and the reader will himself be dull who finds the book other than very interesting.

ALLGEMEINE GESCHICHTE DES ALTERTUMS. Von H. Welzhofer, Dritter Band.—Geschichte des Orients und Griechenlands im sechsten Jahrhundert v. Chr. (Berlin: Seehagen.) Herr Welzhofer's Universal History of Antiquity pursues the even tenor of its agreeable and instructive way. It is pleasant, smooth reading, very simple and plain, although the author has a trying way of saying, at times, "I do not agree with so-and-so, but further discussion must I here renounce." The great feature of the book seems to us to be the skill with which an immense number of old facts, new theories, and real discoveries are co-ordinated into a lucid narrative of moderate length. The first chapters of the present volume deal with Media (giving an excellent account of Zoroastrianism), the later Babylonian monarchy, the rise of the Persians, the fall of Lydia and Egypt, and the reign of Darius (stopping short of the Ionic revolt). The author reposes too much confidence in Xenophon's Cyropaedia as an historical authority. We can quite understand the temptation to use that book to fill up from its gaps in our evidence, and to obtain from it lighter touches and stories; but it is unsafe. We give the Cyropaedia much more the character of an historical romance than Welzhofer does; and, in any case, it is straining his theory to take the philosophical remarks with which Xenophon's Cyrus closes his life as really coming from an early Persian king, and not from the pupil of Sokrates. We are more inclined to subscribe to Welzhofer's view, that there may have been something in Herodotus's tale of the deliberation of the seven Persians as to the best form of government. The Persians were no more accustomed in 521 B.C. than the Greeks to despotism. Then we come to the history of the Greek peoples in the sixth century, "a period in which all over the Greek world the party struggles and constitutional changes of the preceding century were continued." This general view is traced out in Athens, in the Peloponnese, and in the great colonies of the East and West. But foreign wars are also put in their proper places. Welzhofer's view of Polykrates is not nearly so favourable as that of Curtius was; "it is doing this pirate too much honour to ascribe to him the patriotic plan of uniting all Ionians against Persia." The priesthood of Delphi, mighty abroad, troubled at home by unruly neighbours, is ingeniously compared to the medieval popes who suffered the worst humiliations in their own city. The account of Athens is, of course, specially full, but we really do not understand what is meant by speaking of a tyranny set up at Athens about 630. As to the plan by which the later despotism of Peisistratos was restored, we quite agree with Welzhofer in accepting Herodotus's story of the woman Phya. Plutarch's life of Aratus, we may remark, shows (c. 32) that the common people at a far later day could still take a woman for a goddess. Herr Welzhofer saves himself a good deal of trouble by almost ignoring the newly-found Constitution of Athens. His accounts of Solon's reforms, of the position of the Thetes, and of election by lot, are such as might have been written three years ago. The new treatise, he says, "gives me a more unfavourable impression the more often I read it. In my opinion, it can hardly come from Aristotle, and it is even possible to doubt whether it belongs to classical antiquity." What is new in it is open to criticism, and what is not new has been told better before.

Vicaires et Comtes d'Afrique, de Diocletien à l'Invasion vandale. Par A. C. P. de Lessert. (Paris: Picard.) M. de Lessert, favourably known by his long series of papers on Romano-African affairs, here examines thoroughly, and with the aid of epigraphic evidence, the later system of Roman government in Africa. It had become curiously unlike the arrangement which the founder of the empire left behind him. Instead of large provinces under single governors, half of which governors unite military with civil authority, we find provinciae in frusta concisae and a complicated system of government which aimed at combining the administrative advantages of large districts and commands with the safety of small ones. The military power is generally (not universally) divided off from the civil, and wielded by counts or dukes. Among the many high officials whom this system called into being, M. de Lessert has selected for study the vicars and the counts. The system was not made in one moment complete in all its parts, and he argues for the priority of the vicars in Africa. A list is given of all the holders of these two offices who are known to us, with such particulars about each as time has spared; and an introduction lays down the titles, rank, powers, jurisdiction, and suite of each class. The work is carefully done, but it lacks—no doubt it did not aspire to—the magic with which Gibbon made a Bonifacius live again before us.

Das Hannibalische Truppenverzeichnis bei Livius. Von E. von Stern. (Berlin: Calvary.) The question of what authority or authorities Livy had before him in writing his third Decade is one on which modern inquirers have held very opposed views, and have not infrequently changed the views they held. Whom did Livy follow? Did he use Polybius at first hand? and, if so, how can we account for certain little differences between his statements and those of Polybius occurring at points where we should have expected the nearest agreement? The greater questions here can only be settled by bestowing close attention upon the smaller ones; and Prof. von Stern is going the right way to work in beginning with a study—minute, though compressed into about thirty pages—of a single passage. The short list of Hannibal's troops in Livy 21, 22, has often been employed as a proof that Livy, when he wrote it, was using Polybius; while, on the other hand, the differences between that passage and Polybius 3, 33, have sometimes been held fatal to this view, sometimes explained away or treated as of little account. Prof. von Stern, while he recognises and explains the divergences, maintains that Livy took his list of troops directly from Polybius. That the Roman author used the Greek in this manner is, we think, the view supported by the cumulative evidence of the many points of likeness in the way the story is told by the two. The presentation of the story would have been less alike if it had been passed through a third mind—a Coelius or a Valerius Antias—or drawn by both authors from Piso as a common original.

Der Römisch-Karthagische Krieg in Spanien, 211-206. Von M. Jumpertz. (Berlin: Weber.) Herr Jumpertz's brief paper has two objects—(1) to correct and clear up the faulty chronology of Livy for the Spanish events of 211-206, and (2) to attack afresh the eternal question of the relation of Livy's work to that of Polybius. He agrees with the conclusion of Soltan's striking essay in Hermes 26, that Livy only used Polybius indirectly, through some intermediate author; but he dissents from Soltan's opinion that, where Livy's chronology has gone wrong (beginning with the years 211-210), the fault is to be imputed to the intermediate author. It is, he argues, Livy's own—with a possible exception of the year 206. As we believe that—all differences notwithstanding—Livy used Polybius directly and, indeed, constantly, we cannot go with Herren Soltan and Jumpertz in their further conclusions; but it is a pleasure to be able to speak well of the powers of research and expression shown in the present essay, which is a thesis for a doctor's degree.

RECENT THEOLOGY.

The Newly Recovered Apology of Aristides. By Helen B. Harris. (Hodder & Stoughton.) It is surely an encouraging sign of the times that, at once on the discovery of a document illustrating the early growth of Christianity, an intelligent and scholarly attempt is made to popularise the new treatise. Prof. Harris discovered in 1889, at the convent of St. Catherine on Mount Sinai, a Syriac version of the lost Apology of Aristides. While a translation of this into English was in the press, the further discovery was made that the old Greek romance, called the Life of Barlaam and Josaphat, contained a large part of the Greek text of Aristides embedded in its narrative. Of the nature and contents of the work thus recovered, and its bearing upon our conceptions of early Christian history, Mrs. Harris, in the volume before us, gives an interesting account. Her last chapter contains as much of her husband's translation from the Syriac as she thinks will be found useful and edifying. We should have liked a short note on the use made of Aristides in "Barlaam and Josaphat." Mrs. Harris's style is clear and vivacious, and she shows both judgment and knowledge in her summary of "the doctrine," and "the ethics" of the recovered Apology.

Christian Monasticism. From the Fourth to the Ninth Centuries of the Christian Era. By I. Gregory Smith. (A. D. Innes & Co.) Dr. Smith has collected into one volume a series of essays on Christian monasticism, contributed originally to the Dictionaries of Christian Biography and Christian Antiquities. In order to make his sketch complete, he has used material supplied by other contributors to the Dictionaries already mentioned; but these additions are unimportant. On the whole, the book is a revision and rearrangement of Dr. Smith's own work—a work, of course, which has extended over many years. The value of this work has been already recognised. It is distinguished by sound scholarship, wide erudition, and a temperate candour essential to the satisfactory treatment of Dr. Smith's complicated subject. Students will find the general conspectus of the whole subject furnished by the volume most valuable; but it is to be feared that for the general reader the style is too concise, and the matter packed too tightly together. The book is furnished with an index.

The Gospel Narrative or Life of Jesus Christ &c. By Sir Rawson W. Rawson. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) We are given in this carefully executed compilation, first, a continuous narrative of the events and sayings recorded by the four evangelists in chronological order and in the language of the Gospels, arranged beside a table which refers us to chapter and verse, notes variations of statement, and records significant changes adopted in the Revised Version; secondly, in appendices are added an "epitome and harmony" of the first "narrative and harmony," and a table of miracles, parables, and discourses. We are sorry that the "narrative" has not been composed from the Revised Version. Those who care to systematically study their Gospels will prefer for the purpose the more accurate translation; but we have no other fault to find with an admirable piece of work. Like all painstaking harmonisers, Sir R. Rawson arrives at views of his own with regard to the arrangement of his narratives. He looks upon St. Luke ix. 51 to xviii. 14 as containing the incidents of "a single and continuous, though probably not direct, journey through Galilee and Samaria to Jerusalem." At the end of this journey he would insert St. John vii. 2 to x. 38, describing a stay in Jerusalem from the Feast of Tabernacles to the Feast of the Dedication.

Stories of the Saints for Children. The Black Letter Saints. By Mrs. Molesworth. (Longmans.) The stories of the Black Letter Saints could not be more gracefully or simply told than they are in Mrs. Molesworth's pretty little volume. Though it is intended "for children," grown up people also will find the book useful and interesting. It is "for children" specially, merely because it offers plain narrative without criticism or mention of authorities. The illustrations are delightful. They are carefully chosen from such old masters as Martin Schoen, Botticelli, Fra Angelico, and add very much to the charm of the book; but the printing of the names of the artists is occasionally careless. The binding is exceptionally neat and pretty.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE has in the press a volume of five essays, including his notable article on "The Sonnet in England," which appeared in the Contemporary Review for September, 1880, and anticipated a revival of that form of verse; and also papers on Leigh Hunt, R. S. Hawker, and the Germ. Mr. Noble, we may add, is the senior member of a brilliant school of Liverpool writers, which further comprises the names of Mr. Hall Caine, Mr. William Watson, and Mr. R. Le Gallienne; and all of these have ever been ready to acknowledge the benefit they derived from his criticism and encouragement.

MR. EDWARD WHYMPER is preparing for publication an edition de luxe of his Scrambles among the Alps in the Years 1860-69, which includes the story of the first ascent of the Matterhorn. The volume will have five maps and 130 illustrations.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish shortly a History of the Gold Coast, written by Colonel A. B. Ellis, of the First West Indian Regiment.

MR. FRANK HARRIS is collecting for issue in volume form his short stories which have been appearing in the Fortnightly Review. The title will be "Elder Conklin."

MR. SAMUEL REID is publishing, through Messrs. Isbister & Co., a daintily got-up little volume of poems, entitled Pansies and Folly Bells. Mr. Reid, who is himself an artist, is the brother of Sir George Reid, the president of the Scottish Academy.

THE QUEEN has accepted the dedication of Mr. Swynnerton's forthcoming collection of Indian folk tales, to be entitled Indian Nights Entertainment.

THE new volume of the series of "Famous Women of the French Court," published by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., will be The Duchess of Berry and the Court of Louis XVIII.

WE understand that "Hermione," the author of John Gentleman, Tramp, just published in Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier's "Pocket Novel" series, is the pseudonym adopted by the wife of Mr. W. T. Noryquay Forbes, the Glasgow artist.

THE third edition of Mrs. Oliphant's latest novel, The Cuckoo in the Nest, is exhausted. A fourth edition is now in the press.

THE first meeting of the newly-founded Bibliographical Society will be held on Monday next, at 7.30 p.m., in the rooms of the Library Association, 20, Hanover-square, when the president, Mr. W. A. Copinger, will deliver his inaugural address. Among other papers promised for the session are: "The Present Condition of English Bibliography," by Mr. H. B. Wheatley; "Method in Bibliography," by Mr. F. Madan, of the Bodleian; "Special Bibliographies," by Chancellor Christie; "The Official Record of Current Literature," by Mr. H. R. Tedder, of the Athenaeum Club; "The Ideal Book," by Mr. William Morris; and "The Printing and Publishing of Modern Books," by Mr. C. T. Jacobi, of the Chiswick Press.

DURING the last five years the "Index Library," the organ of the British Record Society, has printed, under Mr. Phillimore's editorship, nearly 400,000 record references, including calendars to about 100,000 wills at Somerset House, Lichfield, and elsewhere. At an extraordinary general meeting of the society, held last week in Richmond Herald's Chambers at the College of Arms, it was unanimously decided, on the motion of Mr. G. E. Cokayne, Norroy King of Arms, that the society should be forthwith incorporated under the title of the "British Record Society, Limited."

THE last number of the Euskal-erria of San Sebastian (September 20) contains a curious unpublished account, furnished by the pseudonymous writer, Dr. Thebussem, of a tournament held at Tudela, in 1620, in honour of the Purissima Conception of Our Lady. Ten knights presented themselves as her champions, in liveries and trappings appropriate to the devices on their shields and their mottoes. These were one of her well-known attributes in Latin, with a Spanish letra, in this guise:

"Rubus quem viderat Moises
Si tu pureza en la Zarra
No padeció combustion, Tampoco en tu Concepcion."

Two of the pieces went wrong: the fireworks on a tower intended to illustrate "Aqua multa (sic) non potuerunt extinguere caritatem," burnt the traces, and the engine could not be drawn further, and had to be shunted to one side; and the dragon which represented the Mysterium of the Apocalypse vomited forth flames to such an extent as to be a real danger, and thus had to be promptly extinguished. A bull fight in the old style, with knights as torreadores, followed in the open Plaza de Armas. Prizes for both the tournament and the bull-fight were given by high dames, as it was feared that unmarried ladies (mozas) would not think it "decente" to award a prize to an unmarried "caballero," who might possibly misinterpret the favour. Altogether, both the devotion and the pleasure of the spectators were fully satisfied; the affair was most costly and brilliant.

TENNYSONIANA.

THE Rev. Stopford A. Brooke will contribute an important article on Tennyson to the December number of the Contemporary Review.

THE English Illustrated Magazine for December will contain an article on "Tennyson's Homes" by Mr. Grant Allen, with a portrait and illustrations by Mr. W. Biscombe Gardner.

BESIDES the "Welcome to Alexandra," mentioned in the ACADEMY of last week, Messrs. Elkin Mathews & John Lane have also acquired some copies of the second edition of the "Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington" (1853), in its original paper cover of mourning grey. This is accounted even rarer than the first edition (1852). It shows several important variations from the final text of the Ode. Most of the subsequent changes were merely verbal, and all were improvements. Examples are:

"Revere his warning; guard your coasts:
now altered to

"He bade you guard the sacred coasts,"
and

"Till crowds be sane and crowns be just;"
altered to

"Till crowds at length be sane and crowns be just."

and again,

"Hush, the Dead March sounds in the people's ears":

altered to

" . . . wails in the people's ears."

But there are two lines (one not to be found in the first edition), which almost of themselves justify the severity of contemporary criticism. After the apostrophe

"Where shall we lay the man whom we deplore?" comes

"He died on Walmer's lonely shore."

And between the magnificent descriptions of the Peninsular War and of Waterloo, is introduced the appalling remark

"He withdrew to brief repose."

The only addition we have noticed is that of the not very felicitous couplet

"Who let the turbid streams of rumour flow Thro' either babbling world of high and low."

THE Revue Bleue for November 12—which may be obtained in this country from Mr. T. Fisher Unwin—contains an article on Tennyson by Mme. James Darmesteter (Mary Robinson). The quotations are printed in English, with renderings into French prose.

At a recent sale at Messrs. Puttick & Simpson's, a large paper copy of Poems by Two Brothers fetched £30; Poems, Chiefly Lyric, £10 5s.; and the first edition of In Memoriam, £5.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE programme of Good Words for next year includes four serial stories: "To Right the Wrong," by Edna Lyall, with illustrations by Mr. Gordon Browne—to begin in January, and to be continued throughout the year; "The Wrong Prescription," by Lanoë Falconer; "Firth Highland: Gentleman," by Mr. Gilbert Parker; "The Man from the Four Corners," by G. B. Burgin. There will also be a series of biographical and critical studies by Prof. David Masson, on "Milton and his Haunts"; and short Sunday readings by the Bishop of Ripon, on "The Influence of Christ on Character." The Bishop of Worcester has undertaken to write on "The Saxon Monasteries of Peterborough"; Dean Spence on "The City of the White Walls"; Archdeacon Farrar on "The Statuary in Westminster Abbey"; Dr. A. Jessop on "The Ups and Downs of an Old Nunnery"; the Rev. S. Baring Gould on "The Cheshire Salt Region"; Mr. Walter Pater on "Hugh of Lincoln"; Mrs. Oliphant on "San Remo"; Commodore A. H. Markham on "Some of our Battle-ships"; and Dr. John Skelton on "The Orcadian Archipelago."

WITH the December part, which begins a new volume, Cassell's Family Magazine will be enlarged by the addition of sixteen pages. The programme includes: "Nature's Imitations, True and False," by Mr. Frank Beddard, prosecutor at the Zoological Gardens; sketches of men and things in the navy; a series of papers on the inner life of the House of Commons, with portraits and views; illustrated interviews with successful men; &c., &c.

THE new volume of the Sunday Magazine will have for its serial story "One in Charity," by Mr. Silas K. Hocking; also papers entitled "People I have met during my Fifty Years of Ministry," by Dr. Newman Hall; "The Moor: What lives and grows there," by Canon Atkinson; "Mount Athos and its Monks," by Prof. J. P. Mahaffy; "A Children's Paradise in the Tyrol," by Margaret Howitt; and two papers of Tennysonianism, by one who knew the poet.

THE December number of the Newbery House Magazine will contain an account of a curious Abyssinian manuscript, with facsimile and translation; sketches of a Trappist settlement in China, by Mr. W. Savage Lander; an illustrated article on the Drapers and Mercers Companies, by Mr. Charles Welch; and a review of the juvenile publications of the season.

THE forthcoming number of the Eastern and Western Review, to be published on Monday next, will contain a paper entitled "Egypt for the Egyptians," giving extracts translated from the two principal Arabic newspapers on both sides of the question.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN Convocation at Oxford, on Tuesday next, it will be proposed to confer the honorary degree of M.A. upon Colonel Charles Swinhoe, who has just published (Clarendon Press) the first part of a Catalogue of Eastern and Australian Lepidoptera Heterocera in the collection of the University Museum.

MR. T. W. ROLLESTON—formerly of Trinity College, Dublin—has been appointed by the curators of the Taylorian Institution at Oxford to give the annual Taylorian lecture, in which office his predecessors have been Prof. Edward Dowden, Mr. Walter Pater, and Mr. W. M. Rossetti. He has chosen for his subject "Lessing and the Origin of Modern German Literature"; and the lecture will be delivered on Tuesday, November 29.

MR. EDWARD J. STONE, Radcliffe Observer, has been appointed to represent the University of Oxford at the Galileo tercentenary, to be held next month at Padua.

MR. F. T. PALGRAVE, professor of poetry at Oxford, will deliver a public lecture on Friday, November 25, upon "Spenser's Later Lyrics and The Faerie Queen," in continuation of former lectures illustrating the influence of the Italian Renaissance on English poetry.

ON Monday evening next, in the library of the Divinity School at Cambridge, Mr. J. Rendel Harris, university lecturer in palaeography, will read "Notes on some Eastern Libraries, with special reference to Biblical and Patristic Research."

IN connexion with the Cambridge University Musical Club, Mr. A. J. Hipkins was to give a lecture to-day (Saturday) on "The Old Claviers, or Keyboard Stringed Instruments," with illustrations of their use.

DR. LORRAIN-SMITH, demonstrator in the physiological laboratory at Oxford, and Dr. F. F. Westbrook, professor of pathology at Manitoba, have been appointed to studentships in pathology at Cambridge, on the John Lucas Walker fund. There were six candidates, of whom it is stated that others also showed exceptional ability.

THE Union at Cambridge has decided, by a majority of 225 votes to 214, that M. Zola's works may be placed in the library.

WE may mention in this place that J. L. G. M.—under which initials it is not difficult to recognise the Bursar of Pembroke College—has published (London: Henry Frowde) a valuable collection of Notes on the Oxfordshire Domesday. The university, of course, was then non-existent; and the only reference to the city is for a few mills and houses in Oxenford. The plan of the author is to give—(1) an alphabetical list of all the manors, &c., with their hideage, their tenants, tenants in capite, and tenants T.R.E., with concise notes identifying the modern names of the places, and tracing their ownership through later records; (2) a list of Domesday owners, fifty-nine in number, described so far as possible, with a statement of the ownership of their lands in the Testa de Nevill and Hundred Rolls; (3) a list of pre-Domesday owners, with their hideage, &c.; (4) a table showing the replacement of Saxon by Norman holders; and (5) an alphabetical list of Domesday sub-tenants. In addition, there is a statement of the Domesday Hundreds, in correction of that in Sir H. Ellis's Indices, which has been laboriously formed by first identifying the manors, and from them reconstituting the Hundreds with the help of the Hundred Rolls and the Testa de Nevill. Altogether, this is an admirable piece of historical research, which will be of great utility to future students.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

TO BERNARDINE.

I LOVE thee, Bernardine, nor more nor less
Could I in amplitude of words express,
If with poetic art and fancy's play,
I troped and figured for a summer's day.

What is't to quiver when thy name is heard,
Like aspen leaves by breath of evening stirred?
What is't to hope for thee like heaven above?
Tell me, my Bernardine, is this not love?

The chemist's skill can never analyse,
What makes the lovelight flash from beauty's eyes,
Nor can philosophers in words impart
The intuitions of man's love-moved heart.

I do not love thy head, divinely placed,
Thy taper fingers or thy dainty waist,
Or eyes or lips, but thy sweet soul serene,
That blends all these and makes them Bernardine.

If in a vale of poppies I should sleep,
While centuries o'er land and ocean sweep,
Waking, as firstling of my lips I'd yearn
That heart inwoven, love-word Bernardine.

J. C.-B.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

MR. HENRY NEVINSON, whose appreciations of German literature—whether philosophic or poetic—have always been worthy of attention, contributes to the current number of the Contemporary Review an article which, though entitled "Goethe as a Minister of State," really deals more broadly than that phrase would imply with the character and achievements of the German poet. Mr. Nevinson considers, not so much the exact nature of the so-called "public" services rendered by Goethe to his little Court and little country, as the effect which such services had upon the literary achievements of Goethe; and in such work he recognises the occasional utility as well as the more obvious disadvantages. Employment which sets bounds to mere literary productiveness does not necessarily limit the writer's grasp or vision of the world. Contact with affairs—intercourse with men and women, not solely for the purpose of amusing them or "studying" them—must add to the breadth of a writer's experience, and may add to the depth of his insight. Mr. Nevinson has admirable and epigrammatic words for the mere pedant who, with a paucity of personal experience, dabbled with belles lettres, and did nothing great in them, in the period before Goethe.

"Shut up in the close studies of bleak Northern towns, professors and private tutors produced those lengths of pastoral idyl, erotic ode, and anacreontic eulogy of wine and roses which occupy an untamed page in the necrology of literature."

A tithe of Goethe's experiences—whether public or personal—would have furnished these well-intentioned writers with that which might have nourished their work. Incidentally—and not only incidentally—Mr. Nevinson says many pregnant things about the great German writer.

IN the October L'Art et L'Idée, M. Uzanne has once more been equal to the idea of his own publication. There is a useful bibliography of Barbey d'Aurevilly in the number, and other things; but its main value consists in the opening paper, a thorough and abundantly-illustrated study of Eugène Grasset; an artist of a type still too rare, and almost unknown in England. We should have to take something of Mr. William Morris, something of Mr. Burne Jones, something of the late Mr. Burgess, to make a Grasset, and though it cannot be pretended that the French decorator is the equal of even the least of these, he is more versatile than any one of them. M. Grasset will do you book illustrations of a quaint pre-Raphaelite style, touched with modernity, affiches of the most modern, ravishing head-and-tail pieces, designs for stained glass windows, for châlets, for chimney-pieces, for candlesticks and book-cases, and knick-knacks, all with an astonishing verve and freshness. Examples of most of these classes illustrating the fertility of his fantasy, and the grace of his hand, embellish the paper, which is a charming one, and makes one long to catch M. Grasset, chain him round his waist (for it seems he is, like many artists, by no means notable for business-like punctuality), and make him build and furnish and decorate a new Palace of Art.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DENK, V. M. G. Einführung in die Geschichte der alt-catalanischen Literatur von deren Anfängen bis zum 18. Jahrh. München: Poessl. 9 M.
 FUNCK-BRENTANO, Th. La Politique: principes, critiques, réformes. Paris: Rousseau. 7 fr. 50 c.
 GRUNBERG, P. Philipp Jakob Spener. I. Bd. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 10 M.
 KALKNER, F. Symbolae ad historiam versuum logaoediorum. Marburg: Elwert. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 LEHNELOTT, P. Luthers Verhältniss zu Kunst u. Künstlern. Berlin: Besser. 2 M.
 MOLARD, J. Puissance militaire des Etats de l'Europe. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
 NOVITZAR u. Kossovo (das alte Russland). Eine Studie. Wien: Hölde. 4 M.
 PONTMARTIN, A. de. Derniers Samedis. T. III. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
 QUELLENSCHAFTEN f. Kunstgeschichte. Neue Folge. 5. Bd. Beiträge zur Geschichte der Kunst u. der Kunsttechnik aus mittelhochdeutschen Dichtungen. Von A. Hg. Wien: Graeser. 3 M.
 RIEHL, B. Deutsche u. italienische Kunstcharaktere. Frankfurt: Keller. 7 M. 60 Pf.
 SIMON, Jules. Notices et portraits. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
 TÉREY, G. v. Albrecht Dürer's venetianischer Aufenthalt 1494-5. Strassburg: Heitz. 3 M.
 VARNHAGEN, H. De libris aliquot vetustissimis bibliothecae academicae Erlangensis aemone italico conscriptis dissertationio. Erlangen: Junge. 4 M.
 VOGEL, E. Bibliothek der gedruckten weltlichen Vocalmusik Italiens. Aus d. J. 1500-1700. Berlin: Hasack. 24 M.
 WEISS, J. J. Sur Goethe: études critiques. Paris: Colin. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- KABISCH, R. Die Eschatologie d. Paulus in ihren Zusammenhängen m. dem Gesamt. begriff d. Paulinismus. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 8 M.
 KAMPILAUEN, A. Das Buch Daniel u. die neuere Gesichtsforschung. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 VELICKÝ, M., quo anno dominus noster mortuus sit, questionem instituit. M. V. Riean (Böhmen). 4 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BISMARCK, Fürst, politische Reden. 3. Bd. 1866-1888. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
 ECKHART, G. Deutsche Geschichte im 16. Jahrh. bis zum Augsburger Religionsfrieden. 2. Bd. (1523-1555). Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
 JÄNEKE, M. Die Gewerbe-Politik d. ehemaligen Königr. Hannover in ihren Wandlungen von 1815-1886. Marburg: Elwert. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 MUCH, R. Deutsche Stammsitze. Ein Beitrag zur ältesten Geschichte Deutschlands. Halle: Niemeyer. 6 M.
 PERACHON, J. Vie de Lalibab, roi d'Éthiopie: texte éthiopien. Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.
 PETITOT, E. La Sculpture dominiéne de Mareuilles-Meaux et ses constructeurs. Paris: Bouillon. 4 fr.
 SCHMID, K. A. Geschichte der Erziehung vom Anfang an bis auf unsere Zeit. S. Bd. 1. Abth. Stuttgart: Cotta. 15 M.
 STAMFORD, Th. v. Das Schlachtfeld im Teutoburger Walde. Cassel: Fischer. 7 M. 50 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- DALLA TORRE, C. G. de. Catalogus hymenopterorum hucusque descriptorum. Vol. VI.: Chrysididae. Leipzig: Engelmann. 5 M.
 GERBER, G. Das Ich als Grundlage unserer Weltanschauung. Berlin: Gaertner. 8 M.
 PICTET, A., et H. de SAUSSURE. Iconographie de quelques sauterelles vertes. Basel: Georg. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- SUPPLEMENTUM Aristotelicum. Vol. II. pars II. Alexandri Aphrodisiensia scripta minora. Editio I. Bruns. Berlin: Reimer. 13 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"COUVADE"—THE GENESIS OF A MODERN MYTH.

The Scriptorium, Oxford: Nov. 12, 1892.

In reference to the notice with which Dr. E. B. Tylor has honoured my communication of October 26, and to the opinions which he has expressed as to the province of the lexicographer, I need only say that, of course, "if a word gains currency, the lexicographer, whether he likes it or not, has to take it," i.e., to record it in its current sense. The application of couvade suggested by Dr. Tylor, and taken from him by anthropologists generally, will, as a matter of course, be recorded and illustrated in the New English Dictionary. Whether historically and etymologically of legitimate or of spurious origin, it is the only application of the word in English, the only ground on which the word comes within the scope of the Dictionary. But the English Dictionary does not register merely the current application of words: its distinctive aim is to exhibit as far as possible the origin and history of each word, both as to its form and its use; and when a word has undergone any special change of application or use, it tries to explain and account for this change, whether due to popular error, to individual misconception or caprice, or to any other cause. It sometimes happens that the explanation is too long and too argumentative to be given in detail in the Dictionary; in such case I have been accustomed merely to state results there, and to add a reference to an article in the ACADEMY or elsewhere, in which I have discussed the question in detail. This, and no desire to "censure" Dr. Tylor, is the reason why these articles appear. Dr. Tylor seems to think that it is on my part a question of not "liking" his word! need I say that the only interest I have in words is to know the truth about them, and to expose the myths in which their history is sometimes enveloped? So much for personalities; if I have again to mention any author's name, it will be because it comes into the history of couvade and I cannot keep it out.

As a further step in the elucidation of this history, I welcome the production of an earlier instance of the phrase faire la couvade or faire couvade, which at once does away with the inference that the 1829 editor of Legrand d'Aussy, from whom Dr. Tylor originally (Early History of Mankind, p. 296) cited the phrase, learned it from Citizen Sacombe. It is now evident that these two writers took it over independently from the seventeenth century writer Rochefort, or from his copyist Lafitau, or from some one else who drew from the same source. Researches which have been made for me by French scholars make it now certain that couvade was not only an obsolete word in Sacombe's time (1790), but had then been obsolete for a century. It is a well-known word in the dictionaries of the sixteenth and early seventeenth century; besides occurring in Cotgrave, as has been already pointed out, it is fully explained also, in its genuine sense, by Robert Estienne (1543), and by Philibert Monet (1636). As a word already obsolete, it was excluded by the Académie from the first and every subsequent edition of their dictionary; and though well-known to Littré in Estienne, Cotgrave, Monet, and other early dictionaries, it was excluded by him also as an obsolete word, till its cropping up in an entirely new sense in modern French writers, who took it from English, led him to include it as a neologism in his later supplement. As an obsolete French word of the sixteenth and early seventeenth century, it is fully dealt with in the great Dictionnaire historique de l'ancien langage français, of Sainte-Palaye, compiled in the middle of the eighteenth century, and recently edited and published under the care of M. L. Favre. In this article may be seen the two senses "covey" and lieu de sûreté, and the phrase faire couvade in its primary sense of "se baisser, s'accroupir comme une poule qui couve, afin de voir ce qui passe, sans se hasarder," and in the transferred sense of "se tenir à couvert dans son parc, dans une assurance retraitée," as well as in the derisive use recorded by Cotgrave. But there is not a trace of the application of the phrase to any custom analogous to those for which Dr. Tylor has suggested it as a name; nor can it be shown that this ever formed a part of the French language, or is other than a book-statement which has passed from one to another of a small series of writers, the earliest of whom yet pointed out is Rochefort (1658), now cited by Dr. Tylor. Lafitau, for instance, cites Rochefort as his sole authority for the alleged use of this phrase. Rochefort cites no authority. He is describing a curious custom of the Caribs, presumably as an eye-witness; and it is only as a parallel to this that he refers, in a relative clause, to the reported existence of an analogous custom, "parmy les paysans d'une certaine Province de France." Of this he does not claim to know anything himself; he does not even guarantee it as a fact; it is merely "à ce qu'on dit," according to what people say. Now his statement that "ils appellent cela faire la couvade" does not occur in the relative clause which refers to the peasants of a province of France. It is a new sentence, parallel to the other sentences before and after, of which the subjects are the Caribs.

Who, then, are the ils of whom he speaks? Are they, as the grammatical structure of the passage implies, the Caribs, or are they the French peasants? In other words, is this sentence part of his own testimony about the Caribs, or is it part of the on dit which he repeats as to a certain province of France? In the former case the words would mean that the Caribs describe this lying down of the man by a phrase which he renders by the French faire la couvade, using this phrase in one of the senses in which it was known and understood by his contemporaries: either "se baisser, s'accroupir comme une poule qui couve," or else "se tenir à couvert dans une assurée retraitée." But if, on the other hand, the words are only part of the on dit which he has heard or read about a certain province of France, then they are of no critical authority; they are merely an echo, and, with our knowledge of the actual sense of faire la couvade in sixteenth and seventeenth century French, we may safely say an erroneous echo of some earlier statement in which the phrase occurs. Such earlier statement may yet be found; when it is found, it will probably show us also the source and manner of the error.

It is evident that Lafitau, in quoting Rochefort, attributed the phrase to France; but then look at the looseness of Lafitau's citation and the untrustworthiness of his method! According to his own showing, he knew nothing of the alleged custom in France, nor of the phrase faire couvade, except what he found in Rochefort; yet he does not hesitate to state the thing as a fact, and a fact true in his own day; his witness for this contemporary fact being a man who lived two generations before him, and had himself mentioned it only as an on dit, for which he accepted no responsibility! A man who so misrepresents his authority, in a part of the statement where we can check him, is of no authority in the part where we cannot.

But this is a notable characteristic of the whole chain of assertions respecting this custom in the Pyrenean regions in modern times. In endeavouring to trace the history of the word, I have had to refer to the various French and Spanish writers who have mentioned the custom during the last three centuries, and have been struck by the way in which a statement given by one writer merely as an on dit is, without any additional grounds, repeated by another as a statement of fact, often with the earlier writer cited as a witness; also with the curious way in which historical statements referring to a remote or indefinite past appear in later writers in the picturesque historical present, and in later writers still as an actual present claiming to refer to existing things. I have been unable, indeed, to find that there is any modern evidence for the existence in the Pyrenaean region of any custom classed under the name couvade. All the later assertions seem to be repetitions of Strabo, and amplifications of Strabo, erroneously transferred to contemporary conditions.

The passage in Strabo's Geography (iii. iv. 17) is well known. He has been describing the desperate bravery, hardihood, and ferocity of the people of Iberia, of which he relates instances. These traits, he says, are common to the Celts, Thracians, and Scythians,

"as is also the robustness not only of the men but of the women also; for the latter till the fields, and, when they have brought forth a child, they attend upon their husbands, having caused these to lie down instead of them; * and they often also give birth to their children in the midst of their (field) work, and there wash and swaddle them, stooping by the brink of some stream."

He goes on to narrate a similar incident which had been told him of a Ligurian woman at or near Marseilles, who gave birth to a child when engaged in digging, and immediately resumed her work. Strabo, as will be seen, is not dealing explicitly or directly with any custom of the kind to which the name couvade is now applied; the reference to the man lying down comes in quite incidentally to illustrate the strength and hardihood of the women.

A much more explicit and direct statement is made as to the ancient natives of Corsica by Diodorus Siculus (v. xiv); and, as is well known, accounts of a similar custom are given by Marco Polo from the region of China, and by many writers as to different parts of America. But Strabo is, so far as is known, the only ancient writer who attributes it to the Iberians. From Strabo it appears to have come down through the Middle Ages as a commonplace of history, and I have no doubt that research would discover some at least of the links in this traditional chain. Probably, also, it would show that Strabo's custom was identified sometimes with one, sometimes with another part of the Pyrenaean region, and that Navarre and Béarn were specially named, by some mediæval authors, as districts in which it had existed. Leaving these, however, to the investigator interested, we come down to modern times, and find the practice mentioned as one of the commonplaces of history by Paul Colomiès or Colomesius in the seventeenth century. In his Mélanges Historiques (ed. Orange, 1675, p. 25, ed. Utrecht 1692, p. 26) he says:

"C'étoit une assez plaisante coutume que cette qui s'observoit autrefois dans le Béarn: Lorsqu'une femme étoit accouchée, elle se levait, et son mari se mettoit au lit, faisant la commère. Je crois que les Béarnois avoient tiré cette coutume des Espagnols, de qui Strabon dit la même chose au troisième livre de sa Géographie."

He then goes on to say that the same custom had been reported from other regions, for which he cites Nymphodorus, Apollonius of Rhodes, and Marco Polo. I call attention to the fact that all his authorities are ancient or mediæval; that he mentions it not as an existing custom in Béarn, but as a thing of autrefois—i.e., of the days of the ancient writers. And he has, of course, no name or phrase for this Bearnese custom of autrefois; he knows nothing of couvade. Contemporary with Colomiès, and a few years earlier in date of publication, was Rochefort's work on the Caribs, cited by Dr. Tylor in his communication. As I have pointed out already, Rochefort mentions the practice only vaguely and as an on dit; but the substance of his statement is the same as that of Colomiès, and was no doubt derived from the same source. But the important thing is that of these two seventeenth century writers neither knew of the practice as then existing in Béarn: to one it was an historical matter of other days, to the other it was a matter of hearsay "à ce qu'on dit." And we have seen how Rochefort's hearsay was transformed by Lulitau into the assertion, "it exists to-day in some of our provinces bordering on Spain, where it is called faire couvade." And this is treated by modern writers as a witness to the existence of the couvade in Béarn in the eighteenth century!

The next writer cited in connexion with the custom is Legrand d'Aussy, who published, in 1779-81, an account and prose paraphrase of some of the old French fabliaux of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, with illustrative notes. In the fabliau of Aucassin et Nicolette, the former is said to have arrived at the port of Torelore, which proves to be a kind of topsyturvy-land, where everything is done by contraries. The king is in child-bed, while the queen, at the head of an army of women, is carrying on a fierce war with eggs, soft cheese, and stewed apples. In his notes to this burlesque, the editor compares the respective positions of the king and queen to what Strabo had told of the ancient Iberians and later authors of the Caribs, adding, "et l'on prétend qu'elle a existé chez les peuples de Béarn" (Colomiès Mél. Histor., p. 26). In other words, he knew nothing of the alleged practice in the Pyrenaean region, except what is contained in the passages already quoted from Strabo and Colomiès. Needless to say, he therefore knew nothing of the term "couvade." After him came Citizen Sacombe, the poet-physician, whom I have already cited. Sacombe had read more than Legrand d'Aussy; writing upon L'art des accouchements, he had hunted up what had been written by previous authors upon these reputed customs: besides knowing what Strabo said of Spain and Diodorus of Corsica, he had also got from Rochefort, or rather from Lulitau, the statements about America, and the expression faire couvade. But he tells us nothing new and nothing of his own; his verse is no more evidence for Spain, or Béarn, than it is for Corsica. It is merely the old story versified and made more picturesque. Coming down to the present century, the earliest "authority" cited by Dr. Tylor, as by others, is Laborde, who wrote his Voyage pittoresque et historique de l'Espagne in 1806, to which he prefixed a short outline of ancient Spanish history. Speaking of the ancient Iberians, he says, I. xiv.:

"C'est avec surprise que l'on trouve dans ces temps reculés une coutume bizarre qui existoit au Paraguai. Lorsqu'une femme accouche, le mari se met au lit, et elle le soigne: usage aussi absurde que revoltant."

And the authority cited for this "revolting usage" of "remote times" is of course "Strabon." Laborde knew nothing of it as an alleged existing practice, and nothing of the name "couvade." A few years later he wrote his Itinéraire de l'Espagne, in which he reproduced Strabo still more verbally:

"Les femmes Cantabres portaient les fardeaux les plus lourds; elles cultivaient les campagnes, labourent les champs et ne négligeaient aucune espèce de travaux; elles se levaient aussitôt après être accouchées, et servaient leurs maris, qui se mettaient au lit à leur place, usage qui fut aussi commun aux habitants de la Navarre, et dont il est impossible de rendre raison."

This epitomiser of ancient history, who says not a word about his own time, and knows nothing of the "couvade," is cited by later writers as a witness for it. In 1818, Zamacola published his Historia de las naciones Vasconas (Auch). He again recites Strabo (apparently immediately from Laborde), and adds "as used to happen very little time ago in many regions of Cantabria"; but unfortunately, instead of giving any facts or authorities for the "very little time ago," he rushes off into the more congenial task of theorising about the meaning of the custom. At any rate, we have the fact that the custom was unknown to the Basques of his own time; it was again a thing of autrefois. Quite similar is it with Chaho, Voyage en Navarre pendant l'insurrection des Basques, 1830-5, published 1836. What Chaho says is:—

"Il existe dans cette province (Biscaye) des vallées dont la population rappelle, par ses usages, l'enfance de la société: les Biskaïennes y quittent le lit immédiatement après leurs couches, et le montagnard prend la place de sa femme auprès du nouveau-né."

And what is the authority for this fact of contemporary history? The authority is simply "Voir Strabon, liv. III." A later writer on the history of the Basques, who investigated the facts, has applied to this the hard words, "ce mensonge imprimé par Chaho"; but Chaho was not consciously a liar, he was only an enthusiast, incapable, when his theories were in question, of distinguishing between objective facts and subjective assumptions. He was enthusiastic in his belief that the Basques were the genuine descendants of the ancient Iberians, and that whatever characterised the Iberians must still characterise the Basques. Strabo had attributed to the Iberians this curious custom; ergo, it must still exist among the Basques. True, Chaho was a Basque, a Souletin, and nothing was known of the custom in his district of Soule, or in the adjoining Navarre, or in any part known to him; but as it must exist somewhere, Chaho located it in far off Biscay, where he never was in all his life, and of which he personally knew nothing. But the Biscayans were the rudest of the Basques, and must therefore preserve most faithfully the customs of the ancient Iberians, and assertions could be made about them most safely. Chaho was not strong in facts, but he was mighty in fancy; he invented or dreamed the so-called legend of Aitor, to account for the ancient custom; and he is one of the great "authorities" of later writers, perhaps the greatest. Slightly before Chaho's book, A. A. Renouard brought out in 1829 a third edition of Legrand d'Aussy's Fabliaux. In my former article, I have shown how he expanded the simple statement of the original author; and we now see exactly whence his expansions came. In addition to Strabo and Colomiès, he had seen Rochefort's book, or a quotation from it, and thence he took the statement "chez lesquels on prétend qu'elle subsiste encore dans quelques cantons, ce qu'ils appellent faire la couvade." He preserves the fact that it is only an on prétend; but he neglects to add that the prétention was actually made nearly 200 years before, and whether well or ill-founded in 1658, was not pretended by anybody but himself in 1829. I need hardly go on with later writers who have dealt with the subject. M. A. de Quatrefages, in the Revue de deux Mondes, 1850, repeated the old story as a contemporary fact, on the testimony of Strabo, Diodorus, and Chaho. Like the latter, he was more interested with the explanation than with the fact, which he accepted from Chaho as a matter of course. In 1857 Francisque-Michel published his Pays Basque (Paris, 1857), where he tells the old story with greater animation than ever; the most sated ear must listen anew while he relates how "leur mari se met au lit, prend la tendre créature avec lui, et reçoit ainsi les compliments des voisins." But he knew nothing, and pretended to know nothing; personally, he was only a book maker—one of the most fertile of the craft—and he honestly tells us who were his authorities: they were our well-known friends Chaho, Quatrefages, Laborde, and the 1829 edition of Legrand d'Aussy, so that it is only old Strabo after all, with his statements applied to A.D. 1857. Michel must also have the credit of converting the phrase faire la couvade, which he found in the 1829 edition of Legrand d'Aussy, into a name for the alleged Béarnese custom; he says, "les Béarnais faisaient autrefois de la même façon, ce qu'ils appelaient la couvade." He knew French, and was well aware that couvade was at least not an existing name; it was (like everything else in the story) a thing of autrefois. Francisque Michel, and three of the authors cited by Michel, were the source of Dr. Tylor's account (Early Hist. Mankind, 295); Dr. Tylor's statement has passed on to Sir John Lubbock, Herbert Spencer, Colonel Yule, and numberless writers of less note.

* γεωργοῦσιν αὐταί, τεκοῦσαι τε διακονοῦσι τοῖς ἀνδράσιν, ἐκείνους ἀντ' ἐαυτῶν κατακλίνασαι.

Thus, when we come to verify quotations for the couvade—thing and name—in the Pyrenean region, we find that Dr. Tylor's authorities were Francisque Michel, Quatrefages, Laborde, and the 1829 editor of Legrand d'Aussy; Michel himself merely compiled from the other three writers named, and from Chaho; Quatrefages only echoed Chaho; Chaho echoed Strabo, and founded an assumption on Strabo; Laborde reproduced Strabo; Legrand d'Aussy only quoted Colomiès and Strabo; his 1829 editor added amplifications from Lafitau or Rochefort; Lafitau echoed and made a false use of Rochefort; Rochefort recited a current on dit which corresponds to what Colomiès gave as ancient history; Colomiès cited Strabo, and possibly some intermediate writer who applied Strabo's statements to the Venarnenses or ancient people of Béarn (whence also Citizen Sacombe appears to have got his word Vénarnien). It is only by three of these writers that the phrase faire (la) couvade is associated with the alleged practice; and only in the latest and least original of them, Michel, that it becomes the ancient name of this practice of "autrefois." New points are introduced into the account of the alleged custom between Strabo and Francisque Michel, but in no case are these vouched for by a contemporary authority: they are either given as things of autrefois which the writer has read of, or as *on dit*s which he repeats without vouching for them, or they are (as in the case of Chaho) theoretical assumptions tacitly treated as facts.

It appears, then, that, at the time when English anthropologists assumed the name couvade for a group of customs reported to exist among various savages, the supposed evidence on which it was alleged that one of these customs had come down to the present day in Béarn, and was there known as la couvade, was no evidence at all, but a crambe of assertions. M. Bladé, author of Etudes sur l'origine des Basques (1869), has called it an imposture historique; but as nobody in the historical chain was a conscious impostor, I should prefer to call it a literary or pseudo-scientific myth, and commend it to folklore students as an interesting indication of the fungus-like vitality of myths, which, when driven by science from theology, root themselves in a new form upon science, and, after the manner of other simple organisms, flourish there with equal vigour.

I have nothing to say about the practices reported by Diodorus, Strabo, Marco Polo, the seventeenth century voyagers, or modern travellers; nor do I express any opinion on the propriety of calling these the couvade. I am not "the editor of the English language," but I try to be an historian of words that I find used in English; and I sometimes wish that men of science, before making new words or giving new senses to old words, would ask the advice of students of language, who may know the history of the old or have a word of counsel as to the form of the new.

J. A. H. MURRAY.

P.S.—For reference to some of the authors cited, I have to acknowledge my obligations to the important essay on La Couvade chez les Basques, by Prof. Vinson in Etudes de Linguistique et d'Ethnographie, par A. Hovelacque et Julien Vinson (Paris, 1878), a work which ought to be better known in England. To this I was referred by French scholars, while making my own researches; but it was to be found in neither the Bodleian nor the Taylorian Library, and some time elapsed before I could procure it from Paris. I was then interested to find that Prof. Vinson had in 1878 reached the same conclusions as to the reputed evidence for the "couvade" in Béarn, and to learn from his essay what attempts had been made since 1865 to find traces of the "couvade" on the spot. Concerning this, also, a most remarkable narrative has been communicated to me by Mr. Wentworth Webster, of Sare, Basses Pyrénées (whose name is so well known to all readers of the ACADEMY); this, with permission, I will publish on another occasion.

A PRAYER-BOOK OF EDWARD VI.

Bishop Hatfield's Hall, Durham: Nov. 11, 1892

With reference to Mr. Bishop's account of a Prayer-book for the laity, in the ACADEMY of November 5, I may mention that in the University Library here [Routh Collection xvii. E. 28 (2)] is a quarto prayer-book of 1552, apparently designed for lay-clerks or other lay-folk, but not the same book as that at Reigate. The title is:

"The Psal | ter, or Psalmes of Dauid, cor | rected, and poineted, as they shal | be song in Churches, after the | Translation of the greates | Byble. | Hereunto is added, diuers | thinges as maie apcare on the | nexte side, whereare is expressed | the contentes of thys | Booke. | Anno. Do. MDLII.—Mense Martij | Cum priuilegio ad imprimen | dum solum."

In an ornamental framework—

On the "nexte side,"

"The contentes of this booke—

"Firste, the Ordre howe the Psalter shalbe redde.

"ii. The Table for the Ordre of the Psalmes.

"iii. The Calender for the Ordre of common praier.

"iiii. The Ordre for Mattins and Euen-song the whole yere.

"v. The Letauy and Suffrages.

"vj. All the collectes vsed throughout the yere at the Communion, and when there is no Communion."

The book is not printed in two columns. The Calendar, Matins, Euen-song, Litany, and Collects, are as in the 1549 books. With the Collects are given the references for the Introits, but not for the Epistles and Gospels, though when there are Proper Psalms and Lessons, references for these are given. Each Introit is headed "Communion." After All Saints' Day follow the Collects for the King, the Confession before Communion, "We do not presume," &c.; the thanksgiving, "Almighty and everlasting God," &c., and the concluding Blessing; then the Collects after the Offertory, for Rain, and for Fair Weather, but no other parts of the Communion Service. There is no table of Epistles and Gospels. The Psalter is in larger type than the preceding part, and with a different register. Colophon, "Imprinted by Richard Grafton, Printer to the Kynges Maiestie." The former part has thirty-eight leaves, the latter (Psalter), 131. The Psalter has no separate title, only a heading. The Psalms are arranged for Mattins and Euen-song for the days of the month, and have the Latin catch-words. I have been informed—by the Rev. E. Hoskins, I believe—that there is an earlier edition of the same Prayer-book in the British Museum, C. 36, d. 1, date August, A.D. 1549.

These layfolk's Prayer-Books seem to have become very rare, and that at Reigate is a very interesting "find."

J. T. FOWLER,
University Librarian, and Keeper of Bp. Cosin's Library, Durham.

THE OBIT OF ST. COLUMBA.

Tottenham: Nov. 12, 1892.

I have only just seen Dr. Macarthy's criticism (ACADEMY, September 10) of my attempt in the English Historical Review to fix the year of St. Columba's death.

Dr. Macarthy's objections are: (1) That I have not "proved that in 580 Whit-Sunday fell upon June 9, according to the computus of Iona." To this I will return. (2) That I have mistaken Senait mac Manus for a man, whereas I ought to have read "Senait mic Maghnusa," the name of an island. The sentence transcribed by my critic is referred at the foot of the same page of my paper to Chronicles of the Picts and Scots, ed. W. F. Skene. That editor (p. lxxij. Intro. and p. 343), has "The Annals of Senait mac Manus commonly called the Annals of Ulster." I, of course, accept Dr. Macarthy's correction. (3) In my reading of the signatures in the Annals of Ulster I am confessedly wrong. May I ask my critic if the knowledge of the moon's age on the Kalends of January derived from these entries has assisted him to any definite conclusion as to the intentions of the author of these Annals with respect to the chronology of St. Columba? (4) I maintain the correctness of the computation A.D. 29+405th, or that 405th in the era of the Passion is A.D. 433. (5) Of the four important assertions referred to, three have been submitted either directly or inferentially to proof in my paper. The fourth assertion I now supplement by the statement that the whole body of Irish chronology from the hiatus in Tighernach to the entries preceding that of the death of the two Donalds is dated seventeen years lower than the true years. This is owing to Tighernach, of his own action, or by transcription from an earlier writer, having synchronised Papal and Imperial obits at the correct feriae, but in the wrong sequences of the accidental periods of seventeen years of the Solar Cycle. This important assertion I hope to have an opportunity of proving shortly. (6) The full extract in ancient Irish from the "Leabar Brecc" is, as Dr. Macarthy says, very precise—even to its semicolon. I remain of the same opinion, however, and consider that this is a transcript from an older work which, as it gave the correct feria for the Kalends of January in the year of Columba's birth, was consequently misunderstood. Kal. i. for St. Columba's nativity requires, in forty-two years, Kal. iii., for his migration to Alban; and in seventy-six years Kal. v., for his death. It should be needless to say that these feriae, i.e., Kal. iii. and Kal. v. do not appear in Tighernach, Innisfallen, or Ulster Annals.

(1) With respect to the date assigned for the Irish Easter of 580, Dr. Macarthy's chief objection to it appears to be that it does not differ from the date of the Roman Easter. The Easter of the Irish Church differed from that of Rome when the XIV of the paschal moon fell on Sunday, and also when the Roman Easter fell before March 25. In the first case the Irish were one week earlier, and in the second three weeks or four weeks later. A.D. 580 being the 11th year of the cycle of XIX years, its epact is $10 \times 11 \div 30 = 20$ remainder. As the lunar regular of April is 10, and this year is embolismic, the moon's age on the first of that month was XXX (20+10). Consequently the earlier XIV of the moon and the later fell respectively on March 16 (Saturday) and April 15 (Monday). The Irish kept no Easter before March 25; consequently they kept Easter in 580 on April 21, which is the 20th of the moon and the last date upon which they would celebrate. In A.D. 597 we have another year whose Dominical is F, and whose Sundays fell on March 17, 24, 31, and on April 7, 14, 21. 597 is the 9th year of the cycle of XIX, consequently its epact is $8 \times 11 \div 30 = 28$ remainder. Adding this to the lunar regular of April gives us $10 + 28 - 30 = \text{VIII}$ as the moon's age on April 1. The earlier and the later XIV of the moon fell, therefore, March 8 (too early) and April 7. The latter date is Sunday, therefore the Irish celebrated at once, but the Romans waited a week, and celebrated on April 14.

In A.D. 630, Pope Honorius addressed a letter to the Scots of Ireland on the subject of their Easter. An Irish mission was despatched to Rome, and returned before, or in, A.D. 633, with the information that while at Rome they found that the Irish Easter was separated from the Roman by a whole month: "In quo (i.e., Pascha) mensis integro disjuncti sumus" (Moore, Hist. Ireland, chap. xiii.). A.D. 631 is another year whose Dominical is F, and it is the fifth of the cycle of XIX. Therefore its epact is $4 \times 11 \div 30 = \text{remainder } 14$. Adding the epact to the lunar regular of April gives the moon's age on April 1 as XXIV. The XIV of each moon falls consequently March 22 (Friday), and April 21 (Sunday). As the Sunday after March 22 was within their Easter limit, the Romans celebrated. The Irish would not celebrate before March 25; consequently they waited a month and celebrated on April 21, again the last day of their Easter limit. In the year 633 Southern Ireland adopted the Roman system. I should like, in conclusion, to put another question to Dr. MacCarthy. Will he kindly inform us upon what day the Irish would have celebrated Easter in the following year according to the "computus of Iona"?

ALFRED ANSCOMBE.

ENGLISH WOMEN'S LITERARY WORK AT CHICAGO.

I Queen's Gate Gardens, S.W. : Nov. 15, 1892.

The Royal Commission for the English section of the Chicago Exhibition have appointed a committee, of which H.R.H. Princess Christian has graciously consented to be president, to arrange an exhibition of work done by women. The following sub-committee has been formed to collect an exhibit of English women's literary work:—Mrs. J. E. H. Gordon (president), Mrs. W. K. Clifford, Mrs. J. R. Green, Miss Kingsley, Mrs. Humphry Ward, and Miss Charlotte Yonge.

We shall be grateful for the titles, dates, and publishers' names of any books or papers by British women (except works of fiction) that might be likely to escape our notice, or for gifts or loans of women's books, MSS. or autographs. Fiction will be limited to 100 volumes, which will be selected by the sub-committee.

It is particularly requested that no books or papers should be sent without a previous letter describing them, as the literary section has only a limited space at its disposal.

ALICE M. GORDON.

TENNYSONIANA.

London : Nov. 15, 1892.

It has caused me no little concern to find that in my Study of the Life of Lord Tennyson I have inadvertently offended some of the friends and admirers of Alexander Smith, and that even the kindest of critics, such as Mr. James Payn and Mr. Richard Le Gallienne, have commented on the severity of my remarks. I am happy that the fact of the book going into a second edition affords me the opportunity of modifying what I said; and I do so eagerly, because it seems to me of paramount importance that a book that is so entirely the appreciation of one man should not gratuitously hurt the susceptibilities of those who are friends or admirers of another.

ARTHUR WAUGH.

South Eastern College, Ramsgate : Nov. 15, 1892.

In his review of Mr. Waugh's Study of Tennyson in this week's ACADEMY, Mr. R. Le Gallienne quotes a line from Poems by Two Brothers (1827), which is found, word for word, in "In Memoriam." Let me add one further instance. The line "the tolling of thy funeral bell," in the 1827 volume, re-appears all but word for word in the Teiresias volume of 1885, in the fine lines addressed to Fitzgerald dead:

"The tolling of his funeral bell Broke on my Pagin Paradise."

Talking about Tennyson, I notice the omission from the "Oenone" volume of a quatrain contributed by the Laureate to Mr. Gollane's edition of Pearl, published last year. Has it been remarked as yet that in the new eight-volume edition of Tennyson's works, published a few weeks ago, the dedication of Teiresias to Browning, and of Locksley Hall Sixty Years After to his wife, have been (rightly, I think) restored? They do not appear in the ordinary complete editions of the poet.

E. H. BLAKENEY.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, NOV. 20, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "How Weather Forecasts are arrived at, and how we should use them," by Mr. A. W. Clayton, with Lantern Illustrations.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Character and Conduct," by Mr. S. Alexander.

MONDAY, NOV. 21, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Respiration in Man and Animals," by Mr. H. Power, illustrated.
7.30 p.m. Bibliographical: Inaugural Address by the President, Mr. W. A. Copinger.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting Grounds," by Prof. A. H. Church.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Nature of Physical Force and Matter," by Mr. R. J. Ryle.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Generation of Light from Coal Gas," I., by Prof. Vivian B. Lewes.

TUESDAY, NOV. 22, 8 p.m. Discussion, "Graving Docks."
WEDNESDAY, NOV. 23, 8 p.m. Geological: "Outline of the Geological Features of Arabia Petraea and Palestine," by Prof. Edward Hull; "The Marls and Clays of the Maltese Islands," by Mr. J. H. Cooke; "The Base of the Keuper Formation in Devon," by the Rev. A. Irving.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Cremation as an Incentive to Crime," by Mr. F. Seymour Haden.

THURSDAY, NOV. 24, 6 p.m. London Institution: "The Ruined Cities of Mesopotamia," by Mr. Theodore Bent, illustrated.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Vehicles and Varnishes," by Prof. A. H. Church.
8 p.m. Electrical Engineers.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, NOV. 25, 5 p.m. Physical: "Experiments in Electric and Magnetic Fields, Constant and Varying," by Messrs. E. C. Kemington and E. Wylie Smith.

SATURDAY, NOV. 26, 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

The Beauties of Nature and the Wonders of the World we Live in. By Sir John Lubbock. (Macmillans.)

From pointing out numberless objects of interest which meet the eye everywhere in earth and air, this little book becomes a natural extension of many pages in the same author's well-known Pleasures of Life. Its lesson, too, is the same: how common sights and subjects, so familiar that they are almost despised, yet possess much which, rightly considered, makes for happiness and content. The author's plan is simple. He describes in a few pages (frequently culled from Mr. Ruskin, Mr. Jefferies, or some such skilful portrayer of the country) the exquisite charm and beauty of each province of nature, and having thus won over his readers to his own sympathetic mood, proceeds in lucid style and a few more pages to draw out the chief scientific problems connected with it. The reader is just pleasantly introduced to the leading discoveries which have been made during the last half century in animal life and physics. He is presented, as it were, with a pass key to an enchanted garden of knowledge; and if any of its paths please him, he is then able to penetrate further by his own reading and observation. No more delightful book can be conceived to put into the hands of an intelligent boy, while his elders may be thankful for the body of research and the many fascinating conclusions so cleverly summed up for them in the sparkling narrative of these pages.

The spread of technical education at the present day is another justification, were any required, for the publication of this book. Sooth to say, the world would more gladly read another volume of the author's original researches among plant and animal life, but a manual of teaching both on nature's beauty and on the many sciences which are intimately connected with nature was urgently needed. Sir J. Lubbock therefore has here attempted to do for nature at large what Prof. Huxley did in his excellent volume on Physiography of the Thames Valley, and it is superfluous to say that he has succeeded. Every page shows the impress of his large knowledge of nature, every line his deep sympathy with her. His book will be welcomed both by students of natural phenomena and by those who are content to lavish upon the outer world mere aesthetic admiration. Among the departments of nature surveyed here by the author are animal and plant life, mountains, lakes, and sea, and the many striking laws which hold together the planetary system. His sections on the origin and character of rivers are perhaps the most noticeable. A careful study of these must open a new field of research to many lovers of rural life. From the rise of some historical river, such as the Rhone or Thames, the author shows the manner in which, by the downward force of the water, by denudation and the like, its channel is dug out. The terraces it has successively left behind, and the talus which takes the angle of repose, are carefully described. Next he points out how rivers are connected with lakes, and the formation in general of these sheets of water. Lastly, the deposition of river cones by the influx of side-streams, and, it may be, of a delta where the main river debouches into the sea, are explained at length. By the aid of maps, excellent plates, and an account of the geography of Switzerland, and especially of the Alps, lessons on the physical aspects of any district are detailed, which are of the highest interest and value. The origin of mountain chains, again, and the blue colour of the Swiss and Italian lakes, are examined. Everywhere some striking view is brought out, as when treating of the Swiss mountains he reminds the reader that

“the denudation by aerial action, by glaciers, frosts, and rivers has removed hundreds, or rather thousands, of feet of strata. In fact, the mountain tops are not by any means the spots which have been most elevated, but those which have been least denuded; and hence it is that so many of the peaks stand at about the same altitude.”

It is not only among the Swiss mountains, it may be added, that these gigantic influences have so largely prevailed. Sir J. Lubbock takes care to bring his pages to the level of present knowledge; as when he mentions that the root tips of some native forest trees have been found of late enclosed in a thin sheet of closely-woven mycelium, or M. Correvon's dictum that Gruyère cheese is supposed to owe its peculiar flavour to the Alpine Alchemilla, which is now on that account often planted purposely.

Nor is the author forgetful of those researches which have peculiarly earned him fame. The fructification of plants by insects, the habits of ants, the supposed additional senses, or at all events perceptions, of the minor animals with regard to the sense of direction, and the manner in which they are capable of perceiving the ultra-violet rays of the spectrum which are invisible to man,—these form chapters of extreme interest to those who have not followed the course of modern investigations on these and kindred matters. Not every one, however, will agree with the author's conclusion—“I do not think that any one who has studied the life-history of ants can draw any fundamental line of separation between instinct and reason.” Marvellous as the habits of ants undoubtedly are, and also the mode in which instinct modifies itself to adapt these creatures to different circumstances, the level of instinct never rises; its incompatibility with settled increase and improvement will always show its inferiority to the nobler possession.

These views of the author probably led to his language on intemperance, which is rather below the dignity of either his book or his subject. He determined to intoxicate ants in the course of his experiments; but “none of my ants would voluntarily degrade themselves by getting drunk.” However, he put fifty into whisky for a few moments, “made them dead drunk, marked each with a spot of paint,” and placed them on a table where other ants were feeding. The result was amusing:

“The ants which were feeding soon noticed those which I had made drunk. They seemed quite astonished to find their comrades in such a disgraceful condition, and as much at a loss to know what to do with their drunkards as we are. After a while, however, they carried them all away; the strangers they took to the edge of the moat and dropped into the water, while they bore their friends home into the nest, where by degrees they slept off the effects of the spirit. Thus it is evident that they know their friends even when incapable of giving any sign or password.”

At this rate the Maine Liquor Law or the Gothenberg Licensing System will soon be found in operation by some enterprising traveller in the country of ants.

The chapters here devoted to astronomy are equally well written with the rest of the book, and also brimful of facts. Tempting as it is to dwell on Sir J. Lubbock's suggestive pages, there is the less need to do so, for the book will be in every one's hands. It seems impossible to keep out of print the fabulous pike of 350 lbs. weight taken in Suabia, and supposed to have lived over 267 years. From Lord Bacon, Dr. Hake-well, and Izaak Walton, it has descended through a multitude of writers, actually to find refuge in Sir J. Lubbock's book. Ungracious as it is to carp at any of these fascinating chapters, at least it may be asked why “labour” and “colour” should always appear as “labor” and “color”? And might a plea be put in for a good index in the next edition? This would much help the earnest student.

M. G. WATKINS.

A NEW CHINESE DICTIONARY.

THE last decade of the nineteenth century will probably be known hereafter as the age of lexicography. Apart from the monumental New English Dictionary, upon which Dr. Murray and Mr. Bradley are labouring with a precision of detail never before attempted, the Clarendon Press has at present in hand no less than four other great lexicographical works: Dean Payne Smith's Thesaurus Syriacus and Prof. Toller's revision of Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary—both now nearly completed; the Hebrew Lexicon of the Old Testament, by American and English scholars, and the Concordance to the Septuagint, planned by the late Edwin Hatch—both still in an early stage. For modern oriental languages, it is sufficient to mention Prof. Salmon's Arabic, and Dr. Steingass's Persian Dictionary, each of which received pecuniary help from the Secretary of State for India. And now we are promised a new Chinese-English Dictionary, by Mr. Herbert A. Giles, H.B.M. consul at Ning-po, whose name already stands on the title page of some seventeen sinological books.

The work was projected by the author as far back as 1874, and he has been carrying it on at intervals ever since. The entire plan, and by far the greater part of the execution, are his own. But, of course, he has not disdained to utilise the previous labours of others, or to accept help from his colleagues in the consular service, and from native scholars. Two years were devoted to the arrangement and transcription of the material; and the printing at Shanghai, by Messrs. Kelly and Walsh, has taken about twelve months. It will be published very shortly, in a quarto volume of 1500 pages, by Mr. Bernard Quaritch.

Without the use of special types, it is not easy to give an account of the work, as sketched out in the Preface. The total number of characters given, each under a separate heading, is 13,848, every one numbered for the purpose of easy reference by means of the Radical Index. It appears that the famous lexicon which passes under the name of K'ang Hsi contains more than 40,000 characters, but we are assured that a Chinese newspaper can be printed with a fount of 6000. Each character is marked with another number denoting its “tone” in Pekinese, followed by its romanisation in no less than nine dialects, and also in the languages of Korea, Japan, and Annam. Opposite the character are given its various meanings, without any attempt to trace the original etymology or the subsequent derivations. Then come illustrative entries, arranged in the same order as the meanings, which have purposely been collected both from books and from conversation; for Mr. Giles maintains that there is no real distinction between classical and colloquial Chinese.

“Some phrases are purposely given in wrongly written forms, because such forms happen to be in common use. A large number of entries have been introduced to illustrate the best and highest planes of Chinese thought. Others, as affording glimpses into political, commercial, and social life. Proverbs, household words, and even nursery rhymes, occur among the hundred thousand examples which go to make up this book. Even a general reader might find it not without interest to glance through the entries under the characters for wine, doctor, crime or punishment, drunk, to gamble, &c.”

All the entries are translated into English, upon the accuracy of which Mr. Giles admits that the value of the entire work depends. After an interesting discussion upon the absence of grammar in Chinese—or at least upon the uselessness of any grammatical rules that have been laid down by European scholars—the Preface ends with a dedication to “the honour and advancement of the British consular service.”

CORRESPONDENCE.

PĀLI “UPACIKĀ” = SKT. “UPAJIHVIKĀ.”

Harold Wood, Essex.

Childers was undoubtedly right in explaining upacikā as the white ant. In Suttavibhaṅga, i., p. 151, the upacikās are evidently the “white ants” in contradistinction to the *kipillikas or “black ants.” The Sinhalese kūmbiyā, “an ant,” is a corruption of kupīlīka* through kuppīkā*, kūbīkā from kipillīka; while kodayā “black ant” = kullakā* = kunthakā*, from Pāli kuntha “an ant.” As to the etymology of upacikā Childers is altogether silent, but observes that white ants do not appear to be mentioned in Sanskrit literature. But the origin of upacikā is somewhat obscured by the orthography, which is probably due to a popular etymology connecting it with upa+ci. Upacikā = upajīkā = upajīkā = upajīvikā = upajīvikā = upajīvikā = Skt. upajīhvikā. For the vowel shortening in upacikā compare Pāli kāṁkāla with Skt. kāṁkāla “skeleton.”

The Skt. upajīhvikā occurs in Rigveda viii. 91. 21, and doubtless signified “a white ant.” The forms upadikā, upadehikā, and upādīkā (a white ant, according to Wilson) are admitted into Sanskrit dictionaries on the authority of the old Hindu lexicographers. They do not appear to have any support from Sanskrit literature, and are perhaps attempts to restore Prakrit varieties of upajīhvikā.

The Sinhalese for “white ant” is wēyā, which goes back not to upacikā but to upacikā or upajīkā, through uwāyā, waiyā. Prakrit has diviā = divīkā (upadehikā, H. D. v. 53), which we may equate with Sinhalese dimiyā. Diviā = jīvikā = ojīvikā = upajīvikā = upajīhvikā. It no doubt means a white ant, as it corresponds to the modern Hindī dīvakā (f), "the white ant." We know that both in Pāli and Prakrit j occasionally passes into d, as Pāli digucchati = Pkt. digucchai = Skt. jagucchati. Childers offers no etymology of dosina in dosinā ratti "a clear spotless night" (Digha II. i.; Theragāthā, 306). Here dosina = josina = Skt. jyotsna "luminous." Prakrit has dosinā (jyotsnā, II. D. v. 50) = Skt. jyotsnā; Sinhalese dīsna "splendour" = Skt. jyotsnā. This change not only explains divikā = jīvikā, but accounts for the so-called Skt. upadehikā (in Hemacandra's Abhidhāna, 1208), which is merely another form of upajīkā = upajīvikā, and may be equated with Pāli upajīkā. But d sometimes passes into l, as in ālipāna = ālirāna (II. D. i. 71), hence we find in II. D. i. 153 olimbhā ("upadehikā") = olimbhā = olimbhā = ojibhā = upajīkā "a (white) ant."

* Skt. pipīlakā = the black ant; pipīlikā = the red ant (Sinhalese dimiyā = jīvikā = upajīhvikā).

Again, another variant occurs in II. D. i. 92, uddehā for odehikā = odehikā = upadehikā = upajīvikā. Here we see that upadehikā is no true Skt. form, but an attempt to restore a Pkt. odehikā or olihikā = ojihikā = upajīvikā = upajīvikā.

R. MORRIS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE following is the list of names recommended for election into the council of the Royal Society for the year 1893. The ballot will take place at the anniversary meeting on November 30: President, Lord Kelvin; treasurer, Sir John Evans; secretaries, Prof. Michael Foster, Lord Rayleigh; foreign secretary, Sir Archibald Geikie; other members of the council, Capt. W. de W. Abney, Sir Benjamin Baker, Prof. Isaac Bayley Balfour, W. T. Blanford, Prof. G. Carey Foster, R. T. Glazebrook, F. D. Godman, John Hopkinson, Prof. J. Norman Lockyer, Prof. J. G. McKendrick, W. D. Niven, Dr. W. H. Perkin, the Rev. Prof. B. Price, the Marquis of Salisbury, Adam Sedgwick, Prof. W. A. Tilden.

At the last meeting of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, Mr. J. Parker read a paper on "Carnot's Principle applied to Animal and Vegetable Life." The author discusses the question whether the conditions of the growth of plants are limited by the law of entropy. The assumption is made that Carnot's principle takes account only of the exchange of heat, and the temperature of the material system at which the exchange takes place; that the differential effect of solar radiation of different kinds consists in variation of the activity but not of the mechanical type of the growth. The increase of available energy due to the building up of inorganic materials into a plant can then only be explained, in conformity with the Second Law of Thermodynamics, by the aid of differences of temperature during growth; the author gives calculations to prove that the difference between day and night is amply sufficient for this purpose. If then the law of entropy is held to apply to organic growth, it would follow that the internal heat of the Earth in past ages could not have been the cause of a more exuberant vegetation. The cycle of animal life is more complex, and requires to be completed through the vegetable kingdom.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE November number of the Classical Review consists almost entirely of reviews. We must be content to draw attention only to those of foreign books. Mr. E. S. Shuckburgh takes occasion from German dissertations to discuss the difficulty of the chronology given by Livy for the War with the Carthaginians in Spain (218-206 B.C.); Mr. J. A. Adam notices two German editions of Plato—the "The-ætelus" and the "Laches"; Mr. R. C. Seaton discusses at length a French translation of Apollonius Rhodius, with elaborate notes; then we have two Plautine criticisms—Schoell's edition of "The Persa," by Prof. E. A. Sonnenschein; and Skutsch's Studies on Prosody, by Mr. W. M. Lindsay; some Patristic Analecta are summarised by the Rev. J. Armitage Robinson; Prof. Henry Nettleship writes about Keller's work on Latin Popular Etymology, discussing in particular the word argri, given to the symbolic offerings of men of straw thrown yearly into the Tiber; and, finally, Mr. C. L. Smith, of Harvard, examines the treatment of classical philology by a professor at Montpellier. We must not leave unmentioned a note by Mr. W. Warde Fowler, illustrating the recent plague of field-voles in Thessaly from Aristotle, and suggesting that a fuller knowledge of agricultural economy in the Levant might throw light upon some of the older aspects of the cult of Apollo.

IN the last number of the American Journal of Philology, Mr. Edwin Post discusses the vexed question of pollicem vertere, the death-signal to gladiators in the amphitheatre. He argues that it must have been easily recognisable; and that, on the analogy of pollex infestus, it was probably a motion of the whole hand, with the thumb pointing downward, symbolising the Roman short sword. As to the sign of mercy (pollicem premere), he thinks that it was a hiding of the thumb behind the rest of the hand, for which he cites a terracotta relief in the Nîmes Museum.

UNDER the title of Bibliografia Etiopica (Milan: Hoepli) there has just appeared a very interesting bibliographical work by Signor Fumagalli, the librarian of the Brera Library in Milan. It contains a catalogue of all that has been published with regard to Abyssinia and the adjacent countries, from the fifteenth century to the present day. The work is very carefully done; and the collection of titles, which is both abundant and accurate, includes all the works in all languages which touch upon those regions, from the points of view of history, philology, and ethnography. It is a volume calculated to interest English readers, and it has been charmingly printed and got up by the well-known Milanese publisher Ulrico Hoepli.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.—
(Monday, Oct. 31.)

PROF. CLARK, president, in the chair. — The president read a paper on "A Latin Inscription recently discovered at Carlisle." He exhibited a rubbing and squeeze, communicated to him by Chancellor Ferguson, from an inscribed stone recently discovered at Carlisle. The legible part of the inscription is clear and bold, the lettering good, and the whole appearance above suspicion. It runs as follows:—
DM | FLASANTIGONS PAPIAS | CIVIS GRECVS VIXIT ANNOS
| PLVS MINVS LX QVEM AD | MODVM ACCOMMODATAM |
| PATIS ANIMAM REVOCAVIT. | As to this part of the inscription Prof. Clark remarked:—The DM, though not conclusive, is against a Christian source. The FLAS is not a regular abbreviation for FLAVIUS, while TLA is. The s therefore most probably stands for some second name—Sextus, Servius, or Severus, which with others are found represented by this single letter. ANTIGONS and PAPIAS require no remark. The v is omitted in the former name, not tied to the s. CIVIS is not a very common expression to indicate nationality, which appears to be its meaning here. There are, however, other instances. ANNOS is not, I think, so common with VIXIT as ANNIS, but has quite good authority. PLVS MINVS, "more or less," has been noted as occurring more frequently in Christian inscriptions than in others. I do not see why it should; and I should set the DM against any inference of a Christian character for this inscription. After the numerals LX comes the difficult QVEM AD MODVM, which may be one word and may be two, but is, in my opinion, three. There is no other instance here of a word divided at the end of a line, and both QVEM AD MODVM and QVEM AD MODVM make very poor sense. The first would have to be rendered "in which fashion or manner"—I do not think it ever means "when." The second requires the awkward apposition "whom, a spirit wholly conformed to destiny, &c." I venture to take the three words as meaning "up to which limit"—i.e., the sixty years—the spirit of Flavius was ACCOMMODATA PATIS "lent" (a Cleonian use) "by the destinies," and recalled by whatever power, person, or period we can make out of the fragmentary seventh line. All, I think, who have tried their hands at this puzzle agree as far as SEPTIM for the most probable restoration of the first six letters. There is some difference of opinion as to whether the line after the m is a blundered repetition of the last stroke of that letter or an i. It certainly slants much more than the other i's. The next letter is undoubtedly a. The next have been taken for both n and u, of which I am in favour of the latter, and the next is certainly o. Then follow four fragmentary strokes which I am inclined to read as an x, followed by an i. The first and third are not sufficiently sloping for an m such as appears elsewhere in the inscription. The following letter is, I feel confident, an n, but I can read no more. There is room for nine letters in the remainder (the lost part of the line). How much more may have followed we cannot tell. Of the attractive suggestion SVPERVIVS DOMINVS, the former word is out of the question, the latter, I think, unjustifiable by the fragmentary letters. For SEPTIMIA and SEPTIMA the arguments appear to me about equal. As to what NONA means, I can at present make no suggestion; but I believe the nominative to REVOCAVIT is to be looked for rather in a period or cycle than in a human name like SEPTIMIA.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL SCOTTISH SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATERCOLOURS.

THE fifteenth annual exhibition of the Royal Scottish Society of Painters in Watercolours has been opened in two of the rooms of the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts.

Several of the most capable members of the society, such as Mr. E. A. Walton, Mr. James Guthrie, and Mr. Arthur Melville, are unrepresented this year; yet the exhibition may be pronounced a fairly interesting one, and the display is sufficiently representative of the present aims and tendencies of art in the West of Scotland. A few of the exhibitors, like Mr. Waller Paton, Mr. C. N. Woolnoth, and Mr. J. A. Aitken, still adhere to timid old-fashioned methods of detailed and stippled execution; but the majority of the works shown are characterised by a broader style of handling, and a care less for the minutiae of detail than for truth and harmony of total effect.

As is always the case in a water-colour exhibition, the figure-pictures are less numerous and less important than the landscapes. Mr. Alma-Tadema, however, an honorary member of the Society, sends one of his exquisitely finished little works, "Calling the Worshippers," a picture—as commonly happens with the productions of this painter's brush—more perfect in its realisation of the textures of various polished marbles and metals, and in the brilliancy of the passages of potent red and blue in the glimpses of distant architecture and sky, than in the grace and accuracy of draughtsmanship of the foreground figure of the priestess of Bacchus. Sir John Gilbert, another honorary member, sends two of his vigorously-drawn, powerfully-coloured, figure pieces—a "Standard-bearer" of the cavalier period, and an aged bishop, with his white-robed attendant choir-boy; while from Mr. W. MacTaggart, the accomplished vice-president of the society, comes his very refined and delicate drawing of "Willie Baird," a work done some years ago, and well-known to art-lovers in Scotland. Another of the most prominent figure-painters in the exhibition is Miss Constance Walton, whose chief contribution is a telling life-sized half length of a girl, clad in a black dress and a white pinafore, posed "In the Pine Wood," a work skilfully carried out in a very subdued scheme of tonality. The same painter's "Little Villager," another picture of a comely country child, with a background of decoratively-arranged leaves, is also a successful and pleasing work; but her "What shall I have?" is less graceful in form and attitude than the smaller work "A Glimpse in the Mirror," in which the same black-and-green clad model again appears. Mr. H. J. Dobson shows one of his characteristic studies of Scottish character, a countryman puzzled over his change—"Out of Reckoning"; and Mr. R. Alexander's "Sketch on Loch Awe Side" and his "The Soke, Tangiers," are two of the most refined and accomplished works in the galleries.

In the department of landscape a larger proportion of exhibits than is commonly the case derive their subjects from Southern France, from Spain, and from the North of Africa. Mr. J. G. Laing has been at work in Spain, and his "In the Alcazar, Seville" has found a place of honour in the centre of one of the walls of the first gallery. Mr. Garden C. Smith sends a number of subjects from Tarascon and its neighbourhood. His view of Avignon is particularly attractive in its quiet harmony and reticence of tone. Mr. R. W. Allan shows some excellent results of an artistic tour in India, attaining vivid colouring and brilliancy of effect, especially in his largest subject of a gaily-clad Oriental crowd grouped in front of palaces and temples of white marble. Mr. A. K. Brown sends several pleasant subjects, of which his "Grey Afternoon" by the sea occupies a centre in the second gallery, fronting "Barges at the Mouth of the Thames," a carefully-finished and brilliant marine piece by Mr. Francis Powell, the president of the society. Mr. John Smart is represented by several large Highland subjects; and a few exquisite little drawings by Mr. R. B. Nisbet seem to have caught the best flavour and finest spirit of the earlier English workers in the medium. Mr. David Murray's "Fish Pond" in an old-fashioned garden is rather laboured and spiritless in touch; but this artist sends better work in his picturesque view of "Ringwood Brewery, Hampshire." Mr. John Terris shows powerful handling and effective colouring in the crowd and the darkened buildings of his "High-street of Glasgow," and in his "Market Day at Alcester, near Stratford-on-Avon;" and his Scottish landscape subjects, such as "Noon, Stirling Castle, from the Forth," and "Early Spring, Sannox, Isle of Arran," have, in another way, much quiet charm. Some excellent Scottish subjects come from Mr. A. D. Reid, who also exhibits a fine view of "Shrimp Boats, Walcheren," and from Mr. S. Reid. Mr. Grosvenor Thomas's sense for richly sombre colouring appears in his "Landscape near Bar, Ayrshire," and his "Girvan Valley"; while his "Poppies" and "Flowers" are also powerful in their tinting, though too slight and indeterminate in their expression of form. One of the most poetic landscapes in the exhibition is "In Corpyard," by Mr. C. Blatherwick, a stretch of upland sun, beneath an evening effect, the moorland pierced by a winding ravine, the course of a stream concealed by the rising mists, with a great ruddy full moon appearing from behind the hills to the left. Mr. James Paterson is always a prominent and effective exhibitor in the Glasgow displays. Here, the most important of his many contributions is "The Fell," a space of green hillside, with its boulders and sparse, scattered trees, overhung by an exquisite sky of summer blue, flecked with white clouds. Mr. Tom Scott also exhibits largely. One of his finest works is the smallest—"Leisure Hours," a garden scene, with a seated female figure. Miss C. P. Ross, in addition to several renderings of picturesque corners at Crail, has a broadly touched portrait-sketch of a girl; and Mr. E. Sherwood Calvert's landscapes, in their misty outlines and shadowy trees, show very marked traces of Corot and his artistic method. Mr. Crawford Hamilton has been at work among the English and Scottish cathedrals, and his interiors manifest an excellent feeling for architectural scale and effect. One of his most charming works is the slight but exquisitely toned view in "St. Peter's Church, Canterbury."

Among the examples of still-life painting in the exhibition, a very high place is taken by Miss J. H. Shield's study of dead "Peewits," Miss Marjorie Evans has a good study of red roses; and Mr. T. Millie Dow, always a careful and artistic worker, shows, in addition to an extended view of "Rome from a House-top," a refined picture of roses, faintly pink and yellow.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FILIPPO SCOLARI, BY ANDREA DEL CASTAGNO.
Cheltenham.

Now that so many students at schools of art are enabled, through a series of copies circulated periodically, to see for themselves the works of the Old Masters, it is natural they should require not only information concerning the painters, such as the Handbooks of painting convey, but also, where it is possible, some description of the subjects selected by them for illustration. This is not always forthcoming, and the history of Florentine celebrities is not quite so accessible in England to the literary, as the representation of them is to the artistic seeker.

I select as an example, brought casually under my notice lately, an heroic name deserving full and honourable mention—viz., that of Filippo Scolari, whose portrait by Andrea del Castagno, now in the Cenacolo di Sant' Apollonia at Florence, was till lately in the museum of the Bargello. A brief résumé of his achievements will be of interest to all who study the "Classical Picture Gallery" formed for the use of art students in England.

Andrea del Castagno was one of the first who practised the new mode of painting in oils invented by Antonio di Messina. He learnt the secret from his friend Domenico Veneziano (a pupil of Antonio), whom he treacherously assassinated one dark night, himself confessing the crime years after on his death-bed. His picture of the execution of the conspirators who rebelled against the Medici earned him the sobriquet of Andrea degl' Impiccati, which signifies Andrea of the "hanged."

Burci in his Guide-book to Florence (p. 61) recommends the visitor to the Bargello to note six more-than-life-size portraits of men renowned in arms and letters—Farinata degli Uberti, Filippo Scolari, commonly called Pippo Spano, the great Seneschal Acciajoli, Dante, Petrarch, and Boccaccio, also a half-figure of Queen Esther—which adorn the walls of the first room on the upper floor.

These works in fresco by Andrea del Castagno (mentioned by Vasari) were discovered in a country house near Florence belonging to the Signori Trivulzi, and carefully removed on canvas by the government of the Grand Duke.

All that is known of Andrea the painter is easily obtained; but it is necessary to go further afield for the life-history of Pippo, or Filippo Scolari, entitled Spano, a typical merchant, soldier, and statesman of his time.

We read that he was born in Florence in 1369, and that his father, Stefano Scolari, was a man of small possessions though of ancient lineage and coequal in rank with the noble family of Bonaldomonte. He was sent at an early age into Hungary, to the care of Luca del Pecchia, a Florentine merchant, who taught him business in his counting-house at Buda. Before long, while engaged in mercantile transactions for Luca, he attracted the attention of the High Treasurer of Sigismund, King of Hungary, son of the Emperor Charles IV., who, perceiving his skill in the science of book-keeping and general financial ability, asked for and obtained his services.

He quickly rose in the esteem of his new employer, who entrusted him not only with the administration of his personal affairs; but also with that of the public treasury. Wishing to reward the young Scolari's honesty and capacity, he gave him the revenues of Simontornia, in Hungary. Moreover, King Sigismund himself recognised his ability, and confided to him the management of the national gold mines, a most important and responsible post.

But fortune soon raised him still higher in his sovereign's service, leading him to cast aside the pen, and enter upon a military career. The partisans of Charles of Anjou having rebelled and imprisoned Sigismund, Pippo courageously went to his assistance, and, collecting a body of horsemen, placed himself at their head in order to liberate the king. He restored order in numerous cities; and after the pacification of the kingdom, to show his obligation, the king bestowed on him the lands of Temesvar, with the rank of Spano, or count, of that territory.

Before he had retired from active service, the king gave him the chief command of his troops against the old enemies of Hungary, the predatory Turks. Entering successfully upon the campaign, between that time and his death he gained the victory in twenty-three battles. Once he accompanied King Sigismund, now crowned emperor, to hold a conference with the Pope at Rome. In 1410, revisiting his birthplace, Florence, after about twenty-five years' absence, he passed forty days there, with a train of 300 men-at-arms and a large following of gentlemen, rejoicing and literally entertaining the whole city. Was this the occasion utilised by his quondam fellow-citizens to avail themselves of Andrea del Castagno's pictorial art?

Having returned to Germany, he joined the emperor at the council of Constance, and was continually employed by him in state affairs of the highest importance. After another war against the Turks, he ended his busy life at Lippa, on December 27, A.D. 1426, at the age of fifty-seven, leaving his son, Giovanni, Waivode of Transylvania, already injured, like his father, to all the dangers and hardships of constant warfare.

The Emperor Sigismund and all his court clothed themselves in mourning on hearing news of Filippo's death, and accompanied the body of his faithful general to the place of burial (Alba Reale) of the Hungarian kings, where with royal honours he was laid in the splendid mausoleum. The biography in MS. of Filippo Scolari written in Latin by Jacopo di Messer Poggio, and translated into Italian by Sebastiano Fortini, was formerly preserved in the Libreria Rosselli at Florence. Another Life was written by Domenico Mellini, and twice printed at Florence in the years 1569 and 1606.

Assuredly the deeds of this true paladin are duly recounted at length in the various memoirs of illustrious Tuscans for those who care for more ample information than the simple details I have been able to give in this brief space.

Without the fresco of Andrea del Castagno the memory of Filippo Scolori would have faded almost out of recollection. Ars longa est!
WILLIAM MERCER.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY

THE ninth exhibition of the New English Art Club will open next week at the Dudley Gallery, Piccadilly. The private view is fixed for to-day (Saturday).

WE may also mention that Messrs. Doulton & Co., of Lambeth, will have on view next week the memorial statue of the late Prof. Fawcett, designed and modelled by Mr. George Tinworth, which is to be erected in Vauxhall Park as the gift of Sir Henry Doulton; and also a selection of art wares prepared by the firm for next year's Chicago Exhibition.

AT the London Institution, on Thursday next, Mr. Theodore Bent will deliver a lecture on "The Ruined Cities of Mashonaland," illustrated with lantern slides.

ON Monday next, Messrs. Sotheby will sell a collection of engravings chiefly of the English school, including several by Bartolozzi after Angelica Kaufmann and Cipriani.

MR. HARRY QUILTER writes to us that a portion only of the illustrations to his forthcoming Preferences appeared in the Universal Review, and that all of those which did so appear have been specially reprinted in Paris for the present work with the greatest care, and at a very considerably increased cost. The blocks were originally manufactured by Guillaume Frères, and now have had, in the author's opinion, for the first time full justice done them. Of the collotype illustrations fifty-five are entirely new, the other two have been redone for the present work.

DR. CHARLES WALDSTEIN'S preliminary report on the excavation of the Heraeum at Argos, which was noticed in the ACADEMY of October 29, may be obtained from Messrs. Williams & Norgate.

THE STAGE.

"KING LEAR" AT THE LYCEUM.

THE programme of "King Lear" at the Lyceum will probably—at least so far as Mr. Irving's part is concerned—gain in completeness and suggestiveness as time proceeds. There are things which would be the better for modification; there are points which need enlargement. The success at present attained by the chief performer and by those who are associated with him is, at the least, unequal. The play does not take strong hold of the spectator in the earlier scenes—did not, at all events, in the earlier scenes take hold of the particular spectator who now writes. And as "King Lear" happens to be a play which both the necessities of the case, and, as I suppose, the deliberate intention of the Lyceum management, keep free in great measure from gorgeous pageantry—from so much which gave legitimate and illustrative interest to the last Shaksperian revival at this theatre—it is dependent, greatly, for effect upon an evenness and adequacy of performance, to come, as I have little doubt, in due time, but not yet altogether attained.

To speak, to begin with, of the principal figure. Those "mannerisms" of Mr. Irving of which we have heard so much—but which, for my own part, I can generally suffer without repining, so great are the qualities that they accompany—those tricks of voice and of delivery of voice, of walk, of gesture, of a restlessness not free from the suggestion of mechanism—those "mannerisms" were all to the front in the earlier scenes, as I beheld them; and along with the mannerisms there seemed less than usual of powerful interpretation, of significant and happy invention, of the material for thought. Only one other Lear have I myself seen, and that was Edwin Booth; my memory fails me in regard to the impression produced by him in those earlier scenes, of which the performance by Mr. Irving suggested a vague and undefinable dissatisfaction. Whatever Booth may have been, Ludwig Devrient was, if report may be trusted, very much upon the spot in his rendering of these scenes. It has been complained that Mr. Irving is from the beginning too old: certain it is that his Lear is made to exhibit, from the first, "the unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them." And one's first thought, in seeing him, is very likely indeed to be one of apprehension that from a senility so marked the actor will hardly be able to advance into yet further decay. The fear, however, is groundless; and knowing now what came after—knowing now, so to put it, the existence on Mr. Irving's key-board of some further octave which one would not have suspected—one sees no reason to take the actor to task for that which in the first scenes may have seemed a senility dangerous and undue. Indeed, one of the great qualities of the performance is the manner in which Mr. Irving marks the contrast—the profound contrast, after all—between a mind that has very little left in it and a mind that has nothing. As a study in mental decay, the performance shows the most accurate observation; and are we to call it observation only, or may not imagination be the term applied, when, later on again, Mr. Irving endows the performance with touches of singular beauty, in his suggestion of the partial recovery of the very old man, the fond if exacting father, when the renewed presence of Cordelia comes to him as medicinale oil, and the gift of her love brings healing on its wings?

And if one finds unsatisfactory, in some measure, the earlier scenes of the tragedy—and this not alone in so far as Mr. Irving is concerned with them—one finds the later scenes, speaking broadly, to be all one could possibly look for. More than all, perhaps, for here an actor of very subtle thought, and of great powers of execution, becomes illuminating. Here he reveals a pathos which neither the reading of the tragedy in the closet, nor its just respectable performance on the stage, could have suggested. Lear in the storm; Lear on the wayside hut, wherein with the Fool he seeks shelter from "the winds and persecutions of the sky"; Lear stretched passive on the couch from which, after an arduous groping in the recesses of his unused memory, he recognises his child; Lear happy for a moment with his daughter beside him—

"We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage"—

Lear, finally with all heart and hope gone out of him, asking Cordelia, in accents that she will not hear, to "stay a little"—Lear, in these phases, Mr. Irving brings finely before us.

Miss Ellen Terry's Cordelia—which could not be other than graceful and agreeable—follows, to my mind, in some respects, the course of the Lear of her colleague. Her Cordelia—that is to say—is least satisfactory at the beginning. Miss Terry, too, has her "mannerism," a staccato delivery, and a face which does not at all times express the emotion through which the character is supposed to be passing. A certain abundance and amplitude of gracious gesture yet leaves us, at times, doubtful of the sincerity of the uttered words. Her real scene—wherein her solicitude becomes genuine, and her grief as it were personal and spontaneous, instead of abstract and perfunctory—is the great scene of recognition. Here all that is most womanly and most winning in the art and temperament of the actress finds expression.

As regards the rest of the cast, there is something to praise and something of which to avow disapproval. The General of Miss Ada Dyas has a certain rough power, but is, at times at least, too common. This is a King's daughter. And if it be said, "Yes, but a King's daughter of an almost prehistoric time, when manners were not, and the stamp of Vere de Vere was unknown," it must be answered that such a plea takes refuge in a "realism" on this occasion inappropriate: the savagery of the period cannot be reproduced, or, if reproduced, it must be reproduced by every one. Regan, whose character differs from Goneril's as Anastasia differs from Delphine in the "tragedy of the bourgeois," in that scarcely less great "King Lear"—the Père Goriot—is played with force and venom, and is looked excellently well, by Miss Maud Milton—an actress of genuine gifts, who in London has never had too many chances, but whom I seem to remember as having been the not inadequate—nay, the really touching—Cordelia of Mr. Booth's production of "Lear" at the Princess's. Adequate is perhaps the strongest word that can be used to describe, as a whole, the Edgar of Mr. Terriss. It does not want manliness. Mr. Haviland plays the Fool, with ingenuity, suggestiveness, and command of means. Mr. Frank Cooper would do better as Edmund if he commanded greater subtlety. As it is, he has the simple manliness of a figure of Sir John Gilbert's. Mr. Gordon Craig plays Oswald, and, with a character of this importance, makes perhaps a step in advance. Mr. Alfred Bishop is a humane and intelligible Gloucester: when he is on the stage, one is at least in contact with reality—too often, in the minor parts of the Shaksperian drama, one is in contact, so far as interpretation is concerned, chiefly with the conventional and the stagy: the ceremonious compliment is apt to be delivered without the marks of real courtesy, and the expression of solicitude cannot convince you that it is sincere. Only two more parts need to be mentioned—the small part of an “Old Man,” played by Mr. Howe; and the great and remunerative part of Kent, played by almost a new comer—as it seems—Mr. W. J. Holloway. I have seen Ryder in Kent. It was one of the parts that fitted him. It gave him all his chances, and yet was well within his range. It showed alike his bonhomie and his dignity. It had kindness and breeding. I find in Mr. Holloway simplicity if you will; earnestness even—though in but moderate measure—and a great lack of distinction. The few words which the veteran, Mr. Howe, has to utter as an “Old Man,” are recognisable at at once, and memorable, by the truth he puts into them. A small part, verily. To speak his lines took him, perhaps, four minutes—but forty years (and the gifts besides) to know how to speak them!

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. HADDON CHAMBERS'S new piece, in three acts, called “An Old Lady,” will be produced at the Criterion this evening; Mrs. John Wood making, on this occasion, her re-appearance on the stage.

“THE ARABIAN NIGHTS,” one of the most laughter-provoking pieces of the contemporary stage, has been revived at the Comedy Theatre. Miss Lottie Venne and Mr. W. S. Penley are seen in their original parts.

“DAVID,” by Mr. Lewis Parker and Mr. Thornton Clark, has been brought out with some success at the Garrick, under the temporary management of Miss Estelle Burney. As Mr. Parker's earlier work has generally shown some measure of power and novelty, the piece may be considered worth seeing by even the not very constant playgoer. The cast is a strong one. It includes, besides the manageress, Mr. Murray Carson, Mr. Herbert Waring, Mr. William Herbert, and Mrs. Crowe.

MR. CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss Mary Moore, and the regular Criterion company are to-day finishing a “provincial tour” by a performance at the great suburban theatre, the Grand, Islington.

THE Haymarket Theatre passes out of Mrs. Langtry's hands on or about December 15. When Mr. Tree resumes possession, he will produce the “Hypatia” of Mr. Stuart Ogilvie.

MR. ISRAEL ZANGWILL, the author of the clever Jewish novel, Children of the Ghetto, is—temporarily at all events—to become a playwright. At a dinner given to him last Sunday night, by the Society of Maccabaeans—whose other guests on the occasion included Mr. Arthur Hacker, Mr. Jerome K. Jerome, Mr. Spielmann, Mr. Harold Frederic, Mr. Heinemann, Mr. Frederick Wedmore, Mr. Fred Terry, and Mr. Beerbohm Tree—it was announced by Mr. Tree that he had persuaded Mr. Zangwill to undertake the preparation of an English version of the play called “Uriel Acosta,” which has had much success in Germany.

MUSIC.

MASCAGNI'S “I RANTZAU.”

Florence: Nov. 12, 1892.

LAST week, passing through Vienna on my way here, I went to the Hofoper and heard an excellent performance of “L'Amico Fritz,” under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter. The unsatisfactory character of the book, and the style of the music so little in keeping with the simple story, struck me more than ever. The cleverness of much of the writing cannot, however, be denied. I was indeed glad to hear the work just at this moment: with the music fresh in my memory, I felt that I could the better trace the development, and perhaps progress, of the young maestro.

Mascagni for his third opera has again had recourse to one of Erckmann-Chatrian's stories, Les Deux Frères. Signori Targioni-Tozzetti and G. Menasci have produced a better libretto than that of “L'Amico Fritz.” The outlines are good: the keynote of the story, the rivalry and consequent hatred for each other of the two brothers, is clearly established at the opening, while in the fourth and last act they become reconciled. The love element in the play is only subordinate. The one brother (Gianni) has a daughter Luisa, the other (Giacomo) a son Giorgio, and the two love each other; and through this love, though indirectly, the reconciliation is brought about. Gianni has chosen Lebel, inspector of forests, as husband for his daughter Luisa; an interview with her, in which he declares his will, and even uses violence, brings on an illness that threatens to terminate fatally. The father yields, for his daughter's sake, makes peace with his brother, and everything ends happily. The village schoolmaster and organist, by name Fiorenzo, plays an active part throughout. The story is not clearly set forth; and often the incidents of the plot, especially as regards the lovers, are hinted at, rather than described. The intentions of the librettists are good, but they are often concise rather than clear. And then again the story, though not lacking in interest, makes no strong appeal: one feels throughout that the tragedy is after all only a village tragedy, one which excites no deep emotion. The inspector Lebel, and Giulia, daughter of the schoolmaster, are little more than puppets.

In the first act, a sale by auction of a lawn adjoining the houses of the two brothers is supposed to take place, and the commotion in the village is immense when it is known that Gianni has outbid his brother, and become the possessor. The act opens with a pleasing chorus, in which male and female voices alternate and unite. Luisa sings a Romanza, in which the composer, though working on old lines, shows himself a modern. The Finale, in which the brothers take part, supported by their followers, the children, and Fiorenzo and Lebel, is full of life and movement, though the two parties in the quarrel are scarcely characterised with sufficient individuality. A phrase in this Finale has evidently been suggested by one in the introduction to the third act of “Lohengrin.”

And while speaking of external influence, it may be well to notice the question, how far Mascagni's music displays real originality. To say that some of it recalls now Berlioz, now Gounod, and now Verdi is easy; and one can even refer to the special passages in the works of those composers which must have been uppermost in his mind. This is not only cheap criticism, but, if taken alone, dishonest. The greatest composers were not ashamed to acknowledge what they owed to their predecessors. The question is how far Mascagni's individuality penetrates through the outer phraseology; and I have no hesitation in declaring that it so penetrates as to become prominent. The composer had from the commencement something which distinguished him; and that something, call it originality, talent, genius, or what you will, is gaining in strength. In “I Rantzau” the music is more striking than in “Cavalleria Rusticana,” and a fortiori than in “L'Amico Fritz.” The most promising sign, perhaps, is the skilful manner in which Mascagni welds together Italian melody and Wagnerian method. And it is skilful because it is the natural outcome of feeling and thought. Mascagni has felt the truth of the art principles advocated by the reformer of Bayreuth: he recognises the appropriateness of the representative theme, but handles this dangerous weapon with modest discretion; he understands that for proper dramatic effect the old form of opera is totally unsuitable, but he does not, as the master in his ripe manhood was able to do, leave hold altogether of the balustrade guiding him through the realms of the tragic muse. It is this honest amalgamation which foretells greatness: the mere imitator of Wagner is an ass covering himself with a lion's skin.

The second act opens in the house of Gianni. After a few short and effective bars from the orchestra, Luisa enters and sings a melancholy but pleasing Ballata, about a king who thought more of his own interests than of his daughter's happiness and even life; and the clue is thus given to what immediately follows. The father soon arrives and bids his daughter prepare for the coming guests, among whom will be the inspector Lebel, Fiorenzo, and his daughter. Lebel soon enters; and by a single remark we learn that the schoolmaster must announce to Luisa her father's decision. But before this takes place there is a musical episode: Gianni asks Fiorenzo to sit down to the organ to play. He begins a Kyrie of his own composition, the guests joining in chorus. The music is certainly not remarkably interesting, but perhaps it may be regarded as a fair sample of modern sacred Italian style. The Kyrie is soon interrupted by Giacomo's men outside, who are singing a boisterous field song. The sacred hymn is given out in louder tones, but the noise outside also increases. The idea is rather an original one, and there is naturally a strong contrast; but it needed a skill in counterpoint, which as yet Mascagni does not possess, to make the most of the situation.

We now come to the emotional feature of the story. The schoolmaster fulfils his difficult task, and tells Luisa of her fate; and then follows the interview, already mentioned, between father and daughter. Here for the first time the sympathy of the audience is really aroused, and Mascagni intensifies the situation by music of quite extraordinary power and passion. Coming where it does in the opera, it seems an unfortunate climax: though much which follows is interesting, and though the third act ends in an impressive manner, this is the musician's highest effort. The strident notes for brass against the rushing passages for strings recall the “storm” movement in the Pastoral Symphony, while the general spirit of the music is akin to that wonderful outburst in the “Walküre” just before Wotan's farewell to Brünnhilde.

The third act opens with a charmingly quaint chorus for female voices, and this is followed by a characteristic scene: the gossips of the village gather round the schoolmaster, and seek to learn tidings of the sick maiden. The orchestra, with its points of imitation and restless activity, presents a clever tone-picture. The scene between Giorgio and Fiorenzo includes an effective song for the former. The act closes in an impressive manner: Luisa's father, overwhelmed at the idea that his daughter may die, and resolved to dare everything to save her if possible, knocks at the door of his brother's house; he is at first repulsed by Giacomo, but when he tells the sad fate which may be in store for both Luisa and Giorgio, Giacomo reflects a moment, and then says, “Entra.” The music is dramatically appropriate: the mysterious passage for basses, and especially the consecutive fifths from bassoons alone, command attention. It is a powerful ending to the act, but the music plays in at only a humble part.

The Intermezzo before the fourth act is an unnecessary interpolation. In this concluding act there is a love duet of much passion, yet somewhat artificial. The dénouement is not striking; it will suffice to say that all kiss and make friends. The opera is preceded by an Overture made up of themes from the work: the close is, perhaps, its most effective portion.

Concerning the performance at La Pergola Theatre it will be scarcely necessary to enter into much detail. On the first night there were certain shortcomings, but on the following Saturday there was already a very great improvement. Signora E. Darcée (Luisa) sang and acted with considerable energy, but in her upper notes her voice was unpleasantly forced. Signor F. de Lucia as Giorgio was not satisfactory. The two brothers, Gianni and Giacomo, were well represented by Signori M. Battistini and L. Broglio. Signor E. Sottolana, who has a good baritone voice, deserves special praise for his impersonation of the good-hearted schoolmaster. Signor Rodolfo Ferrari conducted with skill and enthusiasm. That the Italians, proud of their young countryman, should desire to show their enthusiasm in a marked manner is only natural; but the innumerable encores and the loud applause at the close of each act—before the master had said, especially in the case of the second act, his best word in the orchestra—were distressing to those who wished to judge the balance of parts, and to sum it up as a whole. Moreover, each time a number was encored, the actor or actress rushed off the stage, and immediately returned leading the composer by the hand. Were Pietro Mascagni an ordinary man, the matter would scarcely deserve mention; but as he is evidently striving to write music-drama in the true Wagnerian sense, it is to be regretted that in the strength of his youth he does not wage war against a custom as foolish as it is in-artistic. Only show the public a better way in which to express approval, and, as has already been proved in various places, they will quickly adopt it.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUDIE'S

SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 31, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 2, King St., Cheapside, E.C.

Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO. beg to announce that Mr. MARION CRAWFORD'S New Novel,
"DON ORSINO," and Mrs. OLIPHANT'S New Novel, "THE HEIR PRESUMPTIVE and the HEIR APPARENT," are Now Ready at all Booksellers and Libraries in 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d. each.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW VOLUME OF POEMS BY MR. ALFRED AUSTIN.

FORTUNATUS the PESSIMIST.

By ALFRED AUSTIN, Author of "Prince Lucifer." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"In fact the best of Mr. Austin's works."

NEW VOLUME OF POEMS BY MR. WILLIAM WATSON.

LACRYMÆ MUSARUM, and Other Poems.

By WILLIAM WATSON, Author of "Wordsworth's Grave." Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY MR. STOPFORD BROOKE.

THE HISTORY of EARLY ENGLISH LITERATURE:

Being the History of English Poetry from its Beginnings to the Accession of King Alfred. By the Rev.
STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A. With a Map. 2 vols., 8vo, 20s. net.
The TIMES.—"In Mr. Stopford Brooke's monumental work he strives with rare skill and insight to present our earliest national poetry as a living literature, and not as mere material for research."

NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITION.

THE OREGON TRAIL:

Sketches of Prairie and Rocky-Mountain Life. By FRANCIS PARKMAN. Illustrated by Frederic Remington.
Medium 8vo, 21s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

OUIDA'S NEW NOVEL. THE TOWER OF TADDEO.

At all Libraries, in 3 vols.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK TO THE RIVIERA FROM MARSEILLES TO PISA.

With Outlines of the Routes thither, and some Introductory Information on the Climate and the choice of Winter Stations for Invalids.

A NEW EDITION THOROUGHLY REVISED and ALMOST REWRITTEN on the SPOT.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

A special endeavour has been made to interest visitors to the Riviera in some hitherto little-known districts within easy reach of many parts of the coast, such as the mountains about Rapallo, Spezia, and the Esterel Mountains, to which attention has been recently drawn by Mr. Gladstone in his article on "Dante," in the Nineteenth Century, June, 1892. To further this object, some new maps have been engraved for this book on a scale sufficiently large to be of practical use to pedestrians—e.g.,

THE ESTEREL MOUNTAINS.

THE RIVIERA from MONACO to SAN REMO.

SAN REMO and ENVIRONS.

SPEZIA and ENVIRONS.

RAPALLO and ENVIRONS.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S LIST OF RECENT AND STANDARD WORKS.

Just published, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

THE GALILEAN: a Portrait of Jesus of Nazareth, by Walter Lloyd.

In 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, price 15s.

THE SUPERNATURAL: its Origin, Nature, and Evolution. By JOHN H.
KING.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s.

SOCIAL ETHICS. Outlines of a Doctrine of Morals. By Prof. THEOBALD
ZIEGLER. Translated from the German.

Recently published.

ORIGINAL NOTES on the BOOK of PROVERBS, mostly from Eastern sources. By the Rev. S. C. MALAN, D.D., late Vicar of Broadwindsor, Dorset.

Vol. I., Chap. I.-X., 12s.

Vol. II., Chap. XI.-XX., 12s.

Vol. III., Chap. XXI.-XXXI., in preparation.

In 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, 308 pp., 3s. 6d.

METHODS of INDUSTRIAL REMUNERATION. By DAVID F. SCHLOSS.

In 1 vol., 8vo, 652 pp., cloth, 14s.

A PLAIN COMMENTARY on the FIRST GOSPEL. By an AGNOSTIC.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, red edges, with Portrait in Photogravure, and Woodcut, 6s.

A MEMORIAL of the Late
WILLIAM M. AINSWORTH: being a Selection of his Sermons, Prayers, and Letters of Travel.
Edited, with a Memoir, by JAMES HARWOOD,
B.A. To which are added MEMORIAL
ADDRESSES by the EDITOR and Prof. J. E.
CARPENTER, M.A.

Fifth Edition, 8vo, cloth, 18s.

LUBBOCK (Sir John, F.R.S.).
PRE-HISTORIC TIMES, as Illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages. With Woodcut Illustrations and Plates.

600 pp., 8vo, cloth, price 10s.

OUTLINES of GERMAN
LITERATURE. From the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By JOS. GOSTWICK and ROBERT HARRISON.

REDUCED IN PRICE.

A NEW LIFE of JESUS. By DAVID FRIED. STRAUSS. Authorised English
Translation. 2 vols., 8vo (21s.), 10s. 6d.

"My former 'Life of Jesus' was intended for Theologians; on the present occasion I write especially for Laymen."

PREFACE.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth (7s. 6d.), 5s.

THE NIBELUNGENLIED. The Fall of the Nibelungers, otherwise the Book of Kriemhild. An English Translation, by W. N.
LETTISOM.

One of Sir JOHN LUBBOCK'S One Hundred Best Books.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London:
and Edinburgh.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS. (TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.) NOVELS AT ALL CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

By the Author of "Molly Bawn."

NORA CREINA.
By Mrs. HUNGERFORD,
Author of "A Life's Remorse,"
"The Hon. Mrs. Vereker," "Lady Patty," &c. 3 vols.

By Mrs. Lovett Cameron.

A SISTER'S SIN. By the Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," &c.
3 vols.

By Albert Kevill-Davies.

MISS BLANCHARD of CHICAGO.
By the Author of "Marriage Up to Date," "An American Widow," &c. 3 vols.

"The story is brisk and taking and full of incident."
"...the brightness of Mr. Kevill-Davies's pictures of American life.
His descriptions of the manner of life on a Western farm, of the circumstances of a Chicago millionaire and of Chicago society have the air of being drawn from life and give a pleasing air of reality to the story."
"No one can complain of lack of interest in this rattling novel. Mr.
Kevill-Davies has an exceptionally good knowledge of the United States, and he turns it to very good account in 'Miss Blanchard of Chicago.'" London Figaro.

By B. L. Farjeon.

THE MARCH of FATE. By the Author of "The Mystery of M. Felix," "A Young Girl's Life," &c. 3 vols.

"Mr. Farjeon in 'The March of Fate' has no greater rival than himself. In his past books he has accustomed us to somewhat intricate plots, skillfully unravelled, and detective clues which finally resolve themselves into startling conclusions. 'The March of Fate' is, too, in some respects, a detective story, for the threads are in the hands of a private inquiry officer, but it includes other elements of human character and sensational incident, which will doubtless retain the interest of the novel-reader to the very last page.... The author has written a story which has many evidences of cleverness and strength."

"In 'The March of Fate' there is a great deal that will afford the reader pleasure.... The plot is developed by narratives put into the mouths of different persons, and the whole forms a story full of interest and dramatic effect.... The story is well told. The sketches of character are light and clever."
"....the reader may follow the adventures of the fair Honoria, without flagging, to the final chapter."
Athenaeum.

By Mrs. Edward Kennard.

WEDDED to SPORT. By the Author of "The Girl in the Brown Habit," "That Pretty Little Horse-Breaker," &c. 3 vols.

"Mrs. Kennard has achieved at least one notable success in 'Wedded to Sport'.... Interspersed in the tale are many of those sporting scenes in the delineation of which the authoress has already won her reputation."
"Graphic as ever in her pictures of the hunting field, and all that pertains to the favorite national pastime.... 'Wedded to Sport' is not wanting either in vivacity or incident."
Morning Post.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.
WINTER'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL

(Eighth Year of Publication.)
Entitled THREE GIRLS,
JOHN STRANGE WINTER.
In picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. (Second Edition.)
"It is a good-natured, sentimental, and very enjoyable story."
"....one of those bright and unpretentious little books."
Public Opinion.

"BELGRAVIA."
A London Magazine. Price 1s.
Serial Tales by ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip) and IZA
DUFFUS HARDY are running in the above Monthly Magazine.

BELGRAVIA ANNUAL.
(Illustrated) 1s.
Containing Contributions by HUME NISBET, Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD, EDITH STEWART DREWRY, LUCIE H. ARM-STRONG, EMILIA AYLMER GOWING, "RITA," and others.
Vol. LXXVIII. (360 pages), elegantly bound in gilt cloth, with gilt edges, price 7s. 6d. Cases for binding Volumes 2s. each.

"LONDON SOCIETY."
A Monthly Magazine. Price 1s.
Serial Tales, entitled "THE COQUETESS PHARAMOND," by "RITA," and "A BURIED SIN," are running in the above Magazine.
THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER OF "LONDON SOCIETY."
(Illustrated) 1s.

Containing a complete Novella, entitled "STEPHANIE," by the AUTHOR of "MOLLY BAWN," and Contributions by CURTIS
VORKE, Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER, MAY CROMMELIN,
FAYR MADOC, and others.
Vol. LXI. (780 pages), handsomely bound in gilt cloth, with gilt edge, price 10s. 6d. Cases for binding Volumes 2s. each.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, LONDON.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

JAS. FITZMAURICE KELLY.

THE LIFE of MIGUEL DE CER-VANTES SAAVEDRA; a Biographical, Literary, and Historical Study, with a tentative Bibliography from 1585 to 1892, and an Annotated Appendix on the "Canto de Caliope." By JAMES FITZMAURICE KELLY.
Demy 8vo. [In a few days.]

THE REV. H. N. HUTCHINSON.

EXTINCT MONSTERS: a Popular
Account of some of the larger forms of Ancient Animal Life. By the Rev. H. N. HUTCHINSON. With numerous Illustrations by J. Smit and others, and a Preface by Dr. HENRY WOODWARD, F.R.S. Demy
8vo, 12s. [In a few days.]

C. A. STODDARD.

SPANISH CITIES: with Glimpses of Gibraltar and Tangiers. By C. A. STODDARD, Author of "Across Russia." With 18 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [This day.]

ANATOLE LEROY-BEAULIEU.

PAPACY, SOCIALISM, and DE-MOCRACY. By ANATOLE LEROY-BEAULIEU,
Member of the Institute of France. Translated by B. L.
O'DONNELL. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

CHARLES DIXON.

THE MIGRATION of BIRDS: an Attempt to Reduce Avian Season-Flight to Law. By CHARLES DIXON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

AN ENGLISHMAN in PARIS: Notes and Recollections during the Reign of Louis Philippe and the Empire. 2 vols. [Seventh Thousand this day.]

SAMUEL LAING.

HUMAN ORIGINS: Evidence from History and Science. By SAMUEL LAING, Author of "Modern Science and Modern Thought." With illustrations. [Seventh Thousand this day.]

PROBLEMS of the FUTURE, and ESSAYS. By SAMUEL LAING.
[Ninth Thousand this day.]

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

ELIZABETH GODFREY.

'TWIXT WOOD and SEA. By
ELIZABETH GODFREY. 3 vols., crown 8vo.
[This day.]

CAPTAIN L. ANDERSON.

THE STORY of ALLAN GORDON.
By Captain LINDSAY ANDERSON, Author of "A
Cruise in an Opium Clipper." Crown 8vo, 5s.
[This day.]

HANNAH LYNCH.

ROSIN HARVEY. By Hannah Lynch.
3 vols., crown 8vo. [Ready.]

PUSHKIN'S TALES.

THE QUEEN of SPADES, and other Stories. With a Biography. Translated from the Russian by Mrs. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HON. MARGARET COLLIER.

RACHEL and MAURICE, and other
Tales. By the Hon. MARGARET COLLIER. Crown
8vo, 3s. 6d. [This day.]

CHARLES BLATHERWICK.

IN the SHADE of SCHIEHALLION.
By CHARLES BLATHERWICK, Author of "Peter Ktounor." With 4 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 1s.

G. F. UNDERHILL.

IN and OUT of the PIGSKIN. By
G. F. UNDERHILL. With Illustrations. Crown
8vo, 1s.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1073.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

THE FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE BOOKS of CHRONICLES in RELATION to the PENTATEUCH and the "HIGHER CRITICISM." By the BISHOP of BATH and WELLS. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

DESCRIPTIVE LANTERN LECTURES on ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY. By Rev. C. ARTHUR LANE. A New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE GREEK DEVOTIONS of LANCELOT ANDREWS, BISHOP of WINCHESTER. From the Manuscript given by him to WILLIAM LAUD, afterwards ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY, and recently discovered. Edited by the Rev. Canon F. G. MEDD, M.A. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

THE CATHOLICOS of the EAST and his PEOPLE. Being the Impressions of Five Years' Work in the "Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission." By the Very Rev. A. J. MACLEAN and the Rev. W. H. BROWNE, LL.M. With Map and several Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

COLONIAL CHURCH HISTORIES: History of the Church in Eastern Canada and Newfoundland. By the Rev. J. LANGTRY. With Map. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

THE BOOK of the UNVEILING. Studies in the Revelation of St. John the Divine. By the AUTHOR of "THE CHRONICLES of the SCHÖNBERG-COTTA FAMILY." Printed in red and black. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

DORIS: an Idyl of Arcady. By Augustus Jessopp, D.D. 18mo, limp cloth, 6d.

CHRISTUS COMPROBATOR; or, the Testimony of Christ to the Old Testament. Seven Addresses by C. J. ELICOTT, D.D., Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE AUTHENTICITY of the GOSPEL of ST. LUKE: its Bearing upon the Evidences of the Truth of Christianity. Five Lectures by the BISHOP of BATH and WELLS. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

HANDY BOOK of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By Rev. E. L. CUTTS. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

A DICTIONARY of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Rev. E. L. CUTTS, Author of "Turning Points of Church History," &c. With numerous Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE BOOK GENESIS: a True History. The Book Genesis shown by comparison with the other Books of the Old Testament and Early Ancient Records to be a True History and the First Book of the Hebrew Revelation. By the Rev. F. WATSON, B.D. Post 8vo, cloth boards, red edges, 3s.

OUR WORSHIP. By the Rev. Prebendary Sadler, Author of "Church Doctrine, Bible Truth." Small post 8vo, cloth boards, red edges, 1s. 6d.

ROUND the ROUND WORLD on a CHURCH MISSION. By Rev. G. E. MASON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

OF the IMITATION of CHRIST. Four Books. By THOMAS A'KEMPIS. Fcap. 8vo, printed in red and black, half-bound, 2s. 6d.; limp Persian, 4s.; limp German calf, 5s.; vellum circuit, 6s. 8d.
A New Edition, based on the best Text, and without curtailment or modification.

HERBERT'S POEMS. New Edition in Red and Black. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

MONUMENTAL HISTORY of the EARLY BRITISH CHURCH. By ROMILLY ALLEN, Esq. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

CHURCH of ENGLAND (The Title Deeds of the). By the Rev. T. P. GARNIER. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THE PARABLES of the OLD TESTAMENT. By the Right Rev. ALFRED BARRY, D.D., D.C.L. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

THE PETRINE CLAIMS: a Critical Inquiry. By the late Rev. RICHARD F. LITTLEDALE, LL.D., D.C.L., Author of "Plain Reasons against Joining the Church of Rome," &c. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

A CHAPTER of ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY: being the Minutes of the S.P.C.K. for the Years 1698-1703. Together with Abstracts of Correspondents' Letters during part of the same period. Edited by the Rev. EDMUND McCURE, M.A., Editorial Secretary of the S.P.C.K. Demy 8vo, with a Woodcut, cloth boards, 5s.

MARTYRS and SAINTS of the FIRST TWELVE CENTURIES: Studies from the Lives of, the Black-Letter Saints of the English Calendar. By the AUTHOR of "THE SCHÖNBERG-COTTA FAMILY," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

STAR ATLAS. Gives all the Stars from 1 to 6.5 magnitude between the North Pole and 31° South Declination, and all Nebulae and Star Clusters which are visible in telescopes of moderate powers. Translated and adapted from the German of Dr. KLEIN, by the Rev. E. M. CLARE, M.A. New Edition, brought up to date. Imp. 4to, with 18 Charts and 80 pages Illustrative Letterpress. Cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

* It was by this Atlas that Dr. ANDERSON discovered the new Star in Auriga.

THE ROMANCE OF SCIENCE.

TIME. By Professor C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S.

OUR SECRET FRIENDS and FOES. By Professor Percy F. FRANKLAND, F.R.S.

THE MAKING of FLOWERS. By the Rev. Professor GEORGE HENSLOW, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COLOUR. By Captain Abney, F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COAL. By Professor R. Meldola. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Professor Marshall Ward. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. Second Edition, Revised. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S., Royal Astronomer of Ireland. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY of a TINDER-BOX. By the late Charles Meymott TIDY, M.B.M.S., F.C.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIRTH and GROWTH of WORLDS. A Lecture by Professor GREEN, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

SOAP BUBBLES, and the FORCES which MOULD THEM. Being a Course of Three Lectures delivered at the London Institution in December, 1889, and January, 1890, before a Juvenile Audience. By C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SPINNING TOPS. The Operatives' Lecture of the British Association Meeting at Leeds, September, 1890. By Professor J. PERRY, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

EARLY BRITAIN.

NORMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. W. Hunt. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ROMAN BRITAIN. By the Rev. Prebendary Scarth, Rector of Wington, Somerset. Fcap. 8vo, with Maps, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON BRITAIN. By Grant Allen, Esq., B.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"If any reader wishes to obtain, in a small compass, a general view of our Anglo-Saxon language, literature, and laws, he cannot do better than study this careful and conscientious epitome of those subjects."—Spectator.

CELTIC BRITAIN. By Professor Rhys. Fcap. 8vo, with Two Maps, cloth boards, 3s.

"Much instruction will be found in a small compass."—Daily Chronicle.

POST-NORMAN BRITAIN. Foreign Influences upon the History of England from the Accession of Henry II. to the Revolution of 1688. By HENRY G. HEWLETT. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

THE DAWN OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE.

FRENCH LITERATURE. By the late Gustave Masson, B.A., Assistant Master and Librarian of Harrow School. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ANGLO-SAXON LITERATURE. By the Rev. Prof. Earle. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SLAVONIC LITERATURE. By W. R. Morfill, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"His book will supply an admirable introduction to a systematic study of Slavonic literature."—Scotsman. * Others in preparation.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, CHARING CROSS, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 135, NORTH STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

THE LETTERS OF MISS JEWELL TO MRS. CARLYLE, by J. A. NORRIS	475
WILLIAM WATSON'S LACHRYMÆ MUSARUM, by MRS. TOMSON	476
JULIA CARTWRIGHT'S SACHARISSA, by W. P. COURTNEY	477
HAROLD FREDERIC'S THE NEW EXODUS, by J. G. C. MINCHIN	478
HAWKINS'S TRADE IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY, by C. H. GREENE	479
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	479
GILT BOOKS	481
NOTES AND NEWS	482
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	483
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	483
ORIGINAL VERSE: "ON MOLIERE, AFTER READING The Miserable ," by OLIVER ELTON	483
14 MEMORIAM: THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, by W. MERGER	483
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	483
CORRESPONDENCE— The New Greek Fragment of Enoch, by R. H. Charles; The Septuagint in the Masora, by G. Margoliouth; "English Verses," by R. Le Gallienne; The Uppingham Nettle-ship Memorial Fund, by the Rev. H. D. Rawnsley; "Florio's Montaigne," by David Nutt	484
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	485
MATHEMATICAL BOOKS	485
SCIENCE NOTES	486
PHILOLOGY NOTES	487
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	487
PERCY GARDNER'S NEW CHAPTERS IN GREEK HISTORY	488
THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB, by F. W.	488
OBITUARY: JAMES WILLIAM WILLY, by Prof. R. S. POOLE	489
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	489
DRAMATIC NOTES FROM PARIS, by CECEL NICHOLSON	490

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND

WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

UNIVERSITY TYPE-WRITING

OFFICE, OXFORD (16, King Edward Street).—MSS. of all descriptions typed and prepared for the press. Literary, Scientific, Medical, and Foreign MSS. carefully copied and revised by experienced typists. Notes taken at the lecture. Shorthand Clerk and Typist sent any distance by train. Translations.—For price list and information address the Secretary.

TYPEWRITING.—LADY seeks EM-

PLOYMENT, all kinds of Copying, Home Work. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words); for 5,000 words or over, 1s. per Thousand. Cash on or before delivery.—A. NIGHTINGALE, The Avenue, Stevenage.

MESSRS. JOSEPH HUGHES & CO.

require the services of an additional SHORTHAND WRITER, who must be an expert typist. Preference given to one who has had some press experience. Excellent character indispensable.—Apply by letter marked "Shorthand," stating salary required, to JOSEPH HUGHES & CO., Educational Publishers, Pilgrimage Street, Ludgate Hill, London.

AUTHORS, ACTORS, PUBLISHERS,

and PUBLIC SCHOOL MANAGERS should send MSS., Plays, Examination Papers, &c., requiring to be carefully and accurately typewritten, to RAYNE & CO., 39, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

LIBRARY of a COLLECTOR. Five Hundred Items of MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS (English and Foreign), CATALOGUE free, on Sale by ALFRED COOPER, 8, Hyde Street, London, W.C.

"FRANCESCA: Roadside Songs of Tuscany."—To Complete the Catalogue, OWNERS of DRAWINGS by MISS FRANCESCA ALEXANDER who have not already communicated them are respectfully REQUESTED to ADDRESS the SECRETARY of John Ruskin, Esq., Brautwood, Couston, Lancashire.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

LIVRES CURIEUX des XVe et XVIe

Siècles, traduits pour la première fois: l'Hermaphrodite de l'Anonima—Le Maréchal, comédie de P. Arctuno, &c.—Isidore LIEUX, 25, Rue Bonaparte, Paris.

Just issued.

CATALOGUE (82 pp.) of SECOND-

HAND BOOKS, comprising First Editions of Browning, Dickens, Dobson, Jeffries, Lang, Morris, Swinburne, Tennyson, Alpin and Mountaineering books, and Works illustrated by Craze, Caldecott, Cruikshank, Greenaway, Leech, Thomson, &c. Post free.

MATTHEWS & BROOKS, Sun Buildings, Bradford.

THE ARCHITECTURAL PUB-LICATION SOCIETY.

THE DICTIONARY OF ARCHITECTURE.

SUBSCRIBERS and others DESIROUS to COMPLETE their SETS by the acquisition of the later parts are requested to apply at once to Mr. ARTHUR CATES, Hon. Sec., No. 7, Whitehall Yard, S.W. A few complete copies are available for new subscribers.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.—The THIRTY-FIRST WINTER EXHIBITION will OPEN NOV. 28th. 5, Pall Mall East. From 10 till 5. Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d.

ALFRED D. FRITH, R.W.S., Secretary.

NOW READY, AT ALL THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

Medium 8vo, cloth, price 21s.; or bound in vellum, gilt top, 31s. 6d.

SHORT STALKS;

Or, Hunting Camps, North, East, South, and West.

By EDWARD NORTH BUXTON.

With numerous fine Illustrations by Whymper, Lodge, Wolf, &c.

Prospectus, with Specimen Illustrations, free on application.

CONTENTS.

Sardinia and its Wild Sheep—Recollections of Chamois Hunting—The Rocky Mountains—On the Rim of the Desert—The Elk—The Father of all the Goats—The Pyrenean Ibex—Bear Hunting—A Tantalising Quest—Reindeer Stalking—The Izzard—Peaks and Passes.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, S.W.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

All the Profits are divided among the Assured.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED, £4,000,000.

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.
PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with provision for Old Age.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

DEPARTMENT OF CIVIL, MECHANICAL, AND ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING.

No further entries of Day Student for the Engineering Laboratories or Drawing Office can be taken until next Session, when the number will be limited to Sixty. Applications for admission will be received up to September 30th, 1893. A Paper in Elementary Mathematics will be set for all candidates, except such as have passed the Victoria Preliminary or the London Matriculation, or other approved Examination. Those who have passed the Victoria Preliminary Examination will be in a position to proceed, if they so desire, to the B.Sc. Degree in Engineering (Honours or Pass). Prospectus may be obtained from the Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.—

The PROFESSORSHIP of HISTORY will be vacant at Christmas by the resignation of Professor Beesly.—Applications will be received up to NOVEMBER 30th. For further information apply to J. M. HORSBURGH, M.A., Secretary.

THE ART UNION of LONDON,

112, STRAND.

President: The EARL of DERBY, K.G. Established 1837. SUBSCRIBERS for the current year are entitled to an ORIGINAL ETCHING by ROBERT MACBETH, A.R.A., entitled "LATE for the FERRY," in addition to a chance of one out of many Valuable Prizes in Pictures, and other Works of Art. ORDINARY SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA. SUBSCRIPTIONS for PROOFS, SEVEN, FIVE, THREE, and TWO GUINEAS. The Society issues this year, to two states only, a Fine Mezzotint Engraving of Sir JOHN MULLAIS' Picture, "A SOUVENIR of VELASQUEZ." The Engravings and full particulars may be obtained at the Society's House, 112, Strand, London, W.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled:

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists, LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the House of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum. N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

THE CITY BRANCH

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

Is Now Removed from 2, King Street, Cheapside, to 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C. (MANSION HOUSE END).

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON; 241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEABLY.	HALF-YEABLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW VOLUME OF POEMS BY LORD TENNYSON.

THE DEATH OF OENONE, AKBAR'S DREAM, AND OTHER POEMS.By ALFRED LORD TENNYSON, Poet-Laurate.
Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 6s.THREE NEW NOVELS.*The HEIR-PRESUMPTIVE and the HEIR-APPARENT

By Mrs. OLIPHANT. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

DON ORSINO. By F. Marion Crawford. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.CALMIRE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.A new Novel which has already created a great sensation in America, where it has been described "as the greatest Novel in many respects which has appeared within the present decade."*

SECOND EDITION, WITH NEW PREFACE.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ARISTOTLE on the CONSTITUTION of ATHENS.

Translated and Annotated by E. POSTE, M.A., Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford.

CLASSICAL SERIES.—NEW VOLUMES.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth.

THE BACCHÆ of EURIPIDES. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by R. Y. TYRRELL, M.A., Professor of Greek in the University of Dublin. 3s. 6d.THUCYDIDES—BOOK VIII. Edited by T. G. Tucker, Litt.D., Professor of Classical Philology in the University of Melbourne. 3s. 6d.

FOR THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

THE APOCRYPHAL GOSPEL of PETER. The Greek

Text of the Newly Discovered Fragment. 8vo, paper covers, 1s.

[Early next week.]

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

EDEN, REMINGTON & CO.'S

NEW BOOKS,

At all Libraries, Booksellers, and Bookstalls.

THE VEILED HAND. By

FREDERICK WICKS, Author of "A Woman's Courage." With Illustrations by Jean de Paleologue. Large 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

Saturday Review says: "A new work by Mr. Wicks is an exception to the rule upon which the average modern novel is constructed. His plot, which is exceedingly ingenious, involves a wide variety of urgent topics, all of which Mr. Wicks treats with familiarity, shrewdness, and vivacity. In the matter of construction, 'The Veiled Hand' is extremely skilful."

BY ALBERT D. VANDAM.

MASTERPIECES of CRIME.

by the Author of "We Two at Monte Carlo," &c. Crown 8vo, 2s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A QUEEN OF CURDS AND CREAM."

ETELKA'S VOW. By DorotheaGERARD, Author of "Lady Baby," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. Academy says: "Miss Dorothea Gerard's Austrian stories are always welcome. 'Etelka's Vow' is a very readable and even engrossing tale."FOR the SAKE of the FAMILY.

By MAY CROMMELIN. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Sunday Sun says: "Very few novels, nowadays, can bear reading a second time, but this one will bear it more than once."SHAKSPEARE'S KNOW- LEDGE and USE of the BIBLE. By CHAS. WORDSWORTH, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of St. Andrews. Fourth Edition, Revised. Bound in cloth, 5s.; calf, 8s.

Mr. HALLIWELL PHILLIPS says: "A book which is, to my thinking, the most able and important volume ever printed about Shakspeare."

EDEN, REMINGTON & CO., London and Sydney

THE KELMSCOTT PRESS

OF

MR. WILLIAM MORRIS.CAXTON'S GOLDEN LEGEND. 3 vols. 4to, richly illustrated, by W. MORRIS and BURNES JONES. Boards, £10 10s.

BERNARD QUARITCH, 15, PICCADILLY, LONDON.

CAXTON'S REUYELL of the HISTORIES of TROYE. 2 vols., 4to. With Woodcut Capitals and other Embellishments. Vellum, £10 10s.

A new Edition of this, the first book printed in the English Language.

BERNARD QUARITCH, 15, PICCADILLY, LONDON.

CAXTON'S HISTORIE of REYNARD the FOXE. 1 vol., 4to, Woodcut Capitals, by MORRIS. Vellum. Subscription price, £3 3s.

BERNARD QUARITCH, 15, PICCADILLY, LONDON.

Books from the Kelmescott Press at Hammsmith are steadily rising in price, and ere long they will be out of print. B. QUARITCH.

NEW WORK BY PROF. A. R. BRUCE, D.D.

This Day is Published, in Post 8vo, Price 10s. 6d.

A P O L O G E T I C S ;

CHRISTIANITY DEFENSIVELY STATED.

By

Professor A. R. BRUCE, D.D.

"It is an apologetic presentation of the Christian faith with reference to whatever in our intellectual environment makes faith difficult at the present time."—Extract from the Preface.

Being the Third Volume of the International Theological Library.

Ready Next Week, in Two Volumes, 8vo, Price 18s. net.

OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY.

THE RELIGION of REVELATION in its PRE-CHRISTIAN STAGE of DEVELOPMENT.

By Professor H. SCHULTZ, D.D., Gottingen.

Authorized English Translation

By Professor JAS. A. PATTERSON, M.A., Edinburgh.

(Revised by the Author)

EDINBURGH: T. & T. CLARK, 28, GEORGE STREET.

To be had from all Booksellers.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.SECOND AND CHEAPER EDITION.

In tasteful crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

PEASANT SPEECH OF DEVON.

A Collection of Characteristic Words and Phrases in Use in the Rural Districts of Devonshire. With Dialogues, Letters, Anecdote, Poems, and Proverbs. By SARAH HEWETT.

"A very good volume, and conveys a great deal of useful knowledge." Saturday Review.

In tasteful crown 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d., post free.

BENEATH HELVELLYN'S SHADE:

Notes and Sketches in the Valley of Wythburn. By SAMUEL BARBER.

"Abounds in well-written description of scenery, and conveys a deal of information of the most varied kind."—Glasgow Herald.

In handsome crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

"THE LONE STAR OF LIBERIA."

Being the Outcome of Reflections on our Own People. By FREDERICK ALEXANDER DURHAM, an African of Lincoln's Inn (Student-at-Law). With an Introduction by MADAME LA COMTESSE G. HUGO.

"A remarkable book. Not only written with ability, but it presents definite opinions and theories from a quarter that has hitherto been almost silent in the great controversy of White versus Black." *Morning Post.*CHEAPER EDITION. In crown 8vo, tastefully bound in parchment, price 2s.THE LOVE-SONG OF BARBARA.

A Narrative Poem of London Life. By CHARLES JOSEPH WHITBY.

"Deserves strong commendation on account of the correctness of its metrical form, the elegance of the diction, and the chaste character of some of the imaginative passages." *Public Opinion.*CHEAPER EDITION. In handsome crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.LYRICS FROM THE HILLS.

By Rev. CHARLES A. FOX.

"With an ardent love of Nature, he combines the power of stimulating the fancy of others by a lively play of imagery, which ennobles while it fascinates. He holds the creative faculty in active exercise, which originates all possible conceptions of loveliness of shape, and clothes them with a beauty of expression which educates the soul for the higher mission, not only of living, but of living above the earthliness of a lower existence."—Rock.

Crown 8vo, 343 pp., cloth, gilt lettered, 5s.

DAY DAWN, CONSOLATION,

And other Poems. By J. MELLOR.

The Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE:—"I thank you much for your kindness in sending me your Book of Consolations, and thus directing me to the only source from which effectual support is to be had in the short passages of life."

The Rev. ALEX. J. HARRISON, B.D., Vicar of Lightcliffe:—"From the first page to the last I have found nothing but the loftiest Christian sentiment expressed with a joyous fervour of expression that is itself inspiring."

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER-ROW, E.C.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

FICTION.

Messrs. METHUEN beg to announce that they are about to publish a SECOND EDITION of Mr. NORRIS'S New Novel, "HIS GRACE," which can be obtained at all Libraries.

NORRIS.—HIS GRACE. By W. E. NORRIS, Author of "Mdlle. de Mersac," "Marcia," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"For the combination of high literary qualities which Mr. Norris possesses, a pure, refined, and scholarly style, unaffected pathos, gentle cynicism, and stimulating aperçus of society, we must go back to the most eminent of his predecessors."

"The characters are delineated by the author with his characteristic skill and vivacity, and the story is told with that ease of manner and Thackerayan insight which give strength of flavour to Mr. Norris's novels. No one can depict the English woman of the better classes with more subtlety."—Glasgow Herald.

"Mr. Norris has drawn a really fine character in the Duke of Hurstbourne, at once unconventional and very true to the conventionalities of life, weak and strong in a breath, capable of insane follies and of heroic decisions, yet not so definitely portrayed as to relieve a reader of the necessity of study on his own behalf. In this story Mr. Norris contrives to be as common-sense, as perspicacious, as cynically humorous, and as pleasantly readable as he has ever been."—Athenæum.

PARKER.—PIERRE and his PEOPLE. By GILBERT PARKER. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

"His style of portraiture is always effectively picturesque and sometimes finely imaginative....the fine art which is only achieved by the combination of perfect vision and beautifully adequate rendering. Mr. Parker is an addition of no small value to the number of those writers in whose hands the short story is a thing of permanent beauty and value."—Daily Chronicle.

"Stories happily conceived and finely executed. There is strength and genius in Mr. Parker's style."—Daily Telegraph.

BARING-GOULD.—THE TRAGEDY of the CAESARS: The Emperors of the Julian and Claudian Lines. With numerous Illustrations from Busts, Gems, Cameos, &c. By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of "Mehalah," &c. 2 vols., royal 8vo, 30s.

This book is the only one in English which deals with the personal history of the Caesars, a subject which, for picturesque detail and sombre interest, is not rivalled by any work of fiction. The volumes are copiously illustrated.

BARING-GOULD.—SURVIVALS and SUPERSTITIONS. With 61 Illustrations. By S. BARING-GOULD. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A book on such subjects as Foundations, Gables, Holes, Gallows, Raising the Hat, Old Ballads, &c.

PERRENS.—THE HISTORY of FLORENCE from the TIME of the MEDICIS to the FALL of the REPUBLIC. By F. T. PERRENS. Translated by HANNAH LYNCH. In 3 vols. Vol. I. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

This is a translation from the French of the best history of Florence in existence. This volume covers a period of profound interest—political and literary—and is written with great vivacity.

DRIVER.—SERMONS on SUBJECTS CONNECTED with the OLD TESTAMENT. By S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Canon of Christ Church, Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 8s.

An important volume of sermons on Old Testament Criticism preached before the University by the Author of "An Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament."

"This volume will attract attention both on account of the author's name and the subjects of which it treats. Dr. Driver is not only thoroughly acquainted with the literature of the various topics under discussion, but is always deeply reverential, studiously fair to those who differ from him, and writes so clearly and forcibly as to make his meaning unmistakable and his discourses full of interest."—Scotsman.

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., Oulens, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided as ca "looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence,

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

PROF. LOISSET'S DISCOVERIES. THE PHYSIOLOGICAL ART OF NEVER FORGETTING—unlike mnemonics, Lo's memories restored—the worst made good, and the best better. For book learned in one reading. Speaking without notes. A self-teaching method for all subjects. Invaluable to the Legal, Medical, Clerical, Musical, Dramatic, and all other Professions and Businesses. Last Edition contains ONE THOUSAND APPLICATIONS.

MEMORY AND SUCCESS

PROSPICUOUS POST FREE. With opinions of Mr. R. A. PROCTOR, DR. ANDREW WILSON, &c. Great inducements to Correspondence Classes in NEVER FORGETTING and CURE FOR MIND WANDERING. Also taught in Classes or Privately at the address below. PROF. LOISSETTE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

Now ready, price 10s. 6d., to be had at all Libraries.

ANTHEA. A True Story of the Greek War of Independence. By CECILE CASSAVATI (a Russian). CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

Twenty-ninth Edition. Post free.

BLUSHING: Its Cause, Self-Treatment, and a Rapid, Permanent, and Inexpensive Cure. Varnhagen's System Explained by a Specialist. A. B. SMITH, 131, High Park Street, Liverpool.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London. THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand. TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE GUINEAS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE, SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS and POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also, ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA, TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

THE

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS

This Series of Manuals is now being published by Mr. MURRAY, under the Editorship of Professor KNIGHT, of St. Andrews University, to meet the growing want of the University Extension Movement, and the remarkable success achieved by those volumes already issued proves that this want has been met in a satisfactory manner. Each subject has been undertaken by some recognised expert, and the prices of the volumes have been fixed at as low a rate as is consistent with excellence of workmanship on the part both author and printer.

The following is a list of the Volumes now ready:—

THE STUDY of ANIMAL LIFE. By J. ARTHUR THOMSON, University of Edinburgh. 80 Illustrations. 5s.

"The University Extension student is greatly to be congratulated on the high quality of the educational material supplied to him. The 'Study of Animal Life' is an able account of the principal facts and theories of zoology written in a style which is too seldom met with in books of this kind. Mr. Arthur Thomson has shown that it is quite possible to combine a pleasant way of writing with due attention to the more serious matter treated of."—Saturday Review.

"To accurate observation and scientific knowledge he has added the charms of a graceful literary style, and a plebeian artistic faculty."—46 rules. Free Press.

"May be cordially recommended."—Nature.

THE REALM of NATURE: a Manual.

of Physiography. By HUGH ROBERT MILL, D.Sc., University of Edinburgh, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. With 19 Coloured Maps and 68 Illustrations. 5s.

"A well-produced and most instructive manual of physiography."—Tablet.

"The book is fully illustrated, chiefly by new diagrams, and there are nineteen beautiful maps, which have been specially prepared by Mr. Bartholomew, whose competence for such work is well known. These maps form an important feature of the book, and illustrate, amongst other things, earthquake regions, isotherms, rainfall, and the evolution of continents. The whole book shows signs of the greatest possible care in preparation, and it is not an easy matter to suggest improvement. It is a very valuable contribution to the literature of the subject."—Nature.

ENGLISH COLONISATION and EMPIRE.

By A. CALDECOTT, Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. With Coloured Maps and Plans. 3s. 6d.

"The book, as a whole, is excellent. Maps are plentiful, and with the aid of diagrams, present in the clearest possible light the extraordinary growth of our Empire and trade."—Cambridge Review. "Alike in execution and design it is well-nigh irreproachable."—Colonies and India.

THE FINE ARTS.

By Prof. Baldwin BROWN, University of Edinburgh. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

"We must express our gratification that the subject of the Fine Arts in this series of University Extension Manuals should have been placed in such good hands, and treated in so clear and logical a manner, and in such a comprehensive and philosophic spirit."—Bulwer.

THE ELEMENTS of ETHICS.

By JOHN H. MURHEAD, Balliol College, Oxford. 3s.

"An admirable introduction to the ethics of idealism, and has nearly all the qualities of a first-rate text-book. It is an accurate, clear, proportionate, and very complete response to the results achieved by this school of thinkers."—International Journal of Ethics.

"The want, which all teachers of moral philosophy have so long deplored, of some book which they can place in the hands of beginners, now no longer can be alleged....The book covers exactly the right ground, and directs attention to the really important points."—Academy.

THE USE and ABUSE of MONEY.

By Dr. W. CUNNINGHAM, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Professor of Economic Science, King's College, London. 3s.

"The best that has yet appeared in this series, careful in style as in thought."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"To bring political economy down from the region of abstraction as Dr. Cunningham does, and to make it applicable to individual conduct, is not only perfectly legitimate, but a most fruitful and useful form of study. The whole book is worth reading, but especially the last chapters."—British Weekly.

The PHILOSOPHY of the BEAUTIFUL

By Professor KNIGHT, University of St. Andrews. 3s. 6d.

"Of great value to the student who desires to form a general idea and conception of the subject."—Literary Churchman. "All will learn much from Professor Knight, whose knowledge especially of recent English and American literature is remarkably complete."—Manchester Guardian.

FRENCH LITERATURE.

By H. G. KEENE, Wadham College, Oxford, Fellow of the University of Calcutta. 3s.

"Mr. Keene proves his fitness for the task he has undertaken not only by the thorough mastery of his subject he everywhere displays, but also by the agreeable manner in which he makes his stores of knowledge available for his readers."—Practical Teacher.

"The only history of the literature of France in English worthy of a place beside the masterly work of Mr. Saintsbury."—Journal of Education (U.S.A.).

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S STANDARD BOOKS.

BY LORD MACAULAY.

HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Accession of James the Second.

POPULAR EDITION, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 5s.
STUDENT'S EDITION, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.
PEOPLE'S EDITION, 4 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.
CABINET EDITION, 8 vols., post 8vo, £2 8s.
LIBRARY EDITION, 5 vols., 8vo, £4.

CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS.

STUDENT'S EDITION, 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
PEOPLE'S EDITION, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 8s.
TREVELYAN EDITION, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 9s.
CABINET EDITION, 4 vols., post 8vo, 24s.
LIBRARY EDITION, 3 vols., 8vo, 36s.

CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS. With

LAYS of ANCIENT ROME. Complete in 1 vol.
AUTHORISED EDITION, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.; or 3s. 6d., gilt edges.
POPULAR EDITION, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
"SILVER LIBRARY" EDITION, with Portrait and Illustrations to the "Lays," crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LAYS of ANCIENT ROME, &c.

Illustrated by G. Scharf, fcap. 4to, 10s. 6d.
Bijou Edition, 18mo, 2s. 6d., gilt top.
Popular Edition, fcap. 4to, 6d., sewed; 1s., cloth.
Illustrated by J. R. Weguelin, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth extra, gilt edges.
Cabinet Edition, post 8vo, 3s. 6d.
Annotated Edition, fcap. 8vo, 1s., sewed; 1s. 6d., cloth.

COMPLETE WORKS of LORD MACAULAY.

LIBRARY EDITION, 8 vols., 8vo, £5 5s.
CABINET EDITION, 18 vols., post 8vo, £4 16s.

BY JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE.

HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Fall of Wolsey to the Defeat of the Spanish Armada. 12 vols., crown 8vo, 42s.

THE DIVORCE of CATHERINE of ARAGON;
The Story as told by the Imperial Ambassadors resident at the Court of Henry VIII. 8vo, 16s.

THE SPANISH STORY of the ARMADA; and other Essays, Historical and Descriptive. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The ENGLISH in IRELAND in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

SHORT STUDIES on GREAT SUBJECTS.
Cabinet Edition, 4 vols., crown 8vo, 24s. Popular Edition, 4 vols., cr. 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

CÆSAR: a Sketch. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THOMAS CARLYLE: a History of his Life. 1795-1835, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 7s. 1834-1881, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 7s.

BY WILLIAM E. H. LECKY.

The HISTORY of ENGLAND in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. Library Edition, 8 vols., 8vo, £7 4s.

CABINET EDITION, 12 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each (England, 7 vols.; Ireland, 5 vols. In course of publication in Monthly Volumes) England, Vols. I.-VII.; Ireland, Vols. I.-IV., now ready.

HISTORY of EUROPEAN MORALS, from AUGUSTUS to CHARLEMAGNE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

HISTORY of the RISE and INFLUENCE of the SPIRIT of RATIONALISM in EUROPE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 16s.

BY SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER.

HISTORY of ENGLAND, from the Accession of James I. to the Outbreak of the Civil War, 1603-1642. 10 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each.

THE STUDENT'S HISTORY of ENGLAND.

Vol. I., B.C. 55—A.D. 1509, with 173 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 4s. Vol. II. (1509-1689), with 96 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 4s. Vol. III. (1689-1835), with 109 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 4s. COMPLETE IN ONE VOLUME. With 378 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 12s.

A SCHOOL ATLAS of ENGLISH HISTORY: a Companion Atlas to Gardiner's Student's History of England. With 66 Maps and 22 Plans of Battles, &c. Fcap. 4to, 5s.

BY LADY VERNEY.

MEMOIRS of the VERNEY FAMILY during the CIVIL WAR. Compiled from the Letters and Illustrated by the Portraits at Claydon House, Bucks. With a Preface by S. R. GARDINER, M.A., LL.D. With 38 Portraits, Woodcuts, and Facsimile. 2 vols., royal 8vo, 42s.

BY SIR ERSKINE MAY.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ENGLAND, since the Accession of George III., 1760-1870. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

BY THE REV. J. FRANCK BRIGHT, D.D.

A HISTORY of ENGLAND. 4 vols., crown 8vo.

Period I.—MEDIEVAL MON-ARCHY: the Departure of the Romans to Richard III. From A.D. 449 to 1485. 4s. 6d. Period III.—CONSTITUTIONAL MONARCHY: William and Mary to William IV. From 1689 to 1837. Price 7s. 6d.

Period II.—PERSONAL MON-ARCHY: Henry VII. to James II. From 1485 to 1688. 5s. Period IV.—THE GROWTH of DEMOCRACY: Victoria. From 1837 to 1880. 6s.

BY THE RIGHT HON. A. H. DYKE AGLAND, M.P., AND CYRIL RANSOME, M.A.

A HANDBOOK in OUTLINE of the POLITICAL HISTORY of ENGLAND to 1880. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BY EDWARD A. FREEMAN.

HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY of EUROPE. With 65 Maps. 2 vols., 8vo, 31s. 6d.

BY J. H. ROUND.

GEOFFREY de MANDEVILLE: a Study of the Anarchy. 8vo, 16s.

BY EVELYN ABBOTT.

A HISTORY of GREECE. Part I.—From the Earliest Times to the Ionian Revolt. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. Part II. 500-445 B.C. 10s. 6d.

BY HENRY THOMAS BUCKLE.

HISTORY of CIVILISATION in ENGLAND and FRANCE, SPAIN and SCOTLAND. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

BY SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, BART.

THE ORIGIN of CIVILISATION and the PRIMITIVE CONDITION of MAN. With 5 Plates and 20 Illustrations in the Text. 8vo, 18s.

BY HEINRICH EWALD.

THE HISTORY of ISRAEL. 8 vols., 8vo. Vols. I. and II., 21s.; Vols. III. and IV., 21s.; Vol. V., 18s.; Vol. VI., 16s.; Vol. VII., 21s.; Vol. VIII., 18s.

BY P. M. ROGET, M.D.

THESAURUS of ENGLISH WORDS and PHRASES, Classified and Arranged so as to Facilitate the Expression of Ideas and Assist in Literary Composition. Recompiled throughout, Enlarged and Improved, partly from the Author's Notes, and with a full Index, by the Author's Son, JOHN LEWIS ROGET. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BY JOHN STUART MILL.

PRINCIPLES of POLITICAL ECONOMY.

LIBRARY EDITION, 2 vols., 8vo, 30s. | PEOPLE'S EDITION, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A SYSTEM of LOGIC. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BY ALEXANDER BAIN.

MENTAL and MORAL SCIENCE. Cr. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE SENSES and the INTELLECT. 8vo, 15s.

THE EMOTIONS and the WILL. 8vo, 15s.

PRACTICAL ESSAYS. Crown 8vo, 2s.

LOGIC, DEDUCTIVE and INDUCTIVE.

Part I. DEDUCTION. 4s. | Part II. INDUCTION. 6s. 6d.

BY PROFESSOR BECKER.

GALLUS; or, Roman Scenes of the Time of Augustus. With 23 Wood Engravings. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

CHARICLES; or, Illustrations of the Private Life of the Ancient Greeks. With 15 Wood Engravings. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

BY ALFRED H. HUTH.

THE MARRIAGE of NEAR KIN, considered with respect to the Law of Nations, the Result of Experience, and the Teachings of Biology. Royal 8vo, 21s.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY.

MEMOIRS of EIGHTY YEARS.

By GORDON HAKE. Including Recollections and Anecdotes of many Eminent Persons. 1 vol, demy 8vo, 15s.

NOW READY.

THE LIFE of JOHN LINNELL.

By ALFRED T. STORY. With Numerous Illustrations from paintings or sketches by Linnell. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

NOW READY.

CHARLES KNIGHT : a Memoir.

By his Grand-daughter, ALICE A. CLOWES. With Two Portraits. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 12s.

NOW READY.

RED-LETTER DAYS of MY

LIFE. Reminiscences and Anecdotes of many Persons of Note. By CORNELIA A. H. GROSSE, Author of "Memorials of Andrew Crosse, the Electrician." 2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.

NOW READY.

EGYPT TO-DAY. From the

First to the Third Khedive. By W. FRASER RAE. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 16s.

NOW READY.

IN SAVAGE ISLES AND

SETTLED LANDS. A Record of Personal Experiences in 1888-91. By B. F. S. BADEN-POWELL, Scots Guards, F.R.G.S. With Maps and numerous Illustrations from Sketches by the Author. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 21s.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

THIRD EDITION.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "COMETH UP AS A FLOWER."

MRS. BLIGH. By Rhoda Brough-

TON, Author of "Good-bye, Sweetheart," "Nancy," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH."

GOD'S FOOL. By Maarten

MAARTENS, Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MY STEWARDSHIP."

THE STEP-SISTERS. By E.

McQUEEN GRAY, Author of "Elsa." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS."

SIR GODFREY'S GRAND-

DAUGHTERS. By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY, Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW EDITION.

CLEVEDEN. By Mary Linskill

("Stephen Yorke"), Author of "Between the Heather and the Northern Sea," and "The Haven Under the Hill." 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin's New Books.

NOW READY.

PABLO DE SEGOVIA:

The Adventures of a Spanish Sharpshooter. By FRANCISCO DE QUEVEDO. Illustrated with over 100 Drawings by DANIEL VIERGE. With an Introduction on "Vierge and his Art," by JOSEPH PENNELL; and "A Critical Essay on Quevedo and his Writings," by H. E. WATTS. Super royal 4to, bound in parchment, old style (limited edition only), £3 13s. 6d. n-l. Also 10 copies numbered and signed, with India proof Illustrations, £15 15s. each.

ILLUSTRATED BY JOSEPH PENNELL.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. Described by Mrs. VAN RENSSELAER, and illustrated by Joseph Pennell. Royal 8vo, cloth elegant, 25s. Also an Edition de Luxe, in 2 vols., 20 sets only being for sale in England; size, 10in. by 14in.; printed on fine plate-paper; the Illustrations from the Original Wood-Blocks, the Full-Page ones, and the Seals of the Cathedrals (printed in appropriate Colours) on Separate Sheets; each Copy Signed. Price £6 6s. each.

"A charming account, charmingly illustrated."—Times.

FOR LOVERS OF THE FINE ARTS.

OLD ITALIAN MASTERS. By

W. J. STILLMAN. Engravings and Notes by T. COLÉ. Royal 8vo, cloth, elegant, price £2 2s. Also an Edition de Luxe, in two portfolios; size, 13in. by 18in.; printed on India paper, text bound separately; hand-pulled Proofs of the 68 Illustrations from the Original Wood-Blocks, printed on Japan paper, and mounted on thick Japan mat-paper, and Signed by the Engraver and Printer; the Illustrations have Outline at foot, showing tale of picture. Price £30. This Edition is limited to 125 Copies, 12 only being for sale in England.

"The greatest series of wood-engravings in ancient or modern times."—Daily Chronicle.

AN EXHAUSTIVE LIFE OF COWPER.

THE LIFE of WILLIAM COWPER.

By THOMAS WRIGHT, Principal of Cowper School, Olney. Author of "The Town of Cowper," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. With 21 Full-page Illustrations. Also an Edition de Luxe (the number of which is strictly limited), printed on Dutch hand-made paper, and bound in parchment, price 30s. net.

"Mr. Wright has not only concentrated in his biography all that is best in the work of his predecessors, but has added a great deal that is new and strange.... This loving and minute record."—Daily Chronicle.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE'S LIFE.

SIXTY YEARS of an AGITATOR'S

LIFE: the Autobiography of GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE. In 2 vols., with Photogravure Frontispiece Portrait to each, demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"These interesting volumes, which form a solid contribution to the history of English reform."—Daily Telegraph.

The "INDEPENDENT NOVEL" Series

Under this title Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN is issuing a New SERIES of ORIGINAL NOVELS, English and Continental. Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

1. THE SHIFTING of the FIRE.

By FORD H. HUEFFER.

"There is no question whatever as to the cleverness of 'The Shifting of the Fire.'"—Academy.

2. A PHANTOM from the EAST.

By PIERRE LOTI.

[Ready.]

3. JEAN DE KERDREN.

By PHILIPPE ST. HILAIRE.

[Just Published.]

IN THE PRESS.

4. POOR LADY MASSEY. By H. RUTHERFORD RUSSELL.

5. STORIES from GARSCHINE. With Introduction by STEPANIAC

LONDON :

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY beg to announce that the important and superbly illustrated book, "THE CAPITALS OF THE WORLD," with introduction by H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L., will be ready on MONDAY NEXT.

Two Volumes, handsomely bound in half-morocco, bevelled boards, leather back, with gilt lettering on back and sides, and gilt edges. Price THREE GUINEAS NET. An Illustrated Prospectus sent post free on application.

TALES of ADVENTURE and STORIES

of TRAVEL of FIFTY YEARS AGO. Edited by JOSEPH CUNDALL. Illustrated with Twenty Plates from "The Annuals." Large post 8vo, half-leather, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA.

By JAMES DOUGLAS. Dedicated to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. With Maps and Plans, 13 Full-page Photogravures, Colotype Reproductions from Old Documents, a Coloured Reproduction of an Old Picture, and over 100 other Text Illustrations. 2 vols., super royal 8vo, cloth extra gilt top, £2 2s. net. [Next week.]

A FLOAT and ASHORE on the MEDITERRANEAN. By LEE MERIWETHER, Author of "How to See Europe on Fifty Cents a Day," &c. Crown 8vo, with numerous Full-page Illustrations, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"SHEPHERD" SMITH, the UNI-

VERSALIST: the Story of a Mind. Being a Life of JAMES E. SMITH, M.A. By W. ANDERSON SMITH. With Photogravure Portrait and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

FIFTH EDITION IN PREPARATION.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwalder, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan, who recently escaped, with two Sisters of Mercy, on Camels, from the Sudan. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A. Illustrated by Photographs, Maps, &c. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

STORIES TOLD in an AFRICAN

FOREST by GROWN-UP CHILDREN of AFRICA. By A. J. MOUNTENEY JEPHSON, one of Mr. Stanley's officers, and Author of "Emin Pasha and the Rebellion at the Equator." With numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Walter W. Buckley. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

ARTISTIC TRAVEL: a Thousand

Miles towards the Sun. NORMANDY, BRITANNY, the PYRENEES, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. By HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Academy Notes," Author of "The Memoir of Randolph Caldecott," &c. With 130 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

"A most agreeable and handsome record of diversified voyages in search of the picturesque."—Daily Telegraph.

HOLIDAY WANDERINGS in

MADEIRA. By A. E. W. MARSH. With many Full-page and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A pleasant record of a happy time."—Daily Telegraph.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT in OLD

ENGLISH VERSE. By Rev. C. J. ABBEY, Rector of Checkendon, Oxon. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Mr. Abbey brings to his task the three essential qualifications of fine poetic sensibility, genuine piety, and extensive theological learning."—Times.

"Must be bought, kept, and loved."—Daily Chronicle.

Three New Novels, at all Libraries.

WOLFENBERG.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE MYSTERY of ST. DUNSTAN'S:

a Realistic and Sensational Story of Fleet Street in 1724. By THOMAS WRIGHT, Author of "The Life of William Cowper," &c. Two vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"The scenes of the story are laid round about the old church of St. Dunstons, whose famous clock with moving figures of savages was one of the sights of by-gone London. The story, in the main, is a perfectly true one, being founded on the account of a 'Remarkable Trial for Murder,' recorded in the new London Magazine for 1785." [Next week.]

THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER. By

AMELIA E. BARR, Author of "Jan Vadder's Wife," "Friend Olivia," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. [Next week.]

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1892.

No. 1073, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Selections from the Letters of Geraldine Endors Jewsbury to Jane Welsh Carlyle. Edited by Mrs. Alexander Ireland. With a monograph [sic] on Miss Jewsbury. (Longmans.)

THERE seems to have been some rather profitless discussion on the question whether Mrs. Ireland was justified in publishing the letters contained in this interesting volume. Such a controversy is of interest to professional scribes, as providing handy material for "copy"; but it lacks interest for every one else, because there are no data whatever for fruitful argumentation. All we know (and we know that only because Mrs. Ireland has told us) is that Mrs. Carlyle objected to the preservation of her own share in the correspondence, and that at her desire her letters were destroyed. It is of course possible that Miss Jewsbury might have expressed a similar objection and desire; but as there is no evidence of such expression, it is not easy to see any ground for an imputation upon the editor, especially in the face of the fact that there is nothing in the letters themselves that can be said to betray any confidence or to violate any rightful reserve. Mrs. Ireland has, indeed, been almost whimsically and over-scrupulously careful in her regard for these proprieties. Some of her pages are literally peppered with dashes, in the place of proper names which, in the majority of cases, might have been left as they were written without the faintest chance of their being found annoying or offensive to any human being. Of course the error is on the right side; but it sometimes becomes rather irritating to read that Miss Jewsbury has been to see —, or that — is coming to see her; and when we are told that — is "a good old lady," we can see no reason why the old lady's goodness, if chronicled at all, should not be immortalised in connexion with her name. The discreet dash is not always of service even for purposes of concealment, for it is very often used when it is obvious that Miss Jewsbury wrote "Carlyle"; and occasionally it deprives a passage of all interest save to the initiated—as, for instance, in the letter where we read: "How is —? I want to know whether any mischief has followed the opening of his letters." What proportion of the readers of the book will understand that the reference is to a no less famous man than Mazzini, whose correspondence, it will be remembered, was detained and opened by the then Postmaster-general, Sir James Graham?

In every other respect Mrs. Ireland has performed her sympathetic task most admirably, and all will agree that it was a task worth performing. The introductory memoir is full of fine, tender appreciation of Geraldine Jewsbury the woman, and its effect is not marred by over-charged laudation of Geraldine Jewsbury the professional writer. Mrs. Ireland evidently recognises the fact that, while there was much in several of Miss Jewsbury's books—especially in The Sorrows of Gentility—which was bright and pleasing, there was also much that was crude, and little or nothing that can be described as in any way remarkable. The publication of this volume is therefore not merely an addition to the good things of the world, but an act of justice to Miss Jewsbury's reputation, for she has left behind her no literary performance by which she is so brightly and charmingly represented. No one perhaps will ever give a wholly adequate explanation of the fact that the letters of women are so immeasurably superior to the letters of men, unless, indeed, the latter are men like Cowper, who have in their nature a strong element of femininity; but there is one significant consideration which has not always received the attention which it deserves. The kind of composition which is universally recognised as an approximation to the ideal of letter-writing is the realisable presentation of a personality, rather than the attractive treatment of a topic; and a woman's realisation of her own personality is much more vivid than a man's. A man, as a rule, shrinks from writing except when, as he would put it, he has "something to say"; and his letter, like a tendency-novel, is written "with a purpose." A woman, on the contrary, finds purpose enough in the simple satisfaction of the impulse to self-expression; and even when she has a topic, her personality will play round it, not for the sake of the topic, but for the sake of the play. Thus, she is garrulously elaborate when a man would be concise or allusive: she deals not with the object as it is in itself, but with the object as it is to her, and it delights rather than wearies her to turn the mirror of her own sensibility in all directions so that no angle of reflection may be missed. A typical woman's letter is, therefore, less of a literary structure than of a living organism: "cut it," as Emerson says in an often-quoted sentence, "and it will bleed." If, in addition to an interesting personality and a fine expressional gift, a woman can contribute intellectual substance, body of thought—of which there is no lack in the letters of Miss Jewsbury—there is an added attraction; but the central charm is still a charm of nature, the delight is that of human companionship rather than of mere literary converse.

Miss Jewsbury's nature, her inborn bent of thought and feeling, is somewhat tantalisingly elusive, and possibly more interesting in virtue of its elusiveness. She is so many things by turns, and it seems impossible to put the finger down on this or that passage and say, "Here is the undisguised woman." She writes of herself, "It is no good your getting up a theory about me.

I was born to drive theories and rules to distraction, and I want to beat yours to powder and then stamp upon it." The probability is that, so far as the visible externals of personality were concerned, Miss Jewsbury was a chameleon-like person who unconsciously assumed something of the local colour of her environment. As a matter of curiosity, it would be very interesting to read a collection of her letters to some other correspondent, and to note the difference of tone and handling which one feels certain would be discernible. Many of the letters in this volume are, in feeling not less than in treatment, so like the letters of Mrs. Carlyle herself that, were they submitted to a literary expert as nameless compositions the authorship of which was to be identified by internal evidence alone, he would with little hesitation assign them to the femme incomprise of Chelsea. They have much of Mrs. Carlyle's sparkling insouciance and chilly radiance; of that impatience with the fortitudes and stupidities of life, that was only kept in check by a grimly self-conscious stoicism; of that feverish gaiety which rioted rather than rippled into expression; and of that reserve of tenderness which was kept in restraint as if it were some wild dangerous passion, and when let loose seemed like an escaped tiger—half delighted, half terrified to find itself free. It is obviously impossible in a brief notice to illustrate by quotation all these curious correspondences; but here is one of Miss Jewsbury's many little character sketches which every reader of her novels will feel to be in an acquired rather than a native manner:

"—s wife, poor thing, is still in the asylum, and very little chance she will ever be well enough to come out. I have bestowed a great deal of comfort and sympathy upon him, but he is one of those 'who, with the best intentions, are always unfortunate,' and I am got to the rag-end of my powers of commiseration. He seems to run a neck-and-neck race with Fortune and lose it by a quarter of an inch. It goes through everything. He has had some of his patent pumps (which another would make a fortune out of) made without seeing to his patent right, and has so ingeniously contrived it as not to be able to obtain legal redress. The other day we invited him to dinner, and I had gone down to the kitchen and skinned and cut up the fowl for the curry with my own imperial hands, and helped to concoct the lemon pudding besides. Well, though he had ample notice, he contrived to get involved in another dinner engagement, and so spoiled both! He hammers, blundering, against a stone wall, and never hits the point. My Christian sympathy is quite worn out, and if he ever comes to me again with his lament against Fortune I shall certainly stare at him for a fool instead of condoling with him for a martyr. There is a wholesome instinct at the bottom of our dislike for unfortunate people."

This is very Carlylean; and in the last sentence we hear an echo not only of the voice of Jane, but also of Thomas, for the seer was no friend to "unfortunate people," regarding their unfortunateness—pace the case of Job—as a visible sign that "the Universe" or the "eternal veracities" had given judgment against them. In the following passage the spirit of Jane Welsh Carlyle has all its own way, especially in one parenthetical clause which I shall typographically emphasise :

"My life is prosaic enough—ingrained prose in fact (I wish yours were more like it)—but it is the only point in which I can offer it for your admiration. I am taking lessons in being good humoured and even placid in temper under the discipline of the worst-tempered and most irritable man in Christendom, who resents the concatenations of vexations and annoyances of life in Manchester, down to the very smoke and dust and rain, as offences committed by me! I have the comfort of being a compendious and tangible type of all his woes, an epitome of all the vexations that exist for him under the sun! As there is no appeal—except to the justice of Heaven, which is both vague and uncertain in its administration—I am learning to take it quietly without any protest, and have actually begun to doubt whether, after all, I may not be an annoyance."

This is bright and clever, and there is a certain exquisiteness of feeling for the humorous irrationality of the situation which is so very charming in itself that it really matters very little whether the brilliance is inherent or reflected. There is a sufficient amount of such writing to make the book a most entertaining volume; but probably there is more of the really characteristic and constant element of Miss Jewsbury's nature in some of the graver passages. "A fitting epitaph for her," writes Mrs. Ireland, "would have been Qui multum amavit, for truly she loved much and well"; and like some other women with strong affections which, either temporarily or permanently, fail to find a natural outcome (Elizabeth Barrett to wit), she displays a tendency to dwell with a somewhat morbid emphasis upon love's sorrows and renunciations rather than upon its joys and fulfilments. In the first letter given in this volume is a passage which, though really fine in its brave acceptance of noble pain, leaves behind it that sense of dissatisfaction always given by any presentation of the facts of life that misses the true proportion of things.

"So, my dear, let us look our lot boldly in the face at once; if it has been given us to love—for it is not every woman who receives that terrible gift—let us submit without vain struggling as to the conditions. It brings suffering as surely as life brings death! We shall have no reward except what our own soul gives us. We can never be for a continuance to the one we love what they [sic] are to us, and it is very uncertain that we may die when all that has made our life worth living is gone. It takes a great deal of misery to kill; in all this we fulfil our destiny, and we form no unimportant link in the economy of life. It may be that we women are made as we are in order that we may in some sort fertilise the world; their passionate affection and their devotedness, though it brings no good to themselves, yet goes far towards making the world at large a better and more supportable place, and prevents it being altogether 'a den of cruelty and fierce habitations.' Do not all religions seem to shadow forth an occult law of nature in the notion (common to all) of vicarious sacrifices—the few suffering, undeservedly, to benefit the many?"

To sneer at such a passage would be unworthy, for it strikes a note of noble emotion, but it is essentially sentimental—that is, untrue to the fact; and the now old-fashioned and discredited people who denounce the intellectual cultivation of women as a thing against nature may certainly plead from a very large induction that such cultivation does often result in the kind of morbidity manifested here. Even George Eliot, one of the healthfullest of such women, emphasised the necessity of living "without opium," thus implying that life is a painful disease which calls for an anodyne. But the fact remains that in Miss Jewsbury's femininity lies her charm, and her cultivation adds to that charm much of its peculiar piquancy. At times she affects masculinity; from one passage it would seem that she had trained herself to appreciate a cigar, and she frequently indulged in what she supposed to be familiar masculine expletives; but all these little tricks are of no avail, for the dominant femininity betrays itself everywhere. "The less of sex there is about a woman," says Oliver Wendell Holmes, "the more she is to be dreaded"; and it is evident that on this score no one had any reason to dread Geraldine Jewsbury. Only a very woman could have written over four hundred pages mostly concerned with simple trivialities of life, and made them wholly delightful by the infusion of a bright and vivacious personality. Here, for example, is a last quotation, and it is an epistolary bonne bouche, though it deals only with that apparently uninspiring subject, a Cashmere shawl.

"I am in no humour for human valentines; but what I have had is actually a real Cashmere shawl given me last week! And, upon my honour, a great many disagreeable things might come upon me which I should not feel now that I can wrap myself round with this mysterious and almost unknown production. It was reading the memoirs of 'Madame Lafarge' which first inspired me with an ardent passion for the unknown article. Ever since I have had a secret aspiration after one, and lo, last Wednesday, one gently and most unexpectedly descended into my arms. It is an immense size, and not at all to be called pretty, but it has occult properties far beyond beauty. It seemed to me to want cleaning, and I went to a large shawl shop to inquire about it. The man in the shop, a sober Scotchman, grew quite enthusiastic. He would not let me have it touched, and said his only desire was to go into that branch of business (it is evidently the poetical side of the shawl trade), and then he sighed and said, 'So few ladies here know how to appreciate them.' Like the lamentations after high art!"

Mrs. Ireland deserves the thanks of all readers for a volume which is rich in sparkle and humour; which is not wanting in suggestive graver reflection; and which introduces us to a versatile and winning personality. An index would have been useful, but it was probably found impossible. It is not easy to hang an entry in an index upon a dash.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

Lachrymæ Musarum, and other Poems. By William Watson. (Macmillans.)

THIS slender, soberly-arrayed volume must of a surety add in no mean degree to the already distinguished reputation of its author. I use the word "distinguished" advisedly, for there is that in Mr. William Watson's work which—whether you hold it in especial liking or no—cannot but be acknowledged as something separate and apart from the productions of most other living poets. And this, be it well understood, arises from no mannerism, ancient or modern, no affectation of any particular pose; but merely, it would seem, from that source wherefrom all the best poetry has ever sprung, will still for ever spring, long after we of this generation shall be silent—the genuine individual enthusiasms and impressions of the poet. That Mr. Watson has "the grand manner" is indisputably true; that his muse makes a little for austerity is beyond a doubt; but the grand manner is an excellent thing in itself, when it serves (as in these poems) as a mould wherein is cast the precious metal of fine thought; and a suspicion of austerity is apt to come as gratefully as a mountain breeze across the "sick leagues" of redundancy and unrestrained expression, through which the jaded student of modern verse must labour, day in day out. Perhaps one of the greatest charms of Mr. Watson's minstrelsy consists in a subtle, indefinite sense of something held back, half hidden behind an ethereal film of words. He could have said so much more, an if he would: were the veil (of silvery mist as it were) withdrawn, what undreamt of splendours might we not discover? One of our greatest and most idealistic of painters is wont to study from a model between whom and his own line of vision a sheet of thin gauze is suspended; and herein to my mind is symbolised the inmost spirit of all true art. Every creator who aims at being more than a mere craftsman withholds more than he shows forth: selects the very fittest and most significant of outward visible signs to express those inward and spiritual graces with which the whole of animate and inanimate nature teems. The first duty of an artist in words, or in anything else, is to create an atmosphere, to make an illusion. He is the alchemist of modern times, the Rosicrucian of the nineteenth century: he will raise you the spectrum of a dead rose, of a vanished hour; but he is neither a cataloguer of picturesque items nor a mere chronicler of individual emotions.

More subtle, and at the same time more large, is the art of the artist; and Mr. Watson may fairly claim to be classed with the small number of those for whom the name is a reality, and not the outcome of attitude or chance popularity. Truly many are called (almost, one would say, over-many), while few indeed are chosen; and the author of Lachrymæ Musarum is undoubtedly one of the chosen. Had this stately poem been his one and only work, it must have won for him a high position. As it is, it completes his Aladdin palace of fame, even as that last jewelled window that the Sultan sought in vain to imitate. Here are the two opening stanzas:

"Low, like another's, lies the laurelled head:
The life that seemed a perfect song is o'er:
Carry the last great bard to his last bed.
Land that he loved, thy noblest voice is mute.
Land that he loved, that loved him! nevermore
Meadow of thine, smooth lawn or wild sea-shore,
Gardens of odorous bloom and tremulous fruit,
Or woodlands old, like Druid couches spread,
The master's feet shall tread.
Death's little rift hath rent the faultless lute:
The singer of undying songs is dead.

"Lo, in this season pensive-lined and grave,
While fades and falls the doomed, reluctant leaf
From withered earth's fantastic coronal,
With wandering sighs of forest and of wave
Mingles the murmur of a people's grief
For him whose leaf shall fade not, neither fall.
He hath fared forth, beyond these suns and showers.
For us the autumn glow, the autumn flame,
And soon the winter silence shall be ours:
Him the eternal spring of fadeless fame
Crowns with no mortal flowers."

Thus far the poem appears to me as a masterpiece in its way. It is replete with melody and dignity; fine in conception and technique alike: so fine that it seems almost ungrateful to wish the following twelve lines away. Yet pity 'tis, 'tis true. This catalogue of dead poets who greet the last great voyager to the Stygian beach is out of tone with the majestic lines that come before and after. This episode tronds towards the obvious; it might have passed in a less excellent poem: here it is not in its right place, and I would like well to transplant it to more appropriate soil. To descend to detail, moreover, the line,

"Of Athens, Florence, Weimar, Stratford, Rome," is all unworthy of so clever a craftsman as Mr. Watson; while

"Bright Keats to touch his raiment doth beseech" I distinctly resent. The maker of "The Ode to a Nightingale" and "The Ode on a Grecian Urn" need not, should not, "beseech" to touch anyone's raiment, even that of a co-deity. I may have made overmuch of an insignificant blemish on a true work of art: I may very possibly have disparaged the only "popular" portion thereof; but excellence (as in the case of Hawthorne's hypercritical hero) is apt to make one fastidious.

"The Dream of Man" owns good passages, but it is not in the poet's best manner. The rhythm is not entirely satisfying, and the qualifying adjective follows the substantive a little too often for perfect effect.

But "Shelley's Centenary" is well-nigh beyond praise. The veritable soul and essence of Shelley's genius, its otherworldly loveliness, its chaste, elusive charm, have been caged within this airy structure, as full of "Wild odours shaken from strange wings

And unfamiliar whisperings
From far lips blown," as its inspiration.

Mr. Watson's lyrics always make one wish that he would write more of them. "A Golden Hour" is in one of his happiest veins:

"A beckoning spirit of gladness seemed afloat,
That lightly danced in laughing air before us:
The earth was all in tune, and you a note
Of Nature's happy chorus.

"'Twas like a vernal morn, yet overhead
The leafless boughs across the lane were knitting:
The ghost of some forgotten spring, we said,
O'er winter's world comes flitting.

"Or was it Spring herself, that, gone astray,
Beyond the alien frontier chose to tarry?
Or but some bold outrider of the May,
Some April emissary?

"The apparition faded on the air,
Capricious and incalculable comer.
Wilt thou too pass, and leave my chill days bare,
And fall'n my phantom summer?"

In a more sombre key is pitched an impressive poem called "The Great Mis-giving," whereof, had I space, I would quote. "Beauty's Metempsychosis" is almost as beautiful, with, perhaps, a more self-conscious cast of beauty, as anything in the Greek anthology; while "England, my Mother," is a fair example of unrhymed rhythm.

One cannot, however, but regret that so trivial a set of verses as the "Lines to our New Censor" should have been included in a volume where they are so obviously out of place. They were possibly—being "roto sarkastic," and with a certain amount of verve—not unworthy of publication in a comic journal, but "que diable allaient-ils faire dans cette galère?"

The volume is well set forth and well printed. One would have wished, however, that a page of advertisements had not been arranged so as to face the last lines of the last poem therein.

GRAHAM R. TOMSON.

Sacharissa: Some Account of Dorothy Sidney, Countess of Sunderland, 1617-81. By Julia Cartwright (Mrs. Henry Ady). (Seeley.)

THIS is a volume which no one can peruse without feelings of pleasure. It brings into the ken of the ordinary reader many of the leading characters of the seventeenth century, and presents their good qualities to his notice in an attractive light. The heroine during her youth lived and was trained amid the stateliest homes and in the loveliest districts that can be found in our own country. She was born of one of England's most illustrious families, she married into a second house of high repute, and the friends and acquaintances of her later years played prominent parts in public life under the third monarch of the race of Stuart. Of all these personages Mrs. Ady has sufficient to say to arrest our attention, and she does not possess the fatal fault of latter-day historians in wearying the reader with a superfluity of detail. She will pardon me for adding that occasionally she seems to err from omitting to furnish such precise information as might be desired. The preface says that, of the twenty-four letters written by Sacharissa at the close of her life, eleven were "published by Miss Berry in 1815 from originals in the Duke of Devonshire's possession." Who would guess from this that the work in which these epistles first were made public was entitled Some Account of the Life of Rachel Wriothesley, Lady Russell, that the name of Miss Berry is not given anywhere throughout the volume, and on its title-page is disguised as that of "the writer of Madame du Deffand's letters," and that the date of the year in which it saw the light was 1819? A few other points of criticism present themselves as we proceed further in Mrs. Ady's company. Sir Edward Stradley (p. 8) cannot but be intended for Sir Edward Stradling; "insolvency of the Papists" (p. 88, line 3) must be a misreading for "insolency"—a correction which becomes obvious by the words in the next letter, that the king is "awed" by the Papists. "My cousin Clumsey," on p. 90, does not seem the probable reading of the manuscript; and the correction of the surname Havelrig on p. 150 does not demand much critical acumen. But these are but slight blemishes, slight and far between, in a publication of much merit.

Dorothy Sidney was born at Sion House, the building so familiar to the gaze of thousands who, long in cities pent, find fresh air on Sundays and bank holidays in the groves of Kew Gardens, and was baptised at Isleworth; but most of her early life was passed in the chambers and glades of Penshurst, the delightful old mansion of her family. Mrs. Ady acts wisely in giving us a detailed description of this beautiful building and the countless curiosities, little if at all changed from the days when Dorothy played within its walls, which may still be found in its picturesque rooms. Not far from Penshurst was an old moated house, now demolished, which had been for centuries the home of a branch of the Wallers; and from it Edmund Waller came to Penshurst to pay court to Sacharissa. The verses in which he poured out his grief and besought the "lofty beeches" to aid his cause could not but gratify the pride of this young beauty, but they failed to make any impression on her affections. Waller wooed for some years, but wooed in vain; and although the choice of a husband long agitated the devotees of her court and tormented her mother, the poet's name was never entered in the list. Lord Russell was at one time mentioned as a suitor, until he was succeeded by another and still more desirable lover, Lord Devonshire; a third aspirant appeared on the scene, the young and wealthy Lord Lovelace, but Lady Dorothy "abhorred" his intentions: and would not listen to his protestations: and last of all came the favoured wooer and accepted snitor, Lord Spencer, afterwards Lord Sunderland. They were married at Penshurst, when the ceremony was graced by an illustrious company; and although the disappointed Waller was not at the wedding, he sent the bride's sister, says Mrs. Ady, "a very witty and very famous letter." Their married life was of short duration. Her husband, no eager partisan of the royal cause, threw in his lot with the king, and, like Falkland, whom he much resembled alike in his moderation and in his studious tastes, perished battling for his monarch on the field of Edge Hill. The widow and her children dwelt at Penshurst for the next seven years, where the apartments, close to the great hall, in which they lived "are now dismantled, but they still bear the name of Sacharissa's rooms." In 1650 she withdrew to Althorp, where she brought up her children, superintended the management of their estates, and kept open house for the relief of the poor clergy. It was at this time that she planned the great double staircase, and probably the picture-gallery, which rank among the glories of Althorp.

During the last five years of her life, from 1679 to 1684, the whole condition of Lady Sunderland's career was changed. She had married a second time; but "her faithful husband and gallant gentleman, Sir Robert Smythe, is dead," and the widow has exchanged the pleasures of a country life in Kent and Northamptonshire for a little house near Whitehall, to which the chief personages in London life often resort. To this date belong the twenty-four letters which alone remain of all her correspondence. They deal with State affairs in one of the most terrible periods of politics in England; and, mixed with more serious topics, come the social details which concerned the characters among whom she lived. Her friends and relations were among the leaders for the Court and for the Opposition. Lord Essex, who died in the Tower, had married one of her cousins, and the unhappy Lord Russell had married her first husband's cousin. Lord Shaftesbury, the leader of the popular cause, had taken as his third wife Lady Sunderland's sister-in-law. Her son, Lord Sunderland, was manoeuvring, with the aid of the Duchess of Portsmouth, to gain the ascendancy in public life; and her son-in-law, Lord Halifax, proved the truest friend to the Stuarts that could be found among the peers. Among the opponents of that kingly house, her brother, Algernon Sidney, took the first place in popular estimation then and now.

Lady Sunderland died in February, 1684, and was buried with her first husband in the chapel of the Spencers in Great Brington church, above the slopes of Althorp. No stone indicates their burial place, and their lives are not commemorated by any epitaph; but in Mrs. Ady's words "she deserves to rank among the best and noblest women of the Restoration." Of such a woman this volume will prove no unworthy memorial.

W. P. COURTNEY.

The New Exodus. By Harold Frederic. (Heinemann.)

THIS book is a study of Israel in Russia. The author tells us he gathered his materials on "a long and painstaking journey through Russia, both within and outside the pale, for the most part under the guidance of practical men." It is needless to add that, unlike Mr. Stead, Mr. Frederic received no official assistance. The Russia he saw was "not polite." What most depresses the reader of these pages is the feeling that Mr. Frederic has by no means sounded the depths of cruelty and despotism which the Russian government has reached during the past twelve months. With all his industry he has only explored one corner of the vast hunting grounds of the Holy Synod. In his introductory chapter, Mr. Frederic points out that the persecution of the Jews is only a part of the Pan-Slavic upheaval. The expulsion of other non-Russians will follow. Germans, Jews, Tartars, Finns, Poles, and Armenians, all alike are not fellow-citizens, but strangers within the gate. To this list Mr. Frederic might have added the Little Russians (known as Ruthenians in Austria). The persecution of the inhabitants of the Ukraine has assumed the most deadly character of all, for it is directed against the language of a race. "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do." The destruction of an idea is even more criminal than that of the body.

In 1876, the very year in which Russia drew the sword for Serb and Bulgarian, she forbade the printing of books, the acting at theatres, and the teaching at schools in the Little Russian language. 1877 was the last year of what is known to Russian Hebrews as their golden age. In the following year the Russians began, in the language of Aksakoff, "to go home," and their home going meant untold suffering to the Jewish community. Under Nicholas the position of the Jew had scarcely been a bed of roses. Indeed, that sovereign earned the opprobrious title of "the Second Haman"; but contrasted with the latter day persecutors—Ignatieff, Pobiedonostseff, and Yourkoffsky—that narrow-minded but conscientious man might be called a just and equitable ruler. Between the reign of Nicholas and that of his grandson the Russian Jew enjoyed a period of relative enfranchisement. These halcyon days opened with the Crimean and closed with the Russo-Turkish war. The latter war is well described as "a veritable debauch of corruption." "Its very inception was a cold-blooded swindle." The Czar was hounded into declaring war by a pack of officials led by Ignatieff, who has long since been christened "the Father of Lies." So keen was the official scent for plunder that the army was within an ace of being starved out of existence. Luckily for them it was a case of pull devil, pull baker. For thievery and bribe taking the Russian tschinovnik had met his match in the Turkish Pasha. The appetite for plunder had to be satisfied when the time for war contracts was passed. Before the Judenhetze had shown itself at all in Germany, M. Suvorin, the editor of a then obscure but now too well known paper, the Novoe Vremya, began attacking the Jews. In happier days these illiberal opinions would have received no official countenance, but the times were now out of joint. The hideous carnival of corruption had disheartened the Liberator Czar: a reign which had begun with the fairest promise hardened in its closing years into a malevolent despotism. Dissaffection was rampant, and Nihilism gave the Jews a bad name. The assassination of Alexander II. was closely followed by the first great anti-Semitic riot at Elizabethgrad in April, 1881. The ten years that followed have been marked by increasing severity against the Jews, which culminated in the atrocities practised on the defenceless artisans of Moscow at the tragic Passover of 1891. The first leader of this crusade against the Semites did not long survive his own handiwork—the May Laws. In the following June Ignatieff retired from office. He was turned out because convincing proof was laid before the Czar that he had attempted to extort a million roubles from the Hebrew community of St. Petersburg.

The Abbé Galiani declared that virtue is more dangerous than vice, because its excesses are not open to the restraints of conscience. Mr. Frederic applies this mot to Alexander III., but surely it can be better applied to the man behind the Czar. The virtues of M. Pobiedonostseff have been more fatal to the dissenters of Russia than the vices of Count Ignatieff. We cannot refrain from quoting our author's description of the Procurator of the Holy Synod."

"This remarkable personage fascinates the imagination. He is as unintelligible to the modern Western mind as Torquemada. Indeed one must go back to mediæval times for every parallel which he and his work suggest. The whole situation created by him is like nothing else in history so much as that which Spain presented under Ferdinand and Isabella, when the influence of a man we cannot now at all comprehend persuaded a gentle, wise, and kindly sovereign to stain her reign with the most hideous and stupid of crimes against humanity, and to gratuitously work the destruction of her country."

If the zeal of Russia's Grand Inquisitor had been directed to purging the country of her Hebrew bad bargains; if it was the brothel keeper, the usurer, and the receiver of stolen goods on whom the storm beat, something might be said in palliation of the outrages perpetrated during the last two years. But the reverse is the case. It is the Hebrew malefactor that has not been expelled. The handful of men whose delinquencies are the pretext for persecuting a nation have themselves escaped all molestation.

"Dat veniam corvis, vexat censura columbas."

The Russian Orthodox Church is happily described by Mr. Frederic "as dry and barren as a sand bank." If you except a few priests and laymen—and it is as well not to praise any living Russian by name in an English paper—the theory of M. Pobiedonostseff that you can serve God with theft, treachery, and torture, is widely held in religious circles in Russia. Their apologists extenuate their conduct with a plea of mistaken patriotism. Those who attack the State, they argue, are criminals; the Church is part and parcel of the State, therefore the dissenters are criminals. It is difficult to understand the sanity of a man who could consider the Church in danger from the poor Jews and Stundists of Southern Russia. Such a man would have "cried fire in the deluge." Yet such a man has been supreme in Russia since the death of Count Omitri Tolstoi in May, 1889. It is impossible within our limits to give an account of M. Pobiedonostseff's remorseless persecution of his Jewish fellow subjects.

We must refer our readers to Mr. Frederic's narrative. The New Exodus is cram full of facts, wittily and tersely stated. No one can read many pages of the book without feeling sympathy for the downtrodden son of Israel, although the reader may have approached the subject with a race-prejudice which is by no means restricted to the East of Europe. It is as well that an Englishman should hear of what is going on in less favoured countries than his own. He is too apt to dismiss civil and religious liberty as one of the commonplace of politics, without thanking his ancestors whose courage and fortitude have made these great principles every day truisms. The Russian Jew is, indeed, an outcast. Against him has gone forth the phrase of terror hors de loi, yet to him may be applied the proud words of the poet:

"He was not all unhappy. His resolve
Upheld him, and firm faith,
And beating up thro' all the bitter world,
Like fountains of sweet water in the sea,
Kept him a living soul."

The study of Israel in Russia is a study of sustained gloom, but it is on the persecutor rather than on the persecuted that the shadows fall. This side of the question is aptly touched on by Mr. Frederic in his concluding sentence, and with this final quotation we must close our notice of this able and eloquent work.

"The woe-begone outcast in cap and caftan, wandering forth dismayed into exile, will take heart again. His children's children may shape a nation's finance, or give law to a literature, or shape a Parliament. At the least, they will be abrest of their fellows; they will be a living part of their generation; they will be free men, fearing neither famine nor the knout."

"The Russian marches the other way."

J. G. C. MINCHIN.

English Trade and Finance, chiefly in the Seventeenth Century. By W. A. S. Hewins. (Methuen.)

MR. HEWINS has compiled, for the University Extension series, a history of trade and finance in the seventeenth century with almost painful conscientiousness. Nothing but praise can be accorded him for the spirit in which he has performed part of his task. He has sought and attained accuracy. He has read widely the pamphlets of the day, and has brought to their perusal a sober and impartial judgment. He is indeed as judiciously impartial as Hallam, if sometimes as dull. While full of generous sympathy for the toilers, he has avoided the bitter prejudices against the upper classes, which too often spice the writings of modern economists. Very timely is the protest he utters against the tendency to seek

"a solution of social evils by representing history as the deliberate conspiracy of one class against another. Edmund Burke, speaking of a sister country, said, 'We cannot bring an indictment against a whole nation.' Neither can we bring an indictment against a whole class. . . . Any man who sets about the work of reform, with ordinary tact, can count upon much cordial sympathy and co-operation from all classes in social work."

Unfortunately, Mr. Hewins has not chosen his material with sufficient discrimination. It is true that his book was originally a bundle of lectures on special features of the history of trade and finance; but this does not justify the omission of points absolutely necessary for a clear comprehension of the subject. It is a thousand pities that this practice of sowing lectures together and publishing them in book form, under a general title, has been allowed to spread. Students can thereby gain nothing but a onesided view of their subject. It is in fact "cramming" in its worst form. In this instance Mr. Hewins seems to have purposely avoided some of the chief characteristics of the century with which he professes to deal. During the seventeenth century commercial policy was dominated by the Mercantile System. Yet here we find no explanation of its rise, no general survey of its theories, no estimate of its value in the development of economics, until we reach the last chapter. The subject is then dismissed hurriedly in a page introducing an account of the Methuen Treaty.

In the Introduction, the most unsatisfactory portion of the book, we have to be content with a hash of ancient controversies concerning the foreign exchanges and the like, important and interesting enough in their proper place as subordinate to larger economic activities, but dead as limbs in a dissecting room, when placed alone. Life cannot be breathed into them by diffuse quotations from Malynes or Misselden. Nor is our interest roused by their pedantic personalities.

Perhaps, as the Mercantile System is treated with such scant courtesy, it is only natural that we should hear next to nothing about the Navigation Acts of the Commonwealth and the Restoration. And yet they vitally affected the commerce of this country. They did not, indeed, have the affect, often attributed to them, of transferring the carrying trade from Dutch into English hands; nor can they be held responsible for the ruin of Holland. That was due to other causes—war, excessive taxation, and a mistaken colonial policy. But they did actually divert the stream of our trade into new channels. Our trade with Europe declined, but we found an equivalent in the colonies. By 1670 two-thirds of our shipping was employed in the commerce with America. In the desire to create a sole market for our manufactures, we prohibited the colonies from trading with any other country than England. While this, undoubtedly, did something to stimulate manufacturing enterprise, it led finally to the loss of the colonies. The important consequences flowing from the passing of these Acts receive no notice from Mr. Hewins.

There is one other crying omission in the book. In a sketch of English trade and finance no mention whatever is made of the rise of the banking system. Yet it was the establishment of the Bank of England, at the end of the seventeenth century, that rendered possible the industrial and commercial development of the succeeding centuries. Hamlet can be played without the Prince of Denmark more easily than a history of finance be written without an account of banks.

The clearest and most interesting part of the book is the account given of the great trading companies of the period. The discussion with regard to the rival merits of the joint stock and Regulated Companies, and the methods by which the latter were degraded into close corporations, is in many respects excellent. In deciding in favour of the joint stock principle, Mr. Hewins seems to be biassed by the success of its modern application. But combined with a close monopoly, it gave less chance to individual enterprise than the Regulated Company, with all its faults. The real objection to the company system was the monopoly upon which it was based. This undoubtedly, in the long run, proved a lamentable obstacle to the development of trade. At first the organisation of commerce by means of companies was encouraged by government for the sake of revenue. But, like the later protective system, it practically levied a duty upon commodities, to the detriment of consumers and the government, in the interests of the dishonest. Trade was filched away from the companies, when a monopoly destroyed their enterprise, by "interlopers" who thus, like the smugglers of later times, fought a selfish battle on behalf of the freedom of commerce. These "interlopers," who encroached upon the monopoly of the companies, could look for no support, but only hostility, from the licensed merchants. Yet, in spite of this, their success was great. This tends to show that there was no imperative necessity for the company organisation. Something, however, may be said in its favour. In the beginning trade would have developed more slowly, but for the feeling of security that membership of a company afforded. Moreover, although private enterprise preceded the organisation of merchants into a company, yet the belief in the advantages of a monopoly probably helped to stimulate the energies of individuals, who hoped, by opening out a new trade, to receive this reward for their exertions.

There is much of great interest in the chapters on the Working Classes. Mr. Hewins shows that the evils which are generally ascribed to the factory system were not unknown under the domestic. We hear more of them, because the working classes have found a voice and are no longer condemned to suffer in silence. But grinding poverty and its dreary follower, the sweating system, are not spectres that have haunted the modern world alone.

"In the seventeenth century the dealer or the factor was master of the lives and fortunes of the working classes. He had them completely in his power. . . . He might coerce the workers into accepting goods they did not want, in lieu of money wages; and after keeping them at starvation point, he might have them whipped or set in the stocks for embezzling cloth or other goods entrusted to them, which they hoped to sell for food."

The tables that are given to help us understand the rate of wages would be infinitely more useful if a key to them were provided. As they stand, they are unintelligible to the general reader.

Enough has been said to show the strength and weakness of the book. Mr. Hewins has written some praiseworthy lectures on certain points of trade and finance, but he has failed to work them into an organic whole.

CHARLES H. GREENE.

NEW NOVELS.

The Snare of the Fowler. By Mrs. Alexander. In 3 vols. (Cassells.)

Wedded to Sport. By Mrs. Edward Kennard. In 3 vols. (White.)

Mark Tillotson. By James Baker. In 3 vols. (Sampson Low.)

My Flirtations. By Margaret Wynman. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Mysterious Family. By a Now Writer. (W. H. Allen.)

I, Too. By Mrs. Gerard Ford. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

The Visible To Be. (Leadenhall Press.)

CERTAINLY the best of an average lot of novels coming under review this week is The Snare of the Fowler, which in no particular falls short of the best of Mrs. Alexander's works, and here and there rises above them all, exhibiting increased subtlety of analysis and a maturedly practised hand. It is a powerful, well-designed story throughout, with distinctive characters, and an uninterrupted current of interest. Myra Dallas, supposed to be the illegitimate daughter of Frederic Dallas, is thrown, by the death of the latter, upon the hands of his sister-in-law, a Mrs. Dallas, who lives, and has a select circle of acquaintance, in South Kensington. Unwilling to compromise herself by undertaking the care of a girl with a blotted escutcheon, she turns Myra out upon the world, having secured for her a situation as assistant in a ladies' school somewhere in North London. Within a few months, however, she drives up unexpectedly to the young ladies' establishment, greets her niece with an altogether unusual empressment, brings her back, and establishes her once more at South Kensington, and encourages matrimonial projects between Myra and Lionel Ashby, her son by a former marriage. Here we have "the snare of the fowler." The attentions of Lionel becoming unendurable, Myra Dallas makes a bolt from the house, and experiences the customary fortunes of the penniless maiden who is destined to emerge triumphant at the end of the story. Of course the secret of it all is that Mrs. Dallas has discovered proofs of Myra's legitimacy, which places the latter in the position of a great heiress, and her whole aim and object has been to bring about a desirable marriage for her dissipated and spendthrift son. Strong interest attaches to all the chief characters in the story. Myra is charming in her naïveté and frankness; Jack Leyton, a man of literary and artistic tastes, but with a seared heart, who late in life rises again to an absorbing passion, is an equally creditable creation; but the feature of the book is undoubtedly Mrs. Dallas, the intriguing Society woman, whose schemes so fatally overreach themselves in the end. These three characters alone would suffice to make a reputation for the tale.

Mrs. Edward Kennard's method is almost invariably the same. She holds a perpetually standing brief for that portion of the feminine world which, if not altogether meriting the contemptuous title of "the shrieking sisterhood," is at all events dissatisfied with the conditions under which the Almighty has placed it, and would fain change the order of things by protesting, or would in any case protest, whether by so doing it changes them or not. Wedded to Sport is a novel of the kind which usually proceeds from this author's pen. Sir Philip Verschoyle—one wonders how he came by such an elaborately sounding name, considering that his father tramped barefoot as a boy from Birmingham to London—is a selfish, low-mannered, and brutal husband. As a bachelor he is rejected by Blanche Sylvester, a young woman of free and easy habits, who might possibly have suited him; and in a fit of pique he rides over to a neighbouring town, and makes a proposal of marriage to Bligh Burton—a governess in poor circumstances, with a widowed and invalid mother—who is induced to accept him for her mother's sake. Most of the novel is taken up with details of the uncomfortable married relations of the pair, until the death of Sir Philip leaves his widow free to marry Lord de Bretton. The latter she has met when running away from her husband, and has already confessed her love for him in the depths of a Welsh coal mine, during the harrowing moments of a fire-damp explosion. In all particulars descriptive of sport—including also horse chanting and turf frauds—Mrs. Kennard in the present novel is as good as ever, which is saying a great deal; yet she never misses an opportunity of bringing in this sort of thing:

"A horse's life, a horse's health, what are they in comparison with the temporary pleasure of the rider? Because the one is a soulless animal, he may go till he drops, whilst the other, who calls himself a man, subscribes to charities, and talks philanthropy, may be as cruel to his steed as he is to his wife, for the simple reason that they are both within his power," the implication naturally being—to render the similitude complete—that the wife passes for a soulless animal too. One would scarcely have thought that the brutal masculine creations which Mrs. Kennard takes the trouble to portray were worth the powder and shot she expends upon them; and the subject would be hardly worth notice if it were not that this lady has some capital qualities as a writer, and it is a pity that she should persist in running one particular hobby to death. She is full of well-directed satire against social vices and shams, and is remarkably skilful both in dialogue and in detailed description. All her excellences and defects come out conspicuously in this story.

Mr. James Baker prefaces his novel, entitled Mark Tillotson, by the announcement that it is intended to be the last of his river stories, the present one being devoted to the Elbe, while previous ones have been laid in the scenery of the Rhine, the Danube, and the Lyn in North Devon. It would be an unworthy as well as an undignified proceeding to congratulate the author upon having brought his series to a close; for, in truth, he is a writer possessing some sterling merits, and from certain points of view his novel is irreproachable. It is constructed from the highest standpoint of art, morals, literature, and religion. The writer has a genuine appreciation of scenery, especially scenery of a wild and rugged nature, while, at the same time, cherishing a deep devotion to all developments of the beautiful in architecture, music, and painting; and his views find correct and commendable expression in the utterances of four at least of his characters, namely, Mark Tillotson, a wealthy flour merchant; Madge Tillotson, his sister; David Shedden, an amateur artist; and Edith Treverton, a blameless heroine. These four meet together constantly; they have exalted ideas; they converse in faultless taste and with strict propriety. Yet it may be questioned whether all this excellence is exactly the thing we look for, when we sit down to unbend our mind over a three-volume novel. It would be rather cruel to condemn the interminable discussions on music, the drama, &c., as mere art-shop; at the same time, one can hardly avoid entertaining an uneasy suspicion that Mark Tillotson and his friends are, after all, a set of rather tiresome prigs, who deceive themselves into the belief that they worship a good deal which they really know but little about, and who back one another up on the principle of a Mutual Admiration Society. This suspicion is strengthened by the relief we feel when we encounter more genuine and natural creations: as, for instance, Luke Waddington, a dissatisfied and ambitious young speculator; and a sort of beautiful demon, named Lola Raphaelli, full of art and passion and wickedness. It is to be feared that Mr. Baker will fail to imbue many readers with his own enthusiasm, or to lead them patiently to the end of his third volume.

An altogether amusing and refreshing novelette is My Flirtations, by Margaret Wynman. One great merit of the book is that, being divided into thirteen chapters, each devoted to a separate "flirtation," one can take it up and lay it down at any odd time without inconvenience. Besides this, it abounds in humorous Society sketches of many well-known types, such as the man who takes select parties to the South Kensington Museum, and calls everybody a "dear person"; the man who gives dinner parties where "all the women are elderly and smoke, while the men are young and don't"; and the man who changes his friends as often as his buttonhole. The illustrations by Mr. Partridge are excellent.

A Mysterious Family is "dedicated to the members of the Ladies' Literary Union of Colne, Lancashire," and is the sort of story which of itself suggests an origin in a learned ladies' coterie. It is eminently literary: there is a wealth of allusion and historical parallel forthcoming on every occasion, which betokens a steady course of prescribed reading and a well-digested notebook. However, in spite of its erudition, and the unquestionable orthodoxy of its views, the book does not contain much that is exciting or even in any great degree entertaining. It is full of the untrained exuberance of a writer who is apt to run riot with her ideas, and to confuse sublime and ridiculous. The mysterious family keep their mother, who is mad, in the top flat of their mansion, while a brother, who is also mad, is concealed in the basement. The only sane member of the household, Francis Chichester, picks up a wife on Westminster Bridge: she was lying on the pavement in a thick snowstorm, and was "evidently a lady, for the black serge gown was beautifully made." To be a successful novelist, the writer will have to adopt a lighter touch and pay a stricter regard to accuracy.

Except for the unlucky circumstance that nearly all the characters in I, Too do the wrong thing, fall in love with or marry the wrong person, die when they ought to have lived, or live when they might more appropriately have died, there is nothing unpleasant in its pages. It is wholesome in tone, and the first half of the volume is for the most part lively and humorous. The second portion is of a rather gloomy nature, but dismal stories are much relished by a certain class of readers.

Novel writers who choose the marvellous and supernatural as a theme can always prove the truth of their case—at least to their own satisfaction—seeing that both the antecedents and the resultant phenomena are at their own disposal. The author of The Visible To Be describes a voyage from India, in the course of which, being an expert in chiromancy, she detects in the hands of nearly all the passengers and crew indications of imminent danger of death by drowning. Sure enough, the vessel is wrecked in the Red Sea; some are actually drowned, and the rest have a narrow escape. We are not told what the precise mark is which denotes danger of drowning. The author dedicates the book to "the gentleman who has asked me to be his wife," but who, it would seem, declines to carry out his proposal so long as the lady continues to be a votary of the black art.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

GIFT BOOKS.

Adrift in a Great City. By M. E. Winchester. With Illustrations by G. P. Jacob-Hood. (Seeley.) Of course, it was most embarrassing for an old childless widower and his old maid of a sister to have a baby of seven weeks left on their hands by a railway porter, and they behaved (as might have been expected) in a manner which excites laughter rather than admiration in the reader. Fortunately, there was a doctor handy, and also a poor woman who had just lost her husband and her baby, so the little Raffaello Paolo Giovanni was soon as comfortable as any little prince of the same age could be. It was not, however, quite the same as he grew older, for the old maid (who was his great-aunt) did not take kindly to children in general, or to this child in particular; and if it had not been for "Teena" (his foster-mother), he would not have passed such a happy babyhood. He was not exactly too happy to please Aunt Rosalie, for she did not mean to be cruel; but it is not pleasant to feel that a nurse is much more to your own ward than yourself, and it is easy to persuade yourself that a change would be desirable, not only for your sake but for his. So "Teena" was sent away, and Raffaello was so upset that nothing could be done with him. Somebody told him that "Teena" had gone over the sea, and so he gave them all the slip and ran away to the seashore to find "Teena"; and he would have been drowned if it had not been for "Teena" and the big dog Gelert, who most fortunately happened to be near the spot. The incident reminds us of something we have read in a story by Mr. Rudyard Kipling, and it cannot be denied that both here and in one or two other places in the book we are a little bit struck with the convenient manner in which things happen. When, for instance, a little boy has, by his unexpected appearance in the world, destroyed the chance of a cousin succeeding to a title and a property, and by his unexpected disappearance (and supposed death) has made things "as they were," it is not often that the two meet and make each other's acquaintance casually, one as a clergyman and the other as a gutter boy in a large town. But this is one of the charms of the book, that, while essentially true and consistent throughout, it keeps us ever in that delightful land between the improbable and the impossible, where romance and poetry live for ever. It is too true that Raffaello (or Lello, as he is called) becomes a gutter boy and Gelert a gutter dog, if there be such a thing, and they live with an old man in a cellar and make friends with a poor girl with one eye, and several other extremely humble persons, whose lives Lello cheers with his fine spirit and his fiddle. And at last everything comes right, beautifully right, for his life in the slums has done him no harm, and "Teena" is happy again, and Aunt Rosalie is so greatly improved that she becomes quite a dear old lady; and the reader feels that he has not read a cleverer or a sweeter book for a long time.

Chronicles of Fairyland; Fantastic Tales for Old and Young. By Fergus Hume. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) We think Gillydrop was a very naughty fairy indeed; and we fear that the morals of Fairyland do not keep up to the old standard, when such great offences as Gillydrop's pass without more exemplary punishment. We fear that some of the sentimental sympathy with crime, which is one of the most deplorable results of later civilisation, has somehow found its way among the "little people" who use to be "good people" too. Let the reader judge—Gillydrop would go to Giantland, though Oberon forbade him. This was bad enough; but when he got there, he made a bargain with a giant for his own personal profit to fetch him two children for dinner. The giant was starving: this was the ostensible excuse; and so the wicked thing's life was to be saved by the lives of two innocent human beings. The children are brought; and then Gillydrop finds he has been deceived, and that the promised reward (let the reader find out what that was) is not to be his. Then, far more we fear to revenge himself on the giant than to be kind to the children, he takes them back again to their own home. And this act, which, even at best, is only undoing a shocking malefaction, is accounted such a good deed, that his exile from Fairyland is revoked, and he is received back more like a hero than a lost sheep. Nevertheless, we regret to say that we have found some pleasure in reading this story, and still more pleasure in reading some of the others, which are full of fancy and fun, and as a rule have very excellent morals.

Bread and Butter Stories. By Edith Carrington. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) And very nice bread and butter, too, almost as nice as that which Cinder-Ella eat for the Prince in that first and best of the stories in this little volume. And the best part of this particular story is the beginning, where Ella goes and sits on the flat stone by the river and enters into conversation with the water-rat. He is an excellent rat, full of sympathy for Ella, and gives her good advice according to his lights. But though good-natured and wise, he is rather a worldly little rat, and Ella finds that she cannot follow his clever suggestions without being rather unkind to her father and mother and brothers and sisters. It is true they are not very kind to her, and she has to spend all her time in cutting bread and butter, and putting on coals and darning stockings, without so much as a "thank you." But she struggles on, finding, after all, as we hope her little readers will, that however wearying and disheartening it may be to go on making people happy at her own expense, it is better than making herself happy at theirs. Need we say any more to recommend these stories to parents and guardians? As for their children and wards, we need only add that the stories are sure to find favour with them, for they are pretty and pathetic.

Flowers, or the Revolution Amongst Flowers. By Florence Byng. (Fisher Unwin.) There is sufficient cleverness in this book to make us wish that it had been better employed. Flowers and politics do not go well together, and the mixture is one eminently unsuited for children. Nor is it very easy, even for grown-up children, to understand what it is all about, except that Ireland has a good deal to do with it, and that if flowers, instead of being content with their present habits and appearance, went in for new fangled fashions and advanced ideas, they would be very ugly, and ultimately die by the adoption of Radical principles. There are, however, some amusing passages in the book. The incursion of American ideas, for instance, is the subject of this little dialogue.

"And yet wisdom is said to have come from the East," observed Miriam.

"Yes, so wisdom did, but she has travelled all round the globe now, and is coming back the other way," was the wise and clever reply.

Once more we observe with regret that the ideal of a learned celibacy is beginning to be held up even in the nursery. The book ends with this exquisitely chaste dénouement—

"Miriam has not married, but has developed into an enthusiastic botanist, and looks upon her flowers as her children, whom she delights to arrange in classes."

A Ring of Rubies. By L. T. Meade. (A. D. Innes & Co.) This was, indeed, a wonderful ring, and Rosamund was a most fortunate girl to have such a relative as Cousin Geoffrey (albeit a little eccentric), and to be able and willing to fall in love with just the right man at the right time. What did not that ring of rubies do for her? though it was so small that she could not get it on at all at first or to any but her little finger afterwards. First of all, it enabled her to raise ever so much money by lending it to a lady to wear. Probably there never was any lady at any time in the world's history who would have been willing to hire a ruby ring at such a cost; but Rosamund found her at once, just when she wanted to provide comforts for her poor sister-in-law. Then the ring had a spring, which opened a little secret place, where she found a tiny little bit of paper hidden there by the cunning Cousin Geoffrey; and on this tiny scrap of paper the defunct humourist, whose will was missing, had written a few words in such tiny writing that she had to get a microscope to read it. They were, "Look in the Chamber of Myths." Now the dead but wily cousin had a room in his house so named; and Rosamund, after a search of two or three days, found his will there, which divided his property between her and her cousin on condition that they married one another. There was no difficulty whatever about this: so they married, and, let us hope, were happy ever after.

The Great Show in Kobil-land. By Frank R. Stockton. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.) This is an amusing book, cleverly illustrated. But we think we have already said this and more about it, and shall, therefore, be excused from adding anything to our former notice, except a regret that it does not seem to have reached a second edition yet.

In the Queen's Nave. By Commander C. N. Robinson and John Leyland. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) Closely printed, well illustrated, and packed full of tremendous adventures with sharks, natives, and icebergs, what book could be more fascinating for boys? It purports to contain the adventures of a colonial cadet on his way to the Britannia; and no lad can ever have seen so much powder burnt and such frequent recourse to cold steel at the outset of his career without in due time rising to a distinguished position in the service. It is written with plenty of spirit, and ought to beguile the dreful miseries of wet days in the Christmas holidays.

Viking Boys. By Jessie M. E. Saxby. (Nisbet.) Everyone will welcome another charming story of boys, and boats, and adventure, set among the stormy Shetland waves, with that delightful background of local colour, which this authoress knows so well how to supply. A high tone of honour and morality runs through it, and an old family feud is composed by the sensible behaviour of the lads.

In Her Own Right. By Elizabeth Neal. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) Miss Neal has here written a novelette of considerable power. Character is subtly discriminated, the plot gradually unfolded, and the interest maintained to the end. Austin and Lady Eastwood deserve their happiness. This is one of the most natural and carefully-written books we have received this year.

Honor Pentreath. By Mrs. H. Clarke. (S.P.C.K.) This is a study of a self-sufficient, unsympathetic character, suddenly dropped down among the warm-hearted Cornishmen. Honor begins by being proud, cold, unwilling to make allowance for others, but gradually softens after witnessing the patient goodness of her sister-in-law. In point of art, perhaps, the conversion is too sudden. The book is likely to do good, but why should Mrs. Clarke fall into that common pitfall of the West Country dialect, the use of "to stand" as a transitive verb? And what is the puzzle connected with the MA appended to her name on the cover, while the mystic letters resemble MII on the back of the book, and on the title page M and the Greek lambda? A word of praise must be granted to the beautiful design on the cover.

Little Sisters of Pity. By Ismay Thorn. (Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) The four stories which compose this little volume are well-meaning, but somewhat fatuous and improbable. The Sisters of Pity are two little girls who find a drowned mariner. In due time he turns out to have been a peer, and his mother, a countess, leaves these children her "personal estate"; it is not said what becomes of the reality. In another of these stories, the vicar calls to his curate much as if the latter had been a footman, "John, ring the bell!" Were this behaviour common, there would soon be strikes among the inferior clergy.

The Little Doctor: or, the Magic of Nature. By Darley Dale. (Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) This is a highly improbable story of a boy kidnapped by Swedish gipsies. They take him to the fair at Nijni Novgorod, which gives an opening for the best description in the book. The author, however, does not seem a practised writer, as the expression, "Where did you learn the news from?" may testify.

The Story of John G. Paton, told for Young Folks: or Thirty Years among South Sea Cannibals. By the Rev. James Paton. (Hodder & Stoughton.) The autobiography of Mr. John Paton, a missionary, is here recast, and a few fresh incidents and forty-five illustrations, each more or less horrible, of naked savages added. As these cannot be intended to deter boys from becoming missionaries, they are probably supplied in order that they may lend the flavour of a sensational story to the life of Mr. Paton. With regard to his self-devotion and perilous work among the New Hebrides, there cannot be two opinions. But the style of the narrative here given, and the presumption that it must be grateful to many, are matters of astonishment.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. ELLIS & ELVEY have in preparation a collected edition of the poems of the forgotten Elizabethan poet, William Basse, edited by Mr. R. Warwick Bond. Although some of them, such as his Epitaph on Shakspeare, and the "Angler's Song," written for Izaak Walton, are well known, a good many, which are only to be found at present scattered among various books of the period, will be new to most readers. Some of the poems are reprinted for the first time since 1602 from unique copies, while a large portion of the text is taken direct from the autograph manuscript. The editor has written an introduction, giving all available details about Basse's life, and also added explanatory notes to the poems. The volume will be illustrated with coloured facsimiles of the original title-page and frontispiece.

A SMALL edition of the newly recovered Gospel according to Peter and Apocalypse of Peter is now in preparation at the Cambridge University Press, and will be ready in a few days. It will include a lecture on the Gospel by Mr. J. Armitage Robinson, of Christ's College, and another on the Apocalypse by Mr. M. R. James, of King's College; and it will contain the Greek texts emended and annotated, together with translations into English.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co.'s New Biographical Dictionary, containing memoirs of the most eminent men and women of all ages and countries, will be ready for publication in a few days.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish shortly a work by the Rev. Dr. Henry Wace, principal of King's College, entitled The Christian Faith and Recent Agnostic Attacks.

MR. H. W. LUCY's Diary of the Salisbury Parliament will be ready for publication next week. It is fully illustrated by Mr. Harry Furniss.

THE tenth and concluding volume of the new edition of Chambers's Encyclopaedia will be published with the new year. The entire work contains upwards of 30,000 articles, written by nearly one thousand contributors, including many eminent authorities on their several subjects; and it is illustrated with more than 3500 wood-engravings, and fifty coloured maps. Among the more important articles in the forthcoming volume may be mentioned: "Sweating System," by Mr. D. F. Schloss; "Tasmania," by Sir E. N. C. Braddon; "Telegraph," by Dr. W. H. Preece; "Temperance," by Sir Wilfrid Lawson; "Tennyson" and "Wordsworth," by Prof. F. T. Palgrave; "Thackeray," by Mrs. Ritchie; "Theosophy," by Mrs. Annie Besant; "Thucydides" and "Troy," by Mr. F. B. Jevons; "Tithe," by Mr. R. E. Prothero; "Titian" and "Turner," by Mr. P. G. Hamerton; "Trade Unions," by Mr. George Howell; "Tread-wheel," by Sir E. F. Du Cane; "Council of Trent," by Mr. T. G. Law; "Turkestan," by Prof. A. Vambéry; "Turkey," by Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole; "Unitarians," by the Rev. R. B. Drummond; "Universities," by Mr. P. Hume Brown; "Veda," by Prof. Eggeling; "Virgil," by Mr. J. W. Mackail; "Volunteers," by Lord Kingsburgh; "Horace Walpole," by Mr. Austin Dobson; "Water-supply," by Sir F. Bramwell; "Weismann," by Mr. Edward Clodd; "Whist," by Mr. Henry Jones; "Women's Rights," by Mrs. H. Fawcett; "Writing" and "York," by Canon Isaac Taylor; and "Wyeliffe," by Mr. F. D. Matthey.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN announces The Invasion of Fishguard by the French in 1797, being passages taken from the diary of the Rev. Daniel Rowlands, some time vicar of Llanfangel-pen-y-bont. The volume is dedicated to the Earl of Cawdor.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will issue on Monday next Mrs. Meade's new book, entitled Bashful Fifteen; and A Blot of Ink, translated from the French of René Bazin by Q. and P. M. Francke. These works will also be published simultaneously in New York.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication Mildmay: or The Story of the First Deaconesses Institution, by Miss Harriette J. Cooke; and also, shortly, That Nothing be Lost, being selections from Mrs. Pennefather's addresses.

MESSRS. TILLOTSON & SON have arranged with Mr. William Tirebuck, author of "Dorrie" and "Saint Margaret," for another batch of short stories for serial publication.

Capt'n Davy's Honeymoon has gone into a second edition. The first edition of 5000 copies was sold out in a fortnight or thereabouts.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press a second edition of the volume of essays by the late J. Hain Friswell, which was recently published under the title of This Wicked World.

THE Rev. Dr. C. Geikie's Life of Christ is being translated into Russian by one of the dignitaries of the cathedral at Moscow; the first volume will be published at Christmas, three others following at short intervals. In America, five editions of this book have been issued by different publishers.

A GERMAN translation of Mrs. Brightwen's Wild Nature Won by Kindness has just appeared under the title of "Liebe zur Thier-Welt."

IN order to avoid misconceptions, Mr. Walter Besant has felt it desirable to resign the chairmanship of the Incorporated Society of Authors, though he will remain a member of the executive committee. Sir Frederick Pollock has been elected chairman in his place.

AT the meeting of the Ethical Society on Sunday next, in Essex Hall, Strand, Mr. Percival Chubb will read a paper on "George Meredith."

MR. WINSLOW JONES calls our attention to an entry in Mr. Weaver's Somerset Incumbents (p. 406), which shows that Thomas Chaucer, as forester of North Petherton, a post to which he was appointed in 1416-17, either had or exercised in 1420 the right of presentation to the church, free chapel, or chantry, of "Newton Pleece" (North Newton), near North Petherton. The incumbent he presented was William Style, on the death of the former holder, Richard Wytung. Style was instituted on August 26, 1420, and the presenter is entered as "Tho. Chaucer, arm." in Hugo's extracts from the register of Bishop Bubbewyth (leaf 175). In 1328, the owner of another Chaucer family name, John Heyroun, presented John de Nyweton to the same church of Newton Pleece. There is no entry of a vacancy during Geoffrey Chaucer's forestership, 1390-1400.

IN the first volume of the Aldine Wordsworth, the lines beginning
"If thou indeed derive thy light from heaven," which should follow the title-page, have, by an unfortunate mistake, been omitted. A separate leaf giving the lines will be issued with the second volume for insertion in vol. i., or may be obtained from the publishers.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE December number of the Eastern and Western Review will contain a portrait of Abdul Hamid II., Sultan of Turkey, engraved from a photograph, which is believed to be the only authentic likeness that has ever been published. It will be accompanied by a character-sketch, written by one who has access to special sources of information.

THE forthcoming number of the Musical Herald will contain a description of the music library at Buckingham Palace, which contains Handel's manuscripts, together with a biography of Sir William Cusins, Master of Music to the Queen.

THE Christmas number of Scribner's Magazine will have for frontispiece a reproduction of a water-colour painting, and the articles also will largely have to do with art. The historic panels painted for the Hôtel de Ville at Paris will be illustrated with full-page engravings from the originals by M. M. Pavis de Chavannes, Baudry, J.-P. Laurens, and others; Mr. H. H. Boyesen will write about the Norwegian school of painting; Messrs. W. H. Low and Kenyon Cox about the nude in art; and Mr. Frank D. Millet about decoration at the Chicago Exhibition, which is under his own charge. There will also be a poem by Mr. T. Bailey Aldrich, and a description of the triumphal entry of the Emperor William I. into Berlin by Mr. Archibald Forbes.

MR. WOLCOTT BALESTIER'S posthumous novel, "Benefits Forgot," will be commenced in the December Century.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

ON the nomination of Prof. Babington, Mr. Francis Darwin, at present reader in botany at Cambridge, has been appointed deputy-professor for the current academical year.

THE University of Cambridge has conferred the complete degree of M.A., honoris causa, upon Sir Robert Stawell Ball, the successor of Prof. Adams in the Lowndean chair of astronomy and geometry.

ON the recommendation of the special board for oriental studies at Cambridge, a grant of £100 has been made from the Worts Travelling Scholars' Fund to Mr. S. Schechter, reader in Talmudic, towards defraying his expenses in visiting Italian libraries to examine Hebrew MSS., on condition that he report the results of his investigations in a form that may hereafter be published.

MR. TAW SEIN KO, formerly translator to the government of Burma, has been appointed teacher of Burmese to the Indian Civil Service students at Cambridge.

MR. J. L. MYRES, who was selected the other day to a fellowship at Magdalen, has now been elected to the Craven fellowship at Oxford, which is in the nature of an endowment for two years' classical research abroad; and Mr. J. M. C. Cheetham, of Christ Church, has been appointed to the studentship founded at the British School at Athens in honour of Sir Charles Newton.

WE have received from Trinity College, Dublin, the number of Kottabos for Michaelmas term (London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co.). The English verses do not seem to us equal to those in the Oxford Magazine, and are singularly destitute of local colour: there is absolutely nothing about the tercentenary. But, as usual, the classical translations alone for this weakness. Prof. Tyrrell turns the advice of Polonius to Laertes into Greek elegiacs—a remarkable feat, when it would have been so much easier to turn it into Greek iambs. The same metre and language has naturally been adopted by the Rev. George Wilkins for a graceful version of "Drink to me only with thine eyes"; and Mr. J. F. Davies converts the "Septimi, Gades," of Horace into Greek Sapphics, which, however, are not the Sapphics of Sappho. But the gem of the number is Prof. Palmer's rendering of "John Anderson, my Jo," entitled "Feliciter et amplius," for the second stanza of which we must find room:

"a! Marce, mi sperate, Marce Semproni, hand separati scandimus, vides, elivum:
multique nobis, Marce, caudidi toles fulsere, pulchre cum mihi fuit tecum:
nobis cundum, Marce, nunc vacillanti gradu deorsum, sed manus erunt iunctae, inque colle dormiemus amplexi, mi Marce, mi sperate, Marce Semproni."

THE Librarian of the Union at Cambridge writes:—

"There is a mis-statement in the 'University Jottings' of last week's ACADEMY, with regard to the Cambridge Union Society, which I should be glad to see corrected. A poll was taken on the motion to place the whole of M. Zola's works in the library, the result being, as you state, that there was a majority of 11 in favour of the motion. But as the question affected the Society's finances, a majority of three quarters of those voting was required, and the motion was therefore lost."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

ON MOLIÈRE, AFTER READING Le Misanthrope.

"Ce moqueur pensif comme un apôtre."

THOU "mocker with the apostle's dreaming brow!"
Of all our bards, that still parade their smart,
Not happy till the world has seen their heart,
Is one so weary, wise, and firm as thou?

Surely thou art a cordial for us now;
Not only that thou lord of laughter art
Boundless and loud, but that thou stand'st apart,
Keeping thy secret closely, like a vow.

Yot once, it seems, the smiling mask half fell;
Art thou not he, who strove to snap his chain
From the bright slippery soul of Cœlimène,
And go forth, keeping his integrity,
His love of the pure draught from Nature's well,
His scorn of all things that are less than free?

OLIVER ELTON.

IN MEMORIAM.

THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE.

Gainsborough: Nov. 16, 1892.

THE death of Mr. Thomas Adolphus Trollope has come as a shock to his friends. Only a few days before the sad news, I received a letter from him without any allusion to his failing health; on the contrary, it was full of calm satisfaction that he could not, at his advanced age of eighty-two, behold the painful struggle which he foresaw as likely in the immediate future between the men who labour and "that most cowardly thing, Capital, which shrinks at the first sign of danger." He said that he thought the concession to reopen Trafalgar square for mobs was a step in the wrong direction.

My personal intimacy with Mr. Trollope began in 1876, and ended with my departure from Rome in 1881. During those years scarcely a week passed in the winter season that I did not mingle in the pleasant assemblies at his house in the Via Nazionale, where he and his wife (Mrs. Frances Eleanor Trollope) dispensed their graceful hospitality. Visitors to Rome were always glad to meet the resident celebrities and literary people who there congregated.

Constant work made his fingers grow stiff with author's cramp at times, but his hand-writing latterly was plain and distinct. Occasionally, I believe, his devoted wife acted as his amanuensis.

During his connexion with the London press, his independent and sturdy character was an embarrassment to those weaker correspondents who were inclined to yield to certain relaxing influences, such as those John Bright once stigmatised as failings to which frequenters of the gilded salons of men high in office were liable. His high writing desk never became a branch office for the various reports and statements, more or less exact, which official backs wished to make pass current in other lands. I look back with pleasure at having relieved him for some months of his anxiety to find a substitute when he sought a change from the malaria of a Roman summer.

His love of fresh air might have involved serious consequences, if he had adopted in a fever district of Italy his lifelong practice of sleeping by night near an open window. Ever active, it was easy for him to climb the numerous stairs which led to his apartment, and his brisk and rapid strides were hard to keep pace with in circling round the Pincio Gardens or elsewhere. One autumn, sciatica grievously troubled him, but the baths of Casciana in Tuscany removed and prevented any relapse of the malady.

The photograph which he gave me of himself, when seventy-eight years of age, is the same as the frontispiece in his book entitled What I Remember, and hence quite familiar to all. Most of his letters are particularly interesting, and I preserve several as mementos of an enduring friendship. One dated a year ago was written on the eve of his leaving Budleigh Salterton to spend his last winter in Rome. In another he expresses a regret that he cannot have the pleasure which fell to my lot of visiting the Rev. T. Mozley during my stay in Cheltenham, a town he saw but once sixty years ago.

Alluding to William Howitt (an Anglo-Roman of our time), he spoke of his high regard for him, and mentioned Nottingham, where W. and Mary Howitt long dwelt, as a place he had never seen. He writes in another, "I have not been ill in bed for more than seventy years, and I enjoy life as much, I think, as ever I did."

I must give one more extract (racy of the man), and finish with an agro-dolce specimen of his cheery style.

"How the people do keep dying! Densantur funera! It is almost enough, as a man I once knew said, to make one think one will die oneself one of these days! You have, however, hardly yet come to the time when your right and left man of the file begins to drop around you. To parody Thackeray, 'If you want to know the worth of a man, wait till you come to eighty year!' The Pope, Gladstone, Bismarck (observe the sequence), Curci, and I were all born in the same year. Two have recently dropped. Pecci, the physically weakest of the lot, remains."

He was to be himself the third; and not alone the burden of his years (borne so gaily) will render him for us who knew his worth and sagacity, venerable.

WILLIAM MERCER.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BICKELL, L. Bucheinbände d. 15. bis 18. Jahrh. aus hessischen Bibliotheken. Leipzig: Hiersmann. 75 M.
EYE, A. v. Albrecht Dürer's Leben u. künstlerische Thätigkeit in ihrer Bedeutung f. seine Zeit u. die Gegenwart. Wandebek: Kunstanstalt. 20 M.
FREFFEL, Mgr. Comœdium, Arnobe, Lactance, et autres fragments inédits. Paris: Retaux. 6 fr.
KUMSCH, E. Muster orientalischer Gewebe u. Druckstoffe im k. Kunstgewerbe-Museum zu Dresden. Dresden: Stengel. 70 M.
LECHEVALIER-CHÉRONARD. Les Styles français. Paris: May & Motteroz. 3 fr. 50 c.
MARMISA, Xavier. A travers le Monde: diverses curiosités. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 3 fr. 50 c.

PINEAU, Les. sculpteurs, graveurs, architectes (1652-1886). Paris: Morand. 50 fr.
 POISSARD, Léon. Libre-Echange et protection. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 6 fr.
 SIMON, Jules. Notices et portraits. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
 VARNHAGEN, H. Ueb. e. Sammlung alter italienischer Drucke der Erlanger Universitätsbibliothek. Erlangen: Junge. 4 M.
 ZABEL, E. Anton Rubinstein. Ein Künstlerleben. Leipzig: Senff. 6 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

FAYE, Eugène de. Les Apocalypses juives. Paris: Fischbacher. 8 fr.
 LIBER Sammelis. Textum masoreticum accuratissime expressit etc. S. Bacr. Leipzig: Tauchnitz. 1 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY.

LEHMANN, C. Consuetudines feudorum. I. Compilatio antiqua. Göttingen: Dieterich. 4 M.
 LE MERCIER DU QUENAY, Ad. Essais littéraires et dramatiques. Paris: May & Motteux. 3 fr. 50 c.
 MARTELLO, J. H. L'Espagne sous Ferdinand et Isabelle. Paris: May & Motteux. 1 fr.
 MÜLLER, W. Johann Leopold v. Hay. Ein biograph. Beitrag zur Geschichte der Josephinischen Kirchenpolitik. Wien: Gröschel. 2 M.
 SAINT-AMAND, Imbert de. La Duchesse de Berry, en Vendée, à Nantes et à Blaye. 30 fr. Marie-Amélie et la Cour des Tuileries. 3 fr. 50 c. Paris: Dentu.
 WEILAND, L. Die vaticanische Handschrift der Chronik d. Mathias v. Neuenburg. Göttingen: Dieterich. 3 M. 50 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

HALLER, B. Die Anatomie v. Siphonaria gigas, Less, e. opisthobranchen Gasteropoden. Wien: Bölder. 11 M. 20 Pf.
 PRYM, F. Ueb. orthogonale, involutorische u. orthogonal-involutorische Substitutionen. Göttingen: Dieterich. 2 M. 60 Pf.
 RIECKE, E. Molekulartheorie der piezoelektrischen u. pyroelektrischen Erscheinungen. Göttingen: Dieterich. 5 M.
 VOIGT, W. Bestimmung der Constanten der Elasticität u. Untersuchung der innern Reibung f. einige Metalle. Göttingen: Dieterich. 6 M. 50 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

DESSAU, H. Inscriptiones latine selectae. Vol. I. Berlin: Weidmann. 16 M.
 GIESSEN, A. Die Hauptprobleme der Sprachwissenschaft in ihren Beziehungen zur Theologie, Philosophie u. Anthropologie. Freiburg-L. B.: Herder. 5 M.
 GREFF, Ed. Zur Sprache d. Apollinaris Sidonius. Zabern: Fuchs. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 MEYER, P., u. G. RAYNAUD. Le Chansonnier français de St-Germain des Prés (Bibl. Nat. fr. 20550). T. I. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 40 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NEW GREEK FRAGMENT OF ENOCH.

Oxford: Nov. 19, 1892.

An important Greek fragment of Enoch, comprising the first thirty-two chapters, has just been published in a very scholarly manner by M. Bouriant, of the Mission Archéologique Française at Cairo, from an MS. found at Akhmim during the winter of 1886-87. As scholars have hitherto been acquainted only with the few chapters of the Greek version of Enoch preserved by G. Syncellus, it is difficult to over-estimate the value of this new discovery.

The relations which this Gizeh MS., as M. Bouriant names it, the Syncellus fragments, and the Ethiopic version bear to each other are shortly as follows:

1. The text of the Gizeh MS. and that of the Syncellus fragments, though often diverging widely, repeatedly agree word for word for many verses together. Hence they point to a single original translation from the Hebrew as their common ancestor.

2. The Ethiopic version approximates more closely to the text of the Gizeh MS. than to that of the Syncellus fragments; and this is true not only generally, but extends also at times to an agreement in unintelligible readings against a better text in Syncellus.

3. The Ethiopic version agrees occasionally with Syncellus against the Gizeh MS.

4. The Ethiopic preserves, in some instances, a better reading than either of the Greek fragments, and one from which the corruptions in the latter can be explained.

Hence the presumption is that the Ethiopic version was made from a text which was the parent of that preserved in the Gizeh MS., and elder brother to that of the Syncellus fragments.

The general belief in a Hebrew original of Enoch receives confirmation, if confirmation were needed, from the presence in this MS. of three, if not four, words transliterated from the Hebrew.

But the most important service of this discovery is the criterion it provides for determining the value of the various Ethiopic MSS. of Enoch. The application of this test to these MSS. results in the practical condemnation of the MSS. used by Dillmann in his Ethiopic edition of the text, as being representatives of a most faulty and late form of the primitive Ethiopic version. I had already come to this conclusion nearly a year and a half ago; and in my edition of Enoch, the greater part of which is already in type, I have shown that Dillmann's MSS. present a frequently corrupt text, and that the truer text is to be found in an ancient and hitherto uncollected MS. to which I have had access. The Gizeh fragment more than confirms the view there expressed; in fact, it proves that I did not value this old MS. sufficiently, though I followed it over three hundred times against Dillmann. By the kindness of the Clarendon Press, I am allowed to make the necessary additional changes in the parts already in type; and the Mission Archéologique Française has most courteously given me permission, through M. Maspero, to reprint the Gizeh Greek fragments in my edition.

R. H. CHARLES.

THE LXX IN THE MASORA.

British Museum: Nov. 18, 1892.

References to the LXX in the Masora are very rare; and it will therefore probably interest many readers of the ACADEMY to know that in the ancient and important British Museum MS. Harley 5720 there are three marginal rubrics which record variants from the Greek version. But my chief reason for writing on the subject is the enigmatic designation under which the LXX is quoted in that MS. I will give as an example the simplest of the three rubrics in question. On the phrase לֹא נִשְׁכַּח in Jer. xlv. 7 (fol. 268v, col. 3) the Masora Parva contains the following short note: בִּן 77, i.e., in בִּן the reading is 77 instead of לֹא. Puzzling as the term בִּן will probably be to most students at first, the idea will soon present itself that the numerical value of that word being seventy, it is in all likelihood the LXX which is here referred to; and the conjecture is turned into a certainty on finding that the LXX (Ch. li. 7=xlv. 7 in the Hebrew text) actually has ἐν ψυχῇς ὑμῶν, thus translating לֹא נִשְׁכַּח and not . . . לֹא. The other two rubrics refer to readings in vv. 3 and 13 of the same chapter; and allowing for a little carelessness on the part of the scribe in the last named instance, both these notes help to confirm the identity of בִּן with the version that goes by the name of the "Seventy."

I was myself inclined to argue against the Masoretic character of these notes, on the ground that the rubrics in question are written in a much later hand than the rest of the Masora in MS. Harley 5720; but Dr. Ginaburg, who is well known as an authority on the subject, and who has carefully collated the MS. in question, assures me that such an argument could not be upheld, as no distinction can be made between different rubrics that emanate from properly qualified "Punctuators" or "Rubricators."

For a description of the MS. in which the above-named marginal notes occur, I must refer the reader to the "Oriental Series" of the Palaeographical Society, and I will only add that it is one of the British Museum codices which deserve a most careful examination both on the part of Biblical students and of palaeographers. Its variations from the "textus receptus" are very numerous; its Masoretic rubrics, which are occasionally written in Arabic, present several interesting features; and in its style of writing one seems to surprise the oriental hand in its transition to the more regular caligraphy of the Spanish school.

G. MARGOLIOUTH.

"ENGLISH POEMS."

London: Nov. 19, 1892.

Never answer a criticism, says the golden rule. But the rule does not, I believe, forbid us to return thanks or to offer explanations where advisable. In reference, therefore, to Mr. E. K. Chambers's kind and suggestive criticism of my English Poems, I would venture, so far as I may, to explain the "solecisms" on which he lays some stress.

First, let me say that my title of "Love Platonic" is ironical. I thought my postscript might make that clear.

"So sang young Love in high and holy dream
 Of a white love that hath no earthly taint,
 So rapt within his vision he did seem Less like an earthly singer than a saint."

"Ah! Boy, it is a dream for life too high,
 It is a bird that hath no feet for earth:
 Strange wings, strange eyes—go, seek another sky."

And find thy fellows of an equal birth."

Surely I am right in supposing that such a love, a love born of, and living entirely in, the union of the spirit, may be described as "platonic." That my poems under that head did not quite live up to this unfleshy ideal is but an ironical criticism on such visionary ideals, the very (apparently) spiritual exaltation of which is but born of the physical nature in its highest state of sensitiveness. In youth, that state is most constant, and it is in youth that such ideals possess us. It is only the boy who will dream of a mistress all ether, and cheerfully welcome a lifetime of loving on the principle of "Parted Presence"; and it is only he who would passionately ignore the body, all unconscious that the desires he quite innocently and sincerely mistakes for spiritual are but the finer appeals of his physical nature subtly disguised. His symbolism, try as he will, cannot escape the physical. He may talk of spirits blending, but he is all the time, though unconsciously, thinking of the body. It was, as I have said, with an ironic eye upon boyhood's beautiful self-delusion that I entitled that particular section of my verses "Love Platonic"; and, though I might have made the irony clearer, there, at any rate, it was.

In regard to my having "confused the nature of Phrygian and Lydian music," it certainly is my misfortune to seem to have done so. Against misprints even the gods fight in vain. I wrote "Phrygian flutes"; "Phrygian lutes" is an emendation by the printer, which I did not discover till it was too late to add an erratum slip.

To the seven-stamened lily I plead guilty. I first gave the lily six stamens and a pistil, which, very likely, was equally erroneous. Having no botanical dictionary at hand, I cannot say; and it is, obviously, quite needless to confess that my botanical knowledge is hardly even elementary. I often feel it keenly in my walks, when I want to say good-morning to a flower of which I had not caught the name. However, I had the word pistil, I was saying; but deeming it an ungainly word, I thought I might venture on the license of treating the pistil as a seventh stamen. As I think of it, it occurs to me that I might just as well, in describing a family of six sons and one daughter, venture to speak of it as a family of seven sons; though, perhaps, the case of the woman of Samaria, with her six husbands, would be a better illustration. To speak of a pistil as the seventh stamen is as though I described her as the seventh husband. Or, is this also the vanity of my ignorance?

If I say that in writing "Mnemosyne," I had in my mind that side of memory which leans to forgetfulness—in fact, "a bad memory"—I shall run the risk of seeming flippant; yet it was some such idea I had in my mind when I wrote, "send the poor ghost to Mnemosyne." I was rather figuring memory as a lake into which the past is thrown day by day, mainly to drown, but some few days of it swimming, either through being good swimmers, or through holding a tow-line from the present. I did not mean exactly Lethe—though had Lethe been possible as rhyme, I might have meant it! And I can certainly understand anyone thinking that I did mean it. Were the sonnet worthy of being reprinted, I might promise to amend the line in a third edition.

For "I rise me," I can but hide my face in shame for my carelessness, but Mr. Chambers might have had the humanity to assume that I knew better. If some great people build better than they know, a great many more build worse. The same truth, in a less degree, applies to the rhyming of "Beatrice" with "his." Surely Mr. Chambers might have hazarded the conjecture that it was not so much through ignorance as bitter constraint, a constraint not unknown to rhymers, that I suffered what, after all, is possibly a venial rhyme, to pass. Otherwise it must be a mystery to him that I have a single rhyme right in my volume. I could have shown him a very much worse one, though I venture to think that in selecting a bad rhyme he has hit on an accidental rather than a typical flaw. And certainly it is not the greatest masters who would have saved me from such a solecism as that. Though I have, indeed, much to learn from them, I am afraid their example in the matter of poetical mint and cummin is not always of the safest. It would rather seem that I have neglected the modern little masters than the great old ones. The great masters had something more to do than teach prosody, or even, sometimes, to exemplify it. A fine thought is worth a good many dropped "h's." But, of course, such solecisms are matters to be noted, if not exaggerated; and for pointing out such of mine as indicate artistic carelessness, I cannot be other than grateful to Mr. Chambers.

One other point. In venturing to raise my humble protest on behalf of English tradition, I had in mind rather the tendency of modern English letters than the work of any particular poet, the influences in the air, mainly critical as yet, which will inevitably, one may fear, affect the youngest generation of poets. Two of the poets Mr. Chambers named—Mr. Bridges and Mr. Alfred Austin—cannot be said to belong to that generation. And it is obviously less to the purpose, as another critic recently did, to name Mr. Swinburne, Mr. Morris, Mr. Patmore—poets whose work, though happily not yet completed, is certainly not in the bud. Even Mr. William Watson is not of the youngest, though of the younger school. His style, at least, is fast setting, and he may certainly be regarded as safe from those influences which threaten men born a little later than himself. Could one only be sure that these latter were treading in the same fine tradition as he, faithful as he to the eternal sanity of life and literature, one would feel less "in doubt concerning spring."

Finally, I maintain that "Decadent" is a sufficiently accurate antithesis of "English" for working purposes; and that to say that because our literature, like every other, has been fed from alien literatures, it has no distinctive character, is to deny the transforming process of assimilation. "Take away what it owes to foreign sources—Classical, French, Italian, Celtic—and its whole nature would be completely changed." Well, that is surely a platitude. The same may be said of an Englishman. Take away from him his Norman and Celtic blood, and where is he? But the argument does not deprive him of his distinctive character, does not alter the fact that the various blends have resulted in something quite different from themselves.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

THE UPPINGHAM NETTLESHIP MEMORIAL FUND.

Crosthwaite Vicarage, Keswick:
Nov. 16, 1892.

Old Uppinghamians will be glad to learn that a fund has been set on foot to honour the memory of Richard Lewis Nettlehip, who perished on the Dôme de Gouter.

Subscriptions may be sent to the Rev. E. C. Selwyn, Schoolhouse, Uppingham, or to the Lincoln Stamford and Spalding Bank, Uppingham.

What form the memorial will take is, by the headmaster's wish, to be left to the subscribers to decide. If funds allow of it, it is proposed that, in addition to a tablet in the school chapel, or a picture or medallion in the school library, there shall be established either a school prize in his name or an exhibition: this latter to be in connexion with Balliol College, Oxford.

H. D. RAWNSLEY, Hon. Sec.

"FLORIO'S MONTAIGNE."

London: Nov. 23, 1892.

May I be allowed to inform subscribers to Mr. Saintsbury's edition of this work, the first volume of which has just been issued, that a cancel will be sent out with Volume II. correcting two obvious misprints, on the title-page and in the bibliographical notes prefixed to the text, which disfigure the present volume? It may be as well to add that the printer accepts the full responsibility for these misprints.

DAVID NUTT.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SENDAY, Nov. 27, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "Symbiosis: A Story of Plant Parasites and Mesomites," by Prof. H. Marshall Ward.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "George Meredith," by Mr. P. Chubb.
MONDAY, Nov. 28, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Curiosities of Bird Life," illustrated, by Mr. B. Bowdler Sharpe.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Classification and Properties of Pigments," by Prof. A. H. Church.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Cantor Lecture, 'The Generation of Light from Coal Gas,' II," by Prof. Vivian Lewis.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "To Lake Bangweulu and the Unexplored Region of British Central Africa," by Mr. Joseph Thomson.
TUESDAY, Nov. 29, 3 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Manufacture of Small Arms," by Mr. John Rigby.
WEDNESDAY, Nov. 30, 3 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Copper Resources of the United States," by Mr. J. Douglas.
3 p.m. Microscopical: Conversation.
THURSDAY, Dec. 1, 6 p.m. London Institution: "Photographs of Flying Bullets, &c.," illustrated, by Prof. C. V. Boys.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "New Pigments: Selected Palates," by Prof. A. H. Church.
8 p.m. Linnean: "Oecodoma cephalotes and the Fungi it Cultivates," by Mr. J. H. Hart; "A Small Collection of Crinoids from the Sahul Bank, North Australia," by Prof. F. Jeffrey Bell; "Twenty-six New Species of Land Shells from Borneo," by Mr. E. A. Smith.
8 p.m. Chemical: "The Formation of Orcinol and other Condensation Products from Dehydroacetic Acid," by Mr. J. Norman Collie.
8 p.m. Viking Club: "Tennyson," by Mr. T. McKinnon Wood.
FRIDAY, Dec. 1, 3 p.m. Philological: "Notes on Philology," by Mr. Henry Bradley; "Queen Elizabeth's," by Dr. F. J. Furnivall.

SCIENCE.

MATHEMATICAL BOOKS.

American Journal of Mathematics. Vol. xiv., No. 3. (Baltimore.) In this number we have several short papers. The object of Prof. Cayley's "Corrected Schenvariant Tables for the Weights 11 and 12" (pp. 195-200) is to give results, published in Vol. vii., in an improved form. M. Weierstrass, in his "Zur Funktionenlehre," drew the attention of mathematicians to certain functions which present special singularities. M. Hermite arrived at these same results in another way, and now M. Poincaré, in his memoir, "Sur les fonctions à espaces lacunaires" (pp. 201-221), discusses some fresh cases of these functions. Dr. McClintock writes on "The Computation of Co-variants by Transvection" (pp. 222-229); Mr. J. C. Fields contributes a note on "The Transformation of a System of Independent Variables" (pp. 230-236); and Mr. Mansfield Merriman considers "The Deduction of Final Formulas for the Algebraic Solution of the Quartic Equation" (pp. 237-245). A. Harnack and, more recently, Hilbert, of Königsberg, have written upon curves which have nested branches—i.e., which have "a set of closed branches, of which the first is enclosed by each of the others, the second encloses the first and is enclosed by each of the others, and so on." Mr. L. S. Hilbert, in a paper entitled "A Class of New Theorems on the Number and Arrangement of the Real Branches of Plane Algebraic Curves" (pp. 246-250) extends Hilbert's results to curves having certain singularities, and indicates the limitations of his method. Mr. W. F. Osgood, in articles on "The Symbolic Notation of Aronhold and Clebsch" (pp. 251-261) and on "The System of Two Simultaneous Ternary Quadratic Forms" (pp. 262-273), gives an account of a notation adopted by German mathematicians, and illustrates the application of it. This notation is employed by Mr. H. S. White in "A Symbolic Demonstration of Hilbert's Method for Deriving Invariants and Co-variants of Given Ternary Forms" (pp. 283-290). The same writer contributes an article on "Generating Systems of Ternary and Quaternary Linear Transformations" (pp. 274-282).

The Applications of Elliptic Functions. By A. G. Greenhill. (Macmillans.) Prof. Greenhill has been a consistent advocate for many years of a freer use of these functions in dynamical problems. In the preface to the fourth edition (1878) of Tait and Steele's Dynamics of a Particle, we are told that he had "endeavoured to adapt the book to present requirements of the Tripos by the free introduction of Elliptic Functions"; and now we learn from the preface to the work before us that the new regulations, whereby "Elementary Elliptic Functions, excluding the Theta functions and the theory of transformation," are to be included in Schedule II. of Part I. of the Tripos Examination, come into force at the May (1893) Examination. This addition is, no doubt, a consequence of his views having commended themselves to the Mathematical Board. The work before us has long been looked forward to, and it will satisfy the demands of the most exacting. It is a perfect storehouse of results, teeming with discussions of problems of high interest and importance, and so will commend most strongly the introduction of this method. We may mention that, from the nature of the case, the treatise is intended for advanced students, and so space is occasionally saved by the writing down of results without giving the subsidiary analysis. The author starts with a discussion of the problem of the simple circular pendulum, "as the problem best calculated to define the Elliptic Functions, and to give the student an idea of their nature and importance." So throughout, the discussion of definite physical questions enables the reader "to see how the purely analytical formulas may be considered to arise." There is ample store of references, and full account is given of the contributions made to the subject by Abel, Jacobi, Weierstrass, and many others. Excellent diagrams, drawn to scale, accompany the text. There is an index at the end which, while it is a full one, is the only faulty part of the book; as many of the references are wrong, and there is not always a due discrimination of authors having the same name.

Theory of Numbers. Part I. By G. B. Mathews. (Cambridge: Deighton, Bell & Co.) The late Henry Smith, a master of the subject before us, in a presidential address on "The Present State and Prospects of Pure Mathematics" (1876) calls the Theory of Numbers the foremost among the regions comparatively neglected by mathematicians. "Of all branches of mathematical enquiry this is the most remote from practical applications; and yet, more perhaps than any other, it has kindled an extraordinary enthusiasm in the minds of some of the greatest mathematicians. Gauss held mathematics to be the queen of the sciences, and arithmetic to be the queen of mathematics." The same writer's admirable "Report on the Theory of Numbers" (1859-1865), has given great help to Mr. Mathews in the drawing up of this excellent treatise, and the address cited above contains much of interest on the previous lines. Dirichlet's Vorlesungen über Zahlentheorie, and even more the original memoirs, have been continuously drawn upon, in addition to the writings discussed in the Report. The treatise before us furnishes a clear outline of the subject, and is a good, or rather the best English, introduction to a detailed study of "an inexhaustible store of interesting truths." The author's aim is to "give a fairly complete account of the theories of congruences and of arithmetical forms, so far as they have been developed hitherto; to this I hope to be able to add a sketch of the different complex and ideal theories." The book is divided into ten chapters. The first two treat of the elementary theory of Congruences and of Quadratic Congruences; the next two discuss in order the analytical and geometrical theories of binary quadratic forms. The next gives the generic characters of binary quadratics; the composition of forms follows, and Cyclotomy is considered in Chapter vii. The determination of the number of properly primitive classes for a given determinant and applications of the theory of quadratic forms occupy Chapters viii. and ix., and the closing chapter treats of the distribution of primes. A useful list of authorities accompanies most of the chapters. The master (Gauss) is reported to have said "A great part of the theories of arithmetic derive an additional charm from the peculiarity that we easily arrive by induction at important propositions, which have the stamp of simplicity upon them, but the demonstration of which lies so deep as not to be discovered until after many fruitless efforts; and even then it is obtained by some tedious and artificial process, while the simpler methods of proof long remain hidden from us."—(Smith's Address.) Ample confirmation of this is afforded by Mr. Mathews, who often gives two or three proofs of the same theorem. "Many who have a natural turn for mathematical speculation find themselves, in the first instance, attracted by the Theory of Numbers; such will not regret a careful perusal of this first part, and will look forward with interest to the second volume.

Algebra for Beginners. By H. S. Hall and S. R. Knight. (Macmillans.) This is not a boiling down of the Elementary Algebra, admirable as that is, but a new book, adapted to the class specified, written in as simple language as one could wish. The examples are stated to be entirely new; there are collections of miscellaneous exercises besides those with the text. The ground covered includes the solution of quadratic equations and problems. Tables of, and problems on, Indian measures and money are a novelty.

A Text-Book of Elementary Algebra, Specially Intended for Use in Second-Grade Colleges. By S. Radhakrishna Aiyar. (Madras.) The author has carefully studied the works of De Morgan, Chrystal, Charles Smith, Ball, and other recent writers on Algebra, and has produced a text-book likely to be very serviceable to Indian students. He is also indebted to Whitworth's "Choice and Chance" for some of his proofs. At the end is a collection of examination papers set at three or four of the Indian colleges. Answers are given.

The Principles of Elementary Algebra. By N. F. Dupuis. (Macmillans.) Prof. Dupuis has followed up the success achieved by his Elementary Synthetic Geometry (Macmillans, 1889), and now publishes this "intermediate Algebra," "a stepping stone to assist the student in passing from the former stage (of absolute beginners) to the latter (of accomplished algebraists)." A résumé of the preface will indicate the work attempted, and carried out in an interesting and satisfactory manner. Prominence is given to the formal laws of algebra and to factoring, from which last the theory of the solution of quadratic and other equations is deduced. The "Sigma" notation is early used, synthetic division is freely employed, and great importance is attached to the interpretation of algebraic expressions and results. The "graph" is extensively "employed, both as a means of illustration and as a medium of independent research; and through these means an effort is made to connect algebra with arithmetic upon the one hand, and with geometry upon the other." The inspiration of Chrystal's Algebra is conspicuous throughout and duly acknowledged.

Algebraic Factors Classified and Applied. By J. A. Jarman. (Macmillans.) A very thorough collection of hints for factorisation, with ample store of examples. Mr. Jarman has produced a good book, likely to be of use to students preparing for the several examinations of which specimen papers are given at the end.

Elementary Plane Trigonometry: that is, Plane Trigonometry without Imaginaries. By R. C. J. Nixon. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) Mr. Nixon takes exception to the definition of an elementary course of trigonometry, as "Trigonometry to the end of solution of triangles." The "line of demarcation" he takes is given by the use or non-use of the symbol $\sqrt{-1}$. A strong feature is the author's practice of giving "all definitions and proofs in their fullest generality, and with the strictest accuracy from the first;" also he works out a large number (he states it to be 150) of specimen examples, and adds hints to many of the exercises. Drawing on an extended experience of twenty-five years as a teacher, he follows an arrangement of the order of treatment and a method of his own in the proofs, which have been commended to his own mind by successful results in the case of his pupils. Ample space is devoted to illustrative examples on the recent geometry of the triangle. The noteworthy chapter is that on "Expansions, Sines, Factors." The get-up of the book is on a line with previous works by the same author and by the Clarendon Press. It can be thoroughly trusted, the only objection to our mind being that too much space is devoted to the subject for it to be adopted in general school use. There are a few typographical errors, in addition to the long list of Corrigenda. We append some of those we have detected: p. 126, l. 6, for last n read π ; p. 133, l. 10, prefix 4 to the factors; p. 135, last line, insert \cos ; p. 178, l. 11 should be "between 3.132 and 3.144"; p. 238, l. 2 up, read $2(a+b)$; p. 311, l. 7, read does for do.

An Elementary Treatise on Plane Trigonometry. By Dr. E. W. Hobson and C. M. Jessop. (Cambridge: University Press.) Dr. Hobson's name is a sufficient guarantee that this little book is a sound one, and it contains enough for an elementary course. Imaginaries and series do not come upon the scene. A figure on p. 39 is incorrectly drawn, and on p. 285 in Ex. 5, for "inscribed centre," read "O, the circumcentre." There is a large store of examples; and a set of twenty examination papers, mainly founded upon recent Cambridge University Local Examination papers, closes the book.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE medals of the Royal Society are this year awarded as follows:—The Copley medal to Prof. Rudolph Virchow, for his investigations in pathology, pathological anatomy, and prehistoric archaeology; the Rumford medal to Mr. Nils C. Dunér, for his spectroscopic researches on stars; a royal medal to Mr. John Newport Langley, for his work on secreting glands, and on the nervous system; a royal medal to Prof. Charles Pritchard, for his work on photometry and stellar parallax; the Davy medal to Prof. François Marie Raoult, for his researches on the freezing points of solutions, and on the vapour pressures of solutions; the Darwin medal to Sir Joseph Dalton Hooker, on account of his important contributions to the progress of systematic botany, as evidenced by the Genera Plantarum and the Flora Indica, but more especially on account of his intimate association with Charles Darwin in the studies preliminary to the Origin of Species. The award of the royal medals has been approved by the Queen.

SIR HENRY H. HOWORTH will shortly publish a considerable work on which he has been long engaged, entitled The Glacial Nightmare and the Flood. It begins with an account of the various theories which have been forthcoming to explain the drift phenomena, in which the very large body of literature on the subject is for the first time condensed and tabulated. It then proceeds to criticise the extreme glacial views which have recently prevailed among geologists, and to call in question the theory of uniformity as developed by the followers of Lyell and Ramsay, and especially to attack the notion that ice is capable of distributing materials over hundreds of miles of level country, and of producing many of the effects attributed to it by the glacial school of geologists. The author argues that the evidence points to the former existence of much larger glaciers than exist now, but not to an ice period when the temperate regions were covered with ice. On the contrary, these great glaciers existed by the side of fertile plains. Lastly, he argues that the phenomena of the drift can only be explained by reverting in a large measure to the diluvial theories of Sedgwick and Murchison, Von Buch, and others; and that the purely geological evidence is completely at one with that collected in the author's previous work on The Mammoth and the Flood, and establishes that a great diluvial catastrophe forms in the temperate zones the dividing line between the mammoth age and our own.

SIR ROBERT BALL will deliver a course of six Christmas lectures, adapted to a juvenile auditory, on "Astronomy," at the Royal Institution, commencing on Tuesday, December 27.

THE Royal Microscopical Society will hold a conversazione on Wednesday next, at 8 p.m., in the banqueting room of St. James's Hall.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE October number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record (David Nutt) is exceptionally interesting. M. Solomon Reinach argues in support of the traditional view of a Lydian origin of the Etruscans. Starting from the suggestion of Pauli, that certain place-names formed with the suffixes -ss and -nd are met with in all Pelasgo-Tyrsenian countries, he adduces a further series of place-names in Anatolia ending in -atta, which he compares with the Etruscan suffix -ita, which is perhaps also to be traced in Latin sagitta and modern "Juliet." Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie has the hardihood to conjecture that a flood reported on a cuneiform tablet to have destroyed the land of Asbnuma or Umliash may possibly have been caused by the terrestrial convulsion which separated Ceylon from the mainland of India. The same scholar also returns to the subject of the sources of ancient Chinese civilisation, of which he now distinguishes no less than eight, between the twenty-third and the first century B.C. Prof. James Darmesteter prints, in advance of the second volume of his translation of the Avesta, a chapter on the epic legends of ancient Persia from the Great Bundahish. Finally, M. Raoul de la Grasserie continues his elaborate examination of Arabic metre and rhythm.

THE death is announced of the Marquis d'Hervey du Saint-Denys, who has long held a front place among French Sinologists. Born in 1823, his earliest works were translations from Spanish and Italian; but becoming a pupil at the Ecole des Langues Orientales Vivantes, he devoted himself to the study of Chinese, though we believe that he never visited the Far East. His most important publications were on the ethnology, the poetry, and the agriculture of China. In 1874, he succeeded his teacher, Stanislas Julien, as professor of Chinese at the Collège de France; and in 1878 he was elected a member of the Académie des Inscriptions, at whose meetings he was a regular attendant. He was also some time president of the Société d'Ethnographie.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, Nov. 7.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—The president delivered the annual address on "Mind." The purpose of the address was to apply the same method to the subject of Mind which in last year's address was applied to that of Matter. Both are familiar objects of common-sense thinking, which usually entertains as little doubt of the reality of the one as of the other. But all common-sense ideas are the proper subjects of philosophical analysis and criticism. Our first question, then, concerns the reality of Mind as ordinarily conceived, that is to say, as the immaterial substance or agent upon which the phenomena of feeling, thinking, and willing immediately depend. Common-sense thought assumes its reality because it identifies it with the Self, and imagines us to have an immediate perception of the Self in self-consciousness. But this assumption is shown to be unfounded, by the fact that no one can point out what the Self or Mind is immediately perceived as. And this circumstance cuts away the ground both from the common-sense idea of Mind, and from the rectification of it proposed by the transcendental psychologists, viz.: that the supposed substance is real, but is a transcendent and unknowable "reality." The true way of dealing with the phenomena covered by the conception of Mind is that which is applicable to all phenomena in philosophy. It is first to ask what they are immediately known as, and then how they are conditioned and behave. In this way we see what amount of truth is really contained in the common-sense conception—namely, that the phenomena of feeling, thinking, and willing, are conditioned upon some real existent different from themselves; while at the same time we see that, if we are to arrive at any knowledge of this real condition, it must be something of which we can have some independent positive evidence, and also something which we can only mediate infer to be the real condition of the conscious phenomena. Now nerve substance is the only thing known to us which corresponds to these requirements. Still, the effect of this is not to compel us to define Mind as a special kind of matter. The nature of consciousness does not depend upon any real condition at all; and the nature of consciousness, we have good reason to think, embraces many modes and kinds of it, which are not included in human consciousness except by the bare idea of their possibility. We want some term which shall stand for the real condition of the maintenance of consciousness in its whole extent, above as well as below the human region, beyond as well as within the material world. For this reality, whether material or non-material, the word "mind" may most properly be retained.

(Monday, Nov. 21.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, president, in the chair.—Mr. R. J. Ryle read a paper on "The Nature of Matter and Force." For philosophy the problem of the nature of Force and Matter is to be regarded as part of the wider problem of the nature of human experience. In illustration of the truth of this proposition, we may contrast the views of Mr. Mill and Mr. Shadworth Hodgson respectively upon the subject of the reality of Matter. From both these writers the views of Kant are distinguished by his insistence upon the pressure of an a priori factor in all objective knowledge. Without this element, all experience of Nature, whether for common sense or science, is an impossibility. Matter and Force are the language of the physicist for the phenomena of the Permanent appearing in Space, as the subject of changes conditioned by the principle of Causality. The laws of these changes are the laws of motion; and Kant's generalisation that natural science is throughout either a pure or applied doctrine of motion accords with the detailed investigations of modern physical and chemical science. The question then arises, How far are the doctrines of Motion (as comprehended under kinematics especially) applicable to experience? Examination of this question leads to the conclusion that these doctrines are not properly to be called descriptions, but rather symbolic methods of representation for the isolated treatment of problems which experience never presents but in combination. A philosopher's definition of Motion which is to be applicable to objects of experience must differ from the ideal "motion" of the mathematician. The word Force is a derivative conception from Cause; and modern definitions which reject the use of the word as a cause of motion, in favour of its use as a measure of motion, do not in reality succeed in discarding the causal conception, but in fact only supplement this by the addition of a quantitative character to the causal conception. Here as elsewhere the fields of science and metaphysics must be held distinct.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

VIKING CLUB.—(Thursday, Nov. 17.)

THE Rev. A. SANDISON, Vice-Chair, in the chair.—A paper was read on "Norse Tales and their Eastern Analogues," by Mr. W. A. Clouston. He remarked that story-telling was a favourite amusement among all races of mankind from all ages. With the civilised man or the savage, with the child in the nursery and the man of mature years it is the same as regards story-telling. But how few tales current among various peoples have any claim to originality, to independent invention. The elements of which they are composed are comparatively few and simple, and have been modified to suit beliefs and customs in different places. The origin of popular tales and their diffusion is still a vexed question. In referring to the three schools into which students of comparative folklore may be said to be divided—viz., the mythological, the Aryan, and the anthropological, Mr. Clouston confessed himself in full sympathy with the Aryan, which held that European popular tales were the heritage of the whole Aryan race, and that the germs of stories were carried by the Aryan tribes in their migrations westward and northward. He was, however, disposed to agree with anthropological folklorists as regards the case of short stories, turning on a single incident or jest, which might well enough have originated quite independently in two or three places. On the question of diffusion of tales, besides tradition-imported into Europe by Aryan tribes at their dispersion, many tales of Asiatic origin were introduced orally in more recent times by travellers, especially during the wars of the crusaders, while others were taken into European literature directly from Asiatic books. The churchmen of the middle ages dealt profusely in short stories, and huge collections of tales were compiled by monkish writers. Mr. Clouston then proceeded to point out the Eastern analogues of a number of Norse tales, e.g., Thor and the Giant Skrymer—the incident of Skrymer placing a rock where he was supposed to sleep, and which Thor struck with his hammer Mjølner, thinking it was the Giant's head, is compared as a close parallel to that in the story of Jack the Giant-killer, in which Jack places a billet of wood in his bed in the giant's castle. Numerous other European and Eastern similar incidents were given. Among the other tales quoted may be mentioned "Whittington and his Cat," which was known in various forms in Norway and Denmark, and was related sixty years before Lord Mayor Whittington was born, by the Persian historian Abdullah. Mr. Clouston further remarked that in all countries the most popular stories are those which treat of craft and cunning, while downright thieving and roguery when cleverly perpetrated always find admirers among the people. In stories of this class we find not only the same outlines, but, allowing for local colouring, the same or similar incidents in places so far apart as Norway and Ceylon; and we can conclude only that the original tales have been carried from country to country.—In the discussion which followed, Dr. Karl Blind described Mr. Clouston's paper as one full of substance, full of analogues. He agreed with him that tales told in the most opposite quarters of the world, which yet contained the same chief points and incidents, cannot have arisen independently of each other, but must be traced to a process of borrowing. Migratory races or conquering clans, merchants and other travellers, prisoners of war, and so forth, may have been the means of spreading a tale or a saga. A good story-teller will always find eager listeners; and what he gives to his hearers will strike root, even as the deposit of a bird flying across sea will give rise to a new vegetation in some distant island. There are those who think, with Benfey, that the distribution of tales has taken place from East to West. Others believe it occurred from the West, or rather the North, to the East; especially since the theory of the northern origin of the Aryans has been revived. For his own part, Dr. Blind held both ways to be possible ones. Our globe having existed for millions of years, while our historical records extend only over a few thousand years, there is no saying what migrations and re-migrations, crossings and re-crossings, of races had happened in prehistoric days. The Thracian stock, the largest of antiquity and kindred to Norsemen and Germans, is known to have thus moved repeatedly from Europe to Asia Minor, and back again. If we take the story of Cinderella ("Aschenputtel" in German, "Ashpitel" in Scottish, "da Essieputtelle" in Shetlandic), we find some chief points of it already in an Eros and Psyche myth of Apuleius. Some faint traces of it are even contained in an Egyptian tale. Had the Romans or Greeks borrowed it from the Egyptians, or the Egyptians from them? Or did it originate with the Thracians who had been in Greece before the Hellenes, and in the Nile country—according to the statement of the Egyptian priests—before the Egyptians? The speaker himself had received from a Scottish friend, and published, an evidently very ancient, somewhat crude Ashpitel tale, which in several points shows a curious contact with a Finnish one. The problem of such strange similarity between countries so far apart will in many cases remain insoluble. To give another example, there are manifest survivals of the Odinic faith among the Red-skins of north-eastern America, in districts where formerly the Eskimo race dwelt. Giving some details, Dr. Blind said that nobody could have accounted for such an extraordinary coincidence, were it not that we know from the Icelandic chronicles the fact of the discovery of the great Western Continent by Norsemen 500 years before Columbus. In one case two Eskimo, or Skraeling, boys were captured by the discoverers, who taught them the Norse tongue and baptized them, but no doubt also gave them plenty of their own ancient mythology; for it is to the credit of the Norsemen that they preserved the record of their own Teutonic religion. Now, for hundreds of years before Columbus these Norsemen had had settlements in America. Quite recently in Ohio there were found, in excavated mounds, a number of svastika symbols exactly like those we know from Hindostan to the prehistoric castles of Thracian origin, discovered by Schliemann in Greece. High up in the North, in Iceland, that same mystic sign had not long ago been used as a means of witchcraft. Mexico and Peru had no doubt been discovered in prehistoric times from the Asiatic side. But how did a "svastika" symbol get so far north in America as Ohio? We should not forget the classical tradition of an Atlantis, which points to a knowledge of the Western Continent in ages long gone by—a knowledge gradually resolving itself into mythical lore. Excavations may yet bring us nearer to an understanding, even of the spreading of tales. The speaker concluded by expressing a conviction that no east-west theory will solve the question of their origin. The human element, which is alike, or similar, all over the world; the phenomena of Nature, which are certainly contained in some tales, or myths, under poetical guise; and lastly, historical facts, often grafted upon various kinds of stories, have all to be taken into account if we would come to their proper understanding.—The Rev. A. Sandison expressed his opinion that folklore should be treated as a sacred inheritance, and he deprecated its frequent use by authors and other writers as a peg upon which to hang a story.

FINE ART.

New Chapters in Greek History. By Percy Gardner. (John Murray.)

A SPECIALIST, writing on his own speciality, does not always turn out literature acceptable to the public; but in Prof. Gardner we have a specialist who is well acquainted with the wider subject under which his Pack comes, who has a keen eye for instructive modern analogies, and who has the art of putting things in an interesting way. His subject is no doubt a fine one—the historical results of recent excavations in Greece and Asia Minor—but he also knows how to handle it. His new volume contains fifteen essays, fourteen of which bear upon what archaeology and history owe to recent excavations. The history thus enriched is history in the widest sense, and its gains, as here summed up, furnish most cogent arguments for the endowment of the spade.

In his first paper, on the Verification of Ancient History, Prof. Gardner gives instances of excavation confirming or modifying history, in the sense of political events; and he argues that the historian must have a criterion "to decide what is possible and what is impossible; and to the formation of that criterion the study of fact, epigraphic, geographic, and numismatic, tends very greatly. Such study, too, prunes away the excess of scepticism, and remedies a certain misology, a certain feeling that any one theory is about as defensible as any other, which is sometimes the result of too great an indulgence in general views."

He is, however, far from underrating the study of the ancient historians, or from thinking that archaeology can ever take the same place in regard to Greek history which it has taken in regard to the history of Egypt and Assyria. But it is hard to set a limit to its growing services, and the following chapters help all classes of readers to understand how great those services have already been.

Chapter II., beside rehearsing the story of Dr. Schliemann's work in the Troad, and supporting the plausible theory of Prof. W. M. Ramsay as to the invasion of Asia Minor by early warrior-tribes, akin to the Greeks, from Thrace, tells of what has been already found in or on the soil of Asia Minor, but lays more special stress on the further "harvest of unimagined richness" which we may hope some day to reap in that most interesting country. With the next chapters we come to the palace of Tiryns and the treasures of Mycenae, and learn from archaeological evidence that "Argolis was in the twelfth century ruled by a wealthy and powerful native race, closely connected with Asia Minor, and much influenced by the art of Egypt." Chapter V. discusses the relation of these discoveries to the Homeric poems. It seems clear to Prof. Gardner that the Iliad and Odyssey belong to a time when the wealthy and powerful Achaean kingdoms had passed away. The art familiar to the authors of those poems is like the art revealed at Mycenae, but later, and showing evidence of poverty and degradation. About Cyprus Prof. Gardner has much to tell us, both as to the curiously mixed "finds" of the island, and as to the discreditable apathy of the British government in the matter of excavation.

Chapter VII. deals with the Greeks "as they made their first appearance in Egypt as mail-clad warriors from over the sea," and follows their career in Egypt down to the time of the Ptolemies. Then we come to the recovered Athenian Acropolis. Among the many interesting tales of the work done on it, none is more fascinating or satisfactory than the story of the way in which Dr. Studniczka succeeded in restoring from the merest fragments, and those previously unsuspected, the pedimental statues which adorned Peisistratos' temple of Athene. The account of Olympia and of its sports contains perhaps less new matter than the other essays; but Chapters X. XI., on Spartan and Athenian tombs, are of great value, and remarkable for the special skill of language with which the bygone feeling of Greeks about their dead is brought back to us. The feeling was not one, or uniform, and Prof. Gardner's distinctions are striking. The sepulchral inscriptions of Athens are, as he says, "at a far greater depth below Greek poetry and oratory than the reliefs are below the best Greek sculpture." It may be that "the reliefs are the work of professionals, the inscriptions of amateurs." But in any case inscriptions and reliefs alike, when compared and set in order, are full of instruction for us.

Two other papers follow the worship of Asklepios through ancient history, setting forth how he began as a doctor and ended as a thaumaturge, and give a brief account of the oracle of Dodona and of the leaden plates of questions found there by M. Carapanos. The essay on Eleusis and its Mysteries tends to lower considerably the importance of the ceremonies performed at Eleusis, not only by insisting that there was no dogmatic teaching, but also by reducing our idea of the numbers of those persons who attended. It used to be thought that Herodotus (8.65) implied that 30,000 persons participated; but even the later and bigger of the halls (the σπηός) would not seat more than 3000 people. It is suggested, after M. Lenormant, that the candidates for initiation purified themselves and their pig-victims in the Rheiti or salt-water lakes, rather than in the sea. But has it been considered that in the time of Phocion a shark or other sea monster killed one of these candidates? Sharks are possible enough in the sea, but improbable in the lakes.

The book is full of excellent examples (e.g., pp. 345, 383-4) of the historical way of looking at and accounting for the phenomena of Greek art and religion; and we may say, too, once for all, that the lesson of caution, which the history of archaeology is so well fitted to teach, has sunk deep into Prof. Gardner, and that, when he makes a positive assertion, the reader may be sure he has excellent grounds for it. But when he is not laying down the law, but only entertaining suppositions, we notice at times a certain looseness in the evidence put forward. It does not follow (p. 135), because the ships depicted on the Dipylon vases have beaks or rams, of which no trace is to be found in the Homeric poems, that therefore the vases represent a later age. Homer has no sea-fights, and there is perhaps no place in his poems in which the ram would naturally be mentioned.

We shall conclude this short resumé of a most interesting book by venturing to ask Prof. Gardner two questions—(1) Has anyone ever dug at Phigalia for the remains of the horse-headed statue of Demeter, the work of Onatas of Aegina? Pausanias says it was broken and buried by a fall of the roof of the cave, and it may be there still. The materials were not precious. (2) On the Athenian Acropolis, probably on the track which Prof. Gardner's map indicates as passing from the inner face of the Propylaea toward the Parthenon, the rock is grooved in many places and for some paces together, with grooves at right angles to the path. A few traces yet remain of cement placed on the rock along the path, and apparently made fast in and by the grooves. What purpose did all this serve, and of what age is it? We have not seen it noticed in any account of the Acropolis which has come in our way.

THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB.

INDIVIDUAL and interesting as is the present show of the New English Art Club, it is not quite important enough to justify the Club in holding a winter exhibition. It would be enough if the Club exhibited its best work, once a year—then, of course, in the season—and did not, by the exposition of the immature and the trivial alongside of the accomplished, give occasion for the remarks of the scoffer.

This winter, moreover, there are one or two conspicuous absences. That delightfully refined and fresh impressionist, Mr. Francis James, sends nothing whatever. By Mr. Brabazon there are but two sketches, already, as we believe, the property of a friend. But painters more widely known of the public make, in one or two instances, at least, a goodly show. One of the most finished and least unrestrained of the works of Mr. Sargent—always a keen observer as well as a strong executant—is on the walls. It is a portrait, unquestionably life-like, of Miss Dunham, seated. Then Mr. Wilson Steer, who never lacks the courage of his opinions, has three canvases: a decorative scheme of yachts with crowded sail (which the average visitor is perhaps least ready to receive); an audacious and engaging study from the life, of little sand-fortress-builders addressing themselves with ardour to their labours on the beach at Boulogne; and, lastly, the realisation, with delicate tact, of a wholly charming and virginal young person—a model, one cannot help thinking, whom he has treated before, though in different guise. Then Mr. Walter Sickert, if not agreeable, is striking. The trick of gesture which he has carefully imported into his portrait of an elderly gentleman assures us that, whether or not the work fails in attractiveness, it must be a life-like likeness. Again, Mr. Walter Sickert presents us, as his third and most important contribution, with a portrait of a “sommité” of the music-halls—no less a person than the agile and expressive Miss Minnie Cunningham, whom painters approve of, and men of letters encourage.

Mr. J. J. Shannon has a portrait of Mr. Glazebrook, excellently posed, full of character, and by no means undesirable in flesh colour. Mr. Degas has a “Café Chantant”—an open-air Champs Elysées scene, with a woman of undisguised aplomb singing and gesticulating on a platform. Mr. James Paterson’s “Steely March” may be—nay, we think that it is—a sufficiently good arrangement of harmonious hues; but it is neither “March” nor “steely.” Mr. Francis Bates’s best landscape is one that records very skillfully an effect of rain. In “Between the Showers” Mr. Fred. Brown shows himself not for the first time a draughtsman himself, as well as a cause of excellent draughtsmanship and solid painting in others. There are good pictures by Mr. George Thomson, who achieves his triumph, however, in an original lithograph of river-side houses beheld under the arch of a balustraded bridge. If he does many lithographs of the quality of that one, his work in lithography cannot long escape the attention even of those whose survey of our art production is perfunctory or indifferent. Mr. Sauter’s “Mrs. Kirshwanger” is a good portrait, of which the obligations to Mr. Whistler are, it is possible, not too marked. A good thing, even though an obviously attractive one, is Mr. Moffat Lindner’s “Holy Island,” in which a blood-red sunset floods the scene. Mr. McDougall’s “Idyll” is one of the signs of such a return to the conceptions of the Primitives as may be witnessed now and then. There is always style in Mr. McLachlan, and “The Edge of the Wood” is from his hand. Mr. Arthur Tomson’s “Garden of Cats”—true in action and pretty in lighting—is the best of his cat-studies. A mild light—the light of some grey June day—vibrates in the “Haymaking Meadow” of Mr. Buxton Knight. The Guild of Handicraft—which Mr. Ashbee directs, we understand—exhibits a case of ornament and design. Some of it is very tasteful.

F. W.

OBITUARY.

JAMES WILLIAM WILD.

THE career of Mr. James William Wild, the architect and late curator of the Museum of Sir John Soane, in Lincoln’s Inn Fields, deserves a careful record. He was born March 9, 1811, and died November 7, 1892. His father was Charles Wild, the architectural artist, author of a standard work, Wild’s Cathedrals.

James Wild was articled to the Italian architect, Basevi, in whose office he learnt little; yet his master thought so well of him that on his leaving he gave him a church to build. He then began to work independently, and by the age of twenty-six had built at least five churches, besides many smaller works. Coates Church, Whittlesey (1839); St. Laurence, Southampton (1839); Barton, a village church (1840) are the best examples. All this work was in the Gothic style, but the young man was dissatisfied. At this time architects had to build at the rate of £4 a sitting, and to provide galleries. Wild felt that in the Gothic style a certain amount of richness was absolutely necessary, and that galleries were a barbarism. He therefore adopted the Byzantine-Italian style, and executed a first work of remarkable originality in Christ Church, Streatham (1841). This is a fine building, full of dignity, though plain and simple to the last degree. While the architect was abroad, the interior was decorated by Owen Jones, Wild’s brother-in-law, and—it must be admitted—in a manner which cannot be called satisfactory.

In 1842 Wild joined the expedition of Dr. Lepsius to Egypt. This gave him an opportunity of studying the Arab art of Egypt in its centre, Cairo. At that time the Mosques were in far better state for the most part than now, and there were many good examples of houses in the beautiful old style, of which scarcely any remain. Wild thoroughly learned Cairene art, and, to complete his mastery of the subject, also visited Damascus, famous for the architecture of its houses. This study occupied him until 1845. From 1846 to 1848 he visited Spain and Italy. It is interesting to know that, after this last experience, he rated the style of Egypt far above that of Muslim Spain, at least as seen in the Alhambra.

After returning to England, Wild’s first work appears to have been the Schools of St. Martin’s, in Castle-street, Long Acre, a building of great simplicity, in a massive Byzantine style, unhappily injured by the later glazing of the playground on the highest story. In the same year a very remarkable work was executed—the Water Tower at Great Grimshy, the most original and simplest structure of the kind in the United Kingdom, and one of striking excellence. It is 300 feet high, 28 feet square at the base; and exactly a million bricks were used in the work. About 1845 Wild was chosen as architect for the English Church of St. Mark’s, Alexandria. Here we should expect a reflection of the Arab style; but the work is Byzantine, with a free use of Arab ornament. It is an oblong building, with no clerestory and an apse. The design included a campanile, unhappily never built. Some twenty years ago the five windows of the apse were filled with stained glass, for which the architect made the designs. The lights were executed in the old Arab style, perforated plaster with the stained glass backing. They were produced in London by Powell, under the superintendence of Mr. Purdon Clarke, of the South Kensington Museum. They have not suffered, owing to the absence of frost and the external protection of plain white glass. The subjects are figures of Our Saviour and the Four Evangelists, one figure in each window, bordered with floral decoration, and enriched with jewel-like ornaments at the base. At the same time an effort was made by Mr. Henry Kay, Alexandrian merchant and orientalist, to secure the completion of the Church by the building of the campanile. This was not successful, and, like so many church towers, it remains on paper. It is to be regretted not only for its beauty, but because there is some uncertainty as to the type. Two designs exist: one with the summit in the form of a cupola, in the Arab style, the other with the more consistent pyramidal shape. It appears from Mr. Kay’s recollection, supported by that of Mr. Wild’s family, that the pyramidal summit was the latter design, and proposed by the architect.

In 1851 James Wild was appointed decorative architect to the Great Exhibition of that year, and then his health suddenly failed.

From 1863 to 1871 he was employed by the South Kensington Museum, engaged on oriental catalogues, in reporting on the demolition of old houses in London in order to rescue examples of wood and stone carving worth preservation, and reporting on the buildings of Cairo. It was while connected with the South Kensington Museum that Wild designed the British Legation at Teheran (1869), and the Bethnal Green Museum, which has suffered from cutting down the original elevation. In 1870 he exhibited at the Royal Academy a design for the British Consulate at Alexandria, which was accepted, but for want of funds never carried out. In 1878 Wild was appointed curator of the Soane Museum, a post which he held for the rest of his life. As an architect he was greatly interested in a collection formed by an architect. During the last three years he had the happiness to design and carry out the recent improvements and additions to the Soane Museum, undertaken by the present trustees. The beautiful little domed picture-gallery is complete in structure, but the designs for its colouring are still on paper.

The great characteristics of Wild as an architect are knowledge without servility. He was never a copyist or imitator, but always employed his learning in the spirit of the masters whom he understood. His conscientiousness was extreme, almost to a fault, if a virtue can so be characterised.

Wild lived a very retired life for many years past; but visitors to the Soane Museum, especially students, will miss his kindly courtesy and great readiness to help them.

REGINALD STUART POOLE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE winter season is now at its height. Next week no less than five exhibitions will open: (1) the thirty-first winter exhibition of sketches and studies by members of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours; (2) an historical collection of miniatures and enamels, at the Fine Art Society’s; (3) and (4) portraits and studies in oil by Prince Pierre Troubetzkoy, and studies in oil of “The Water-ways of England,” by Mr. Stephen Coleridge—both at the Dowdeswell Galleries; and (5) the eighth annual exhibition of ancient Spanish and Italian brocades, needlework, &c., at Messrs. Howell & James’s.

AN exhibition of M. Vierge’s works will be held in London early in December. It will include the series of designs for Publuc de Segoria, reproduced in the English edition of Quevedo’s novel, just published by Mr. Fisher Unwin.

MESSRS. FRANK BRANGWYN, Alexander Mann, and J. A. Lomax have been elected members of the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours.

MISS BRODRICK will deliver a course of four lectures, on “The Principal Monuments of Ancient Egypt: their Characteristics and their History," at the College Hall, Byng-place, Gordon-square, on Tuesdays and Fridays, at 3 p.m., beginning on December 2.

THE Archaeological Institute of America has published a fifth volume of Papers of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens (Boston: Dammell and Upham; Leipzig: Harrasowitz—it is nowhere stated where the publications can be procured in this country). It covers the work of the School for four years (1886 to 1890), and gives the results of excavations at Sikyon, Ikaria, Stamata, Anthedon, Thisbe, and Plataia. It contains six plans and maps, eighteen plates (some of which are heliogravures, and others artotypes), besides upwards of forty cuts in the text. All the papers have already appeared in the American Journal of Archaeology, and most of them were noticed from time to time in the ACADEMY. But we may mention again Prof. Mommsen's edition of the Greek fragment of the historic edict of Diocletian, which was found at Plataia; and the heliogravure of the archaic style from Ikaria, which so strikingly resembles the famous "Warrior of Marathon." As indicating the modern trend of classical studies, it seems noticeable that the whole of the papers are archaeological, except in so far as they have to do with inscriptions. Whereas, in former volumes, questions of language and texts were occasionally discussed; while two entire ones (Vols. II. and V.) were devoted to the geographical explorations of Dr. Sterrett in Asia Minor.

MR. S. R. KOEHLER, of the Smithsonian Institution, has sent us a reprint of his paper on "White-Line Engraving for Relief-Printing in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries," which originally appeared in the Chronik für Veredl'fältigende Kunst (Vienna), illustrated with several plates and reproductions in the text. The aim of the author is to prove that the so-called "dotted prints" (gravures en manière ciblée: Schrottblätter) are identical in the technical principle involved with modern wood-engraving, the whites and the tints intermediate between black and white being produced in both cases by white lines and dots cut into the block, while the black is supplied by those parts of the wood (or metal) left standing in relief and carrying the ink. He also infers that they were executed with the graver, and, in some cases, with the punch, on metal; and that the originators were goldsmiths.

THE STAGE.

DRAMATIC NOTES FROM PARIS.

Paris: Nov. 21, 1892.

THE gorgeous Eden Théâtre, formerly devoted to the ballet and variety entertainments, after remaining closed for the last two years, has been reopened as the Grand Théâtre, under the management of M. Porel, formerly director of the Odéon. The new house is gaily decorated and splendidly lighted, but the auditorium is too large and too deep: there are over 300 stalls, and from the boxes beyond and the dress-circle above the spectator can scarcely hear the voices of the actors. M. Porel has issued a programme full of fair promises, and we shall be satisfied if he only realises one-half of it. For instance, among the novelties to be given are M. Donnay's "Lisistrata," M. Pierre Loti's "Pêcheur d'Islande," M. Porto-Riche's "Mamou"; and among the reprises, M. Sardou's "Don Quichotte" and M. Alphonse Daudet's "L'Arlésienne"—each play to be accompanied by an important musical score, the work of one of the rising musicians of the day. "Lisistrata" was to have been given upon the opening night; but unfortunately a reprise of Belot's adaptation of Daudet's "Sapho" was presented instead. Now "Sapho," however clever as a novel, is not exactly a pleasing story nor adapted to the stage. Though only too true in many particulars, as all know who are familiar with the shadows of literary and artistic life in Paris, the episodes of Sapho's liaisons are so delicately dealt with, the numerous incidental characters and scenes are so exquisitely described that criticism is disarmed. But those qualities which redeem the novel are lost in the stage version: they have to be sacrificed to the exigencies of rapid dramatic action, and, as often happens, a good novel is spoilt in order to produce a bad play. The principal attraction of the performance was the appearance of Mlle. Réjane in the title-part, "created" by Mme. Jane Hading at the Gymnase five years ago. Mlle. Réjane possesses to an intense degree all the perverse charm of the "Parisienne fin de siècle" as portrayed in "Ma camarade," or in the character of Germaine in M. Porto-Riche's comedy "Amoureuse." Her Sapho is a very clever piece of acting, particularly in the fourth and fifth acts. But her thin voice and frail appearance are quite insufficient in such a large auditorium as that of the Grand Théâtre; while from the physical point of view she is not to be compared to "La belle Hading," who, besides, had the advantage of appearing on the comparatively small stage of the Gymnase. The sooner the Grand Théâtre is converted into the long-wished-for "Théâtre Lyrique" the better.

The incidents and misadventures which attend the unfortunate "Réserviste" during the triennial ordeal of "the twenty-eight days" military service, which every Frenchman is now obliged to undergo after having served his three years' active service in the army, have provided the modern Vaudevillist with an inexhaustible fund of scènes à faire. But of all the screaming farces which have been written on the subject, none as yet has equalled the three-act play, "Champignol malgré lui," now running, and likely to run through the winter, at the Nouveautés. I will not attempt to unravel the inimitable imbroglio MM. Feydeau and Desvallières have made out of the mishaps which befall the celebrated painter Champignol and a group of Reservists during their brief experience of barrack life. All I can say is, that the three acts give rise to one continuous roar of laughter. The picture is but a slightly exaggerated version of what every male spectator present has gone through himself, and the characters are true to real life. The late Randon's admirable series of illustrations, "Nos Troupiers" and "Le Camp de Chalons," will give the reader an idea of the fun which animates all the second act of "Champignol malgré lui." The acting is perfect, particularly in the case of M. Tarride's Captain Camaret, a delightful fellow when off duty, but a terrible martinet in the barrack yard. The part, as "created" by M. Tarride, is likely to become what is styled, in green-room jargon, a type.

"Miss Helyett," after having been played for over 700 nights at the Bouffes, has been superseded, at last, by a new operetta, "Sainte-Freya," for which M. Andran has written a charming and, in contrast with the libretto, perhaps rather too refined score. Mlle. Bianca Duhamel, no longer pretty Miss Helyett, has become a most bewitching Dutch maiden—Freya by name and saint by vocation.

"Jean Darlot," a new piece in three acts, is to be given this week at the Comédie Française. The author, M. Louis Legendre, made himself known some five years ago with a charming adaptation in verse of Shakspeare's "Much Ado about Nothing," played with great success at the Odéon under the title, "Beaucoup de bruit pour rien."

CECIL NICHOLSON.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNEY'S LIST

GOSSIP OF THE CENTURY: Personal and Traditional Memories—Social, Literary, Artistic. With more than 100 Portraits. By the Author of "Flemish Interiors." 2 vols., royal 8vo, 1,650 pp., 42s.

In these two large and beautifully printed volumes we have a great amount of the century's best gossip. . . . The two volumes are, in fact, a kind of encyclopedia of gossip about monarchs, statesmen, doctors, writers, actors, singers, soldiers, men of fashion. . . . daily News

ANGELICA KAUFFMANN: a Biography. With a list of her Paintings and Drawings, and some illustrative Reproductions thereof. By FRANCES A. GERARD. 1 vol., 15s. "Angelica" is a singularly difficult life to write, and her latest biographer has evidently spared no pains to make this volume complete. It is excellently illustrated, and is unquestionably a book of great interest."—St. James's Gazette.

Now ready, at the Booksellers and Libraries.

SOCIAL ENGLAND from the RESTORATION to the REVOLUTION. By W. C. SYDNEY. Author of "England and the English in the Eighteenth Century." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

"He has an eye for what is picturesque, a taste for what is curious, and enough sense to divide his survey equitably between the scandals and follies of the town and the soberer life of the rest of England."—Times.

"He has apparently consulted all the best known and most approved authorities on the subject of which he treats with judgment and assiduity, and the result is a compilation which is both entertaining and instructive."—World.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

ENGLAND and the ENGLISH in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By W. C. SYDNEY. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 24s. An index has now been added.

"The studies on Fleet marriages, on quacks, and on Kinks Mob are perhaps the most notable for new matter; but the whole book is very well worth reading."—National Observer.

In LADIES' COMPANY: Six Interesting Women. By Mrs. FENWICK MILLER. Fcap. 6s.

"Mrs. Miller has given us a volume to be grateful for."—Daily Chronicle.

TWO NEW BOOKS FOR CHILDREN. By the Author of "The Little Lady of Lavender" with numerous illustrations, and bound in a cover of blue and gold, specially designed.

THOSE MIDSUMMER FAIRIES. By THEODORA ELMSLIE. One vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

PIXIE. By Mrs. BLADENE, Author of "Trash." With Illustrations by E. J. Ellis. 3s. 6d.

THREE NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES.

MANY A YEAR AGO. By Mrs. H. MARTIN, author of "A Man and a Brother." 2 vols.

A GERALDINE. By R. ASHE KING. 2 vols.

RIDGE and FURROW. By Sir RANDAL ROBERTS, Bart. 2 vols.

WARD & DOWNEY, York Street, Cove den.

Ready this day.

SULTAN TO SULTAN.

By Mrs. M. FRANK-SHELDON.

An Account of her Recent Adventurous Expedition among the Masai and other Tribes of East Africa.

Profusely Illustrated from Photographs taken by the Author.

Obtainable at all Booksellers and all Libraries.

SAXON & Co., 23, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, E.C.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 925.—DECEMBER, 1892.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE RIVIERA.—THE RESTLESS DEAD.—THE LONO PAAELIANT AND DR. GARDINER.—SINGULARLY DELUDED: Conclusion.—ALDERS AND REEDS, by "A Son of the Marshes."—BYWAYS TO FORTUNE: BY SEA.—THE OLD SALOON.—LINES DEDICATED TO THOSE WHO MOURN THEIR DEAD IN THE WRECKS OF THE BOKHARA, ROUMANIA, AND SCOTCH EXPRESS, by the Duchess of Sutherland.—THE RECOVERY OF THE SOUDAN.—ELECTION WEEK IN AMERICA.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law. By LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD OF THE AMEN, and other Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

"Dr. MacLaren is, perhaps, the finest sermon builder of living preachers."—Christian Commonwealth.

"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled."—Independent (New York).

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S LIST.

THE TIMES says:—"It is of absorbing interest."

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE SECRET SERVICE.

The Recollections of a Spy.

By Major HENRI LE CARON.

With Portraits and Facsimiles of Original Documents.
Demy 8vo, 14s.

In order to enable Librarians and Booksellers to supply the demand for the above work, the Publisher is issuing to-day a SIXTH EDITION, in which—pendente lite—a few contentious lines are omitted; but the book in its Original Version can still be had of the Publisher.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON:

A Study of his Life and Work.

By ARTHUR WAUGH, B.A., Oxon.

With Portraits and 21 Illustrations, from Photographs specially taken for this work. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

World.—"We must congratulate Mr. Waugh on a creditable success. His book is one that can be warmly recommended. It is scholarly and non-hysterical. We have found in these pages a great deal that is new to us."

The NEW EXODUS: a Story of Israel in Russia. By HAROLD FREDERIC. With Portraits. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 16s.

Athenaeum.—"The New Exodus" tells of a frightful persecution of which the witnesses and victims are here at our doors, in the city in which we write."

The JEW at HOME: Impressions of a Summer and Autumn spent with him in Russia and Austria. By JOSEPH PENNELL. With numerous Illustrations by the Author. Small 4to, cloth, 5s.

The REALM of the HABSBURGS. By SIDNEY WHITMAN. Author of "Imperial Germany." &c. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Scotsman.—"Mr. Whitman has a powerful grasp of his subject. Whole volumes are condensed into his chapters, which deal with Austria's past and present."

The GREAT WAR of 189—: a Forecast. By Rear-Admiral COLOMBE, Col. MAURICE, R.A., Staff College; Capt. MAUDE, ARCHIBALD FORBES, CHARLES LOWE; D. CHRISTIE MURRAY; and F. SCUDAMORE. 1 vol. large 8vo illustrated, 12s. 6d. In a few days.

STUDIES of RELIGIOUS HISTORY. By ERNEST RENAN. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

NEW FICTION.

QUIDA'S NEW NOVEL.

THE TOWER OF TADDEO.

In Three Vols., at all Libraries.

Scotsman.—"There is a fascinating dreaminess about it. . . . Few readers will care to skip a single page."

CHILDREN OF THE GHETTO.

By I. ZANGWILL, Author of "The Old Maid's Club."

In Three Vols., at all Libraries.

Times.—"Children of the Ghetto" must be pronounced a striking book; each sketch is so vivid and the collective picture which is presented of London Judaism in its manifold aspects is so rich in interest. From whatever point of view we regard it, it is a remarkable book."

A KNIGHT OF THE WHITE FEATHER.

By "TASMA."

Author of "The Penance of Portia James," &c.

In Two Vols., at all Libraries.

World.—"Tasma's charming story is the strangest, and in some respects the strongest, she has written."

CAPTAIN DAVY'S HONEYMOON.

By HALL CAINE. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. Fifth Thousand.

Punch says: "Much to do the Baron like 'Capt'n Davy's Honeymoon.'"

By the SAME AUTHOR, uniform with the above.

THE BONDMAN. THE SCAPEGOAT.

THE SECRET of NARCISSE.

By EDMUND GOSSE, Author of "Gossip in a Library." Crown 8vo, 5s.

Saturday Review.—"The book resembles some delicately finished, clear-coloured picture of the Flemish painters. . . . Mr. Gosse, with consummate art, elicits our sympathy, and has convinced us of the tremendous tragedy by the method of the accusation itself."

VANITAS: Polite Stories.

By Vernon Lee. Author of "Hauntings." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. (Crown Copyright Series.)

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

Chatto & Windus's New Books.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY VIGNETTES.

By AUSTIN DOBSON. Author of "Four Frenchwomen," &c. With a Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

"Carries one away to a world which Time has made ideal—that delightful world of the eighteenth century whose dainty artificiality, through Mr. Austin Dobson's devotion, blooms again for us with a quite paradoxical freshness."—Nor.

THE BRIGHTON ROAD: Old Times and New on a Classic Highway.

By CHARLES G. HALLPHEL. With a Photogravure Frontispiece and 90 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 16s.

"A pleasant, gossiping account of a much-trodden highway, which, with the help of a Harper, may be traversed with profit and entertainment by the explorer who stays comfortably at home."—St. James's Gazette.

LONDON.

By Walter Besant, Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c. With 121 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 18s.

"What the late J. K. Green has done for England Mr. Besant has here attempted, with conspicuous success, for Cockayne. . . . A series of vivid and indelible pictures of the people of the past. . . . No one who loves his London, but will love it the better for reading this book. He who loves it not has before him a clear duty and a manifest pleasure."—Graphic.

TAKEN from the ENEMY.

By Henry NEWBOLT. Fcap. 8vo, cloth extra, 1s. 6d. (uniform with "The Old Maid's Sweetheart," and "A Lost Soul.")

"Taken from the Enemy" has a simple plot that is so cleverly wrought out as to maintain a strong interest from first to last. The tale is told with a great air of likelihood, and will be sure to please every one who reads it."—Scotsman.

NEW LIBRARY NOVELS.

A FAMILY LIKENESS.

By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Pretty Miss Neville," "Diana Barrington," &c. 3 vols.

BARBARA DERING.

By Amelie RIVES, Author of "The Quick or the Dead?" 2 vols.

"An able book."—Scotsman.

"Amelie Rives is still the same unfettered, vivid, and delightful writer."—Hark.

THE IVORY GATE.

By Walter BESANT, Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c. 3 vols.

"Has many and great merits; it is certainly a story to be read. Our interest never flags for a moment. Neither in the 'Golden Butterfly,' nor 'The Chaplain of the Fleet' are there any characters to equal the city knight or the old clerk."—Saturday Review.

MRS. JULIET.

By Mrs. Alfred Hunt, Author of "Thornicroft's Model." 3 vols. Shortly.

THE THOUSAND and ONE DAYS:

Persian Tales. Edited by JUSTIN H. MCCARTHY. With 2 Frontispieces by Stanley L. Wood. 2 vols., crown 8vo, half-parchment, 12s.

"A fascinating piece of romance."—Times.

THE AMERICAN CLAIMANT.

By MARK TWAIN. With 81 Illustrations by Hal Hurst and Dan Beard. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"Full of fresh fun. . . . As laughable a series of changes, surprises, and contrasts as ever got into a book."—Scotsman.

THE FATE of HERBERT WAYNE.

By E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Goodman is a past master in the art of mystery. . . . The story has a marvellous fascination. . . . A mystifying but intensely interesting story."—Sain's Journal.

A ROMANCE of the NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By W. H. MALLOCK, Author of "The New Republic." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Open his book where you will, you find in it a pearl either of thought or of expression."—Critic.

THE DOWNFALL.

By Emile Zola. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"A prose epic of extraordinary power and interest."—Daily Telegraph.

MY FLIRTATIONS.

By Margaret WYNMAN. With 13 Illustrations by J. Bernard Partridge. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"The world owes a debt of gratitude to the clever author of 'My Flirtations.' It is distinctly good work, and will place its author in the very front rank of smart fin de siècle writers."—Lady's Pictorial.

THE ANTIPODEAN: an Illustrated Annual.

Edited by G. E. EVANS and J. P. RYAN. With an Introduction by the COUNTESS of JERSEY, and 83 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, picture cover, 1s.

THE LOUDWATER TRAGEDY.

Being the GENTLEMAN'S ANNUAL for 1892. By T. W. SPEIGHT, Author of "The Mysteries of Heron Dyke," &c. Demy 8vo, picture cover, 1s.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 211, Piccadilly, W.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S WORKS

THE DOCTRINE of EVOLUTION.

FIRST PRINCIPLES. 9th Thousand. 16s.

PRINCIPLES of BIOLOGY. 4th Thousand. 2 vols. 31s.

PRINCIPLES of PSYCHOLOGY. 5th Thousand. 2 vols. 39s.

PRINCIPLES of SOCIOLOGY. Vol. I. 4th Thousand. 21s.

Vol. II. 3rd Thousand. 18s.

(POLITICAL INSTITUTIONS. 3rd Thousand. Separately, 12s.)

ECCELESIASTICAL INSTITUTIONS. 2nd Thousand. 5s.

THE PRINCIPLES of ETHICS. Vol. I. 5th Thousand. 16s.

JUSTICE. (Principles, Part IV.) 8s.

OTHER WORKS.

THE STUDY of SOCIOLOGY. Library Edition (the 9th). 8vo, 10s. 6d.

EDUCATION. 6th Thousand. 6s. Also Cheap Edition. 26th Thousand. 2s. 6d.

SOCIAL STATISTICS. Abridged and Revised. MAN & STATE. Cloth, 10s.

ESSAYS. 3 vols. New Edition (each 10s.). 30s.

THE MAN versus THE STATE. Cheap Edition. 10th Thousand. 1s.

THE FACTORS of EVOLUTION. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta St., Covent Garden London; and 20, South Frederick St., Edinburgh.

This day is published, 4to. sewed, price 12s.

WALDSTEIN (C.).—EXCAVATIONS

of the AMERICAN SCHOOL of ATHENS at the HERAIUM of ARGOS. No. 1.

Pp. 20 and 7 Plates.

Recently published, in 1 vol., cr. 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

BARROW (E. P.).—REGNI EVANGELIUM:

a Survey of the Teaching of Jesus Christ.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES, 1891.

In 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE ORIGIN and GROWTH of the CONCEPTION of GOD as illustrated by ANTHROPOLOGY and HISTORY. By Count GOBLET D'ALVIELLA, Professor of the History of Religions at the University of Brussels.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES, 1892.

In 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

ORIGIN and GROWTH of RELIGION

as illustrated by the RELIGION of the ANCIENT HEBREWS. By C. G. MONTEFIORE. In a month.

1 vol., 8vo, 652 pp., cloth, 11s.

A PLAIN COMMENTARY on the

FIRST GOSPEL. By AN AGNOSTIC.

"Logical power and reasoning ability of a very high class are displayed throughout this manifesto of Agnosticism."—Daily Telegraph.

"This work may claim consideration as something probably unique in literature."—Scotsman.

Just published, in 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

MACKINNON (J.).—CULTURE in EARLY SCOTLAND.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London;

and 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

The New Volume in the "International Scientific Series," entitled "MAN AND THE GLACIAL PERIOD," by G. Frederick Wright, D.D., LL.D., Author of "The Ice Age in North America," with 111 Illustrations and Maps, is now ready at all Libraries and Booksellers, price Five Shillings.

ILLUSTRATED BY HUGH THOMSON.

THE BALLAD OF BEAU BROCADE, AND OTHER POEMS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

By AUSTIN DOBSON.

With 50 Illustrations by Hugh Thomson. Crown 8vo, 5s.

NEW and IMPORTANT WORK by Sir J. LUBBOCK, Bart.

A CONTRIBUTION TO OUR KNOWLEDGE OF SEEDLINGS.

By Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 36s. net.

"The germination of Plants is certainly not the least interesting portion of their life history, but it has not as yet attracted the attention it deserves."—Extract from PREFACE.

FORTY-FIRST THOUSAND.

THE LIGHT OF ASIA; or, The Great Renunciation.

Being the Life and Teaching of Gautama. By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, K.C.I.E.

Presentation Edition. With Illustrations and Portrait. Small 4to, 21s. Library Edition, Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. Elzevir Edition, 6s. Cheap Edition (Lotos Series), cloth or half-parchment, 3s. 6d.

Lombard Street :

A Description of the Money Market. By WALTER BAGEHOT. Tenth Edition. With Notes bringing the Work up to the Present Time, by E. JOHNSTONE. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Handwriting and Expression.

A Study of Written Gesture. Translated and Edited by JOHN HOLT SCHOOLING, from the French of J. CREPIEUX-JAMIN. With 150 Facsimile Reproductions of the Handwritings of Men and Women of various Nationalities. Demy 8vo, 6s.

Manchester Examiner.—"The work is one which every amateur graphologist should possess; it is as interesting as a novel and as instructive as an expert's lecture deftly delivered."

Wanderings and Wonderings.

India, Burma, Kashmir, Ceylon, Singapore, Java, Siam, Japan, Manila, Formosa, Korea, China, Cambodia, Australia, New Zealand, Alaska, the States. By J. J. AUBERTIN. With Portrait, Map, and 7 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

The Classic Birthday Book.

By F. W. AVELING, M.A., B.Sc., Principal of the Independent College, Taunton. 4to, cloth, 8s. 6d.; paste grain, 15s.; tree calf, 21s.

Saturday Review.—"Choice and luxuriant quotation is the mark of 'The Classic Birthday Book.' The extracts show discrimination and taste."

Literary World.—"The most sumptuous Birthday Book we have seen."

Lectures and Addresses on the History of Philosophy.

Translated from the German of HEGEL by E. S. HILDANE. 3 vols., large post 8vo, Vol. 1, 12s.

[Philosophical Library.]

Hindustani Idioms.

With Vocabulary and Explanatory Notes. For the Use of Candidates for the Higher Standard. By Colonel A. N. PHILLIPS, late Indian Army. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Past and Future :

Being a Second Edition, with Addenda, of SATURN'S KINGDOM; OR, FABLE AND FACT. By CHARLES MOORE JESSOP, M.R.C.P. Lond., Deputy Surg.-Gen. H.M.'s Forces (retired). Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Collected Scientific Papers of Dr. L. C. Wooldridge.

Arranged by VICTOR HORSLEY, B.L., F.R.C.S., F.R.S., and ERNEST STARLING, M.D., D.Sc. With an Introduction by VICTOR HORSLEY. Demy 8vo. [Shortly.]

Methods of Practical Hygiene.

By Professor K. B. LERMAN, Würzburg. Translated by W. CROOKES, F.R.S., 2 vols., demy 8vo. [Shortly.]

The History of Creation ;

Or, the Development of the Earth and its Inhabitants by the Action of Natural Causes. A Popular Exposition of the Doctrine of Evolution. From the latest German Edition of ERNST HAECKEL. Translation Revised by Prof. E. RAY LANKESTER. Fourth Edition, with numerous Illustrations, 2 vols, large post 8vo, 32s.

English Folk-Rhymes.

A Collection of Traditional Verses relating to Places and Persons, Customs, Superstitions, &c. By G. F. NORTHALL. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Dana's System of Mineralogy.

DESCRIPTIVE MINERALOGY. Sixth Edition. By EDWARD SALISBURY DANA. Entirely re-written and much Enlarged. Illustrated with over 1,400 Figures. Royal 4to, £3 3s.

Victorien Sardou, Poet, Author, and Member of the Academy of France. A Personal Study. By BLANCHE ROOSEVELT. Officer of the Academy of France, Author of "Life and Reminiscences of Gustave Dore," &c. Preface by W. BEATTY-KINGSTON. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Morning Post.—"Exceptionally valuable to students of theatrical literature and biography. The Author has done her work with remarkable success. We can safely say of this volume that it does not contain a superfluous word or sentence."

St. James's Gazette.—"Miss Roosevelt has brought together a pleasant little budget of anecdote and gossip about her hero, the author of 'La Tosca.'"

The Scarlet Letter.

By NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. With Portrait of Author and Twelve Photographs from Designs in Outline by F. O. C. Darley. Post 8vo, bound in crimson and white, gilt tops, 10s. 6d.

The Formation of the Gospels.

By F. P. BADHAM, B.A., Exeter College, Oxford. New and Enlarged Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Wagner Sketches, 1849 : A Vindication.

By WILLIAM ASHTON ELLIS. Editor of the "Meister," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d., paper 2s.

The World.—"Mr. Ellis straightens out the whole narrative very completely. . . . I recommend it to all English Wagnerians, who already owe to its author more than to any other man, except perhaps Mr. Dannreuther."

Art and Handicraft.

A Series of Papers on the Study of English Architecture, Religion, and Art, the Handicrafts in Old Days, Art and Nature in Cornwall, Our Arts and Industries, Expression in Architecture. By the late JOHN D. SEDDING, Author of "Garden-craft," &c. Demy 8vo. [Shortly.]

Sanchi and its Remains :

A Full Description of the Ancient Buildings, Sculptures, and Inscriptions at Sanchi near Bilsa, in Central India. By the late General FREDERICK CHARLES MAISEY, and an Introductory Note by Major-General Sir ALEX. CUNNINGHAM K.C.S.I. Royal 4to, with 40 Full-Page Plates, strongly bound, £2 10s [Shortly.]

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHARING CROSS ROAD.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1074.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

[SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY'S CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

"The Finest Gift-Book of the Season."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

The Capitals of the World.

In Two Volumes, superbly Illustrated, handsomely bound in half-morocco, gilt edges, THREE GUINEAS NET.

"A superb work.....As to the writers we need not give a complete list of names; it will perhaps be enough to say, as an indication of the quality of the work that London is described by Sir Charles Dilke, Paris by François Coppée, Constantinople by Pierre Loti, Bucharest by Curmen Sylva, and Madrid by Emilio Castelar. The illustrations are by artists of the highest class. As a rule, an illustrated book is a book to look at, not to read. One turns casually its pages of letterpress and studies its pictures. But these volumes one has to read; the life described is as fascinating as the life depicted. In each case the object of pen and pencil alike is to show the place as it lives and not merely its great palaces and monuments. We are made to feel familiar with the life of each capital, with its crowds, its drives, its pleasures, its business, and its characteristic street figures.....Not many of us have actually seen all these capitals, but some of us have seen most of them, and can speak to the fidelity of these admirable illustrations and highly interesting descriptions. A peculiar charm about the work is that it is not a guide book. A guide book is an excellent thing in its way; is sometimes as indispensable as a time table. But these volumes enable you to live over again your life in any of the capitals described; there can be no farewell to such scenes with such a remembrance."—The Daily News (leader).

"In no similar work have artistic excellence and descriptive power been more liberally put at the service of the world's capitals."—Standard.

"Brightly written, well and profusely illustrated, printed in large type, and handsomely bound, the book on the world's capital cities must be counted among the principal productions of the season.....Altogether the book is certainly one to be welcomed with satisfaction."—Morning Post.

"Artistic excellence of the highest order has been lavished and supplemented by brilliant description.....A literary treasure, which the book-lovers of future generations will prize as dearly as they now do Aldines and Elzevirs and other rare and precious editions."—Leeds Mercury (leader).

"Assuredly we have not had for years such a beautiful and interesting work for the winter holiday season as this, which is just issued in two substantial quarto volumes."—Daily Chronicle.

"Two dozen of the chief cities of the world are described by men more or less eminent in literature, and well qualified to do justice to their themes."—Scotsman.

 AN ILLUSTRATED PROSPECTUS POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

By WILLIAM BLACK.	Wolfenberger , 3 vols., crown 8vo. At all Libraries.
By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A.	TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwalder, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan, who recently escaped, with two Sisters of Mercy, on Camels, from the Sudan. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.
By A. J. MOUNTENEY JEPHSON.	STORIES TOLD in an AFRICAN FOREST by GROWN-UP CHILDREN of AFRICA. With numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Walter W. Buckley. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d. *A collection of Zanzibar Tales told in the Forest by the men of the Emin Relief Expedition during the march across Africa.
By JAMES DOUGLAS.	BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA. By James Douglas. Dedicated to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. With Maps and Plans, Full-page Photogravures, Collotype Reproductions from Old Documents, Coloured Reproduction of an Old Picture, and over 100 other Text Illustrations. 2 vols., super-royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, TWO GUINEAS NET.
By Rev. C. J. ABBEY.	RELIGIOUS THOUGHT in OLD ENGLISH VERSE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d. "Mr. Abbey brings to his task the three essential qualifications of fine poetic sensibility, genuine poetry, and extensive theological learning."— Times . "Must be bought, kept, and loved."— Daily Chronicle .
Edited by JOSEPH CUNDALL.	TALES of ADVENTURE and STORIES of TRAVEL of FIFTY YEARS AGO. Illustrated with Twenty Plates from "The Annuals." Large post 8vo, half-leather, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.
By HENRY BLACKBURN.	ARTISTIC TRAVEL: a Thousand Miles Towards the Sun. NORMANDY, BRITTANY, the PYRENEES, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. With 130 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d. "A most agreeable and handsome record of diversified voyages in search of the picturesque."— Daily Telegraph .
By C. WILLEBY.	FREDERIC CHOPIN: a Biography. With Photogravure Portrait. Facsimile of Autograph, and Illustrations of his Music. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d. "Will be appreciated by the great musician's admirers."— Times .
By W. ANDERSON SMITH.	"SHEPHERD" SMITH, the UNIVERSALIST: the Story of a Mind. Being the Life of JAMES E. SMITH, M.A. By W. ANDERSON SMITH. With Photogravure Portrait and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.
By AMELIA E. BARR.	THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER. 1 vol., crown 8vo. cloth, 5s.
By THOMAS WRIGHT.	THE MYSTERY of ST. DUNSTAN'S: a Realistic and Sensational Story of Fleet Street in 1724. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.
By FRANK R. STOCKTON	THE CLOCKS of RONDAINE, and other Stories. Illustrated. Square 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d. "Stories in which there is playful humour and poetic fancy always; the whole book is admirable. It is excellently illustrated."— Scotsman .
By FERGUS HUME.	THE FEVER of LIFE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s. "Even the reader who is well trained in detective romance will find no clue till the secret is sprung upon him in the last pages. To baffle the reader thus is the highest aim of writers of such stories, and we heartily congratulate Mr. Hume on his success."— Manchester Guardian .
By E. J. CLAVE.	SIX YEARS of ADVENTURE in CONGO-LAND. With an Introduction by HENRY M. STANLEY. Beautifully Illustrated. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.
By JULES VERNE.	MISTRESS BRANICAN. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

HAVE YOU SEEN THE Christmas Number of
SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE
COMPLETE IN ITSELF.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

Ask to see it at your Booksellers.

WITH COLOURED FRONTISPIECE AND UPWARDS OF FIFTY ILLUSTRATIONS,

AND ARTICLES BY

ARCHIBALD FORBES, T. B. ALDRICH,
G. W. CABLE, OCTAVE THANET,
G. R. TOMSON, F. D. MILLET,

And others.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

FASHIONS OF TO-DAY

A HIGH-CLASS ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR GENTLEWOMEN.

DECEMBER NUMBER NOW READY.

TWO COLOURED PLATES AND MANY OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

With Presentation Portrait of Mrs. Grover Cleveland, Wife of the New President of the United States, from a Pencil Drawing from Life by Carl Becker.

Literary Contents of December Number:

Mrs. Haweis, "First Principles of Fashion."—Miss Ida Miller, "Christmas Decorations."—"Etinelle," Parisiennes Fin de Siècle: A Critique of the Prevailing Modes.—Carl J. Becker, Mrs. Grover Cleveland, wife of the President-Elect of the United States.—Miss Mary Gerton, "Causerie Artistique."—Hermann Klein, "Causerie Musicale."—Mrs. Cutbell, "Conference of Women Workers at Clifton."—Miss L. A. Smith, "The Songs of Servia."—Dr. Guilleminet, A Chat with the Doctor.—Madame de Brontelles, "Paris Fashions."—Miss Vera Karsland, "Between Ourselves."—Lieut.-Colonel Warburton, "The Gift of his Life" (Serial Story).—Hints for the Toilet.—Books for the Boudoir.—Articles for Sale or Exchange.—About our New French Patterns in Dress and Needlework.—Cookery Recipes, &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

WILLIAM BELL SCOTT'S AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL NOTES, by WILLIAM SHARP	499
MEMOIRS OF THE YERNEY FAMILY, by ARTHUR GALTON	501
BLUNT'S ESTHER AND LOVE LYRICS, by PERCY ADDLESHAW	503
DOUGLAS SLADEN'S THE JAPS AT HOME, by S. M. McCALMONT HILL	504
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	501
GIFT BOOKS	505
NOTES AND NEWS	507
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	507
ORIGINAL VERSE: "AN ELFIN SKATE," by EUGENE LEE-HAMILTON	508
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	508
"INDIAN FIELD SPORTS," by J. S. C.	508
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	508
CORRESPONDENCE— The Gospel of Peter, by S., "Crescent," by Dr. J. A. H. Murray; The Old of St. Columba, by the Rev. Dr. B. MacCarthy; The Vision of Macconline, by Prof. Hugo Meyer; A Selection from Lessing, by H. C. G. Brandt	509
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	510
PRELLWITZ'S ETYMOLOGICAL GREEK DICTIONARY, by E. R. WHARTON	510
CORRESPONDENCE— Pill "Cumbata," Prékrit "Cumbata," by the Rev. Dr. R. MOTT'S	511
SCIENCE NOTES	511
PHILOLOGY NOTES	511
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	511
STORY'S LIFE OF JOHN LINNELL, by FREDERICK WEDMORE	512
THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATERCOLOURS, by COSMO MONTROUSE	512
CORRESPONDENCE— The Authors' Inquiry, by Percy Newberry	513
Notes on Art and Archaeology	513
DRAMATIC NOTES FROM PARIS, by CECIL NICHOLSON	513
STAGE NOTES	514

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

UNIVERSITY TYPE-WRITING
OFFICE, OXFORD (16, King Edward Street)—MSS. of all descriptions typed and prepared for the press. Literary, Scientific, Medical, and Foreign MSS. carefully copied and revised by experienced typists. Notes taken at the Bodleian. Shorthand Clerk and Typist sent any distance by train. Translations—For price list and information address the Secretary.

TYPEWRITING.—LADY seeks EM-
PLOYMENT, all kinds of Copying, Home Work. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words); for 5,000 words or over, 1s. per Thousand. Cash on or before delivery.—A. NIGHTINGALL, The Avenue, Stevenage.

AUTHORS, ACTORS, PUBLISHERS,
and PUBLIC SCHOOL MANAGERS should send MSS., Plays, Examination Papers, &c., requiring to be carefully and accurately typewritten, to KAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE (82 pp.) of SECOND-
HAND BOOKS, comprising First Editions of Browning, Dickens, Dobson, Jeffries, Lang, Morris, Swinburne, Tennyson, Alphonse and Montaigne, and Works illustrated by Crane, Caldecott, Cruikshank, Greenaway, Leech, Thomson, &c. Post free.
MATTHEWS & BROOKE, Sun Buildings, Bradford.

GRAND OLD OAK LONGSETTLE, with finely carved panelled back; Grandfather's old oak tall case (carved) Clock, brass face; and a quaint old oak Table (carved) FOR SALE; good condition; can be seen or particulars forwarded.—FLORENCE, Cromwell House, Morton, near Northallerton, Yorkshire.

"FRANCESCA: Roadside Songs of Tuscany."—To complete the Catalogue, OWNERS of already communicated them are respectfully REQUESTED TO ADDRESS the SECRETARY of John Ruskin, Esq., Brantwood, Coniston, Lancashire.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.
The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.
Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations
Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.
The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.
Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—OPENING

MEETING OF THE TWENTY-SIXTH SESSION, MONDAY, DECEMBER 5th, at 8 o'clock. Paper on "PRINCIPLES OF RANK among ANIMALS," by Professor PARKER.
F. PETRIE, Hon. Sec.
8, Adelphi Terrace, Strand.

THE ART UNION OF LONDON,

112, STRAND.

President: The EARL OF DERRY, K.G. Established 1837.
SUBSCRIBERS for the current year are entitled to an ORIGINAL ETCHING by ROBERT MACBETH, A.R.A., entitled "LATE for the PERRY," in addition to a chance of one out of many valuable Prizes in Pictures, and other Works of Art. ORDINARY SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA. SUBSCRIPTIONS for PROOFS, SEVEN, FIVE, THREE, and TWO GUINEAS. The Society issues this year, in two states only, a Fine Mezzotint Engraving of Sir JOHN MILLAIS' Picture, "A SOUVENIR OF VELASQUEZ." The Engravings and full particulars may be obtained at the Society's House, 112, Strand, London, W.C.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION

CHICAGO, 1893.

DEPARTMENT OF FINE ARTS.

If those of the AMERICAN ARTISTS resident in England who purpose EXHIBITING WORKS at the CHICAGO EXPOSITION will send their names and addresses to the undersigned, care of Mr. JAMES BOULET, 17, Nassau Street, Middlesex Hospital, circulars of particulars and conditions will be forwarded to them.
EDWIN A. ARNEY,
Special Advisory Commissioner for England.

DANIEL VIERGE.

An EXHIBITION of the DRAWINGS of this celebrated Artist, including the Series illustrating PABLO DE SEGOVIA, the PARIS COMMUNE, &c., WILL BE HELD AT
BARNARD'S INN HALL, 22, HOLBORN, E.C.,
On DECEMBER 2nd, 3rd, 5th, 6th, and 7th.
From 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Admission, 1s.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.—The THIRTY-FIRST WINTER EXHIBITION OF SKETCHES and STUDIES is now OPEN, 5, PALL MALL EAST. From 10 till 5. Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council is prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR OF LATIN. The stipend of the Professor will be £350 per annum. Applications together with testimonials, must be sent in before January 10th. For further information apply to Ivor JAMES, Registrar,
University College, Cardiff,
November 30th, 1892.

HYMERS' COLLEGE, KINGSTON-UPON-HULL.

The Governors of the new Foundation of Hymers' College at Hull invite APPLICATIONS for the appointment of HEAD MASTER of the COLLEGE. The salary will be £350 per annum, with a capitation grant of £2 per boy per annum.
The College, which is in course of erection, will have accommodation for 320 pupils.
It is proposed to open the College in the month of September, when the Head Master will be expected to enter on his duties, but in the meantime the Governors will require the assistance and advice of the Head Master with reference to those matters on which they may desire his opinion.
The Head Master must be a Graduate of one of the Universities of the United Kingdom and must give personal attention to the duties of his office. He must not hold any benefice or curacy or any other office or appointment which, in the opinion of the Governors, may interfere with the proper performance of his duties as Head Master.
The appointment will be determinable by the Governors by six calendar months' notice.
Further information may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, stating age, qualifications, and experience, with copies or prints of testimonials, must be sent on or before Monday, the 2nd day of January, 1893, marked "Application for appointment of Head Master of Hymers' College."
Canvassing will disqualify.

R. HILL DAWK, Secretary to the Governors.

Town Hall, Hull, 20th November, 1892.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects the standard before the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Trow, &c.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

TENTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS.

HIS MAJESTY the KING of SWEDEN and NORWAY has OFFERED a GOLD MEDAL for the best ESSAY on the following subject:—"A Comparative Treatment of the Grammatical Forms peculiar to the Rig-Veda, Yagur-Veda, Sama-Veda, and Athorva-Veda, distinguishing the Forms peculiar to the Mantras, Brāhmanas, and Upanishads."
MSS. should be sent registered (with the name of the writer in a sealed envelope) to Prof. F. MAX MÜLLER, Oxford, not later than March 1, 1894. The Prize will be awarded at the Tenth Congress, to be held at Geneva, in September, 1894. The following gentlemen have consented to co-operate as judges:—Professor LEXMAY, of Harvard College; M. Victor HENRI, of the Paris University; and Professor OLDENBERG, of Kiel University.

MISS LOUISA BROUGH (late Registrar of the Teachers' Guild) begs to announce that she has OPENED a high-class REGISTRY for SCHOOLMISTRESSES and PRIVATE GOVERNESSES at 23, Craven Street, Charing Cross, W.C.

This day is published, 4to. sewed, price 12s.

WALDSTEIN (C.).—EXCAVATIONS of the AMERICAN SCHOOL of ATHENS at the HERAION of ARGOS. No. 1.
Pp. 20 and 7 Plates.

LA DIVINA COMMEDIA. Con
Commenti de Prof. P. G. BERTHIER. 4to, complete in 50 Parts, at 2s. net each. Parts I. and II., now ready.

BEATRICE PORTINARI. Par Prof.
R. P. BERTHIER. Svo. Illustrated. Part I., now ready. (To be completed in 6 Parts, at 1s. 9d. net.)

Recently published, in 1 vol., cr. Svo, cloth, price 6s.

BARROW (E. P.).—REGNI EVANGELIUM: a Survey of the Teaching of Jesus Christ.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES, 1891.

In 1 vol., Svo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE ORIGIN and GROWTH of the
CONCEPTION of GOD as illustrated by ANTHRO-POLOGY and HISTORY. By Count GOBIET D'ALVIELLA, Professor of the History of Religions at the University of Brussels.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES, 1892.

In 1 vol., Svo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

ORIGIN and GROWTH of RELIGION as illustrated by the RELIGION of the ANCIENT HEBREWS. By C. G. MONTEFIORE. [In a month.]

1 vol., Svo, 652 pp., cloth, 14s.

A PLAIN COMMENTARY on the
FIRST GOSPEL. By AN AGNOSTIC.

"Logical power and reasoning ability of a very high class are displayed throughout this manifesto of Agnosticism."

"This work may claim consideration as something probably unique in literature."—Scotsman.

Just published, in 1 vol., Svo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

MACKINNON (J.).—CULTURE in EARLY SCOTLAND.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London;
and 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

MUDIE'S
SELECT LIBRARY.

or the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
ONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and us lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

THE CITY BRANCH

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
Is Now Removed from 2, King Street, Cheapside, to 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
(MANSION HOUSE END).

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

DR. SMILES'S WORKS.JASMIN: Barber, Poet, Philanthropist.

Post 8vo, 6s. 14th Thousand.

"What Jasmin did for himself in poetry Dr. Smiles has now done for him in prose, doing full justice to that part of his life which Jasmin's simple modesty forbade him to record, namely, his unceasing philanthropic efforts. The story is noble as well as touching, and is told by Dr. Smiles with abundance of sympathy and appreciation." Times.

"Dr. Smiles has performed a praiseworthy task in introducing this little-known but admirable man to English readers. He died worn out at the age of sixty-five. In the south of France he was mourned as the friend of the friendless, as the St. Vincent de Paul of poetry." Academy.

"Dr. Samuel Smiles has given to the world a graceful and sympathetic record of a pure and beautiful human life, teeming with the poetry of action as well as of thought, and resolute throughout of good deeds and lovingkindness." Daily Telegraph.

"Il a fait un livre bien personnel et aussi complet que possible. Voilà Jasmin 'raconté' en anglais pour la postérité. C'est M. Smiles qui est le coupable, et son élégant volume nous a tout fait charmé." Revue Littéraire.

"No one of Dr. Smiles's books is more delightful than this one about the warlike-hearted poet of Gascony. Dr. Smiles appears here at his best; for the story of Jasmin's life is full of romance, and the style of this volume has the happy characteristics of ease, simplicity, and beauty." Liverpool Mercury.

"The story of such a life is well worth telling, and it has been admirably and sympathetically told by Dr. Smiles in a book which, to our mind, is one of the most attractive of all his works." John Bull.

"One of the most touching and charming biographies we have ever read." Critic (New York).

LIFE and LABOUR; or, Characteristics of MEN of INDUSTRY, TALENT, AND GENIUS. 6s.MEN of INVENTION and INDUSTRY. 6s.THE HUGUENOTS: their Settlements, CHURCHES, AND INDUSTRIES IN ENGLAND AND IRELAND. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

6s. each.

SELF-HELP. CHARACTER. THRIFT. DUTY.INDUSTRIAL BIOGRAPHY. 6s.LIVES of the ENGINEERS. Illustrated. 5 vols. 7s. 6d. each.LIFE of GEORGE STEPHENSON. With Illustrations. 21s.; 7s. 6d.; or 2s. 6d.JAMES NASMYTH, ENGINEER: an AUTOBIOGRAPHY. With Portrait and 90 Illustrations. 10s. and 6s.LIFE of THOMAS EDWARD, Scotch NATURALIST. Illustrated by Sir George Reid, P.R.S.A. 6s.LIFE of ROBERT DICK, Geologist AND BOTANIST. Illustrated. 12s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations,
Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs,
Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,*SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other*SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.*CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET.

MAYFAIR, W.

WARD, LOCK, BOWDEN & CO'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.Complete Catalogue post free on application.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH, Nov. 29, 1892, says: "The work may justly be signalled as a monument of painstaking research and intelligent labour."

Important New Work by Geo. Barnett Smith.NOW READY, in 2 vols., medium 8vo, cloth, 21s.*HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PARLIAMENT,*TOGETHER WITH AN ACCOUNT OF THE Parliaments of Scotland and Ireland.*By G. BARNETT SMITH,

Author of "The Prime Ministers of Queen Victoria," "The Life of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.," &c.

Illustrated with Facsimiles of numerous Valuable Historical Documents connected with Constitutional History.

This important work, which is the only real history of Parliament, has occupied many years in preparation. It is published in two large 8vo volumes of nearly 600 pages each. The first begins with the earliest times and ends with the reign of Charles II. The second volume commences with the Revolution and comes down to the reign of Victoria, closing with the Reform Acts of 1832-35. The Supplements alone to this History—which are seventeen in number—are virtually a work in themselves. These "Constitutional Addenda" embrace a vast variety of information touching the Sovereign, the Cabinet, the Parliament, and the Constitution. The interest of the work will be further enhanced by a number of facsimiles of documents illustrative of the history of Parliament.

THE DAILY NEWS says: "His chapters abound in important incidents and episodes of our history; they bring together on a regular plan a large amount of information of a sort that no English reader should be ignorant of."

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH says: "It is practically a compendious history of Great Britain and the sister island, and thus more than fulfils the promise of its title."

LONDON: WARD, LOCK, BOWDEN & CO., SALISBURY SQUARE, E.C.

JOURNAL OF EDUCATION,

No. 251, for DECEMBER.

With SUPPLEMENTS.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

NOTES on ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

FEMALE EDUCATION in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By ANNE DOROTHEA JERRE.

A NEW POET. By ARABELLA SHORE.

THE FUTURE of CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.

CHRISTMAS BOOKS (Second Notice).

NOTES on the TRAINING of SECONDARY TEACHERS in GERMANY, with SUGGESTIONS for ENGLAND. By J. J. FINLAY.

ART STUDENTS' HOME.

FOREIGN NOTES.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

THE TEACHERS' GUILD of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND.

SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES.

OUR TRANSLATION PRIZES.

SPECIAL PRIZE AWARD (Twenty Best Poems of Tennyson).

REVIEWS and MINOR NOTICES.

Rogers' First Steps in French History; Jones's Introduction to General Logic; Kant's Kritik of Judgment (Bernard); Bouguer's Lord William Bentinck; Duhamel's French Prose Composition.

Fasnacht's French Composition (Second Course); &c.

CORRESPONDENCE—

Does Training Pay? (Miss Hughes); Modern Greek; The Influence of P. D. Maurice on Tennyson; The New Method Once More (Prof. Victor); Voice Production; Reading Circles for Teachers; A Legal Query; Upright Handwriting; Marking Arithmetic Papers.

A Month's Training Worse than None; Auricular Language Teaching; The Guin Method; Harrow Holidays; &c.

Price 6d., per post, 8d.

Office: 86, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Now Ready.—DECEMBER, 1892.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by ARCHIBALD GROVE.

No. 43.

HIS LAST CAMPAIGN, and AFTER. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD.

MR. IRVING and the ENGLISH DRAMA. By GEORGE BARLOW.

THRIFT for the POOR.—I. By CLEMENTINA BLACK.

II. By Lady FREDERICK CAVENTISH.

III. By Lady MONTAGU of BEAULIEU.

IV. By the DUCHESS of RUTLAND.

MY CRITICS and their METHODS. By Major Le CARON.

SPEECHES and SPEAKERS of TO-DAY. By "MILES INGLORIOUS."

THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL and OPEN SPACES. By the EARL of MEATH.

WOMEN, CLERGYMEN, and DOCTORS. By ERNEST HART, M.D.

THE MEN of PEACE: a Highland Tradition. By Lady ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL.

A SPECIAL LITERARY SUPPLEMENT.

I. By EDMUND GOSSE.

II. By ANDREW LANG.

III. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

IV. By H. D. TRAILL.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

T. & T. CLARK'S LIST.

Just published, in 2 large vols., 8vo, price 14s. net.

OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGYThe Religion of Revelation in its Pre-Christian Stage of Development.

By Prof. HERMANN SCHULTZ, D.D., Göttingen.

Authorised English Translation by Prof. J. A. PATERSON, M.A. Oxon.

"Professor Paterson has executed the Translation with as much skill as care....readers may rely on his having given the meaning of the original with the utmost accuracy."—FROM THE AUTHOR'S PREFACE TO THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION.

THE INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY.

Just published (No. II. of the Series), post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

APOLOGETICS;Or, Christianity Defensively Stated.

By Professor A. B. BRUCE, D.D.,

Author of "The Training of the Twelve," "The Humiliation of Christ," &c.

"It is an apologetic presentation of the Christian faith with reference to whatever in our intellectual environment makes faith difficult at the present time."

FROM THE AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

No. II. of the Series, post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

CHRISTIAN ETHICS.

By NEWMAN SMYTH, D.D.,

Author of "Old Faiths in New Light," "The Reality of Faith," &c., &c.

"There is not a dead, dull, conventional line in the volume. It is the work of a wise, well-informed, independent, and thoroughly competent writer. It removes a reproach from our indigenous theology, fills a glaring blank in our literature, and is sure to become the text-book in Christian Ethics."

Professor MARCUS DONS, D.D., in The Bookman.

No. I. of the Series, Fourth Edition, post 8vo, price 12s.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE LITERATURE OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

By S. R. DRIVER, D.D.,

Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford.

"The service which Canon Driver's book will render in the present confusion of mind on this great subject, can scarcely be over-estimated."—Times.

EDINBURGH: T. & T. CLARK, 38, GEORGE STREET:

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON,

KENT & Co., Limited.

PUBLICATIONS

OF

GEORGE NEWNES, LIMITED.THE ADVENTURES of SHERLOCK HOLMES.

By DR. A. CONAN DOYLE.

Printed on thick paper, with 104 illustrations.

321 pages (7th Thousand), 6s.

THE SIGN of FOUR

By DR. A. CONAN DOYLE.

2nd pages (2nd Edition), 3s. 6d.

1,000 TIT-BITS OF CURIOUS INFORMATION.

338 pages, cloth, 2s. 6d.

S, 9, 10, and 11, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, AND EXETER STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LIGHTS OF HOME. Messrs. Charles Dalton, Eardley Turner, G. W. Cockburn, W. A. Elliott, Howard Russell, T. Kingston, W. Drew, J. and W. Northote; Miss Evelyn Millard, Miss Dorothy Dorr, Mrs. H. Leigh, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss Clara Jacks.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE GUARDSMAN. Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Elliot, W. Draycott, C. P. Little, Compton Coutts, R. Nainby, E. Bertram, and Weedon Grossmith; Mesdames Ellaline Terriss, Agnes Thomas, Isabel Elhieson, Irene Rickards, and Caroline Hill. 8.15, CRAZED. Messrs. C. P. Lattie, Nainby, and Miss S. Grey.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE OLD LADY. Messrs. W. H. Vernon, H. Standieg, F. Kerr, S. Valentine, D. S. James, H. de Lange, W. Dale; Mesdames Filippi, Jeffreys, and Mrs. John Wood. At 8.15, POOR MIGNONETTE. Miss Crofton; Messrs. Valentine and Shirley.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, SECOND EDITION of CINDERELLEN UP TOO LATE. Mesdames Maggie Duggan, K. Seymour, A. Astor, and Letty Lind; Messrs. C. Danby, Fred Storey, A. Playfair, and Fred Leslie. At 7.45, THE SNOWDROP.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.

Miss Estelle Burney's Season.

THIS EVENING, at 9, DAVID. Miss Estelle Burney; Messrs. Murray Carson, H. Waring, Beauchamp, Bucklaw; Miss L. Lee and Mrs. Crowe (Miss Bateman). At 8.15, A CAPRICE.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Managers, Messrs. JOHN LART and WM. BOOSEY.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, MA MIE ROSETTE. Messrs. Eugene Oudin, Frank Wyatt, Lawrence D'Oraay, Cairns James, Scott Fiske, and Courtois Pounds; Mlle. Neville, Mesdames Jenny McNulty, F. Melville, Day Ford, and Jessie Bond.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, AGATHA TYLDEN, MERCHANT AND SHIPOWNER. Messrs. Lewis Waller, Cyril Maude, W. T. Lovell, F. A. Everill, Edmund Maurice, Rudge Harding, W. Chessman; Miss Marie Linden and Mrs. Langtry. At 8, THE BURGLAR AND THE JUDGE. Messrs. W. Day and Cyril Maude.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, INCONGITA. Messrs. Harry Monkhouse, Wallace Brownlow, John Child, Charles Gilbert Fred Kaye, T. A. Hale; Misses Aida Jenoure, Susie Vaughan, St. Cyr, Fimeline Orford, Florence Darley. At 7.45, BEEF TEA.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. ROLLO BALMAIN.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45, HOODMAN BLIND. Messrs. Rollo Balmain, George Barrett, Bassett Roe, Leonard Outram, M. Drew, G. Yorke, S. Calhaem, E. Butler, B. Mervyn, H. Thomas, &c.; Mesdames C. de Yonson, F. Butler, E. King, and Sara Mignon.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, IN TOWN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, E. Lewis, B. Grattan, E. Bantock, F. Rimmer; Misses Phyllis Brughton, Sylvia Grey, and Florence St. John, supported by a powerful company. At 8, AULD LANG SYNE.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, CIGARETTE. At 7.50, CUT OFF WITH A SHILLING. Messrs. Collette, Oswald Yorke, A. J. Evelyn, Leslie Holland, Daintree, Lascelle, Fair, and Joseph O'Mara; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Amadi, Marion Erie, May Lawrie, M. Collette, H. Vicary, C. Loseby, J. Bradford, and Albu.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, WALKER, LONDON. Mr. J. L. Toole; Messrs. C. M. Lowne, Cecil Ramsey, Seymour Hicks, George Shelton; Misses Eliza Johnstone, Edie Liston, Mary Ansell, Ain-worth, Irene Vanbrugh. At 8, DAISY'S ESCAPE. Messrs. John Billington, Shelton, Lowne, Brunton; Misses Conynghame, Loveday.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, M. Levenston.

THIS EVENING, at 8, DOROTHY. Messrs. Joseph Tapley, Leonard Russell, Furneaux Cook, John Le Hay, Frank Lacy, and William Elton; Misses Decima Moore, M. A. Victor, Lucy Carr, Shaw, Mabel Love, and Florence Dysart.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Lessees and Managers.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, OUR BOYS. Mr. David James, Mr. William Farren, Mr. E. W. Gardiner, Mr. Reeves Smith, Mr. Duncan Fleet, &c.; Miss May Whitty, Miss Eva Moore, Miss Sophie Larkin, and Miss Cicely Richards. At 7.40, THE MARTYR.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA:

A DICTIONARY OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE.

Entirely New Edition, in Ten Volumes, Imperial 8vo.

WITH NUMEROUS MAPS AND WOOD ENGRAVINGS.

NINE VOLUMES NOW READY.

VOL. X, COMPLETING the WORK, in JANUARY, 1893.

PRICES OF COMPLETE SETS:

Cloth	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	£5 0 0
Half-morocco, or Half-calf	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	7 10 0
Half-morocco extra, or Half-russia	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	8 10 0

Sets can also be had in tree calf, and in full morocco.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA contains upwards of Thirty Thousand Articles, and is illustrated by more than Three Thousand Five Hundred Wood Engravings, and Fifty Coloured Maps.

Nearly One Thousand Contributors, including many of the most eminent authorities in every department of knowledge, have assisted in the preparation of this Work.

"Everybody who wants a handy compendium of universal knowledge, thoroughly 'up to date,' must get Chambers's 'Encyclopædia.'"—St. James's Gazette.

"The best Encyclopædia ever brought out."—Daily Chronicle.

"For practical utility these volumes could hardly be exceeded."—Fall Mall Gazette.

"This edition of Chambers's 'Encyclopædia' is perhaps the cheapest book ever published."

The Speaker.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED, 47, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON; AND EDINBURGH.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, 186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

Established 1857. Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:

Discussions of the legal events of the week.

Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

Explanatory and critical disquisitions on all the cases of importance decided in the Courts of Common Law and Equity, pointing out their relations to the previous law.

Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

Full reports of the proceedings of the law societies. A careful summary is given of all the legal news of the week, and special attention is bestowed on furnishing early copies of all Court Papers.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

JAMES NISBET & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE HOT SWAMP: a Romance of Old Allion. By R. M. BALLANTYNE. With 6 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"The story is a capital one, and is worthy to take rank with the best of Mr. Ballantyne's early efforts."—Standard.

NEW RELATIONS: a Story for Girls. By EMMA MARSHALL. With 6 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"Mrs. Marshall's charming chronicle is brightly written and altogether wholesome and desirable."—Athenaeum.

STRANGE YET TRUE: Interesting and Memorable Stories Retold. By JAMES MACAULAY, M.D., Editor of the Leisure Hour, &c. With many Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"Among the five-and-twenty true stories in Dr. Macaulay's book, none are trifling, and many are of the highest interest."—Athenaeum.

VIKING BOYS. By Jessie M. E. Saxby, Author of "The Lads of Lunda," "The Yarl's Yacht," &c. With 4 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"A continuation of the delightful series of Shetland tales, 'The Lads of Lunda' and 'The Yarl's Yacht'.... A very pleasant and well-written book."—Standard.

THE BOYS of RABY; or, There's No Place Like Home. A Holiday Romance for Boys and the Sisters of Boys. By F. A. WHITE. With 38 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"A charming tale, written in a very sympathetic style."—School Board Chronicle.

STEADY YOUR HELM; or, Stowed Away. By WM. CHARLES METCALFE, Author of "Above Board," "Frank Weatherall," &c. With 6 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"The story is vigorously told, and is distinctly above the average."—Standard.

BARON and SQUIRE: a Story of the Thirty Years' War. From the German of N. NOELDECHEN. By SARAH M. S. CLARKE (Mrs. Praeger). With 16 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"It is a romance of the school of Sir Walter Scott, abounding in stirring incidents, and not without a certain value as vividly calling up the scenes and events of real history."—Scotsman.

A BRAVE FIGHT, and other Stories. By ESME STUART. With 4 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"An interesting little volume."—Public Opinion.

SUNWOOD GLORY; or, Through the Refiner's Fire. By MARGARET HAYCRAFT, Author of "Waters of Quietness," "Drift Leaves," &c. With 4 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Thoroughly well told, and full of interest."—Literary World.

JAMES NISBET & CO., 21, BERNERS STREET, W.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR DECEMBER.

TENNYSON. By the Rev. STORTON A. BAKER.

THE UGANDA PROBLEM. By JOSEPH THOMSON.

THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE. By Prof. H. S. FOXWELL.

"EXULTET TERRA." By ALFRED E. P. R. DOWLING.

ARYAN ORIGINS. (With a Map.) By J. S. STUART-GLENNIE.

THE MORALITY OF VIVISECTION: Two Replies. By ERNEST DELL.

THE IDEALISTIC REMEDY for RELIGIOUS DOUBT. By Prof. D. W. SIMON.

WINE-MONTH and WIND-MONTH. By PHIL ROBINSON.

HANS DENCK the ANABAPTIST. By RICHARD HEATH.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION and VOLUNTARY SCHOOLS. By ARTHUR WILSON.

ISDISTER & Co., Limited, Covent Garden, W.C.

ON the MODIFICATION of ORGANISMS

A CRITICISM on DARWIN. By DAVID SYME. "Rot!"—Dr. A. R. WALLACE. "A shrewd critic."—Dr. ROMANES. "A vigorous criticism."—Times. "No earnest student can afford to neglect so firm and clear and strong a criticism of Darwin."—Aberdeen Free Press. Price 3s. 6d.

Fourth Edition, pp. 309, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

Where difficulty is experienced in procuring THE ACADEMY with regularity in the Country, it is requested that application be made direct to the Publisher.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

to

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY.

COURSING AND FALCONRY.

By HARDING COX and the Hon. GERALD LASCELLES.

With 20 Plates and 56 Illustrations by John Charlton, R. H. Moore, G. E. Lodge, L. Speed, &c., in the Text.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

FIFTY YEARS in the MAKING of AUSTRALIAN HISTORY. By Sir HENRY PARKES, G.C.M.G., Premier of New South Wales, 1872-5, 1877, 1878-9. With 2 Portraits. 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

"No more significant contribution to the current history of the British Empire has been made for a long time than is contained in these two remarkable volumes.... It is a book which constantly invites quotation, and even those readers who do not interest themselves in a narrative of the 'making of Australian history' will find not a little to attract them in the self-portraiture of a strong and impressive personality, and in graphic descriptions of many stirring incidents."—Times.

THE RUINED CITIES of MASHONALAND: being a Record of Excavation and Exploration in 1891. By J. THEODORE BENT, F.S.A., F.R.G.S. With a Chapter on the Orientation and Mensuration of the Temples by R. M. W. SWAN. With 5 Maps and Plans, 13 Plates, and 104 Illustrations in the Text. 8vo, 18s.

"Among known ruins we can remember none more interesting than those which Mr. Bent in this book has so vividly described.... We are indebted to Mr. Bent for a charming and unpretentious book, which, with its careful drawings, enables us to realise fully what it was he found, and what are the chances that we shall yet find more."—Spectator.

KING POPPY: a Fantasia. By OWEN MEREDITH (the EARL OF LYTTON). With 1 Plate and Design on title-page by Ed. Burne-Jones, A.R.A. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"In 'King Poppy' Lord Lytton is by turns imaginative, descriptive, and satirical. The word-painting is brilliant and the irony keen, though good-humoured."—Daily Telegraph.

SECRET SERVICE under PITT. By W. J. FITZPATRICK, F.S.A., Author of "Ireland Before the Union," &c. Second Edition, Enlarged. 8vo, 14s.

"A most original and interesting account.... Will be found of the utmost value. Mr. Fitzpatrick is the greatest living authority on the Secret History."—Edinburgh Review.

A SANSKRIT-ENGLISH DICTIONARY: being a Practical Handbook, with Transliteration, Accentuation, and Etymological Analysis throughout. Compiled by ARTHUR A. MACDONELL, M.A., Ph.D. (Deputy), Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford. 4to, 42s.

OLD and NEW ASTRONOMY. By RICHARD A. PROCTOR and A. COWPER RAYNARD. With 31 Plates and 472 Illustrations in the Text. 4to, 36s.

NICHOLAS FERRAR: his Household and his Friends. Edited by the Rev. T. T. CARTER, M.A., Hon. Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. With Portrait, Engraved from a Picture by Cornelius Janssen at Magdalen College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ESSAYS NEW and OLD. By J. B. G. Being Discursive Thoughts on various Subjects. Crown 8vo, 1s., sewed.

CONTENTS:—Popular Songs:—Klopstock and Quedlinburg—Grail Myths and the German Grail-Sage—Manfred—The Athanasian Creed.

EPOCHS of AMERICAN HISTORY—New Volume.

Edited by Dr. ALBERT BUSHNELL HART, Assistant Professor of History in Harvard College.

FORMATION of the UNION (1750-1829). By ALBERT BUSHNELL HART, A.B., Ph.D. With Maps. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITIONS.

SOUVENIRS des CENT JOURS. Par M. VILLEMARIN. Edited, with Notes, by GRANVILLE SHARP, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN WARD."

THE STORY of a CHILD. By MARGARET DELAND, Author of "John Ward," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"The thread of the story is admirably interwoven through the gossip conversations of the children and their elders."—Glasgow Herald.

THE PEEP of DAY; or, a Series of the Earliest Religious Instruction. Authorised Edition, with 13 Illustrations by Miss Bevan, a Niece of the Authoress, Coloured Illustrations, imperial 16mo, 5s.; Plain Illustrations, imperial 16mo, 2s. 6d.

"As we turn over the leaves we mark with delight the artistic pictures and daintily printed hymns, each with music in four parts, and each framed in an exquisite bordering. This is indeed our old friend, but in what an altered guise! Edition de Luxe scarcely expresses the beauty of its present form."—Schoolmaster.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.—DECEMBER.

MRS. JULIET. By Mrs. ALFRED W. HUNT. Chaps. XXXIV.-XXXVI.
INAUGURAL LECTURE DELIVERED before the UNIVERSITY of OXFORD. By J. A. FROUD.
TO A WEE LADDIE. By E. H. HICKRY.
A TEST CASE. By W. LAIBLAW PELL.
"HEY WILLOW WALK, O." By MURRAY EYRE.
A WHITSUNTIDE SANITARY PILGRIMAGE. with the LESSONS. By Dr. B. W. RICHARDSON.
A WOLF BATTUE. By FRED. WHISHAW.
AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

A SELECTION FROM Bentley's Favourite Novels.

Each Work can be had separately, uniformly bound, price 6s.,
Of all Booksellers in Town or Country.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

FOR LILIAS.
NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERJOT'S CHOICE.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY the GOVERNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAX. WEE WIFIE.
WOODED and MARRIED.
MARY ST. JOHN.

By MARIE CORELLI.

A ROMANCE of TWO WORLDS.
VENDETTA. | THELMA.
ARDATH. | WORMWOOD.

By W. E. NORRIS.

THIRLBY HALL.
A BACHELOR'S BLUNDER.
MAJOR and MINOR.
MISS SHAFTO.
THE ROGUE.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
BORDERLAND.
HEALEY.
KITH and KIN.
PROBATION.
ALDYTH.

By JANE AUSTEN.

(The only COMPLETE Editions of Miss Austen's Works are Messrs. Bentley's.)

EMMA.
LADY SUSAN, and the WATSONS.
MANSFIELD PARK.
NORTHANGER ABBEY, and PERSUASION.
PRIDE and PREJUDICE.
SENSE and SENSIBILITY.

By E. WERNER.

SUCCESS.
UNDER a CHARM.
FICKLE FORTUNE.

By HELEN MATHERS.

COMIN' THRO' THE RYE.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

MRS. BLIGH.
COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.
JOAN. | NANCY.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
BELINDA.
"DOCTOR CUPID."
ALAS!

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE WOOING O'T.
HER DEAREST FOE.
LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP.
THE EXECUTOR.
WHICH SHALL IT BE?

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD.
THROWN TOGETHER.
SEAFORTH.

By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU.

UNCLE SILAS.
IN a GLASS DARKLY.
"THE HOUSE by the CHURCHYARD."

By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES.

OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?
LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.
A GILTON GIRL.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Just published.

KING HENRY VIII.

With a Series of Magnificent Photogravures from Original Drawings by Sir JAMES LINTON, P.R.I.
The Text luxuriously printed in red and black on Hand-made Paper. With Introduction by Prof.
DOWDEN.

The Edition of King Henry VIII., will be strictly limited to 250 numbered copies. Price on application at all Booksellers.

A DIARY OF THE SALISBURY PARLIAMENT.

By H. W. LUCY, Author of "A Diary of Two Parliaments." Illustrated by Harry Furniss.
Medium 8vo, cloth gilt, 21s. [Now ready.]

THE NEW BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY. CASSELL'S NEW BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY,

containing Memoirs of the Most Eminent Men and Women of all Ages and Countries. 768 pages, demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [Now ready.]

This work gives in a small compass and handy form a Complete and Universal Biographical Dictionary, containing brief Lives of all the chief characters in the World's History, from the earliest times down to the present day. The limits of space make the work of necessity a record of facts only, and the endeavour of the publishers has been to produce a handy and accurate book of reference, the need of which must often have been felt by the general reader and by those engaged in all kinds of literary work.

A BLOT OF INK.

Translated from the French of RENE BAZIN by Q, Author of "Noughts and Crosses," and PAUL M. FRANCKE. Crown 8vo, 320 pages, cloth gilt, 5s. [Now ready.]

BASHFUL FIFTEEN.

By L. T. MEADE, Author of "A World of Girls," &c. With 8 Full-page Illustrations.
Crown 8vo, 288 pages, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.; or extra cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s. [Now ready.]

EDITION DE LUXE OF

A VISION OF SAINTS.

By LEWIS MORRIS. With 20 Full-page Illustrations from the Old Masters and from contemporary Portraits. Cloth, 21s. [Now ready.]

UPWARDS of 1,000 VOLUMES

SUITABLE FOR GIFT BOOKS

WILL BE FOUND IN

CASSELL & COMPANY'S COMPLETE CATALOGUE

A Copy of which will be forwarded post free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS

OF

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY.

CHESTERFIELD (Lord).—LETTERS and WORKS of. An Exact Reprint of Lord Mahon's Edition. Printed in pica type, on superior paper. With 5 Portraits, 5 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, £3 3s.

* By the kind permission of the owners of the copyright the Publishers have been allowed to include in this edition all the copyright matter which has necessarily been omitted from all other reprints of these famous letters.

DUHRING (JULIA).—AMOR in SOCIETY. A Study from Life. Post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Has all the grace and charm of the best books of light literature, and is as trenchant, as eloquent, as logical as the ideal critic."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"Notwithstanding that it treats of the old-world theme of love and the art of love-making, the treatment of the time-worn subject is decidedly original."—Society.

ABBOTT (Dr. C. C.).—RECENT RAM-

BLER: or, in Touch with Nature. A Series of Essays which are the outcome of Two Years of Rambling.
Elegantly printed on fine paper. With 19 Illustrations, post 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d.
"In the literature of Nature Dr. Abbott's books hold a peculiar place. With all their close observation they are not too technical, and their charm for the general reader is the more potent in that this is so."

WISTER (O.).—THE DRAGON OF

WANTLEY, his Rise, his Voracity, and his Downfall.
A Romance. With numerous Illustrations by J. Stewardson. Royal 8vo, gilt, cloth, 8s. 6d.
"All mediæval readers will be pleased at the quaintness of its theme, its language, and its illustrations, and will thoroughly understand what is especially aimed at."

Court Journal.

WASHINGTON (General).—ITINE-

RARY of, from June 15, 1775, to December 23, 1783.
With Portrait. By WILLIAM S. BAKER. Compiled from Letters, Diaries, Newspapers, and Orderly Books.
8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.
"As day by day we follow Washington through the pages of the 'Itinerary,' we become more and more impressed with the earnestness, steadfastness, and truthfulness of his character."

ALLIBONE (S. A.).—CRITICAL DIC-

TIONARY of ENGLISH LITERATURE and BRITISH and AMERICAN AUTHORS. SUPPLEMENT to this Work by JOHN FOSTER KIRK. 2 vols., imperial 8vo, cloth, £3 3s.

"Holds the field amidst a host of similarly well-intentioned but inadequate volumes."—Saturday Review.

"Invaluable for purposes of rough-and-ready criticism."

Athenæum.

"Has been performed with great ability."—Bookman.
* The Original Work, in 3 vols., imperial 8vo, may still be had, price £4 14s. 6d.

NEW SCIENTIFIC WORKS.

HAND-BOOK of INDUSTRIAL OR-

GANIC CHEMISTRY. For the Use of Manufacturers,
Chemists, and all interested in the Utilisation of Organic
Materials in the Industrial Arts. By S. P. SADTLER.
Numerous Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth, £1 5s.
"As regards the subject-matter of the work, its general character is correctness....Great care has evidently been expended in getting up the statistical appendices."

Chemical News.

CHEMICAL ANALYSIS of IRON. A

Complete Account of all the Best-known Methods for the Analysis of Iron, Steel, Pig-Iron, Iron Ore, &c. By A. A. BLAIR. Numerous Illustrations. 8vo, half-bound, 16s.

"The work should be in the possession of every metallurgical chemist and analyst."—Ironmonger.

THE TANNINS, a Monograph on the History, Preparation, Properties, Methods of Estimation, and Uses of the Vegetable Astringents. By H. TRIM-

BLE. Vol. I. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"A monograph of a very complex and important department of vegetable chemistry."—Chemical News.

THE EXTERIOR of the HORSE. By

GOUBAUX and BARRIER. Translated and Edited by
S. J. J. HARGER, V.M.D. With 346 Figures and 34 Plates by Nicolet. Thick 8vo, cloth, £1 10s.

"By a careful study of this book the reader can appre-ciably shorten the period required to become a judge of a horse by the eye alone....To the person who takes a scientific interest in the use, breeding, and exhibition of horses this translated work will offer great attractions."—Field.

"May be confidently recommended to all owners and breeders of horses."—Morning Post.

"Has no equal on the same subject in any language."

Journal of Comparative Pathology.

Published by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, of Philadelphia,
And Sold at their London Agency,
10, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1892.

No. 1074, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Autobiographical Notes of the Life of William Bell Scott; and Notices of his Artistic and Poetic Circle of Friends, 1830 to 1882. Edited by W. Minto. In 2 vols. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

ALL who knew intimately the late William Bell Scott were aware that he had written an autobiography, and that his reminiscences would be found to cover the whole period of the Victorian renaissance. Since his death, the recollections of a long literary and artistic career have been anticipated with exceptional interest; and when the announcement was made that the editorial trust had been given to so good a friend of the late poet-painter and so distinguished a man of letters as Prof. Minto, the expression of satisfaction was widespread. A rumour had got about that the really important part of the memoir had been destroyed; but this was simply a distorted statement of what did actually happen so far back as (circa) 1848, when Scott, having interpolated in a new autobiography all he wished to preserve from one previously written, burned the latter. Another rumour was to the effect that the autobiography had been left unfinished and unrevised, and that its publication might be postponed indefinitely. There is no doubt, however, that the book was practically completed ten years ago, and that any work upon it between 1883 and 1890 (the year of Scott's death) was of the nature of revision merely. The MS., indeed, was brought to a close in 1882. In the late summer of that year I was Mr. Scott's guest at Ponkill Castle; and I recollect his showing me the MS., with the remark that that after all might prove to be his most welcome contribution to literature, and that he had a strange sense of relief in having finished a long task, sometimes trying, oftener difficult or perplexing, but generally delightful.

We have now the result before us in these two handsome volumes, made doubly attractive by etched portraits and numerous illustrations. At the same time, it must frankly be said that, interesting and even valuable as the best of these illustrations are, they prove—or, rather, those that are autographic prove—that Scott was a much less able artist than several of his eminent friends affirmed or believed, or than he himself maintained. The most interesting is the etching of Mr. Swinburne in the year 1860, when the poet was twenty-two and was writing "Laus Veneris" and other notable lyrical triumphs of the as yet unpublished Poems and Ballads; but even here the artist's very inadequate draughtsmanship is obvious. Though skilled up to a certain point in drawing, and even apt in design of a conventional kind, Scott was no colourist, and, above all, had not that overmastering quest for ideal expression which distinguishes the artist from the artificer.

Now that the long-expected Memoirs are published, the triple question naturally arises: Are they equal in interest and value to general anticipation? Are they as scrupulously free from guile as befits a record come to light from the shadow of the grave? Are they, in a word, wrought in discretion as well as in frank remembrance and felicitous detail?

"He was so tender-hearted," writes the dearest and most intimate friend of his later life—the "AB" who figures so largely in these pages—"that I have known him deprived of sleep by the thought that perhaps a spoken or written word of his might hurt the feelings of a friend." Again, according to Prof. Minto, in the sympathetic "concluding chapter": "[His character] is very fully and frankly revealed in these Autobiographic Notes. A wise and charitable soul makes itself felt in every chapter of them."

The testimony of two such witnesses is not lightly to be gainsaid. The one knew him more intimately than any other friend ever did; the other's acquaintanceship covered a period of sixteen years, during which he "never heard him say an unjust or an uncharitable word, but many a generous one." Bearing this double testimony in mind, with much else of a kindred nature to emphasise it, let the reader turn, pleasantly biased, to the self-written story of Scott's life. If, thereafter, he remember Prof. Minto's encomium, it will be to say in effect, friendship can be blind as well as love. But if the reader come to the perusal with any foreknowledge of Scott and his circle, it cannot be but that he will repudiate some measure at least of the wisdom and charitableness of this "wise and charitable soul."

Let it be admitted freely that to review this book with absolute impartiality must be a painful task for anyone who, in whatever degree, can speak with the authority of personal knowledge. For indisputable reasons, no review of reminiscences can have much weight if written by a critic unfamiliar with the persons and incidents portrayed and depicted, or not intimately acquainted with the record of both. Obviously, most books are best judged solely on their own merits. There are others which must be estimated in accordance with their expressional veracity and innate truth. "Not art for art's sake, but truth for truth's sake," as Scott averred of these very memoirs.

The present writer knew Mr. Bell Scott, and, at one time, 1879-1883, saw him often. More intimately acquainted still with several of those who figure in these pages, familiar, moreover, with the authentic record, even though it be for the most part at second hand—he has justification for his seeming presumption in contradicting certain of the autobiographer's statements, and in protesting against others. There is so much that is interesting in these volumes, so much even that is of distinct gain for the literary and artistic history of the Victorian epoch; the teller is often so entertaining, and sometimes, it must in fairness be added, so winsome, that it is with extreme regret the present critic feels bound to discredit in some degree the testimony of this posthumous record, to protest against a malversation so unfortunate, sometimes so deplorable, occasionally so inexcusable. De mortuis nil nisi bonum is a maxim which should inform the spirit of the biographer; but when, as it were, the dead speaks from the grave, his utterances cannot have the sanction which is his personal due. The misstatements so freely made in these memoirs are beyond hypothetical disclaimers. They do not come warm with anger, tremulous with acute but short-lived irritation, poignant with the sting of recent affront: each has been critically examined, well-weighed, pondered, before it has been wrought to its final shape—each, moreover, has lain for years under the attentive and indeed almost continuous supervision of the artificer.

A large section of this autobiography is concerned with the correspondence, the affairs, the reputed sayings and doings of Dante Gabriel Rossetti; another, though more dispersedly, with reminiscences of the group among whom Rossetti was the dominant personality. Most of this matter is contained in the second volume, though what appears in the later chapters of the first is of interest and importance also. For the present, however, let this first volume be set aside. Nevertheless, one sentence from it may be excerpted, indicative of the author's unfortunate method in dealing with private affairs which call for the most scrupulous heed in narration. "Viola," he writes at p. 286, in allusion to Deverell's picture of the garden scene in "Twelfth Night," "was painted from Miss Siddal, with whom Gabriel, in his innocent adolescence, fell in love, and married. . . ." The underlined words, particularly if taken in connexion with the tactless phrasing in a later passage, where he tells how Mr. Ruskin assisted Miss Siddal to go to Paris, seem to cast a slur on the memory of a woman against whose name there was never any taint of scandal.

Almost immediately after beginning the second volume, the reader will discover how bitterly prejudiced Scott was against one of the most simple-hearted, high-minded, and generous of the dii majores of our time. It seems to me only too evident that the real cause of this vindictiveness was wounded vanity, as foreshadowed in the following episode:—

"Let me finish here with Mr. Ruskin. In 1861, I think it was, after the last of my eight pictures was placed, and instead of arabesques on spandrels of the upper circle of arches in the hall [i.e., of Wallington Hall, the north country seat of Sir Walter Trevelyan], Sir Walter had agreed to my painting eighteen scenes from the ballad of 'Chevy Chase.' Ruskin, who had not been there since his eventful visit with his wife and Millais, at last accomplished his visit to paint one of the pilasters. Lady Trevelyan had kept for him

[to paint] the great white lily, commonly called the Annunciation Lily, but the modesty of the professor would not allow him to take that sacred flower. No, he would take the humblest—the nettle! Ultimately, wheat, barley, and other corn, with the cockle and other wild things of the harvest field, were selected, and he began, surrounded by admiring ladies. . . . At dinner we heard a good deal about the proficiency of [his] pupils at the Working Men's College, and next morning he appeared with his hands full of pen-and-ink minute etchings of single ivy-leaves the size of nature, one of which he entrusted to each lady, as if they had been the most precious things in the world. He took no notice of me, the representative of the government schools. I could stand by no longer. . . . So I gave them [the ladies] a little lecture on the orthodox method of teaching and the proper objects to be used as models, and in a very cool, confident way showed the sensible women, as they all were, that spending so much time niggling over a small flat object with a pen was teaching nothing, but ruining the student for any application of art except that of retouching and spoiling photograph card portraits. I asserted that long practical knowledge made me certain of what I said, and I appealed to him to tell us if he had ever found any young man apply what he had thus learned to any purpose whatever? The revulsion in the minds of my audience was visible at once; he grinned in contemptuous silence. The subject was dropped."

How much unwelcome revelation of character is here? Apart from the absurd resentment in the words I have italicised, what tokens of a feeble arrogance, of an ungenerous antagonist! Alas, great men are ever too apt "to take no notice" of "representatives" of that philistinism against which their genius is a perpetual protest; and to the end of the chapter the said "representatives" will repay in kind.

Certain preceding remarks about Mr. Ruskin's supercilious pretences to him are due clearly to a distorted apprehension. On the same page Scott puts on record an instance of deplorable bad taste, unconscious that he condemns himself out of his own mouth. The circumstances considered, his spitefully worded retort about Turner cuts only one way. When he adds that the "poisonous" expression of Mr. Ruskin's face was a study, he puts himself out of court. A page further on he allows his ill-feeling to betray itself into rash assertions. "Not one of the young men who attended at the Working Men's College ever acquired any power of drawing." How did Mr. Scott ascertain this surprising fact, if fact it be; what proof did he, could he, have? But by far the worst innuendo is that (p. 10, vol. ii.) where the unwarrantable insinuation is made that Mr. Ruskin's "wealth and entire carelessness about it was the cause of his influence as much as his rhetorical genius."

These misstatements do not predispose one to accept intact Scott's record of the great poet, who comes next under the reminiscent whip of the autobiographer. Will it easily be believed that the several anecdotes and remarks about Mr. Swinburne's boyhood and youth are either wholly false or so misrepresented as to be false in implication? Mr. Swinburne, however, can speak—and has spoken—for himself.

There is a suggestive episode of Scott's boyhood told by himself. His father took him with him on a walk one day. On the door of the house of a Dr. Bachelor, in place of the customary brass-plate with name and designation, were the words "Hinc Sanitas." William was asked to translate the inscription. Simple as it was for any ordinary young scholar of his years, the boy could manage neither the pronoun nor the noun. The father rallied his youngster on his backwardness, and perhaps inconsiderately laughed at him in the presence of several friends.

"My shy sensibility was so wounded at his making game of me, as I fancied, I was so savage at his not knowing his laugh would wound me, that when we reached home I shut myself in my bedroom, got hold of my Bible—it was a Sunday evening and the book was handy—and there I took an oath, as I had been told it was to be done, by holding the Bible straight up in my right hand, that when I was old enough and strong enough, I would be the death of him."

The parenthesis here would have quite a suggestion of Heinesque irony but for its delightful naïveté. This amiable child never saw the fulfilment of his vow; but in default he has enjoyed several consolatory stabs at Mr. Ruskin, Mr. Swinburne, Mr. Theodore Watts, Dr. Hake, and others, including Rossetti himself.

It is needless—as it might be ungracious, and certainly would be displeasing to the present writer—to discuss every more or less important mis-statement in these memoirs. One or two further animadversions must suffice.

Among Rossetti's friends there was hardly one for whom he had a kindlier regard and a more genuine esteem than Dr. Gordon Hake. As is well known to all students of the poet-painter, he went out of his way on more than one occasion to review the poetry of the author of Parables and Tales. For myself, I have heard him again and again speak of Dr. Hake not only with the gratitude which that gentleman's long and loyal professional service deserved, and with the affection which his blithe companionship had inspired, but with enthusiastic appreciation of his poetic originality and distinctive charm. I well remember, among other readings or recitations from the same author, with what fervour he declaimed "The Birth of Venus," with what emotion he quoted certain stanzas from "The Blind Boy." It is this good friend whom Scott goes out of his way to discredit (p. 180); this fellow-writer whom he ridicules so complacently (p. 178); this able and original poet whom he wantonly insults (p. 172) by saying that Rossetti "admired and assisted"—"doctoring his doctor in another art," as the autobiographer adds. The remark comes badly from Scott, of all men, whose published verse owes so much to the critical and generous heed of certain intimate friends, and pre-eminently of Rossetti.

But perhaps the most obvious instance of the converse of Scott's "wise and charitable" method is in his treatment of that well-beloved comrade to whom the poet dedicated his highest achievement, Ballads and Sonnets—"To Theodore Watts, the friend whom my verse won for me, these few more pages are affectionately inscribed." Scott knew Mr. Theodore Watts well, and saw him frequently and intimately from 1872 onwards. He knew what a high opinion Rossetti formed of him from the first; how intimate and beloved a companion he was for the ten last years of the poet's life. He knew, moreover, how the acquaintanceship (brought about by Dr. Hake, who thought the verse of the younger and unknown poet would appeal to the elder) was based on community of tastes and intellectual kinship. Yet this is how he introduces—and dismisses—one whom he was wont to address as "his valued friend," heedless of the fact that he curtails the period of Mr. Watts's acquaintance with Rossetti, that he associates him with a then very young and quite unknown writer, that he implies the neglect of all other friends of the poet-painter, and that he mis-states the date when Mr. Watts began "to write criticisms in the weekly papers," and makes it seem that Rossetti welcomed him only as a useful ally for press-nobbling purposes.

"Only two quite new men were now to be seen about him: one, a poet to be; the other, Theodore Watts, who, being professionally a lawyer, managed everything for him, and who was just then beginning to write criticisms in the weekly papers, so was looked upon by poor D. G. R. as doubly important."

The allegation that Rossetti's success as a poet was due, or partly due, to dishonest criticism is baseless as it is infamous. The most powerful thing written in praise of his first volume was, of course, Mr. Swinburne's famous article in the Fortnightly Review. But this article was not a whit more enthusiastic than was Mr. Swinburne's article on Matthew Arnold's poetry. As to Mr. Watts, no one knew better than Scott that when he first knew Rossetti (early in 1872) he had not written a line of criticism, his first article appearing in the Examiner in 1875. Scott also knew that at that time Rossetti had abandoned all thought of bringing out another volume for years, and in fact did not bring out his second volume till 1881. He also knew that Mr. Watts, yielding to Rossetti's deep prejudice against reviewers, kept from Rossetti for a long time the fact that he was writing for the press; while, on the other hand, Scott himself was in the secret, and professed to have a great admiration for Mr. Watts's work. As to Mr. Swinburne, he has or had a letter from Rossetti in which, learning that Mr. Swinburne was about to write upon his poetry, Rossetti urged him not to be too enthusiastic.

After all this evidence of Scott's maladroit way of putting things and perversity of reminiscence, it is hardly necessary to give a warning as to his testimony concerning Rossetti himself. It may be stated at once that whatever he has to say of Rossetti during the last three years or so of Rossetti's life must be discounted in some degree. It is well known that he bore his great friend a chronic grudge, and that he was not over reticent in the expression of his sentiments. He was not in a position to judge of Rossetti's mental and social powers during that period of slow bodily collapse, for the excellent reason that he saw him very rarely, and then only very briefly.

At p. 181, and more particularly and offensively at p. 305, there is what can only be characterised as an outrage upon Mr. William Rossetti and his wife, upon Miss Christina Rossetti, and other relatives or intimate friends. The idea that Rossetti was without loving attendance and affectionate and solicitous friends in his latest years is preposterous. Apart from Mr. Watts, Mr. Hall Caine, and others who were much with him, he saw constantly Mr. Ford Madox Brown, Mr. Leyland, Lord and Lady Mount-Temple, Mr. Joseph Knight, Mr. William Graham, M.P., and others, while so good and well-loved a friend as Mr. Frederick Shields hardly ever missed dining at Cheyne-walk once a week.

I do not care to go further into the untrustworthiness of Scott's Rossetti-record. Others who can protest with more authority will doubtless do so. But, lest these things should pass unnoticed, I may add that the picture "Found" was not an illustration to Scott's poem of "Rosabell," but an original conception worked out in a distinctive manner; and that the superb ballad-poem "The King's Tragedy" was not founded upon Scott's "King's Quhair" designs at Penkill Castle.

It is with pleasure that I now turn to what is valuable in these memoirs. In some respects, no more interesting book has been published recently. The author shows one essential quality of the successful prose writer—that of the power to depict a scene with swift touch and bold outlines. Here, for example, is his account of the death of his mother (vol. i., p. 273), a figure of great pathos and strange dignity. The old lady—who at fourscore quietly removed the gas-pipe her son introduced for her comfort into her cottage at Portobello, for "gas she had never used, and thought her house would be like a tavern with gas-lighting it"—was very lonely in her old age, and had little heed of anything save the longed-for meeting again with her dead husband and children:

"For two days I sat beside her, reading aloud very audibly her favourite chapters from the New Testament. On the third day I saw that the shadow of an unknown evening made all things indistinct to her at noonday and utterly indifferent. A warm afternoon it was, with all the doors open and the sound of the tidal waves breaking and receding again distinctly audible in the stillness, when the dear face was quieted for ever. As I stooped over to kiss it for the last time, a loud knock of three strokes came to a side door that led into the yard behind. The old servant hobbled out to answer, but no one was there, nor could any one be traced."

In the vivid account of Rossetti at Penkill Castle (at the time he wrote "The Stream's Secret"), there is record of another eerie experience of this kind. Rossetti, then in a very overwrought state, came upon a chaffinch in one of his wanderings in that lonely district, and, as it did not attempt to fly or evade him in any way, and was quite quiet in his clasp, he exclaimed suddenly, "It is my wife, the spirit of my wife, the soul of her has taken this shape; something is going to happen to me."

"When we reached home in silence," writes Scott, "Miss Boyd hailed us with the news that the household had had a surprise—the house bell, which takes a strong pull to ring it, had been rung, and rung by nobody!"

Rossetti, upon this, turned to his companion with a look that told all that was in his mind. As it was shortly after this that the poet resolved to exhume from his wife's grave the package of his poems he had buried with her, there is ample scope for imaginative commentators! Strangely enough, Scott, who again and again expresses his incredulity in "bogeys," records two other instances within his own experience, neither of which commends itself to immediate acceptance. One of them is an unqualified plea for levitation: "Scotus" (the name by which he was best known among his friends when a lad), could come downstairs by shutting his eyes; the eyes were shut, the top landing was left, and, presto! the boy stood quietly at the bottom of the staircase! This strange "impression or experience" (p. 35, vol. i.) was a real thing to Scott to the end of his days. In 1882, when the septuagenarian poet was composing his Harvest Home, he wrote a poem, "Little Boy," wherein the mother begs the father not to puzzle the boy's mind with strange questionings, for "Already he is something wild, Saying he can fly down stair!"

The other episode, I fear, has been wittingly clad in mystery, and never undressed again! It is that of the strange sounds heard in Penkill Castle after Rossetti's departure, given at vol. ii., pp. 117-8. Not only was Rossetti—superstitious as he was, often, rather, superstitious for superstitiousness's sake—ultimately made aware of the true cause; but I well remember Mr. Scott explaining it to me on the spot.

Among the many delightful things in these memoirs—so rich in letters of vital interest from Rossetti, Holman Hunt, William Morris, Sir Frederick Burton, Thomas Woolner, and many others—there are some which will afford valuable spoil to the literary historian in a later epoch. There is much incidental matter, too, of great interest. We learn how Alfred Tennyson had at one time a passing attack of gold fever, and even thought of going to Australia; how Mr. Holman Hunt came to paint his most famous picture, "The Light of the World"; how Walt Whitman's poetry first gained attention in this country: how Rossetti first met two young men named Morris and Jones; how Mr. William Morris first saw his wife, an incident around which some absurd legends have grown; how Ebenezer Jones "broke to pieces," and how Hengist Horne bitterly resented the nicknaming of Orion as "The Farthing Epic"; how the strange fascinating personality of Walter Deverell flamed and burned itself out; how Carlyle proved what a very human and dyspeptic individual, what a very inconsistent sage he could be; how, finally, the Devil appeared in a Manresa-street studio, and was routed, though not without ill-mannered clamour and confusion. The second volume in particular is full of entertaining anecdotes, interesting letters, and suggestive personalia. Readers who may be aware of the revived Burns controversy in Scotland, and of the concurrent effort to paint the figure of his frail but well-loved Jean in stainless white, should turn to the delightful letter from the amorous poet given at p. 177, vol. ii. Was ever a kiss before or since called, in all its myriad nomenclature, "the prophet Elisha's pot of oil"? In connexion with Hogg there is settled at last a matter of great interest to literary specialists in the genre of "the weird," the perplexing uncertainty as to the authorship of The Confessions of a Justified Sinner. After what is said at vol. i., p. 69, there can be little question that Hogg actually was the writer.

It will be to some a perplexing, and to all a regrettable, fact that these memoirs do not always present the author in the genial and unselfish light in which his affectionate editor would have him appear. From first to last Scott's preoccupation about how he was treated and how he was ignored, how people acted or should have acted towards him, and how his opinions and doings and writings were of paramount value, tends to alienate a reader's sympathies. Occasionally his high self-esteem passes into a painful arrogance, as when (at vol. ii., p. 311) he congratulates himself on his reserve in publishing only a hundred short poems in his Harvest Home, and cannot understand why Mr. Swinburne, in Tristram of Lyonesse, "a poem ten books long, of two hundred to eight hundred lines each" . . . "should load the volume with two hundred pages more of inferior matter": or, again, when (at p. 204) he takes pains to point out that he does not consider himself inferior, "either poetically or socially," to Rossetti, Mr. William Morris, or Mr. Swinburne. In striking contrast to this assertiveness is the remark in Mr. William Morris's letter of thanks to "Scotus" for his triple dedication:

"My surprise at the honour of it [his 'share']; for indeed I did not suppose you would have put me in the same place with A. C. S. and D. G. R., both of whom I consider for the most part as 'passed masters' over me in the art."

In conclusion, let it be said that were these two volumes pruned of their misstatements, and in places either modified or amplified so as to give the whole truth, not truth in part or in fragments, they would be a legacy of abiding interest and value. As it is, they are a fascinating addition to autobiographical literature, even if their chief allurement, as certainly their chief worth, lies in the letters of those great men of our time who honoured William Bell Scott with their friendship.

WILLIAM SHARP.

Memoirs of the Verney Family during the Civil War. Compiled by Frances Parthenope Verney. In 2 vols. (Longmans.)

"ALTHOUGH altered, added to, almost transmogrified, the form of the ancient manor house may still be traced." The verb, to transmogrify, is not allowed by Johnson; and even by Webster it is branded as "colloquial and low." Lady Verney tells us in another place that "we are deluged by a mass of documents unearthed by the Historical Commission," and that it will belong before this mass of liquid "can be worked into the common stock." Fortunate is a reviewer who can find works with no other blemishes than these; and Lady Verney has bequeathed us an interesting work, full of gracious people and of pretty English.

The history of the Verneys is given in outline, from the thirteenth century to the time of James I. At the close of that reign the head of the family was a Sir Edmund, who began his official career in the service of Prince Henry. He was transferred to the household of Prince Charles, with whom he travelled into Spain; and later on he became the Knight Marshal of his master's Court. "A reddey and compleat man for the pleasures of ladies," he is described; and Charles himself, that correct and stately sovereign, recommends him as "the model he would propose to the gentlemen." He was also the very model of a country squire, delighting himself in all the recreations and pursuits of land, managing his difficult estate with untiring care and with tolerable success, liberal and courteous to all his people. These were not less gentle in their various degree; and the dealings of Sir Edmund with his tenantry illustrate the fine manners and the free spirit of the English people, before the Republic was established and the Church destroyed.

To show that all extremes of religion and government are equally destructive to civility, we may contrast this pleasing view of England with what Sir Edmund tells us about the rudeness of the Spaniards and the barbarity of their common life. He disembarked at Santandar, "a very poor thing, having neither glass windows nor chimneys." The Spaniards

"make their wives their slaves, who till the ground and carry the luggage. We have seen when these women come with great trunks upon their heads from the shore, and ready to sink under the burthen, their own husbands standing by, their pride was such they scorned to put their helping hands to help their wives, and suffered our people to help them, when they stood by and laughed."

On their journey to Madrid, they used a lodging where the king and queen had lain.

"There was no table nor stool for supper, but with much adoe we got a piece of timber, about which we stood and gave God thanks for what we had."

At Madrid itself the English complain that "the dirt in the streets and houses did almost poison us. The ladies are painted thick and palpable, you would think they rather wore vizards than their own faces. The boldest women in the world, numbers called and beckon'd to me as I passed."

In their passage through the country they heard a Latin sermon from a Jesuit, who knew that "King Henry's soul lyes chained in the bottomlesse pit of Hell," and that Queen Elizabeth's mother "was begot by none but Satan," of whose personal feats this Jesuit had too intimate a knowledge; for there is a Spanish proverb, quoted by my Lord Chesterfield: "Tell me whom you live with, and I will tell you who you are."

Charles left Spain, disgusted by the Junta of theologians, and their impertinent curiosity about his married life. During the next few years he was busy undermining the foundation of his monarchies, and the ancient loyalty of his English people. Sir Edmund, like Falkland, like the great Lord Halifax at a later time, was of too fine a nature for the low rivalry of politics; but he was faithful to his master, though he disapproved his measures, and he showed his disapproval by votes in Parliament. Nevertheless, he fought against the Scotch; and it was into his hand that King Charles delivered the Royal Standard, when it was unfurled at Nottingham, bearing the motto "Give Caesar His Due." Sir Edmund fell, defending it, not long after, at Edge Hill; meeting death willingly, as the only comforter of his troubled mind. An old writer ascribes to him "the strictness and piety of a Puritan, the charity of a Papist, the civility of an Englishman"; and he was said to be "the only courtier that was not complained of."

The care of the family and of its inheritance then fell upon Sir Ralph, a precise and patient man, of a tender conscience and a gentle nature. He was a member of the Long Parliament; and his notes, written in the House, are a valuable witness to those anxious and stormy scenes. He was more favourably disposed, upon the whole, to the Commons than to the king; but he refused the Covenant, and suffered many years of loss and exile for his moderation, his integrity. As he abhorred violence, he neither liked, nor was liked by, Cromwell: that strange hero of the middle classes, who protected their commonwealth by shutting all the old liberties of England into a military chest. Sir Ralph lived in retirement through that despotism, worse than any we have known; but the Restoration still found him on the opposing side. He was one of the few Whigs in the Parliament of 1680; and James II. struck his name from the roll of magistrates only a few months earlier than his own more just removal. Neither Cromwell nor James II. could satisfy a lover of the Constitution.

"Our Trimmer," says the great Lord Halifax, "adores the goddess Truth, though in all ages she has been used scurvily, as well as those that worshipped her. He cannot commit such a sin against the glorious thing called Liberty, nor let his soul stoop so much below itself as to be content without repining to have his reason wholly subdued, or the privilege of acting like a sensible creature torn from him by the imperious dictates of unlimited authority, in what hand soever it happen to be placed: yet he professes solemnly that were it in his power to choose, he would rather have his ambition bounded by a great and wise master."

William III. was the master whom Sir Ralph chose; and he died, honoured and happy, in the reign of that generous king, the true preserver of our liberties and greatness, the genuine protector of our commonwealth.

In these memorials of the Verneys, we can discern the true meaning and the course of historical affairs more clearly than in most histories; and we can realise, as well, the daily lives and thoughts of Englishmen in those times of trial. A pleasant life it was at Claydon, before the war, and a loving family. The Verneys were people of great refinement; and the house was filled with portraits, by Jansen, by Vandyck. Some of these have been reproduced; and Sir Ralph is particularly charming, with his refined and wistful expression, and his exquisite lace. The tombs of the family are works of art, usually by hands from Italy; and all about the house we see reflected the high culture of Charles the First.

Ralph Verney was at Oxford, in 1630, at Magdalen Hall, which was then a leading and a fashionable college. Even at Oxford, time brings his revolutions, and Magdalen Hall is the present Hertford.

Edmund, Ralph's young brother, was at Winchester, and there are some interesting letters of his from the great school. The first is about his holidays, one Christmas:

"The Commoners custom and the Children's are not alike, the Children cannot goe home without the consent of the Warden, the others need only that their parents should desire their coming; our stay is but three weeks, the earnestness of my sute makes my father, I feare, mistruste that I neglect my time, but it is not soe."

In another letter, to Ralph, he says:

"The propositors begin to affront me, which my companions are free from, I doe intende to intreate him to suffer mee to enjoy the same libertyes that they doe."

But in the next letter he writes:

"The propositors' words are more than their deeds, and your fraternal letter has made me careless, not fearing what they can do unto me."

Edmund Verney passed from Winchester to Oxford, and then became an experienced and gallant soldier, retaining always a taste for scholarship, and exhibiting in his life the excellence of Wykeham's motto, the high tradition of Winchester, that Manners Makyth Man. He "won upon every person with whom he had to do, by his upright, chivalrous conduct, and his care for all the weakly and wanting." Col. Sir Edmund Verney was murdered at Drogheda by one who cared for none of these things:

"he was slaine at Drahoda three days after quarter was given him, as he was walking with Cromwell by way of protection."

"I wish that all honest hearts may give the glory of this to God alone," wrote that strange "Protector," who was always equally careful to give away his crimes to God, and to keep the profits for himself.

If we turn from politics, these memorials are filled with information of the most various kind. The Verneys were a family of letter writers, and they have recorded the minutest details about the manners of their age. In town they lodged in Covent Garden, when Inigo's Piazza was the height of fashion. In those days mourning was carried to the last extreme of misery: mourning beds and couches were lent about, from one friend to another; not only dress, but horses, harness, bed linen, and rooms were black. Death brought all his terrors when he came; and most of them, to the survivors: and he came very often; as the mortality of children was so dreadful, that only the largest families kept pace with it. The rent of land, we find, has not risen, but has fallen considerably, since the death of Charles I. Much of Sir Ralph's correspondence is devoted to the marriage of his sisters, rather difficult young persons to please in all matters, and most of all in husbands. The ordinary course of life went on, somehow or other, right through the wars, though not so smoothly as in time of peace. Country houses were turned into quarters by one side or the other, and threatened by both; only the lawyers prospered in those unsettled years, though more than once a marriage was the result of a military occupation, in which a mistress and a manor house yielded to the same assault.

It would be wrong to leave these volumes without any mention of Dame Mary Verney, the wife of Sir Ralph; for of all the charming persons who are to be found in these papers, she is easily the first. In the happy days at Claydon she was the joy of the whole family, the peacemaker, the friend of all in trouble, the life of the house. In the gloomy days of exile she was her husband's only comfort; and it was through her tact and industry that he was able to return. Her difficulties were incredible, except to those who know the venal ways of "patriots" or republican usurpers; her labours were incessant, and she died of them. Sir Ralph was a master of letter-writing; and the best letters in the volumes are those which passed between him and his most admirable wife. In the early days Sir Ralph was perhaps a little too precise, too ceremonious. There is a model composition of his, docketed "this was never writ to anyone": a letter of high-flown compliments, and moral sayings in the best manner of that formal age. Nothing shows the goodness of the man so much as the way he mellows and softens with his years and with his trials. In his old age, one of his friends writes of him as "a very fine gentleman"; and another great lady says, "I cannot hope my son-in-law should have the manners of Sir Ralph Verney." That would be a good thing to hope for, and yet it would be a better to hope for the perfection of his wife. Of the old stock of the Verneys it might be said, transposing, not "transmogrifying," the proverb, "All the men were pure, and all the women brave." Long may we have such families in England, representing us, making our history; and may their descendants never be unworthy of them, in their literature or in their lives! ARTHUR GALTON.

Esther, Love Lyrics, and Natalia's Resurrection.
By Wilfred Scawen Blunt. (Kegan Paul.)

LONG ago the Love Sonnets of Proteus revealed Mr. Blunt as a poet of force and marked personality. The irregular sonnet scheme, parallel to that of Modern Love, which he there adopted and has never entirely abandoned, though offensive to the more orthodox, is admirably suited to his genius. And in this, his last volume, the most powerful passages are those which retain the peculiar form of his earliest poems.

Mr. Blunt owes but little to others. His strong individuality continually asserts itself; and, thus, whether completely, or only partially, successful, he is always interesting. Occasionally, in his blank verse, there comes a line that has in it a far-off echo of Tennyson; sometimes there is a stanza reminding us of Byron's aggressive flippancy in "Don Juan"; at rarer intervals, as, for instance, in the "Eviction," he recalls for an instant the conceits and excellencies of the Restoration poets; once or twice in his lyrics there is a Shelleyan phrase. He possesses, too, quite an Elizabethan facility for writing good "tags," as "There is no pleasure in the world so sweet,

As, being wise, to fall at folly's feet."

But his style is his own as is his matter.

Like other poets, Mr. Blunt sings chiefly of love and death, but it is always as a young man would sing of them if he could. Fierceness alternates with tenderness in his lines, and his philosophy is summed up in the assertion:

"He can bear to die
Who has been happy."

This happiness he holds—and surely there is much to be said for his view—that it is impossible to attain without love; and that love is, in great measure, the love of the Arabian poet's chaunts, the strong sensual love that must exist so long as there is anything of youth left in the world. His genius may possess neither breadth of view nor heights of thought, but its current is terribly deep and strong.

The title poem in this book, "Esther, a Young Man's Tragedy," is a love story briefly told in a sequence of fifty-three sonnets. His vigorous and lucid narrative, employing not a word too much nor too little, proves Mr. Blunt the rival of Mr. Kipling at his best, in his bold, almost savage, grasp of and delight in the commonplace. The plot is simple. A young Englishman, alone in Lyons, wanders into a fair in the Placo d'Armes, and while in one of the booths, looking at the "fat lady" and her spotted companion, is spoken to by "a little woman dressed in black." The giantess asks him to take note of her huge proportions, wishing him to prove the truth of her boast, "all here is honest beauty." The "little woman" with the "childish face" standing near him bids him "play the man," and the onlookers take up the jest. Stung by their rough ridicule, he rushes from the tent; but a few hours later, as he stands reading an advertisement affixed to the stage-door of the local theatre, he comes face to face with the woman who had mocked him at the fair. He learns that she is the celebrated actress to whose performance of "Manon" the poster refers, and whose life's history is not unfamiliar to the world. She is struck by his youth and beauty—

"You turn my head with your John Baptist's face,
I will not be made jealous, so beware."
She looked entreatingly as if for grace
And held me by the arm. "We are strangers both
Among these heavy Lyonnese. By right
We should so hold together."

The inexperienced boy is an easy victim, and for a short time they do "hold together." But finally comes the inevitable quarrel and separation. Here is the last sonnet and summing up of the whole matter.

"It might not be. Some things are possible
And some impossible for even God.
And Esther had no soul which heaven or hell
Could touch by joy or sotten by the rod.
She could not really love me. The day came
How soon, how late, I need not to devise,
When passion played its last, and only shame
Stood for my portion in a world grown wise,
And I went forth for ever from her sight,
Knowing the good and evil. On that day
I did her wrong by anger. Now life's light
Illumines all, and I behold her gay
As I first knew her in my love purblind,
Dear passionate Esther, soulless but how kind."

Mr. Blunt has never done anything better than this wonderful study. From beginning to end one is held spellbound: his touch is so firm and precise, without sign of hesitation anywhere, and he has the rare and precious power of rousing in his reader the very emotions he describes. Throughout, moreover, he has avoided a fault that has sometimes seriously marred his earlier efforts, the fault of mistaking hysterics for passion.

Many of the love lyrics that make up the second part of the volume are very beautiful; but Mr. Blunt's frank carelessness in the matter of rhyme and metre (less noticeable in the form he has made essentially his own) is more than once irritating and fatal. Such words as "crouched," too, are inexcusable, and go far to spoil the effect of even a fine lyric. But in spite of such shortcomings, this section of the book is well worth reading and remembering. In "A Day in the Castle of Envy," especially, he shows weird Heinesque qualities of fancy and deftness of touch quite alien to his usual manner. It is difficult to realise that the poet of "Esther" and "Proteus" is also the moulder of the following stanza:

"There he sitteth through the noon,
While the pine tops clash together,
Till deep silence, like a tunc,
Wrappeth all the earth and air;
And the old king dreamily
Noddeth his great heron feather,
As he sitteth in his chair.
For sleep cometh upon all,
Rock and castle, flower and tree;
And the turrets wave and quiver,
And the battlemented wall
Bendeth in the haze of noon,
And the fir-cones one by one
Split like thunder in the heat;
And the old king hearing it
Saith, 'It is the angry sun.'"

Yet in each of his previous volumes a surprise has lain hidden. After the long sequence of fiery love poems in Proteus came the magnificent sonnet on Gibraltar, unequalled by any patriotic poem of our day; while in A Modern Pilgrimage he gave us the brilliant "Sancho Sanchez," written in a vein he had never before attempted, but as faultless in structure as in conception, and "Worth Forest," that lovely and touching poem of mingled melancholy and quiet joy.

"Natalia's Resurrection" is clearly not a success, in spite of several fine passages. It is an elaborate setting of a legend that is popular in many places and under many aspects, and Mr. Hawker has treated one version of it, current in Cornwall, more winningly and more simply. Moreover, by telling the story in the third person,

Mr. Blunt has had to struggle against a difficulty which he has only once surmounted, namely in "Sancho Sanchez." He seems unable to identify himself with the joys, passions and sorrows of Adrian. It is the truthful and emphatic "I" of his finest poems that makes them so astoundingly convincing. For though he has considerable dramatic power, it comes out only when he himself is, verbally at any rate, the hero of his tragedies. Of the lyrics, however, the exquisite "At a Funeral," the pathetic "To Hester on the Stair," and "On the way to Church," amply make up for the failure of "Natalia."

Mr. Blunt, it seems to me, is in this volume a nobler and an English De Musset, the poet of "the dear dead days." One reads him as one reads old love letters, with a beating heart.

"Speak, O desolate city, Speak O silence in sadness.

Where is she that I loved in my strength, that spoke to my soul?"

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

The Japs at Home. By Douglas Sladen. (Hutchinson.)

MR. DOUGLAS SLADEN is a poet, and the chronicler of poets; and from him one would expect a delicate perception and artistic touch in giving us his personal experiences of the delightful land of Japan. But his latest English published work, The Japs at Home, consists mostly of deck chatter under the awnings after a jinricksha ride in Nagasaki or Yokohama, some historical notes of doubtful value, and much jocular comment on the funny little Japs and the Japaninity of everything.

The poetical instinct does once or twice make itself felt; but throughout the book you can trace the baneful influence of the kodak. A series of snap shots with explanatory letterpress would be a fair description of the major part of the work. No native, no foreigner, no building, no temple, neither age nor infancy escaped unkodaked from the insatiable photographer; even the Mikado himself became an unconscious victim. This is Mr. Sladen's description of his proceedings:—

"I hurried out to do a risky thing. I was anxious to get a picture of the Mikado in his carriage. I flew off directly I saw the escort mounting, secured my jinricksha man, made him take up his stand where the Emperor would pass, and squat on the shafts, while I prepared to leap on the seat just as the Emperor passed, and present kodak and fire. Which I did."

If the negative taken under these circumstances bears any resemblance to the frontispiece styled "Poor Japs and English Royalty," the Mikado has, indeed, reason to complain.

One more quotation will suffice to show Mr. Sladen's jaunty style as, kodak under arm, he gallops through Japan:

"We stopped a minute outside to photograph Miss Arostook against a magnificent bronze bell as big as she was, and only hung on a sort of ten-foot-high towel-horse; and then leapt on to our rikshas again to get to Kameido some time. Some time! for two minutes afterwards, I was down again photographing an old lady and her daughter aged about fifty, who were going through the country playing on a tum-tum and a samisen, to proclaim to the public that they were selling ame, a sort of sweet-meat cake made of barley-meal. The elder woman 'took the cake,' a doubtful advantage, as it was contained in a good-sized chest of drawers, hung round her neck in approved millstone method."

The last sentence is a hard saying, which I leave each reader to interpret for himself. Again and again the same process is gone through, till one tires of the boisterous good spirits with which the author unstraps his kodak, and takes in at a shot the queer little Japanese men squatting about in their queer little way, with their little boys' pipes, and behind quaint thatched tea houses, and above the blossom of the plum tree. Nikko, alone of all the wonders of Japan, sobers Mr. Sladen, and recalls him from the making of travellers' jokes to well expressed admiration for those glorious shrines set amid the sombre shade of giant cryptomeria.

The chapters which treat of "English as she is spoke," the publishing of a book in Japan, and above all the lending library rules in Tokyo, are amusing reading.

"Rule 2. All books are divided into four class. First Class is the book which always ready in our Company, out. Never take out except Special and quasi Special Customer. Second and third Class is the Books which will lend to the Readers who has paid Evidencial Money."

To me the paying of Evidencial Money appears a truly precious privilege.

One closes the book with a sigh for a page of Pierre Loti, a letter from Sir Edwin Arnold (upon whose household gods the author turned in stealth his hateful instrument), or even for a chapter of A Social Departure; for whatever qualifications Mr. Sladen may possess to give us a poet's view of the Japanese fairyland and its people, in this book he has belied our expectations and his own reputation.

S. McCALMONT HILL.

NEW NOVELS.

Mona Maclean. By Graham Travers. In 3 vols. (Blackwoods.)

Trust Money. By William Westall. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

How Like a Woman. By Florence Marryat. In 3 vols. (Griffith, Farran & Co.)

Ridge and Furrow. By Sir Randal H. Roberts. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Gentleman Upcott's Daughter. By Tom Cobbleigh. (Fisher Unwin.)

Mixed Humanity. By J. R. Couper. (W. H. Allen.)

Rachel and Maurice. By the Hon. Margaret Collier. (Chapman & Hall.)

THE "female medical" movement has not quite gone through all the Spencerian stages, which are inevitable before it finds itself in the satisfactory position of a recognised institution. It is still liable to attacks, attributable to the contempt of the ignorant. Clever Philistinism, therefore, may find material for ridicule in Mona Maclean, which is not only based on, but is full of, this "female medical" movement. It may be said that this story proves girl graduates in anatomy and physiology to be, to say the least of it, quite as liable as others to be carried off the track of their "mission" by their own emotions. It is quite true, indeed, that Mona Maclean finally enters into partnership with Dr. Dudley, both as wife and as practitioner. She will not waltz with anybody else, and she takes cases that are delicate (in all senses) off his hands. But it is not to be expected that every female medical student should be able to solve the two problems of her life so satisfactorily as Mona. As things stand, the chances are that, but for meeting Dudley, she would have accepted the offer made by the worthy gentleman—he is indeed much more of a man in most respects than Dudley—whom she nicknames "the Sahib," instead of leaving him to Doris Colquhoun. But when all exceptions are made, Mona Maclean must be allowed to be a promising and, indeed, eminently ambitious story. "Graham Travers"—it appears tolerably plain that this is the pseudonym of a lady—is evidently a novice in literature, and she has some philosophic and other problems to solve. But in Mona Maclean she shows that she can write well, and that she can construct an ingenious plot. Her leading idea—that of taking Mona Maclean, a young woman with a position, a mission, and £300 a year in her own right, down to a little Fifeshire town, evidently but a short distance from St. Andrews, there to act as assistant in the "shop" of a humble female relative—is a daring one, and is very cleverly carried out. Apart altogether from the self-discipline they involve (tempered by meetings with Dr. Dudley), the Fifeshire experiences of Mona are not only admirable, but true to life. Several of the secondary male characters—one does not somehow fall in love with either Lucy or Doris—are admirably sketched, "the Sahib" and the rather too dignified Sir Douglas Monro in particular. Even if Mona Maclean is not followed up by more mature works, it stands forth by itself as one of the freshest and brightest novels of the time.

Mr. Westall is seen at his best in plot construction in Trust Money, but hardly at his best in any other respect. In most of his stories there are lifelike and even Trollopian sketches of men and women, to be found to-day (or, at all events, yesterday) in English provincial towns. But in his new novel there is only one such portrait—that of Mr. Leonard Prince, commonly known as "The Boss of Peele," in virtue of his being "leading solicitor, clerk of the peace, clerk to the justices and board of guardians, and agent to Lord Hermitage, the largest landowner in these parts." He is flesh and blood, at least until misfortunes overwhelm him: one is certain to have met him somewhere. His wife Dorothy, Olive Lincoln the heroine, and the minor characters (with one exception) are, however, either puppets or phantoms. But the story is most skilfully constructed. How the whole Prince family, through the crime of one of its junior members, becomes involved in the trouble, it would, of course, be unfair to tell. It must suffice to say that Mr.

Westall has never managed anything more skilfully than the disappearance of Charlie Prince, or the evolution of the character of his brother Edward—or, perhaps one should rather say, the bringing to the front of the bad elements in that personage. As already said, one of the minor figures is well drawn. That is the old clerk—he recalls Newman Noggs, but that very slightly—who is a thorn in the flesh to Edward Prince.

On page 245 of the third volume of How Like a Woman it is written that "my great-great-grandfather was Lord Hugh Saltoun, the youngest brother of the first Duke of Craig-Morris, who, being a Cavalier, married the daughter of a Roundhead, and was disinherited by his father in consequence. He had nothing to support his wife and children on, and, being disowned by all his family, dropped his title and adopted his father-in-law's business."

Whoever can solve the mystery propounded in this astonishing and involved statement will have found the key to the love affair of Rachel the high-born and Geoffrey the son of a hosier and a salter. He will not, however, gather from it who Mrs. Crawley, the widow and companion, is, and why she first makes impudent love to the artist (and hosier's son), who is as good as engaged to her employer, and then condescends to become mistress to the Duke of Craig-Morris. But, in truth, it may be doubted if any one who makes a beginning of How Like a Woman will care to proceed very far with it. It is tedious, portentously long, commonplace, and even a trifle vulgar. It is very nearly, if not quite, the poorest story its author has produced.

Sir Randal Roberts's new book shows him to be quite capable of improving his style, but it certainly does not indicate any capacity for originality in the way of plot construction. Ridge and Furrow is brighter, compact, and better written than most, if not all, of its predecessors. But the peer who sighs "No heir, no child to hand down to posterity the birthright of my ancestors"; his too loving wife who, to satisfy him, passes off another's child as her own; the private secretary, with a mesmeric power in him, of whose face "it might be said the upper portion was angelic while the lower was devilish"—these and a few more of the characters in the story have all done duty in scores of novels before figuring in Ridge and Furrow. The diabolic private secretary is disappointing, especially after we find him trafficking with a sea captain, who seems in every sense an ideal pirate and blackguard. He fails as a lover; he fails as a mesmerist; he fails as a marplot; and at last he dies miserably and not even melodramatically. In spite of its faults in character-evolution, however, Ridge and Furrow will no doubt live for a holiday season.

Gentleman Upcott's Daughter is one of the best studies in rural English character and dialect that have been published for a long time; and in fidelity to truth, if not in imaginative force, may be placed on the same level as Far from the Madding Crowd and even The Mill on the Floss. The hatred between Miller Biddlecombe and Gentleman Upcott, indeed, recalls that between Mr. Tulliver and his lawyer enemy; and Uncle Granger is quite worthy of a place in the immortal company of relatives that came, after a fashion, to the help of the Tullivers. The small fry of the story, too, John Sprackman and the sandy-haired Toop, and "the vlat-rooted one, she they do call Zempy," are delightful sketches. Ebenezer Upcott, who has a good deal in him of Mr. Micawber, of Harold Skimpole, and of the Father of the Marshalsea, but who is nevertheless essentially original in his pride, is one of those lucky souls that bear a charmed existence on the battle-field of life. Even when his almost life-long enemy, so to speak, tracks him down, he (or rather his good fortune) is equal to the occasion. For that enemy is chosen by Providence to save him from a watery death, and even apparently to be his good angel in a pecuniary sense. Nor should the lovers, the son of the Miller and the daughter of the Gentleman, be overlooked. They have, at least, the merit of being natural—natural as Juan and Haydee. Gentleman Upcott's Daughter is, in short, one of those stories which are the pioneers of greater, though not brighter or more finished, performances.

Mr. Couper has the courage—or is it only the naïveté?—to introduce us to a new phase of South African life. A thirst for drink and diamonds, sensuality that is relieved not indeed from coarseness but from selfishness by capacity for self-surrender, and a passion for prize-fighting, are among the ingredients of the undoubtedly very mixed "humanity" of which he writes, and of which Senior, an athletic weakling, and Cheeky (a girl) are the best specimens. The prize-fighting is at once the most real and the most realistic element of the book, but Mr. Couper overdoes it in the last combat which he allows to his "gifted amateur" Senior. This exaggeration is no doubt due in part to his mixing up the question of Senior's prowess in the Ring with that of his wife's infidelity. But, apart from this, he gives far too many details of a disgusting character. Next in importance to the performances of the prize-fighters are the intrigues of the I. D. B.'s (otherwise the Illicit Diamond Buyers) and their prolonged war with the detectives. It is a queer but yet life-like world that Mr. Couper introduces us into. But one leaves his book with the hope that the humanity he next depicts may be a little less "mixed"; that the men may be a trifle less weak and blackguardly, and the women a little more anxious to become wives and a little less willing to become mistresses to a succession of lovers.

Mme. Galletti di Cadilliac's new stories are as fluently constructed as delicately finished, and as mournful in the interest they excite, as any that have been recently published. Perhaps from the earlier pages of all of them, but especially of the first, the shadow of impending doom is too palpable. Yet the leading characters in all, in particular the eccentrically good Rachel and the inconstant half-Italian Maurice—are such that misery in some shape or form, but almost certainly sentimental, was sure to be their fate; and only the obstinate devotee of good endings could wish that wedded happiness of the Little Dorrit or bread-and-cheese and kisses sort, should atone for prolonged misery. Mme. di Cadilliac has not the same excuse—the necessity for being at all hazards true to nature—for the tragical close of "An Excursion to the Apennines." The lovers in it appear to be born for rather commonplace happiness; and the fatal duel which prevents this consummation is certainly not so much a crime on the part of the poor fellow who is successful in it as to justify the very harsh treatment he receives. It must be allowed, however, that, in spite of the death, which closes it, and which seems not at all unnatural, "Our Foreign Friend" is as exquisite an idyll as has been written for many a day. The character of the poor, simple impressionable Italian (amateur) violinist, Luigi Coriolani, is admirably traced; and, notwithstanding his weak chest and his not especially strong nature, it is hardly possible to forgive the too thoughtful brother for separating the poor creature from his half-sweetheart. In other words, the plot of "A Foreign Friend" is almost too good.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

GIFT BOOKS.

Pictures of Roman Life and Story. By A. J. Church. (Hutchinson.) We have nothing but praise for this interesting book, which consists chiefly of a series of character-sketches of the most notable personages of Roman history from Augustus to Marcus Aurelius. The subjects include most of the Twelve Caesars, Marcus Aurelius, Maecenas, the two Plinys, Agricola, and some others. Three imaginary letters—one from a Greek at Rome, describing "a day with Horace," another from Martial to a friend in Spain, and a third from a Roman youth studying philosophy at Athens—are among the most successful attempts of the kind we have seen.

Berie the Briton. A Story of the Roman Invasion. By G. A. Henty. With twelve Illustrations by R. Parkinson. (Blackie.) Mr. Henty deals in this volume with a period of history less familiar than those with which his former books are concerned, but he displays all his accustomed skill in blending his real and imaginary incidents into a spirited and attractive story. The hero is a young Icenian chief, who takes part in the insurrection of Boadicea (Mr. Henty is not so morbidly accurate as to call her "Bonicea"), and after her defeat carries on the struggle at the head of his own tribe. Afterwards he appears as a captive in Rome, as the leader of a band of outlaws in Calabria, and finally as a tributary chieftain in Britain. This varied career affords his biographer abundant opportunity for the introduction of striking and picturesque incidents, and—a fair amount of allowance being made for the exigencies of fiction—there does not seem to be much reason to find fault on the score of historical accuracy.

Baron and Squire: A Story of the Thirty Years' War. From the German of W. Noel-deche, by Sarah M. S. Clarke (Mrs. Pereira). With sixteen Illustrations. (Nisbet.) This is a well-written historical story, somewhat heavily charged with facts, but not by any means dull reading. The writer views the great struggle of the sixteenth century from the Protestant side, but the book has neither a controversial nor, indeed, any very markedly religious purpose. The style of the translation is excellent; it reads quite like an original, and the language is neither too archaic nor too modern.

The Siege of Norwich Castle: A Story of the Last Struggle against the Conqueror. By M. M. Blake. With Illustrations by the Author. (Seeley.) The unfortunate revolt of 1075, in which Walthoe was implicated, is a rather good subject for a story, but the author of this volume has hardly enough of historical knowledge to qualify him for treating it satisfactorily. It is painful to think what Mr. Freeman would have said of a writer who spoke of Roger Fitzosbern's daughter as "Emma Fitzosbern"; and this is only a sample of the anachronisms of the book. And yet it is quite plain that the author has spent some pains in reading up the history. So far as the course of events is concerned, the story appears correct enough, and it is not wanting in interest. Perhaps in a tale written for children it may be unreasonable to expect more than this.

No Humdrum Life for me. By Mrs. Kent Spender. (Hutchinson.) This is an effective and rather pathetic story. It purports to be a record of the occurrences which befell the inmates of Torlish Rectory, somewhere down in Cornwall. The characters—children and grown folk—are carefully drawn, individualised and contrasted, and the book owns a decidedly large share of natural human interest. Its heroine—and a very charming one she is—is Ruth Calderwood; and the evolution of the story consists in the gradual transformation of this young lady from a self-arrogated assumption of genius and the consequent expectation of a famous destiny, to the unselfish performance of the humdrum duties of life. This conversion, moreover, is accomplished by no higher or more extraordinary instrumentality than the common accidents and inevitable discipline of human existence. It would no doubt be possible for a trained psychologist or philosopher to pick holes in the narrative of some particular stage or process; but, on the whole, there is little in Mrs. Spender's tale which is wholly extravagant or inexplicable. If the book has a fault, it is that the story seems here and there to drag, and that the authoress allows her young folk to use language and discuss matters a long way above the ordinary level of even intellectual children's conversation. Indeed, it seems to us that this is a fault—is it symptomatic of an age of cram and pretentious sciolism?—which is greatly on the increase among writers of children's stories. We may point out to the authoress, while congratulating her on her clever and instructive book, that it was not Savonarola but John Hus who is said to have used the expression, "O Sancta Simplicitas!" on seeing an old woman bring a faggot as her contribution to the fuel kindling round his stake. Let us add that the illustrations are of quite unusual excellence and that, as regards both form and matter, the book is one to be decidedly commended.

Sunwood Glory; or, Through the Refiner's Fire. By Margaret Haycraft. (Nisbet.) The gist and object of this story are so fully unfolded in the title that a further description seems superfluous. The young lady who passes through the refiner's fire—with the result of leaving behind a rather larger measure than usual of human dross and scoriae—is a certain Miss Eleânore Ramney. To reveal the successive trials and disappointments by which Miss Ramney becomes purified from her pride and selfishness would be to retell the story, and thereby deprive the reader of his own legitimate source of interest. Suffice it to say that the tale is fairly well told, that the incidents are not extravagant or improbable, and that all ends happily. The most prominent defects in the book are a certain laxity of construction and the continual employment of the present tense; the religious element also is introduced in a casual, haphazard manner. The two latter defects imply a weakness of the artistic faculty, as well as a deficiency in the story-telling requisites of insight and proportion. Were it not that the title-page credits the authoress with several more stories, we should have thought that this—though not wholly discreditable—was only a first attempt.

Nigel Bertram's Ideal. By Florence Wilford. (Wells, Gardner & Co.) The interest of this story is to a great extent psychological. The problem, of which it purports to be the solution, is something of this kind. Given a clever young lady with a mysterious and slightly suspicious past as to which she is needlessly reticent, but which includes, among other doubtful elements, the crime of having written a morbidly sensational novel: given, further, a cultured and refined man, an eminent author and critic, whose doctrinaire notions on the subject of women and wives have been elaborated into an impracticable and unreasonable fastidiousness, it is required to ascertain the kind and amount of influence which each will exercise on the other in their mutual relations—(1) of lovers, (2) of man and wife. There is here, no doubt, ample scope for introspective analysis, of which the authoress makes due use, though we cannot say that her dissection of unusual, not to say morbid, intellectual and sentimental states will always bear the test of psychological likelihood. But, in fact—and this is the reason why the psychological novelist or story-teller can always defy criticism—the innermost workings and motives in highly sensitive and variously gifted natures will always be marked by a rare individuality which scorns comparison or classification. The story, however—though a good deal above the level of school boys and girls—is well told. Nigel Bertram's "ideal" may claim—setting aside the extreme fastidiousness of Nigel Bertram himself—to be the ideal of not a few men of culture. Unhappily, in a world so constituted as this, it is an ideal that is very rarely realised.

The Hot-Swamp. By R. M. Ballantyne. (Nisbet.) That a veteran and prolific story-teller like Mr. Ballantyne should have occasionally to go far afield in search of new scenes and characters for his narratives is incidentally disclosed by the second title of this book—"A Romance of Old Albion." So far as title, description, names, customs are concerned, the reader is introduced into a highly wrought and imaginative environment of Ancient Britain; so far, however, as language, ideas and thought are concerned, he will find himself removed at no great distance from our degenerate nineteenth century. It must be admitted that few fields of fiction are more fascinating than the earliest epochs of our own pre-historic history—"when wild in woods the noble savage ran"—but the adequate representation of such a period is by no means easy. Mr. Ballantyne has achieved, perhaps, a fair average of success, but his story seems to us to suffer from various shortcomings in the way of thoroughness of historical realisation and portraiture. The "noble savage" in this volume is a certain Prince Bladud, who, notwithstanding his name, dress, and surroundings, comports himself as a well-disposed young athlete of our own country and century. He forms the centre of a certain number of highly coloured and sensational adventures of the usual Ballantyne type. The book has no plot to speak of, but there is no denying its interest for boy readers. It is a book that might fairly claim to be for its purpose commendable, were it not for the fact that the author's name renders commendation needless, if not impertinent.

Fair Women and Brave Men. By Mrs. Alexander. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) Even if the suggestiveness of this Byronic title were less to the average reader than it is likely to be—albeit he may never have read or altogether forgotten "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage"—he could hardly be at a loss to guess the subjects of this book. Among the fair women and brave men whose beauty and bravery are recorded are the typical examples of St. Louis, Joan D'Arc, Sir Philip Sidney, and Louis XVII.—the last-named being further entitled "A Prince of Promise." The chief criticism we have to offer on Mrs. Alexander's gallery of portraits is that her standpoint is that of the first half of the century rather than that of the present day, and that she is too much carried away by conceptions of chivalry and duty which, however picturesque, are too narrow and impracticable for modern requirements. Still, for young people some few lessons in extreme disinterestedness and an infatuated and extravagant sense of duty may not be thrown away in an age wherein chivalry seems extinct, without much prospect, as it would appear, of an early resurrection. The illustrations which accompany the text are not of the very highest class; but the high tendency and tone of the book may well be considered as over-balancing both that and a few more ordinary defects in the authoress's treatment of her subject.

Our Picnic, by E. Gellibrand, and Nigel: A Summer Day in a Child's Life, by E. M. Green (S.P.C.K.). The venerable society has never issued better and cheaper booklets than these. Well printed, well illustrated, and well written, at the marvellous price of a penny each, bound in limp cloth, these stories will be welcomed alike by nursery and parish school. The former story particularly gives a pretty glimpse of a summer in Russia.

O'er Cranbourne's Oaks: a Tale of Sixty Years Ago, by Rev. T. Davidson (S.P.C.K.), pleasantly recalls the days of the machine breakers and Mr. Swing, together with the deer and buzzards which formerly haunted Cranbourne Chase.

In A Promising Boy (S.P.C.K.) Miss Annette Lyster shows that deceit and selfishness will wreck the fairest career; while Ray's Discovery (S.P.C.K.), by C. S. Loundes, paints a few pretty sketches of child life.

MISS ESMÉ STUART has bound up thirteen short stories under the name of the first, A Brave Fight (Nisbet). It is by no means the best of the collection. "Bab's Christmas Sights" is much more to be commended. It is a tale of Morthoe and the wreckers.

THE fortunes of an orphaned family of a dozen are feelingly told by Mrs. E. Everett-Green in The Doctor's Dozen (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier). The authoress excels in such delineations; but the phrase "being out of the swim of family life" is not usually to be expected in her writing.

THE Rev. E. A. Rand, in A Candle in the Sea (Nisbet), enthusiastically treats of the work of the American Lighting Board and its lighthouses. The situations and language are very American. A badly spent Sunday is described as "a bit of time that tries to shut out a happy eternity with God." The intention of the book is better than its execution. But some may wish to be instructed in the mysteries of bell-buoys, can-buoys, nun-buoys, and whistling buoys; and such persons may like this volume, with its affected title.

NOTES AND NEWS.

DR. W. PETERSON, Principal of University College, Dundee, has interrupted his critical edition of Quintilian's Institutes, in order to prepare for the delegates of the Clarendon Press an edition of Tacitus's Dialogue on Oratory. It is remarkable that this interesting work should have been so entirely neglected by English scholars. Besides a reconstitution of the text, based on an independent study of the manuscripts, Dr. Peterson hopes to be able to throw some new light on the romance of the finding of Tacitus in the fifteenth century. The Introduction will deal also with the disputed question of the authorship of the Dialogue.

THE request having been made by a number of friends that the translation of the Egyptian Book of the Dead, printed in the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, should be issued in a different form, Mr. P. le Page Renouf has consented. A limited number of copies upon large paper, with illustrations of the vignettes, will be issued. It is calculated that the work will be completed in eight parts, the first of which is nearly ready.

THE new volume of the "Badminton Library," on Coursing and Fulcroy, will be published at the end of this week. It is written by Mr. Harding Cox and the Hon. Gerald Lascelles, with illustrations from drawings by Messrs. John Charlton, R. H. Moore, and others, and also from photographs.

MESSRS. ELKIN MATHEWS and JOHN LANE are about to publish Mr. Oscar Wilde's play, Salomé, which, it may be remembered, was accepted by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, but was refused the Lord Chamberlain's licence. The play is not only written in French, but has been printed in Paris, in the format usual for such works.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN will publish shortly a volume entitled, Footprints of Statesmen during the Eighteenth Century in England, by the Hon. Reginald B. Brett.

THE volume on Great Book Collectors, which is to be the first of a series of "Books about Books," published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., will bear on its title-page not only the name of Mr. Charles Elton, but also that of his wife, who was his collaborator in the privately-printed Catalogue of the Whitestaunton Library. Other volumes in the series, which will appear at monthly intervals, are: Books in Manuscript, by Mr. F. Madan, of the Bodleian; Early Printed Books, by Mr. E. Gordon Duff; The Decoration of Books, by Mr. A. W. Pollard, of the British Museum—the general editor of the series; Bindings, by Mr. H. P. Horne; and Book Plates, by Mr. W. J. Hardy. Each volume will be illustrated with from eight to thirty plates, and a limited number of copies will be printed on large paper.

THE next volume in the "Heroes of the Nations" series will be John Wyclif: Last of the Schoolmen and First of the English Reformers, by Mr. Lewis Sergeant.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish in the course of this month a volume of short stories, collected from Black and White, with numerous illustrations. Among the authors are Messrs. Thomas Hardy, W. E. Norris, James Payn, Grant Allen, J. M. Barrie, Mrs. Oliphant, and Mrs. Lynn Linton.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will publish shortly a one-volume novel by Mr. Bret Harte, entitled Susy, with a frontispiece and vignette by Mr. J. A. Christie.

MR. G. MANVILLE FENN's book for boys, The Heathercock; or, The Adventures of a Boy with a Bias, has been delayed in publication, owing to the requirements of the American Copyright Act. It will be issued early in December by Messrs. Griffith, Farran & Co.

THE new volume of Messrs. Henry & Co.'s "Victoria Library for Gentlewomen" will be The Gentlewoman's Book of Art Needlework, by Miss Ellen T. Masters. It will be fully illustrated, including three photographs lent by the Queen.

Ascent in Ruwenzori is the title of a work announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock, which seeks to prove that Uganda was the country of Enoch, and that this Patriarch was the inspirer of much of the wisdom of the Egyptians.

A HUMOROUS history of Bristol, written by "Lesser Columbus," and profusely illustrated, will be published early in January by the Pelham Press.

MISS M. BETHAM-EDWARDS has written a sketch of the early career of her cousin, the late Amelia B. Edwards, which will be published, with illustrations, in the January number of the New England Magazine.

THE December number of the Eastern and Western Review will contain a translation from the Persian of Hafiz, by Sir Edwin Arnold, together with the latest photograph of the writer.

AT the London Institution, on the afternoon of Monday next, Mr. Edmund Gosse will give a lecture upon "Reading as a Recreation."

THE Bohemian Academy has just published, at Prague, under the title of Lýbor z Písni a Ballad, a collection of no fewer than 127 of the shorter poems of Burns, translated into Czech, in every case in the exact metrical form of the original. This astonishing feat has been performed by Prof. Jos. V. Sládek, the editor of Lumir, who contributes a biographical and critical preface. The volume is dedicated to Mr. Edmund Gosse.

MESSRS. JOHN WALKER & Co., of Farringdon House, have sent us some specimens of their Back-Loop Pocket Diaries. They are certainly very pretty little things, and seem to deserve the encomiastic epithets they have received. The only drawback to their merits which we can discover is that the paper is not sufficiently opaque; but this shall not prevent our making use of one for the coming year.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN accordance with general expectation, Mr. W. M. Flinders Petrie has been appointed to the new chair of Egyptology at University College, London—the first of the kind in this country—which was founded under the will of his friend, the late Miss Amelia B. Edwards. Mr. Petrie, whose state of health has not permitted him to resume excavations this winter, intends to begin his professorial work early next year. The appliances for Egyptological study at University College include a very complete library of books of reference, more than a thousand photographs of monuments, with paper impressions of inscriptions, and a typical collection of antiquities bequeathed by Miss Edwards, to which Mr. Petrie hopes to add some valuable loan collections. He proposes to undertake the following work: (1) lectures on current discoveries, history, and the systematic study of antiquities; (2) lessons on the language and philology; (3) attendance in the library on fixed days for the assistance and direction of students; and (4) practical training for excavation.

THE Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge (Dr. Swete) hopes to lecture early in next term upon the newly-discovered fragment of the Gospel of Peter. Meanwhile he has published (Macmillans) a provisionally amended text of the fragment for the use of workers.

MR. M. R. JAMES, assistant director of the Fitzwilliam Museum, was to read a paper in the library of the Divinity School at Cambridge, on Thursday of this week, upon "The Apocalypse of Peter, with special reference to the newly discovered Fragment." Mr. James is one of the authors of a forthcoming little book on the subject, which was announced in the last number of the ACADEMY.

THE following public lectures are announced at Oxford: on Thursday of this week, "The Zend MSS. recently presented to the Bodleian Library," by the Rev. Dr. L. H. Mills, at the Indian Institute; on Friday of this week, "The Present State of Literature in Poland," by Mr. W. R. Morfill, reader in Slavonic, at the Taylor Institution; on Tuesday next, "Japanese Music, with illustrations on the Koto," by Mr. F. T. Pigott, in the Sheldonian Theatre; and on Wednesday next, "Scenic Art," by Mr. Hubert Herkomer, Slade professor of fine art, also in the Sheldonian Theatre. Prof. Herkomer will further deliver two lectures, on Thursday and Friday (both morning and afternoon), on "An Art of the Future," in the studio of the University Galleries.

THE annual report of the Keeper of the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford records the bequest by the late Mr. Greville Chester of his collection of Egyptian and oriental antiquities; the presentation, by Dr. Drury Fortnum, of Prof. Westwood's unique collection of fœtilivories; the purchase of the bilingual Hittite and cuneiform cylinder, already described in the ACADEMY by Prof. Sayce; and the acquisition of five Greek painted vases, from the site of Gela, in Sicily.

WE note that a son of Bishop Stubbs has been elected to an exhibition for modern history at New College, Oxford.

THE sermon preached by Dr. Butler, on October 19, in the chapel of Trinity College, Cambridge, in reference to the death of Lord Tennyson, has been "printed by request" (Macmillan & Bowes).

IN view of the proposal to establish a university for Wales, it may be worth while to call attention to the results shown by the three Welsh colleges at the recent examinations for the B.A. and B.Sc. degrees at London University. Taking the two degrees together, it appears that Cardiff (with eighteen passes for present, and two for former students) was more successful than any other university college, while Aberystwith comes next, with fifteen present and four former students. Bangor had eight passes, of which four were in science. Total for Wales, forty-seven.

THE ninth annual meeting of the University Association of Women Teachers was held at Holly Lodge, Campden-hill, on Saturday last. Miss Welsh, Mistress of Girton College, presided, and in her opening speech alluded to the loss sustained in the death of Miss Clough, who had been president of the association since its foundation, and had shown a continuous and active interest in its proceedings. The report showed an increase in the number of members to 426.

AT the moment of going to press, we hear with much regret of the death of Dr. F. J. A. Hort, Lady Margaret professor of divinity at Cambridge, and joint-editor with Bishop Westcott of the standard Greek text of the New Testament. Dr. Hort, we understand, had been for some years past in weak health, which prevented him from producing the original work that his friends anticipated from him.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

AN ELFIN SKATE.

1.

THEY wheeled me up the snow-cleared garden way,
And left me where the dazzling heaps were thrown;

And as I mused on winter sports once known,
Up came a tiny man to where I lay.
He was six inches high: his beard was grey
As silver frost; his coat and cap were brown,
Of mouse's fur; while two wee skates hung down
From his wee belt, and gleamed in winter's ray.
He clambered up my couch, and eyed me long.
"Show me thy skates," said I; "for once, alas,
I too could skate. What pixie mayst thou be?"
"I am the king," he answered, "of the throng Called Winter Elves. We dwell 'neath roots, and pass
The summer months in sleep. Frost sets us free."

II.

"We find by moonlight little pools of ice,
Just one yard wide," the imp of winter said;
"And skate all night, while mortals are in bed,
In tiny circles of our Elf device;
And when it snows we harness forest mice
To wee bark sleighs, with lightest fibrous thread,
And scour the woods: or play all night instead
With snow balls large as peas, well patted thrice.
But is it true, as I have heard them say,
That thou canst share in winter games no more,
But liest motionless year in, year out?
That must be hard. To-day I cannot stay,
But I'll return each year, when all is hoar,
And tell thee when the skaters are about."

III.

On my wheeled bed I let my fingers play
With a wee silver skate, scarce one inch long,
Which might have fitted one of Frost's Elf throngs,
Or been his gift to one whose limbs are clay.
But Elfdom's dead; and what in my hand lay
Was out of an old desk, from years when, strong
And full of health, life sang me still its song;
A skating club's small badge, long stowed away.
Oh, there is nothing like the skater's art—
The poetry of circles; nothing like
The fleeting beauty of his crystal floor.
Above his head the winter sunbeam's dart;
Beneath his feet flits fast the frightened pike.
Skate while you may; the morrow skates no more.

EUGENE LEE-HAMILTON.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

In the Expositor for December, Prof. G. A. Smith examines the objections made to the topographical accuracy of John iv. 5 (the question of Sychar). Mr. V. Bartlet discusses to some extent the origin and meaning of the term, "the Son of Man," with special reference to the points of contact in the Old Testament. Bishop Ellicott defends the Revised Version of the New Testament from the attack made upon it in October by Bishop Walsham How. The series of papers by Prof. Beet, Dean Chadwick, and Principal Dykes are continued.

A STUDY of the editor's on home decoration; a short paper of M. de Saint Hérays's on the apparent paradox, but very simple truth, that in literature rien n'est vrai que le faux—that is to say, that as it has been put by others you must "disrealise reality" before it is matter for art; some documents for anyone who is curious about the history of M. Zola's Germinal; M. Gausseron's usual literary review; and a short and not extravagant laudation of "Le Latin Mystique"—that is to say, the Latin of mediæval devotion, make up a good November number of L'Art et l'Idée. M. Uzanne's ideas on the decoration of the interior are, as usual, ingenious, and also, as usual, not contemptible; but we think he leans too much in the direction of multiplication of biblots. His full-page illustration of a bedroom, in particular, seems to us to sin in this way. We don't go so far as those Spartans who insist that a bedroom should contain nothing but a bare floor, a bath, and a bedstead; but the crowding of it with knick-nacks and draperies and so forth is, we think, an offence against the Graces as well as against Hygieia.

"INDIAN FIELD SPORTS."

THOSE born of Anglo-Indian parentage will remember a series of coloured plates, illustrating Williamson's Oriental Field Sports (1807), which depicted with realistic treatment the death of the tiger, of the mighty boar, and of other inhabitants of the jungle. Of these familiar friends of our own childhood, Mr. Archibald Constable, the publisher of the "Oriental Miscellany," has now reissued a selection, reduced in size from atlas folio to small oblong quarto, but still admirably preserving the details of the originals. He has added a preface, and also descriptions of each plate, partly based upon those of Williamson. These suggest some reflections. A hundred years ago, it was the fashion to ride the pad-elephant astride, even when tiger-shooting; from which it would appear that small animals were chosen for the purpose, or else the seat must have been very insecure. It is also worthy of note that the hog-deer (Cervus porcinus) is depicted with a row of white spots running along his back, which the editor gives as a characteristic mark of the species. But, according to Mr. W. T. Blandford ("Fauna of British India": Mammalia, p. 549), the spots appear in the adult male only in summer, and not always then. Blandford bases this statement upon the observation of several specimens, "for two or three years," in the Zoological Gardens in Calcutta; whereas our editor remarks (presumably following Williamson) "no instance is known of its surviving confinement for more than a few days." In his account of pig-sticking, the editor is guilty of a curious blunder, upon which it may be worth while to dwell. He says:

"In Bengal, the paradise of pig-stickers, the spear, a bamboo of some eight or nine feet in length, weighted with lead at the butt, is carried by the rider close to his knee, the point being depressed and driven into the pig as he comes up with it. In other parts of the country, the spear, which is shorter, is thrown at the pig, the rider thereby being left defenceless for the time being."

Now the historical facts were almost the reverse of this, as may be gathered from the quotations s.v. "Pig-sticking" in Yule's Anglo-Indian Glossary. In Bengal, the old fashion was to use a short javelin, and to throw it; and this fashion certainly lasted into the present century, though it seems that the spear gradually became longer, until at last it was used as a lance. Williamson himself is careful to explain how the spear should be thrown; and if the editor will compare the two plates entitled "The Chase after a Hog" and "The Hog-deer at bay," he will see that the action in the first is preliminary to the action in the second, where the spear is actually in the air. In Bombay, and also (we believe) in Madras, a long spear has always been used, couched like a lance. Mountstuart Elphinstone, in a letter to his friend Edward Strachey, dated Poona, 1816 (Life by Colebrooke, i. 311) writes:

"We do not throw our spears in the old way, but poke with spears longer than the common ones, and never part with them."

* Since writing the above, we have been assured that in Buroda elephants are commonly ridden astride, except, of course, on state occasions. The Gaikwar himself uses an elephant-saddle, with stirrups. We have also heard of baby-elephants being ridden, with reins attached to the ears.

We quote this passage because Yule strangely misinterprets it, as implying that the original practice in Bombay, as in Bengal, was to throw the spear. He had forgotten that Elphinstone was in his early days a Bengal civilian, and a companion of Strachey at Benares. The editor will pardon us for labouring this small point, in consideration of his known regard for historical veracity in all things Indian.

J. S. C.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BOUROET, P. Cosmopolis. Paris: Lemerre. 10 fr.
CIAN, V., e P. NURRA. Canti popolari sardi. Parte I. Turin: Loescher. 6 fr.
DECRAIS, Julien. L'Angleterre contemporaine. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
FRY, C. Il codice Magliabechiano cl. XVII. 17, contenente notizie sopra l'arte degli antichi e quella de' Fiorentini, scritta da Anonimo Fiorentino. 12 M. Il Libro di Antonio Billi. 3 M. Berlin: Grote.
GUMPOWICZ, L. Die sociologische Staatsidee. Graz: Leuschner. 3 M.
KALUZA, M. Chaucer u. der Rosenroman. Eine litterar-geschichtl. Studie. Berlin: Felber. 8 M.
THOINAN, Ernest. Les Relieurs français (1500-1800). Paris: Paul. 30 fr.
ZENEER, E. V. Geschichte der Wiener Journalistik während d. J. 1818. Wien: Braumüller. 4 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BAOHER, W. Die jüdische Bibeldexegese vom Anfange d. 10. bis zum Ende d. 15. Jahrh. 2 M. Die hebräische Sprachwissenschaft vom 10. bis zum 16. Jahrh. 2 M. 25 Pf. Trier: Mayer.
KÖHLER, H. Von der Welt zum Himmelreich od. die johanneische Darstellg. d. Werkes Jesu Christi, synoptisch geprüft u. ergänzt. Halle: Niemeyer. 5 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- ACTA historica res gestas Poloniae illustrantia ab. a. 1507 usque ad a. 1795. T. XII. Cracow. 10 M.
ANDRÉ, TONY. L'Esclavage chez les anciens Hébreux. Paris: Fischbacher. 3 fr. 50 c.
BAUDOUN, A. Les dernières Années de La Fayette 1792-1834. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
BRAGE, H. Geschichte der wissenschaftlichen Erkunde der Griechen. 4. Abth. Leipzig: Veit. 4 M. 80 Pf.
CUNEO D'ORIANO, E. Hoche: sa vie, sa correspondance. Paris: Baudouin. 7 fr. 50 c.
DARSTET, Rodolphe. La Science du Droit en Grèce: Platon, Aristote, Théophraste. Paris: Larose. 8 fr.
DE LA RIVE, C. Le Condottiere Garibaldi 1870-1871. Paris: Savine. 3 fr. 50 c.
ECKARDT, J. Figuren u. Ansichten der Pariser Schreckenszeit (1793-4). Leipzig: Duncker und Humblot. 8 M.
FREUND, L. Lag u. Trag nach moslemischem Recht u. nach moslemischer Polizei. 1. Hft. München: M.-hlich. 1 M. 50 Pf.
KLEIN, C. Raimund v. Aguilers. Quellenstudie zur Geschichte d. Kreuzzuges. Berlin: Mittler. 2 M. 75 Pf.
KÖHLER, J. Kulturrechte d. alten Amerika. I. Das Recht der Azteken. Stuttgart: Enke. 4 M.
KORHNE, C. Das Hangrafenamt. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Kaufmannsgenossenschaften u. Behördenorganisation. Berlin: Gaertner. 7 M.
LEFRANC, Abel. Histoire du Collège de France depuis ses origines jusqu'à la fin du premier Empire. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
MARCK, E. Gaspard v. Coligny. Sein Leben u. das Frankreich seiner Zeit. 1. Bd. 1. Hälfte. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
MEAKEL, R. Der römisch-rechtliche Begriff der Novatio u. dessen Anwendbarkeit im heutigen gemeinen Recht. Strassburg: Trübner. 3 M. 50 Pf.
MEYER, E. Forschungen zur alten Geschichte. 1. Bd. Zur älteren griech. Geschichte. Halle: Niemeyer. 8 M.
MOLTER, H. v. Gesammelte Schriften. 8. Bd. Briefe, 3. Sammlg. Berlin: Mittler. 8 M. 40 Pf.
MONUMENTA Germaniae historica. Scriptorum, qui vernacula lingua usi sunt, tomi I. pars I. Hannover: Hahn. 18 M.
PHILIPPSON, Histoire du Règne de Marie Stuart. T. 3^e et dernier. Paris: Bouillon. 10 fr.
ROESTEN, die d. Geschlechtes v. Wallmoden. Bearb. v. H. Dürre. Wolfenbüttel: Zwißler. 12 M.
ROSEHOF, W. Politik: Geschichte der Naturlehre der Monarchie, Aristokratie u. Demokratie. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
SCHWANN, M. Johannes Janssen u. die Geschichte der deutschen Reformation. München: Mehrlich. 3 M.
SPIEGELBERG, W. Studien u. Materialien zum Rechtswesen d. Pharaonenreiches der Dynast. XVIII.-XXI. (c. 1500-100 v. Chr.). Hannover: Hahn. 10 M.
STERN, A. Beiträge zur Literaturgeschichte d. 17. u. 18. Jahrh. Leipzig: Richter. 7 M. 50 Pf.
URKUNDEBUCH, Osnabrücker. 1. Bd. Die Urkunden der J. 772-1200. Osnabrück: Rackhorst. 10 M.
URKUNDEN U. ARTENSTÜCKE zur Geschichte der in der heutigen Prov. Posen vereinigten ehemals polnischen Landesteile. Hrg. v. H. Ehrenberg. Leipzig: Veit. 20 M.
VIGNON, L. La France en Algérie. Paris: Hachette. 10 fr.
WEIL, le Commandant. La Campagne 1814: la cavalerie des armées alliées. Paris: Baudouin. 16 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERZELIUS, U. LERBERG. Ihre Briefe von 1831—1845, hrsg. v. J. Carrière. München: Lehmann. 6 M.
HERTWIG, O. Die Zelle u. die Gewebe. I. Jena: Fischer. 8 M.
ROCHOLL, R. Die Philosophie der Geschichte. 2. Bd. Der positive Aufbau. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 12 M.
SAALSCHÜTZ, L. Vorlesungen üb. die Bernoullischen Zahlen. Berlin: Springer. 5 M.
SCHEFFLER, H. Die quadratische Zerfällung der Primzahlen. Leipzig: Forster. 3 M.
SEELIG, E. Organische Reaktionen u. Reagentien. Stuttgart: Cotta. 15 M.
SOMMER, R. Grundzüge e. Geschichte der deutschen Psychologie u. Acsthetik von Wolff-Baumgarten bis Kant-Schiller. Würzburg: Stahel. 10 M.
WEISMANN, A. Das Keimplasma. Eine Theorie der Vererbung. Jena: Fischer. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- ECKINGER, Th. Die Orthographie lateinischer Wörter in griechischen Inschriften. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M. 50 Pf.
HÜBNER, H. Syntaktische Studien üb. den bestimmten Artikel bei Eigennamen im Alt- u. Neufraenksischen. Leipzig: Fock. 8 M.
MARKOWSKI, L. v. Der Auszug aus dem Pāṇinian in Kāśemendras Brihatsākhyaṁ. Leipzig: Harrasowitz. 6 M.
SAMMUNG der griechischen Dialekt-Inschriften. 2. Bd. 4. Hft. Die delphischen Inschriften. 2. Tl. Bearb. v. J. Baumeck. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 3 M. 20 Pf.
SAMMUNG kurzer Grammatiken germanischer Dialekte. Altgermanische Metrik v. E. Sievers. Halle: Niemeyer. 5 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GOSPEL OF PETER.

Oxford: Nov. 29, 1892.

The newly published fragment of the Gospel of Peter offers an interesting coincidence not only with the account of the crucifixion given in the Apology of Justin Martyr, but with the In Flaccum of Philo Judæus.

In the Gospel of Peter we read that the malefactors who assailed Jesus made him sit on a high seat of judgment and said, "Judge us justly, O King of Israel." The Greek is as follows:

οἱ δὲ λαβόντες τὸν Κύριον ὥθον αὐτὸν τρέχοντες καὶ ἔλεγον εὐρώμεν τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ θεοῦ ἔξουσίαν αὐτοῦ ἐσχηκότος καὶ πορφύραν αὐτὸν περιβαλλόν καὶ ἐκάθισαν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ καθέδραν κρίσειν λέγοντες δικαίως κρίνε βασιλεῦ τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ καὶ τῶν αὐτῶν ἐνεγκλόν στράταν ἀκάνθων ἐθῆκεν ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς τοῦ Κυρίου.

In Philo Lib. in Fl. (Mangoy, vol. ii., p. 522) we read how the mob of Alexandria, by way of mocking at Herod Agrippa, seized on a harmless madman and set him up as a mock-king—συνελάντες τὸν ἄθλιον ἄχρι τοῦ γυμνασίου, καὶ στήσαντες μετέωρον, ἵνα καθορῶτο πρὸς πάντων, βύβλον μὲν εὐρύναντες ἐντὶ διαδήματος ἐπιτίθεσιν αὐτοῦ τῇ κεφαλῇ, χαμαιστρώφω δὲ τὸ ἄλλο σῶμα περιβάλλουσιν ἀντὶ χλαυδός, ἀντὶ δὲ σκήπτρου βραχύ τι καπύρου τμήμα τῆς ἐγχωρίου. . . . Ἐπεὶ δὲ, ὡς ἐν θεατρικαῖς μίμοις, τὰ παράσκημα τῆς βασιλείας ἀνελήφευ καὶ διεκεκρόμητο εἰς βασιλεῖα, νεανία ῥάβδους ἐπὶ τῶν ὤμων φέροντες ἀντὶ λογοφθόρων ἐκατέρωθεν εἰστήκεισαν, μιμούμενοι δορυφόρους. εἰθ' ἕτεροι προσήσαν, οἱ μὲν ὡς ἀσπασόμενοι, οἱ δὲ ὡς δικάσόμενοι, οἱ δὲ ὡς ἐντευζόμενοι περὶ κοινῶν πραγμάτων. Εἰθ' ἐκ περιστάτος ἐν κύκλῳ πλήθους ἐξήχευ βόη τις ἄποσις Μάριν ἀποκαλούντων—οὕτως δὲ φασιν τὸν Κύριον ὀνομάζεσθαι παρὰ Σύρου.

The events narrated took place about A.D. 38.

Σ.

"CRESCENT."

The Scriptorium, Oxford: Nov. 30, 1892.

I should be grateful to anyone who can supply any facts as to the history of this word. I want to know when, and in what language, crescent was transferred from its proper meaning of the waxing or first half of the moon—the luna crescens of Columella—and applied to the convexo-concave shape of a moon, whether crescent or decrecent, in the first quarter or the last. Also, when the "crescent" was first used as an ensign by the Turks—a point on which I find very diverse statements in books of reference. Is it true that Mohammed II.

"planted the crescent on the walls of Constantinople," or is this merely a flower of rhetoric, like the opposition of "the crescent and the cross" in the Crusades? The first date I have yet for the rhetorical opposition of crescent and cross is just two centuries old; and the writer is dealing with Turkish invasions of Austria, so that I suppose the crescent was in evidence, whether the cross was or not. How far East does the crescent go at present as a symbol?

J. A. H. MURRAY.

THE OBIT OF ST. COLUMBA.

Youghal: Nov. 25, 1892.

Mr. Anscombe, in his letter (ACADEMY, November 19), has not essayed to prove that in 580 Whitsunday fell upon June 9 (= Easter, April 21), according to the Iona Computus. What he shows in a roundabout way* nobody denies: (a) XI. F=Easter, April, 21, IX. F=Easter, April 14, V. F=Easter, March 24, in accordance with the Alexandrine system; (b) assuming that the Iona Computus consisted of Alexandrine epacts, with Easter on moon 14, but not later than March 25, the Columban Easter would respectively fall on April 21, 7, 21 on A.D. 580, 597, 631.

Mr. Anscombe seems unaware that the reckoning used in Iona down to 716 was admittedly the cycle of 84. This, we learn from the Paschal Epistle of Cummin, differed from the Decemnovennal in, among other divergences, the epact and 14th of the moon. Consequently, it lies upon Mr. Anscombe to give the epact, Paschal term, and Easter date of 580, according to the cycle of 84. Until this is done, his conclusion must remain a "nebulous hypothesis."

When Mr. Anscombe has dealt with the foregoing, and given his reason for stating that the latest Irish Easter was April 21, I shall, with the editor's permission, answer his query respecting the Irish Easter of 634.

The assertions that the Ulster Annalist (1) accepted 597 for the obit of St. Columba, (2) equated 595 with 597, (3) and habitually antedated by two years, being unproved, I asked to have them substantiated. In reply, I am informed that they "have been submitted either directly or inferentially to proof" in his paper. This is a facile rejoinder. How far it is effective may be judged from the fact that by his admission of having mistaken the Solar Cycle of 28 for the Lunar of 19, Mr. Anscombe amended the Ulster Annals, confessedly without full knowledge of their fundamental data. (The aid derivable from the Roman epacts is set forth in a paper on A.D. misdating in the Annals of Ulster read by me before the Royal Irish Academy on November 14, which will appear in due course.)

A fourth statement, that the Ulster Annalist made the whole chronology of the sixth century subservient to his 595=597=obit of St. Columba, is now proved (?) by a supplementary dictum respecting (not the chronicle in question, but) Tigernach.

As he omits to give grounds for the Innisfallen A.D. 507=509, Mr. Anscombe, we may conclude, abandons the equation. On the other hand, since he professes to maintain the A. P. 405 of Mennius=A.D. 433, it behoves him to assign reasons therefor.

* The Canon employed by Mr. Anscombe is: "Si vis scire quanta est epacta [Alexandrina], sume annos decemnovennales quot fuerint, et de ipsis semper detrahe unum, et illos alios multiplica per 11, et postea partire per 30, et quot remanent tota est epacta [xi. Kal. April]." The April regular is 10, as there are 10 days from March 23 (the first day of the Alexandrine Paschal year) to April 1, both inclusive.

With the original before him, Mr. Anscombe reiterates that Thursday, December 7, is a blunder for Thursday, January 1. Very well: take a similar instance. The battle of the Curragh of Kildare was fought, according to the Annals of Ulster, on Tuesday, August 27, 782. As the Dominical Letter was F, this, if the new criterion is to be relied on, signifies that the engagement took place in a year in which January 1 fell on Tuesday! Mirus calculandi preceptor.

H. MACCARTHY.

"THE VISION OF MACCONGLINNE."

University College, Liverpool: Nov. 24, 1892.

Will you kindly grant me a small space to correct a few additional mistakes in my edition of the Vision of MacConglinne which was published by Messrs. D. Nutt & Co. the other day?

On p. 6, Mac Dá Chérda ought to have been translated "The Son of Two Arts." Dr. Whitley Stokes draws my attention to Todd's Book of Hymns (vol. i., p. 88), where all that is apparently known about this interesting person and his kindred is fully discussed, and whence it appears that the "two arts" are poetry and folly.

On p. 96, l. 3, before "rail of alder" insert "fair and white" (findgeit). On p. 100, l. 8, for "twenty" read "four-score" (ceithri fichit).

The modern stories about the Caitleach Bhéirre or Hag of Beare, which I printed on p. 132, are now found in a more correct form in D. O'Faherty's recent publication, Siamsa an Gheimhridh, p. 116 (printed by Patrick O'Brien, 46, Cuffe-street, Dublin). The interest which the legends about this remarkable character, which has preserved its vitality in Irish folklore for a thousand years, seem to have excited in my readers, has induced me to prepare an edition of the poem ascribed to her, of which I have given extracts on p. 209. It will, I hope, soon appear in the Revue Celtique, with such translations as I am able to offer, though at present more than half of it is quite obscure to me.

KUNO MEYER.

A SELECTION FROM LESSING.

Hamilton College, Clinton, N.Y.: Nov. 15, 1892.

Mr. T. W. Rolleston, reviewing the new edition of Hamann's-Lessing's Laokoon in the ACADEMY of October 22, says that, so far as he knows, no one has published a book of extracts from Lessing's works.

Such a book has been published by Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons, of New York and London, edited by Prof. H. S. White, of Cornell University. It is called Lessing's Prosa, and is a companion volume to Prof. J. M. Hart's excellent Goethe's Prosa.

Messrs. Heath & Co., of Boston, have announced a Lessing's Prose, selected by the writer of this. But I have hesitated to carry out my plan since the appearance of Prof. White's volume, in which the notes and introductory remarks to each selection are all that could be asked for in the way of scholarship and appreciation. But Mr. Rolleston will join with me in regretting that Prof. White has not included a single extract from the Laokoon. He seems to have had in mind a book introductory to the further study of Lessing's works. I had contemplated a volume of selections representative of all the prose works of Lessing. After reading your review, I am strongly inclined to take up again my abandoned plan.

H. C. G. BRANDT.

† As Maguire "writes" 781, Mr. Anscombe will perhaps maintain that he "means" 783.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, Dec. 4, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "Bacteria and Infectious Diseases," with Lantern Illustrations, by Dr. E. E. Klein.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Quantity and Quality of Life," by Mr. J. A. Hobson.
- MONDAY, Dec. 5, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
5 p.m. London Institution: "Reading as a Recreation," by Mr. Edmund Gosse.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting Methods," by Prof. A. H. Church.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Generation of Light from Coal Gas," III., by Prof. Vivian Lewis.
8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Principles of Rank among Animals," by Prof. Parker.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: Symposium, "Does Law in Nature Exclude the Possibility of Miracle?" by the Rev. C. J. Shebbeare and Messrs. R. J. Ryle and A. F. Shand.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Journeys in Benin," by Captain Galloway.
- TUESDAY, Dec. 6, 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Manufacture of Small Arms," by Mr. J. Rigby.
8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "The Different Egyptian Versions of the Bible" and "The Book of the Dead," continued, by Mr. P. Le Page Renouf.
8.30 p.m. Zoological: "A Revision of the Genera of the Alcyonaria Stoloniifera, with Descriptions of one new Genus and several new Species," by Mr. Sidney J. Hickson; "The Convolutions of the Cerebral Hemispheres in certain Rodents," by Mr. F. E. Beddard; "A new Monkey from South-East Sumatra," by Prof. Collett.
- WEDNESDAY, Dec. 7, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "Edward the Confessor's Gold Chain and Crucifix," by Mr. Walter Lovell; and "Romanesque Architecture," by Mr. J. Park Harrison.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Chicago Exhibition, 1893," by Mr. James Iredge.
8 p.m. Geological.
8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Sir Thomas Browne," by Mr. James Ernest Baker.
- THURSDAY, Dec. 8, 7 p.m. London Institution: "A Plea for Catholicity of Taste in Music," illustrated, by Sir Joseph Barnby.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Treatment of Pictures and Drawings," by Prof. A. H. Church.
8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: Annual General Meeting.
8 p.m. Mathematical: "Cauchy's Condensation Test for the Convergence of Series," by Prof. M. J. M. Hill; "Secondary Tucker Circles," II., by Mr. J. Griffiths; "Determinants," by Mr. J. E. Campbell; "A Geometrical Note," by Mr. R. Tucker.
8.30 p.m. Japan Society: "Japanese Fans," by Mrs. Salway.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
- FRIDAY, Dec. 9, 5 p.m. Physical: "Colour Vision," by Mr. W. B. Croft; "Japanese Magic Mirrors," by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson; "Reflexion from Diffusing Surfaces," by Dr. Sumner.
7.30 p.m. Ruskin Society: "Art on the Modern English Stage," by Mr. C. T. J. Hiatt.
- SATURDAY, Dec. 10, 8.45 p.m. Botanic: Fortnightly General Meeting.

SCIENCE.

AN ETYMOLOGICAL GREEK DICTIONARY.

Etymologisches Wörterbuch der Griechischen Sprache. Von Dr. Walther Prellwitz. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.)

To the student of Greek, as of any other language, an etymological lexicon is as indispensable as a comparative grammar; but the Germans hitherto have recognised only the latter necessity. We have Brugmann's Greek Grammar, a masterpiece of sobriety, and Gustav Meyer's, a storehouse of facts: to Dr. Prellwitz, a distinguished pupil of Prof. Bezenberger, belongs the credit of being the first German who, since etymology became a science, has attempted an etymological Greek dictionary. He mainly follows Fick, whose invaluable Wörterbuch der Indogermanischen Sprachen is now in its fourth edition; but he often displays considerable originality. He divides his work into 4926 articles, embracing, if I have counted correctly, 5934 "root-words," i.e., words whose formation requires to be explained; he includes a large number of interesting words from Hesychius, and omits only about 83 root-words found in classical Greek authors, among them 12 of the names of letters. Of these 5934 words he leaves 505 undervived, marks with a query the derivations given of 423 more, and for 162 others suggests alternative etymologies. He sometimes leaves the major part of a word unexplained, merely referring ἀλλόγω to a root li, and in the case of βόσ-τρυχος ἐν-δύνα θη-σαυρός λοι-σθος μασ-τροπός φά-σκολος φά-λαφος being content to deal with the first syllable alone. Only 102 words are marked as foreign, in 17 cases with a query attached; but doubtless many of the words which he leaves undervived, and probably several of those which he attempts to derive, are really un-Greek.

Misprints are naturally rather numerous. To take only important cases, Dr. Prellwitz gives wrong accents to ἄκρος (under ἀκίς and φαλακρός) κῆρυξ φόνιξις, and wrong breathings to ἀνσταλέος ἥελιος (under αἶος ἥλιος); he wrongly marks the root-vowel as long in Lat. lucrum lituus merus nates puter under ἀπολαύω λειμών μαρμαίρω νῶτον πῶω, and leaves it unmarked, as though it were short, in ἄμῶω μῆτιον πάπτερος, μᾶν (under μήν), and Lat. imbēcillus lāridum tippūla under βακτηρία λαρινός τίφη. Corrections of spelling are required under the following words: ἄρταμος—ἐρετμόν, ἀσπάραγος—asparagus, βαύ—baubari, βρύλλω—ἐβρύλλε, γέφυρα—gvehvuria*, ἔψω—arm. erphen, καίω—arēdō, κόσμος—κόσμος, μέσσοος—medhios*, μήκων—makió*, μυθίζω—μύ, νήπιος—νήπιέη, νός, σκαριφόμαι—scribo, ὠλέκρινον—leqo*. Designations of language should be added under μέλλαξ and μολύνω. What "ai. aīdh f. Glut" under αἰθω means I am unable to guess; "unarticulate in one's speech" (under βλασιός) is an orthographical gem taken straight from Fick. Dr. Prellwitz denotes Welsh by "cymr."; what "brit." stands for he does not explain, and the words dag and cauch, given as such under θήγω and κάκκη, seem to be figments. It is not clear why under σπλήν we have "zend." and everywhere else "ab." (i.e., Old Bactrian: an awkward abbreviation, since it might equally mean Old Bulgarian). The Doric forms δᾱλέομαι ἐράττω μᾱνς μᾱνῶω should have been mentioned. The alphabetical order is often broken for no obvious reason; compounds are given sometimes under their own form, sometimes under the simple word, and thus ἀπολαύω appears twice over. The articles on ἄλπιστος ἀπᾶς ἀρωτερός βαλβίς ἐρίθος are corrected or supplemented by those on ἐπαλπνος πᾶς ἐνεροί φλίβω ταλασία: for εὐαγής ισθμός κορδύλη we have to look under ἡγέομαι εἶμι σκορδύλη respectively. The author seldom contradicts himself; but he can hardly have meant to connect Lat. vires with both βία and ἴς, mōles with μόχθος and μῶλος, forus with φάρος and χορός. He is usually careful to avoid quoting unauthenticated Sanskrit words; but dhārakas (θάρᾱξ), kakk kakh (καχάξω), nābhīlam (ὀμφαλός), pundarikas ("tiger" (πάνθηρ), prāḍaks "panther" (πάρδαλις), parut (πέρυσσι), puris (πόλις), kshij (τέττιξ), are all "unbelegt" and should be excised. So under κάλλατα he gives (from Bezenberger) three Sanskrit words for "cock," any one of which would do if it happened to exist.

The Introduction is short and featureless; the only interesting point in it is a note on Ablaut. "Lauttabelle A," however, is very important, though it omits eleven letters which the author afterwards recognises—the diphthongs beginning with a long vowel, the long sonants, and the sonant ng which he finds in γυνός (i.e., gynós*, beside Sk. nagnás: why we have νύξ and not νύξ* he does not explain)—as well as the Tenues Aspiratae, which he mentions in a note. This will give the Ursprache an alphabet of 67 letters; which perhaps ought to be enough. The most aggravating of these is the seventh letter, which Dr. Prellwitz denotes by the symbol ' , meaning, apparently, a weak vowel-sound between two consonants, representable in Greek at random by any one of the five short vowels. He does not seem to give any instance of its representation by ε, but it is ο as the second vowel in μολοβρός ὄγδο(F)ος, while it is α in βανά κεφαλή λάσιος τᾱμνω and apparently in βαστάζω δάκτυλος ἑῶτα (νέο-Fata*, from ἑτος), ι in δολεχός ἔεπε (ἔεFεFπε*) ἱπνός (Fipnós*) λίθος μ(F)αίνω μίτος μίτρα μνί(F)ον πίθος πίστυρος πίτυλος τάμισος φιλύρα χθιός and perhaps σφίγγω,* and υ in βυθός γυγὴ γυργάθος ζέφυρος κύκλος κύλας κύρβις μύλη νύμφη νύξ νύσσω ὄρνις τολύπη φρύγυλος φύλαξ φύλλον. He sometimes speaks of it as an Ablaut of ε or ο, and in the Introduction it is Ablaut of ā, ē, ō. Surely he ought to have supplied us with some sort of a knot to hold this Proteus.

Three minor points of vocalism may be noted. (1) Dr. Prellwitz follows Fick, no doubt rightly, in holding that a root may be bi-vocalic, that the root of πέτομαι is rather peto than pet; but it is difficult to believe further that the vowels may change their places at will, that γλάμων—Lett. glems, ἐδανός—εἰαδε, ἐλαία—Lat. olea, λέπας—Lat. lapis, τήγανον—τάγγινον, come respectively from glame—glema, sveda—svade, elo—ole, lepa—lape, tēga—tagē. (2) That, as Schulze has pointed out (Kuhn's Zeitschrift, 27, 420 sq.), diphthongs beginning with a long vowel existed in the Ursprache, is plain enough from their preservation in Sanskrit; but it is inconceivable that, without any law at all, ēi, for instance, might become not only ōi and āi but also ei oi ai, ē ō ā, e o a, i and ī (see Prellwitz under αἰεὶ ἀπολαύω γάνος δοῖομαι δόναξ ἡθέω λέιος πέινα φθάνω φύρω φωῖς χάσκω χλίω ἔχραον). (3) Transposition of consonant+vowel to vowel+consonant may perhaps be allowed in a few cases where the consonant is a liquid (see γέγωνα ἔγχος ἀρπάζω κρότος λαγαρός), but becomes more doubtful where it is a semi-vowel, j (see αἰψα ἄκος οἶφω) or v (see αὐγή αὐλός αὖξω εὐνή εὐνις εὐρύς εἶχος οὐλή).

The following combinations must be marked as questionable or even impossible: ἀμπνέ—ἀντινέ, ἀπαλός—ἡκα, ἀποινα—ἀπό+ποινή, ἀραιός (in Homer Ἐραρός)—Got. arais, ἄρμα—ἀραρίσκω, ἄττηγος—κενέβρεια, ἄφρος—ὄμβρος, γέφυρα—Sk. ghūrṇ "to waver," θρίξ—Lith. drika, ἰγδή—λίγδος, κνέφας—Lat. creper, κρίος "vetch" ("quasi κ*κρίος*")—Lat. cicer, μάλα—Lat. mille, μορφή—Lat. forma, σελήνη—ἔξ+ἄλιω, and, which the author himself queries, ἀγαθός—δοθιήν, ἀναξ—Lat. prōvincia, χαλεπός—ὄχλος. It is not easy to believe, with Fick, that there was an Ablaut $e-i$ (βλέπω—Old Slavonic glipati, δέρη—Sk. grīvā), or that the i in μέζων φλοῖσος was simply "shoved in" before the sibilant; nor to see why $\mu\varsigma$, a "beliebte Lautverbindung" in Homer, changed its form in ἀφ' ὁρ' ἔρω ἐπ' ἰκ' ὁρ' ἔρω, or how the original forms of ἰνις κλόις κορνέω could have been ifvīs* klōFvīs* koFvēō*. The χ of δέχομαι, the δ of νέποδες, are left unexplained; "intensivo reduplication" does not account for the first syllable of δαρδάπω; Lat. brāchium is borrowed from βραχίων, not a real cognate, and so probably Sk. khalīnas from χαλινός. That εἶβω ἦπαρ, beside λείβω and English liver, stand for λῆιβω* λῆῆπαρ* is a very ingenious theory of J. Schmidt's; but the only word which we really know beginning with lj, Lat. ljōn (in Plautus apparently a monosyllable), became liōn and not ljōn*. Dr. Prohlwitz's "ἐός aus *vosús," according to which ἐός should have an initial F, is a perversion of Johansson's theory (Bezz. Beitr. 18. 29) that ἐός represents an original eu(e)su-*, and Sk. vasis an original *(e)uosu-; while "βαίω = Lat. venio aus *gvm-nio" must be an oversight for *gvm-jo.

* He does not explain in any way the Homeric verb-forms κίδναμαι κίρνημι πίτνημι σκιδνημι, or the later ὀριγνῶμαι πίτνω.

E. R. WHARTON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PĀLI "CUMBATA"—PRĀKRIT "CUMBHALA."

Harold Wood, Essex.

Cumbata and Cumbataka in Pāli signify "a roll of cloth (used as a rest or stand), a coil or wreath." We have no corresponding term in Sanskrit, though there must have been such a form as cumbata from which has arisen Marāṭhī cumbala (for cumbada) "a ring (of cloth) to be put under a load upon the head, or under a pitcher or vessel." With this we must equate Hindi cummala (for cumbala=cumbada) "a ring made of grass or twigs, placed under waterpots to keep them in an upright position." In Prakrit we find cumbhala, cūñca, cuppala, in the sense of cekkhara (H. D. III. 16). Compare capphala 'cekkhara-viṣesa' (H. D. III. 20.) Cūñca = cūñca = cūcuka "a nipple." Compare cūa (H. D. III. 18) a nipple for cūpa whence cuppala (for cūpala).

Cumbata, cumbala, cummala, cumbhala seem to be derivatives from a nasalised form of cūpa. Compare Pāli kumbhaka "a mast" from Sanskrit kūpaka. The original meaning of cumbata seem to have been "crest." R. MORRIS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

ON Sunday next, at 4 p.m., at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, Dr. E. E. Klein will deliver a lecture, on behalf of the Sunday Lecture Society, upon "Bacteria and Infectious Diseases," with oxy-hydrogen lantern illustrations.

The following letter has been addressed by the University of Cambridge to that of Padua, which is about to celebrate the tercentenary of Galileo's professorship:—

"Litteras vestras, viri doctissimi, GALILAEI GALILAEI Professoris vestri celeberrimi in laudem conscriptas vixdum nuper perlegeramus, cum statim in mentes nostras rediit non una Italiae regio viri tanti cum memoria in perpetuum consociata. Etenim nostro quoque e numero nonnulli urbem eius natalem plus quam semel invisimus, ubi Pisano in templo lucernam pensilem temporis intervallis aquis ultro citroque moveri adhuc juvenis animadvertit; etiam Vallombrosae nemora pererravimus, ubi antea scholarum in umbra litteris antiquis animum puerilem imbuterat; ipsa in Roma ecclesiam illam Florentinam intravimus, ubi doctrinae suae de telluris motu veritatem fato iniquo abiurare est coactus; Florentiae denique clios suburbanos praetervivimus, ubi proventa acutae caeli nocturni sidera solus contemplabatur, ubi extrema in senectute diei lumine orbatus cum MILTONO nostro collocutus est, ubi eodem demum in anno mortalitatem explevit, quo NEWTONUS noster lucem diei primum suscepit.

"Hodie vero ante omnia non sine singulari voluptate sedem quandam doctrinae insignem, intra colles Euganeos urbemque olim maris dominam positam recordamur, ubi trecentos abhinc annos saeculi sui ARCHIMEDES discipulorum ex omni Europae parte confluentium numero ingenti erudiendo vitam suam maturam maxima cum laude dedicavit; ubi, ut LAVI vestri verbis paulum mutatis utamur, ultra colles compositus et flumen et assuetam oculis vestris regionem late prospiciens, caelo in eodem, sub quo vosmet ipsi nati estis et educati, instrumento novo adhibito inter rerum naturae miracula primus omnium Lunae faciem accuratius exploravit, Iovis satellites quattuor primus detexit, Saturni speciem tergemina primus observavit, utraque mundi orbem ingentem a Saturno lustratum fore suspicatus est ut etiam alii planetae aliquando invenirentur.

"Ergo vatis tam venietis, auguris tam providi in honorem, nos certe, qui Professorum nostrorum in ordine planetae etiam Saturno magis remoti ex inventoribus alterum non sine superbia nuper numerabamus, hodie alterum ex Astronomiae Professoribus nostris, GEORGIUM DARWIN, nominis magni heredem, nostrum omnium legatum, quasi Nuntium nostrum Sidereum, ad vosmet ipsos libenter mittimus. Vobis autem omnibus idcirco gratulamur quod tum Italiae totius, tum vestrae praesertim tutelae tradita est viri tanti gloria, qui divino quodam ingenio praeditus rerum naturae in provincia non una ultra terminos prius notos scientiae humanae imperium propagavit quique caeli altitudines immensas perscrutatus mundi spatia ampliora gentibus patefecit. Valete."

THE death is announced of Mr. W. Mattieu Williams, well known as a popular writer on scientific subjects. In his young days, he made the acquaintance of George Combe, and became a teacher at technical institutes. Afterwards he held appointments as metallurgical chemist at various industrial works. But for several years past he had devoted himself entirely to literature. He died on November 28, at Willesden, in the seventy-fourth year of his age.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

WE have received two of the publications of the Oriental Congress, issued by the Oriental Institute at Woking. Both are written by Prof. René Basset, of Algiers, who has done so much to make known the Berber and Arab dialects of Northern Africa. One is a summary of recent studies, from 1887 to 1891, not only in Berber and Arabic, but also in Ethiopic; for it appears that M. Basset himself published, ten years ago, a collection of historical documents in Aethiopic. The summary of Arabic studies is, of course, the longest, covering more than thirty pages out of forty. It is confined to Europe, Northern Africa, and Syria, thus excluding the chief Muhammadan countries. The arrangement is clear; and, merely as a bibliography, it must be of great value to the student. The Berber and Aethiopic summaries are perhaps still more interesting, because so much less is known about these subjects in England. In Berber, the only English publication mentioned is the Kabail Vocabulary of Prof. F. W. Newman; and in Aethiopic, a translation of the Book of Jubilees (Oberlin, U. S.). M. Basset's other work is a notice of two Berber dialects spoken in the Algerian department of Constantine and in the South of Tunis. Of these he gives some grammatical notes; examples of their folklore—in Arabic, in Roman transliteration, and in a French version; and a fairly full vocabulary. Here he is on his own ground; for nothing has previously been published about these two dialects, which are apparently in process of dying out.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF HISTORICAL THEOLOGY.—(Thursday, Nov. 17.)

JOHN MASSIE, Esq., in the chair.—A paper was read by the Rev. Charles Hargrove on "Signs of Composite Authorship in the Fourth Gospel." The hypothesis which the reader suggested, briefly stated, comes to this: that there is evidence in the Gospel text of the use of 1. A theological work akin in character to the First Epistle of John; (2) Logia of Jesus, like the solitary Joannine saying preserved in Matthew and Luke, "No man knoweth the son," &c.; and 3. Traditional narrative about the Lord's life and miracles—all combined, oftentimes with difficulty and not always with success, into a continuous work, and in the process inevitably altered and harmonised, then subsequently edited and annotated. He first established the a priori probability of such a Gospel, by showing that materials not known to or not employed by the Synoptics did exist down to at least the first decade of the second century, and that there was ground for supposing that there were, in especial, materials of a Joannine as distinct from a Petrine tone of thought. To such tradition, rather to the Gospel itself, he inclined to ascribe the disputed allusion in Justin Martyr and the early developed doctrine of the Logos. Proceeding to external evidence directly bearing on the Gospel, he showed that every tradition respecting its origin which had come down to us associated more than one other person with its author; the Muratorian Fragment, as it is the earliest, so also being the fullest in its evidence on this point, "Joannes cohortantibus condiscipulis et episcopis suis dixit &c. . . et revelatum est Andrae ut recognoscentibus cunctis Joannes suo nomine describeret." Moreover, the Gospel itself speaks of a witness (xix. 35), of "we" who corroborate the testimony (xxi. 24), and of an "I" who adds the last word. The conclusion might hence be fairly justified, that more than one was concerned in the work, even if we possessed no more; but examination of the contents seems almost convincing. First, we have it admitted that the story of the woman taken in adultery is an intrusion, and that the last chapter is an appendix, which at least shows that there was no scruple in adding to it, as there must have been if it were regarded as an inspired whole. Secondly, we find evidence throughout of piece work: it is broken, abrupt, fragmentary; here abounding in details which seem uncalled for, and here puzzling us by the absence of any explanation, even when most needed. Often, too, the connexion is broken, by the insertion of some passage which seems quite out of place. Going through the Gospel up to the account of the Passion, where these phenomena were no longer apparent, and the narrative seemed continuous, the reader gave numerous instances to illustrate and confirm his hypothesis, especially dwelling on the distinct character of chaps. xiv. to xvii. distinguished from the rest of the Gospel by the almost entire disuse of the particle οὖν, which, while it occurs over 200 times in the course of the other seventeen chapters and is found in every other book of the New Testament, more or less, is absent alone here and in the kindred Epistle.—Mr. F. C. Conybeare read a paper on the comparison of the Holy Spirit to a dove. He showed that the dove was the recognised symbol of the divine Spirit or Logos in the allegorising theology of the Alexandrine Jews at the beginning of the first century, and he adduced a series of passages from Philo Judaeus in proof of this. He then pointed out how what was at first a metaphor came to be in the Gospel narrative interpreted as an historical fact. Of this process of gradual materialisation, or confusion of the symbol with the thing symbolised, the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and John exhibit an early and incomplete phase; that of Luke along with Justin, the Sibylline poem, and the Hebrew Gospel of Matthew, a later and more complete phase.

HISTORICAL.—(Thursday, Nov. 17.)

OSCAR BROWNING, Esq., in the chair. J. F. Chance, the Rev. Herbert C. Watts, the Rev. G. F. Terry, G. O. Coop, and W. E. Hill were elected fellows of the society. A paper was read by Prof. Julius von Plügg-Hartung on "The Druids of Ireland," which was followed by a discussion, in which Mr. H. E. Malden, Dr. Emil Reich, Mr. J. Foster Palmer, Mr. Lloyd, and others took part.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—(Wednesday, Nov. 23.)

DR. PHENÉ, vice-president, in the chair.—A paper was read by Mr. Watkiss Lloyd on "The Central Groups of the Eastern Frieze of the Parthenon." This is a subject which has been actively discussed by scholars and archaeologists, for well over a century, with but slight approach to agreement. The present argument indicated that previous attempts at explanation were defective in principle, as failing to account for the correlation of the groups in marked symmetry, as well as for the special selection of the members associated in each. The solution propounded was to the effect that the seated divine or daemonic figures on one side are representatives of the primeval sacred traditions of Athens connected with the Erechtheum, and those on the other side in like relation to Eleusis; that this combination had reference to the incorporation of the townships of Attica—of Eleusis pre-eminently with Athens—which was commemorated annually in a festival of Athens. This union was an achievement of statesmanship, ascribed by Thucydides to the combined power and policy of Theseus, and is recognised by him as the true basis of the great career of Athens. Attention was especially drawn to the clue to the correction of names hitherto assigned, by the recognition by Prof. Michaelis of the object held by the boy whom he still calls Eros as a parasol—in truth the sacred symbol which was in custody of the priests of the Erechtheum, and paraded by them at the festival of Skiadephoria.—Mr. A. S. Murray, Mr. J. W. Bone, and others joined in the discussion.

FINE ART.

The Life of John Linnell. By Alfred T. Storey. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

To mention first the three main faults of a book in which there is something to like, let me begin by saying that there is no index to this Life of a distinguished landscape painter—that, accordingly, there is no ready means of access to the fund of anecdote, of fact and fancy, which the volumes undoubtedly contain.

In the second place, the book itself is too big. It consists of about six hundred pages, and takes the form of two portly volumes, destined to a great extent, one would suppose for the circulating libraries. Now, though it is of course perfectly true that brevity is a quality which, in the hands of most people (who don't know how to use it), tends to baldness rather than terseness—to a parsimonious bestowal of information and thought, rather than to that to which it ought to tend, the presentation, that is, of a mental gold twice refined and without alloy—it is yet certain that diffuseness is for the average slipshod writer by far the easier method: that by this diffuseness there is cast upon the really studious reader an amount of labour which he should be spared—that much of the work is transferred from the shoulders of him who should bear it to the shoulders of those no part of whose function it is to undertake the load of it—that the only reader who is indulged or favoured by this method is the reader who is indifferent and indolent, who, naturally, in skipping the diffuse, loses less than he must lose when he is skipping the terse. Diffuseness is the curse of second-rate English writing—most of all the curse of second-rate English biography. Nay, more, it is of itself sufficient to keep irretrievably in the ranks of the second-rate that which, but for it, might have taken a more exalted place. To be diffuse is to be second-rate. It is to be an amateur and a muddler in the use of your materials. Mere bulk may gain you a hearing, but it condemns you to be listened to but for a short time, and often by but a poor public.

So much for the first two faults: one of them, the omission of the index, an accident if you will, but an accident that is inconvenient; the other, the diffuseness, the unserviceable and baffling prolixity, a thing that is of the essence of the whole matter. It is at such length as this that we may even be thankful to the learned for instructing us on Michael Angelo and Dürer, on Titian and Rembrandt, on Watteau and on Turner; but a Life of John Linnell—an artist, after all, only of the second importance—cannot be written upon this scale without including many tediousnesses, des longueurs insufferable, and even the full text of Mr. Rogers's invitations to breakfast. The third fault—which the infectious prolixity of the volumes before me is, I fear, preventing me from at once mentioning and making an end of—is the character of the illustrations. In so far as they are concerned with portraiture, they may fairly pass. We are enabled to perceive, at all events, what were the external characteristics of a person talked about. When it comes to the landscapes, it is a different matter. Of the nature of the subject and of its composition the prints cannot indeed but make us aware. But with that their message ends. They have nothing to suggest of atmosphere or of the artist's touch.

Coming now to the book's merits, it does, let it be said, far more justice to the character of the man than to the quality of the painter. If we elect to spend our time in reading it, the man himself does finally stand before us. And this in a measure must be praise; for the man—with all his fads and eccentricities—was no doubt worth presenting. He was an "interesting personality"—in the phrase of the day—much happier, more dignified, more really respectable than many painters, in that at least he had a vision of something more than his own and his neighbour's canvases, in that his vista was not bounded by paint. Life itself concerned him: he was occupied with many of its phases: he was concerned with things beyond the grasp of the materialist; he was engaged with creeds and faiths. Very interesting, both in its deliberation of weighty thought and in its clearness and fulness of expression—very characteristic, too, of the time at which it was written—is the correspondence that passed between John Linnell and Bernard Barton, the Quaker poet, as to the "principles of Friends" and as to the possibility of John Linnell joining that body. The wish that he should do so—it need hardly be said to the well-informed—came from Linnell, not from the Quakers, who have never been proselytisers, who have received no one without closest inquiry and the conviction of real accord. The correspondence ended in Mr. Linnell being persuaded that his views did not truly fit him to join the Society of Friends; and though no doubt a part of the objection urged by Mr. Barton belonged to the period at which it was made, and would not hold good to-day—I mean the insistence upon the observance of certain external things—it is yet true that Linnell would never have been wholly at one with those who are perhaps the most refined and the least visionary of mystics. And yet he recognised—perhaps even recognised too much—the essential part that mysticism has to play in any human life of reasonable depth and fulness.

All this time I am fighting shy—and I mean to fight shy till the end—of any detailed discussion of John Linnell's art. The simplest truth is that I have never found it particularly interesting. A dozen times less individual and less forcible than Constable's, a thousand times less exalted, less exquisite, and less varied than Turner's, there are some of us to whom it can only appeal in virtue of its formal dignity; yet in this very quality, which is the gift of the Classic, is it not surpassed by Richard Wilson and Samuel Palmer, and Barret and Varley and Oliver Finch? Along with something—but, after all, only a modest share—of the great qualities of these men, who had, in varying, but still abundant measures, nobility of line, reticence, suavity, grandeur—all that the Classic implies—an understanding that, whether Nature happened to be reproduced or not in their work, the exacting conditions of Art must in any case be complied with—along with his own modest share of these men's qualities, Linnell, I say, had something of the characteristics that conduce to popularity. Neglected though he was by the Academy, he had a long and prosperous day. In his own middle age and later time he reaped, pretty effectually, the harvest which had sprung from the seeds which he had sown. He had done work, important as to bulk and completeness, and quite good of its kind. He amassed money, and he enjoyed his reputation. The generation that has succeeded him may well be pardoned for a little indifference to his method and his achievements.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATERCOLOURS.

THE most interesting feature of this exhibition is a number of drawings (244-254) by Mr. Holman Hunt, which have been prepared to illustrate an edition of Sir Edwin Arnold's Light of the World. They are in watercolours, silverpoint, and pen and ink. In the most important of them, called "Gloria in Excelsis," the heavens are opening to the dazzled and awe-stricken gaze of the shepherds, who occupy, with their sheep, the lower part of the picture. The conception is novel and fine; and the whole scene is brightly lit with divine light, presenting much the same difficulties as the "Triumph of the Innocents" in blending natural with supernatural illumination. It would be rash, without the guidance of the artist, to attempt to explain the arrangement of the "Company of Heaven," or even to name all the personages represented, though some of them, like Moses, are easily recognisable. It is noticeable that the angels are without wings, and of an age between childhood and adolescence. They are filled with a glorious joy and a simple rapture which is human as well as angelic; and the divine personages, though anything but conventional, are inspired with dignity and power. The design is altogether so fresh and noble that we may hope it will be reproduced on a larger scale. Of lesser rank in the scale of imagination, but making perhaps a surer appeal by its truth to experience, is the drawing of the Unfortunate Neighbour—"To him that knocketh it shall be opened," a sort of human converse to the well-known "Light of the World." Here the mere painting of the rich, warm moonlight, striking on house and figure, and casting the garden into half light, compels the admiration, as well as the fine sentiment which pervades the composition. There may be difference of opinion as to the artist's precise meaning in the chair outside the door, and the bitch and puppy (admirably drawn) which are drinking at the water-pot. Without any ambiguity are the silverpoint portraits, the fine pen and ink designs of "The Hidden Treasure" and "Christ before Pilate," and the two exact drawings of Jerusalem and Bethlehem, which remind us of the artist's early friend, Thomas Seddon, and his picture of Jerusalem in the National Gallery.

The place of honour on the north wall is worthily occupied by a large and fine drawing by Mr. Arthur H. Marsh, called "The Messenger" (85). Two men stand before a fisherman's door, the bearers of ill news, while a number of friends wait a little way off. It belongs to a class of subject common enough now, but it is treated newly. All the figures are full of character, and the pathos of the moment is sincerely given, without excess. Such drawings, together with a fine study by Mr. Burne-Jones for "The Golden Stair" (364), and Mr. F. J. Shield's "The Good Shepherd" (274) (although neither of these can be called new), show how strong the exhibitions of this Society might be in works of poetical imagination, if the members so chose. A sketch design of Mr. Walter Crane for a picture of "Neptune's Horses" (38) is another instance in point. Among the fresher and more striking landscapes are those of Mr. Ernest Waterlow, Mr. Robert Allan, and Mr. Thorne Waite. Particularly fresh in effect and brilliant in execution is Mr. Waterlow's "Over the Sandhills" (134); Mr. Thorne Waite's "Carting Corn" (31) is the largest and finest of his many drawings; and Mr. Robert Allan's "A Summer Day in the Highlands" (15) is singularly fine though incomplete.

But of all these drawings and of a great many more in the exhibition it cannot be said that they are either sketches or studies. They are drawings—pictures—sometimes, indeed, unfinished (though this can scarcely be said of many of them), but still not what is generally meant by a sketch or a study, unless putting a border of white round a picture makes the difference. The term "study" may however, be properly applied to Mr. Alfred Hunt's solitary contribution, "Armboth Fell, Thirlmere, Cumberland" (165), though it is full of elaborate and subtle work, of minute observation and refined colour; and the word sketch is applicable to most of the clever but rather flat and patchy contributions of Mr. Thomas M. Rooke, whose aim seems to be to paint light without any shade to speak of. His mosaics of light bright colour are, however, interesting and dexterous, and some like "Votive Candlesticks, St. Sulpice, Fougères" (337) gemlike and beautiful.

The variety of the exhibition is great, giving us poetry, pathos, humour, besides glimpses of almost every quarter of the globe. Mr. Albert Goodwin, fertile, poetical, accomplished, and restless as usual, ranges from Salisbury to Oxford, from North Devon to Canada. Mr. Charles Fripp has been to Japan and brought therefrom many bright and faithful studies of the people and the country. Miss Clara Montalba gives us her dreamy impressions of Sweden, of greenish tree, and reddish roof, and grayish water and sky, charming in their way, but only half-satisfactory. Mr. Wallis shows us the rich colour of an Oriental bazaar, and paints with sympathetic touch the glory of Persian pottery. Mr. Colin Phillip has been to Austria, Lord Carlisle to India, Mr. Andrews to Niagara, Mr. Collingwood to the Alps. The critic must indeed be a traveller who dares to testify to the fidelity of half these drawings, but of their high level of merit in execution there can be no doubt.

There is not, however, much need to dilate on merits of such well-known artists as constitute this favourite and favoured Society. The humour of Mr. Stacy Marks and Mr. Glindoni, the tenderness of Mrs. Allingham, the poetry of Mr. Matthew Hale, the masterly vigour of Sir John Gilbert (shown here only in one broad sketch, 260), the patience of Mr. Pilsbury, the sweet colour and marvellous manipulation of Mr. North (of which "The Broken Bridge," 170, is this year the solitary example), the all round cleverness of Mr. Brewtall, the pastorals of Mr. Beavis and Mr. Tom Lloyd—all these and many more sources of yearly pleasure are here; and this winter exhibition may be safely said to be as full of good performance, and perhaps fuller of promise, than usual.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE AMHERST PAPYRI.

London: Nov. 25, 1892.

May I be allowed to record another little discovery of some interest that has recently been made at Diddington Hall, in Norfolk?

Mr. Griffith was, a few months ago, examining a boxful of papyri belonging to Lord Amherst, of Hackney, and among these he noted some fragments of a papyrus relating to the Fayum. These fragments have since been fitted together, and on comparing them with Mr. Harris's copy of the Hood Papyrus (published by Dr. Pleyte) I have found that they undoubtedly belong to the Hood document. Two other portions of the same papyrus are known, namely, the Papyri Nos. 1 and 2 of Les papyrus Egyptien du Musée de Boulogne. The Amherst fragments contain about five pages of new matter.

During the course of next spring I hope to publish autotype facsimiles of these, the Sancha, the Sekhti, the Lee, and other papyri in Lord Amherst's collection.

PERCY E. NEWBERRY.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

It is now officially announced that the Government has concluded an arrangement with Mr. Henry Tate, and that the long-talked of National Gallery of British Art will be built on part of the area now occupied by the Millbank Prison, covering about two and a half acres, with a frontage to the Thames Embankment. At the same time, the much-needed enlargement of the buildings of the National Gallery will be provided for, by a removal of the adjoining barracks to another portion of the same area. It is further reported that the new Gallery of British Art will be placed under the charge of the trustees of the National Gallery.

We are authorised to state that the body of artists hitherto known as the "Glasgow School," has been formally constituted a society under that name. The acting secretary is Mr. W. H. Ellis, 108A, West Regent-street, Glasgow.

The exhibitions to open next week include a series of drawings by Mr. H. B. Brabazon, at the Goupil Gallery; and an exhibition of drawings in black and white, at the St. James's Gallery.

THE following have been elected members of the Royal Anglo-Australian Society of Artists: Messrs. Colin B. Phillip, F. W. W. Topham, W. B. Wollen, W. W. May, Sutton Palmer, G. C. Hainté, and Allan Hook.

A NEW work, presenting in a popular form some of the results of recent discoveries in the domain of Oriental Archaeology, will be issued in a few days by Messrs. Cassell & Co., under the title of New Light on the Bible and the Holy Land. It is written by Mr. B. T. A. Evetts, and will be illustrated.

At the meeting of the Japan Society, to be held in the hall of the Society of Arts, on Thursday next, Mrs. Salwey will read a paper on "Japanese Fans," illustrated with sketches and diagrams, and also with a collection of specimens towards which members are invited to contribute. The society now has 275 ordinary members. Many valuable donations have been received for the library, for which it is hoped that permanent premises will shortly be provided. The Emperor of Japan has sent a donation of one hundred guineas to the general funds of the society.

THE sixth ordinary general meeting of the members of the Egypt Exploration Fund will be held on Wednesday, December 14, at 4.30 p.m., in the hall of the Zoological Society, Hanover-square. Sir John Fowler, as president, will be in the chair; and besides the ordinary business, a report will be submitted by M. Naville on recent explorations in Egypt.

MESSRS. MARCUS WARD & Co. have sent us a parcel of books, which may be noticed here because of the artistic taste bestowed on their production. Though intended as presents for children and young people, they are also a pleasure to the critical eye because of their excellence in paper, print, illustrations, and (above all) in binding. We may specially mention Red Letter Days, by Frances Ridley Havergal, presumably a reprint; and Violets for Faithfulness, by Sarah Doudney.

THE STAGE.

DRAMATIC NOTES FROM PARIS.

Paris: Nov. 28, 1892.

"JEAN DARLOT," by M. Legendre, was given for the first time at the Comédie Française, on Tuesday last, with what is termed un succès d'estime: that is "damned with faint praise." I would fain protest against the indiscriminate use made nowadays of the very vague term, "pièce" in speaking of plays, instead of the more explicit title drama, comedy, or farce, which at once indicates the true character of a dramatic work. For instance, the great success of the day, the screaming farce "Champignol malgré lui" figures on the play bills as a "pièce"; while "Jean Darlot," a commonplace domestic drama, almost a tragedy, is also dominated a "pièce," to the bewilderment of the uninitiated.

Mme. Boisset (Mme. Pauline Granger) and her daughter Louise (Mme. Bartet) keep a newspaper shop in a small provincial town; they are poor, business is bad, and their hard landlord—the conventional stage villain who nourishes sinister designs against Louise, threatens to turn them out into the street if his arrears of rent are not paid immediately. Louise, who has been brought up like a lady by her mother "who has known better days," has two lovers: André (M. Lambert), her cousin, who has just been ordered off to do his three years' military service, and does not dare to declare his love; while the other lover, honest bluff Jean Darlot (M. Worms), an engine driver, is afraid to tell how deeply he loves her from fear of offending her. But when misfortune strikes down the two poor lone women, Jean steps in and begs them to allow him to pay the rent and save them from misery and dishonour. Mme. Boisset, although she looks down on Jean as a common workman, is aware that he is not only kind-hearted and above his position in many respects, but a man who has savings, un bon parti, as the French say; so she talks her daughter into accepting Jean, and they are married.

This first act, a charming bit of realism, is the best of the three. The scene is laid in the poverty-stricken home of the Boissets, brightened by the presence of Louise and her light-hearted cousin, André. We assist at Mme. Boisset's lamentations over the lack of customers and ready cash, and her quarrel with their rascally landlord; then in comes Darlot, who stops a few minutes every morning on his way to the station to buy the Petit Journal, to chat and pay Mlle. Louise a well-meant but often misplaced compliment. The second and third acts show us the interior of the Darlot ménage. Louise is sitting listless at the window, awaiting her husband's return for breakfast: the table is laid, and a real pot au feu is simmering on a real stove—so much for stage realism. Her mother comes in to help her until Darlot arrives; the latter does not get on very well with his mother-in-law, who is always taunting him with his want of education, and hinting how unfit he is to have such a pretty and well educated wife as Louise, until Darlot, losing all patience, sends her back to her shop. Poor Darlot sees plainly enough that Louise does not love him, though he hopes that by dint of delicate attentions and devotion he may some day succeed in winning her affection; but Louise's heart is elsewhere, and she shudders at the dreary prospect that lies before her. She has a touch of Mme. Bovary in her nature, and M. Legendre in writing this play seems to have been somewhat under Ibsenian influence. It is her mother who introduces the wolf into the fold in the person of André, now a dashing dragoon, who comes to bid his cousin farewell before leaving for foreign service. André upbraids her for her heartlessness; but she explains to him that it was her mother who urged her to accept Darlot out of gratitude for all his kindness, but that she never will love him, for her heart still belongs to André, and she cannot bear the idea that he is leaving on her account. The reconciled lovers rush into each other's arms and—the curtain falls.

In the third act, we find Louise in tears, her head on her mother's lap, the picture of misery and despair. Mme. Boisset tries to console her; the harm is done, but may be repaired, only she must not allow her husband to suspect anything. However, Louise, who possesses the one redeeming quality of sincerity, declares that she could not deceive her husband, but will confess her guilt to him, and bear the consequences. In the cruel scene which follows, she tells him all. A terrible change comes over the poor, confiding husband on hearing his wife's confession, and in a paroxysm of rage, despair, and jealousy he is about to turn her out of doors; but so deep is his love that he relents, and almost begs of her to remain. But she refuses to live any longer beside him. The refusal provokes another outbreak of jealous anger: he drags her to the window with the intention of throwing her into the river below, but love is stronger than anger; he lets her go, and, with a wild cry of despair, springs over the balcony himself, and dies. At the general rehearsal, Darlot actually threw his wife out of the window first, and then jumped after her. This dénouement was far more logical, considering his violent character, and the provocation he had received. Such is the very dramatic but unsatisfactory end of M. Legendre's "pièce," which began so well in the first act, and proved so disappointing in the two last. From a literary point of view, "Jean Darlot" is a work of some merit, containing passages which remind us that the author is a poet though an inexperienced playwright.

The character of Jean will rank among the finest creations of M. Worms, who delighted everybody with the bluff bonhomme, the tenderness, and dramatic force he showed in the part. Mmes. Bartet and Pauline Granger were perfect in the parts of Louise and her mother. André was played by that rising young actor, M. Albert Lambert. The scenery and dresses were in keeping with the humble surroundings of the drama—a genteel adaptation of the Théâtre Libre.

CECIL NICHOLSON.

STAGE NOTES.

THE revival at the Princess's of Messrs. Jones and Barrett's never very successful melodrama, "Hoodman Blind," is suspected by many as having been undertaken for a temporary purpose; clear it is, in any case, that it does not serve any specially artistic aim. The chief character is played by Mr. Rolls Bulmain, who, in a somewhat rough fashion, is not ineffective. Mr. George Barrett, who is always welcome as the representative of a cheery helper of virtue in distress, has confessedly a part that suits him, and in acting it on the present occasion he does indeed but resume his own. Mr. Bassett Roe plays by no means badly the villain, to whom Mr. E. S. Willard originally gave such colour and force. And the double rôle of the heroine—which was wont to be interpreted by Miss Eastlake—now falls to the lot of Miss Sara Mignon, an actress whom we cannot remember to have seen before.

THE Comedy has closed its doors after a very brief revival of "The Arabian Nights," which, amusing as is the piece and competent as was the cast, does not seem to have caught on.

CHANGES of the bill are imminent at one or two of the more important theatres. "Dorothy" has already been revived at, or rather transported to, the Trafalgar-square, with Mr. Hayden Coffin out of the cast, and Miss Decima Moore very lively and agreeable in the part the performance of which by Miss Marie Tempest we confess we never greatly valued. And at Drury-lane Sir Augustus Harris is promising the town a pantomime that is to "beat the record": that is, as regards cast probably, for it cannot do so as regards gorgeousness.

MR. J. T. GREIN has secured the Royalty Theatre for the next performance of the Independent Theatre Society, the second of the present season, which will be given on the evening of Friday, December 9, to be followed by a matinée on Tuesday, December 13. On this occasion will be produced the first original piece brought out under the auspices of the Society—"Widowers' Houses," a realistic didactic play by Mr. Bernard Shaw. The cast includes Miss Florence Farr, Miss Kate Phillips, and Messrs. W. J. Robertson, W. T. Percyval, Arthur Whittaker and James Welch. Such seats for either of the above performances as remain unallotted after the subscribers have been accommodated may be obtained on application to the hon. secretary, Mr. A. Teixeira de Mattos, 81, Warwick-street, Ecclestone-square.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S LIST

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

BY MRS. LOCKETT.

JUDITH GRANT. In 3 vols.

"An attractive and stirring love story. The idea is distinctly original. Mrs. Lockett describes scenes, whether they be in Australia or Germany, with a great deal of effect. Many novel-readers will be glad to receive a romance altogether pure in execution and even lofty in intent." Daily Telegraph (first review).

"We are bound to confess that it has more merit than four-fifths of the novels that find their way to our study table. The characterisation is skilful and many of the descriptions are vivid and beautiful."—Daily Chronicle (second review).

"Those readers who do not make frivolity a necessity in a novel, but who are capable of appreciating soundness of workmanship and soundness of thought, will come to regard the story as one of the most interesting of the season. On every page the story bears evidence of the deep thought of the author, and it is gracefully written throughout." Belfast News Letter (third review).

"This decidedly able novel will work out from first to last and never flags in interest. The book is not only out of the common, but is decidedly above the average, and we can cordially recommend it."—Manchester Courier (fourth review).

SECOND EDITION.

THE JAPS at HOME. By Douglas SLADEN. With over 50 Full-page and other Illustrations. 15s.

Mr. Walter Besant in The Author, says: "Among the noticeable books of the month the daintiest, perhaps, is 'The Japs at Home,' beautifully printed, beautifully bound, beautifully illustrated, and delightfully written."

BY PROF. CHURCH.

PICTURES from ROMAN LIFE and STORY. In cloth gilt, with numerous Illustrations, 6s. "May be recommended without reserve as an admirable prize or gift-book."—Daily Chronicle.

CANON POTTER'S NEW BOOK.

THE GERM GROWERS: the Strange Adventures of Robert Easterley and John Wilbraham. In cloth, gilt, 5s.

"Canon Potter has produced a remarkable work."—Academy. "A strange and fascinating book, will attract and greatly interest the reader."—Bradford Observer.

SECOND EDITION.

THIS WICKED WORLD. By J. Hain FRISWELL. In cloth gilt, 5s. "A rich mine of culture."—Literary World.

SECOND EDITION.

A WAKING. By Mrs. J. K. Spender. With Illustrations. Buckram, gilt, 3s. 6d.

"In this noble story Mrs. Spender takes her place in the front rank of living English novelists."—Liverpool Mercury.

MRS. SPENDER'S NEW STORY.

NO HUMDRUM LIFE for ME. A Story of Home Life. In handsome cloth gilt, 5s.

BY TWENTY-FOUR POPULAR AUTHORS.

THE FATE of FENELLA. With over 70 Illustrations. Third Edition. In cloth gilt, with Authors' Autographs, 6s.

SARAH DOUDNEY'S NEW STORIES FOR GIRLS.

GODIVA DURLEIGH. In handsome cloth gilt, 5s.

THE CHILD of the PRECINCT. In cloth, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Miss Doudney's books will always be favourites." Literary World.

FOURTH EDITION.

THE WEB of the SPIDER: a Story of Adventure. By H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON. In cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

The Spectator says: "It is not only vigorous fiction, but a work of art."

A HIGHLAND CHRONICLE. In cloth gilt, 5s.

The Academy says: "One of the best stories of its kind since Conan Doyle's 'Micah Clarke.'" The Daily Telegraph says: "'N,' one who takes up 'A Highland Chronicle' is likely to lay the book aside unfinished."

BY AMELIA E. BARR.

LOVE for an HOUR is LOVE for EVER. In cloth gilt, 5s.

"Mrs. Barr is at her best, the whole story will delight the reader."—Academy. "A work of considerable power."—Manchester Guardian.

London: HUTCHINSON & CO., Paternoster Square

MESSRS. NELSON'S NEW BOOKS.

"TALES OF ENGLISH HISTORY," BY E. EVERETT-GREEN.—New Volumes.
IN the DAYS OF CHIVALRY: a Tale of the Times of the Black Prince.
 By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "Loyal Hearts and True," "The Church and the King," "The Lord of Dynevor," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 5s.

MAUDE MELVILLE'S MARRIAGE: a Story of the Seventeenth Century. By E. EVERETT-GREEN, Author of "In the Days of Chivalry," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s. 6d.

A TALE FOR BOYS, BY FLORENCE E. BURCH.
CHRIS. WILLOUGHBY; or, Against the Current. A Tale for Boys. By FLORENCE E. BURCH, Author of "Dick, Harry, and Tom," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s. 6d.

NEW TALE BY A. L. O. E.
THE FORLORN HOPE. By A. L. O. E., Author of "The Iron Chain and the Golden," "Beyond the Black Waters," "The Blacksmith of Bonifacio Lane," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s. 6d.

"LIBRARY OF HISTORICAL TALES."—New Volume.
MONK and KNIGHT: a Tale. By FRANK W. GUNSAULUS. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 4s.

"No boy could be expected to respect another boy who had not read Ballantyne's bewitching book, 'The Coral Island.'" GAVIN OGILVY, in the British Weekly.

ENTIRELY NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS OF R. M. BALLANTYNE'S BOOKS FOR BOYS.

Post 8vo, cloth extra, each with Finely Coloured Frontispiece and Title-page, price 2s. 6d. each.

The Coral Island: a Tale of the Pacific.
The World of Ice; Adventures in the Polar Regions.
The Gorilla Hunters: a Tale of the Wilds of Africa.
Martin Rattler: a Boy's Adventures in the Forests of Brazil.
Ungava: a Tale of Esquimaux Land.
The Young Fur Traders; or, Snowflakes and Sunbeams from the Far North.
The Dog Crusoe and His Master: a Story of Adventure on the Western Prairies.

* NELSON'S NEW DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE of BOOKS for the Drawing-room, and for Home Reading, Books of Travel, and Natural History, Tales for the Young, &c., in Handsome Bindings, suitable for PRESENTS and PRIZES, post free on application.

THOS. NELSON & SONS, 35 & 36, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.; PARKSIDE, EDINBURGH; AND NEW YORK.

1893 EDITION READ¹ on DECEMBER 1, price 12s. 6d.

THE WINDSOR PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and KNIGHTAGE.

Edited by E. WALFORD, M.A.,

Author of "The County Families," and for twenty-seven years Editor of "Lodge."

It gives nearly all the information contained in "Lodge" and "Debrett" at little more than a third of the cost; while it gives the blazon of the arms of all hereditary titles, and full accounts of all collateral branches in remainder to them, both of which are excluded from the scope of "Dod."

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

TWO CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Just Out. Large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, price 6s. post free.

HISTORY OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND.

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

With a Continuation to 1891.

By CHAS. S. MIALL.

REV. S. G. GREEN, D.D., writes:—"All who wish to understand the character and position of English Nonconformity will find herein most serviceable help."

MR. J. CARVILL WILLIAMS writes:—"It is, in fact, a storehouse of information of the most suggestive kind which politicians and publicists as well as declared Free Churchmen will do well to keep at hand both for reference and for guidance."

Daily News says:—"It constitutes a trustworthy history of the struggle for Religious Equality in England."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

NATIONAL

All the Profits are divided among the Assured.

FOR MUTUAL
LIFE ASSURANCE.

PROVIDENT

PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED,
£4,000,000.

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.

PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.

INSTITUTION.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with provision for Old Age.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

"WORKS OF TRAVEL AND RESEARCH."—New Volume.

THE BIBLE IN SPAIN; or, the Journeys, Adventures, and Imprisonments of an Englishman in an Attempt to Circulate the Scriptures in the Peninsula. By GEORGE BROWNE, Author of "The Oldies in Spain." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 4s.

DISCOVERY OF THE NEW WORLD.

WITH the ADMIRAL of the OCEAN SEA: a Narrative of the First Voyage to the Western World. Drawn mainly from the Diary of Christopher Columbus. By CHARLES PAUL MACKIE. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s.; or with gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

Fine Edition, royal 4to, with 6 Full-Page Pictures, beautifully printed in Oil Colours, and Numerous Engravings.

THE PEEP OF DAY. A Series of the Earliest Religious Instruction the Infant Mind is Capable of Receiving. With Verses Illustrative of the Subjects. Royal 4to, cloth extra, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.; or fancy Manilla boards, 2s. 6d.

A STORY of the 13th CENTURY, by A. J. FOSTER, M.A., and E. E. CUTHELL.

THE ROBBER BARON OF BEDFORD CASTLE: a Story of the Thirteenth Century. By A. J. FOSTER, M.A., Vicar of Wootton Bassett, and E. E. CUTHELL. Post 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s.

NEW TEMPERANCE TALE.

CYRIL'S PROMISE: a Tale. By WILLIAM J. LACEY, Author of "Through Storm to Sunshine," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s.

NEW STORY BY ELEANOR STREDDER.

LOST in the WILDS of CANADA: a Story by ELEANOR STREDDER, Author of "The Merchant's Children," "Alive in the Jungle," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s.

A HANDSOME PRESENT FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

THE FAVOURITE BOOK OF NURSERY TALES. With Seventy-two Full-Page Coloured Pictures. In attractive binding. 8vo, cloth extra, price 4s.; with gilt side and full gilt edges, price 5s.

NEW VOLUME IN "THE FAVOURITE SERIES FOR THE NURSERY."

FAVOURITE BIBLE STORIES for the YOUNG. Second Series. Containing Story of the Flood—Rebekah at the Well—Jacob's Dream—Moses—Elijah and Elisha—Samuel—David, &c., &c. With numerous illustrations. Post 8vo, fane boards, 1s.; cloth extra, 1s. 6d.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.
THE GOD of the AMEN, and other Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

"Dr. MacLaren is, perhaps, the finest sermon builder of living preachers."—Christian Commonwealth.

"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled."—Independent (New York).

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
 THREE PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
 STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIFTY SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to FRANCIS RAE ENSCROFT, Manager.

BREAKFAST OR SUPPER.

E P P S'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

MARK TWAIN says

OF PROF. LOISETTE'S SYSTEM OF MEMORY—

"I had before been able, like most people, to store up and lose things in the dark cellar of my Memory, but he showed me how to light up the cellar. It is the difference—to change the figure—between having money where you can't collect it, and having it in your pocket. The Information cost me but little, yet I value it at a prodigious figure."—Prospectus post free from Prof. A. LOISETTE, 47, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE CLARENDON PRESS.

NEW VOLUMES OF "RULERS OF INDIA."

Crown 8vo, with Maps, cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

LORD LAWRENCE: and the Reconstruction of India under the Crown. By Sir CHARLES UMPIERSTON AITCHISON, K.C.S.I., LL.D., formerly Foreign Secretary to the Government of India, and late Lieutenant-Governor to the Punjab.

"Sir Charles Aitchison brings to his task profound knowledge, mature judgment, and great literary skill. Hence his biography is an admirable piece of work, eminently worthy of the excellent series in which it appears."—Times.

ALBUQUERQUE, and the EARLY PORTUGUESE SETTLEMENTS IN INDIA.

By H. MORSE STEPHENS, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford, Author of "The French Revolution," "The Story of Portugal," &c.

"A solid piece of work, well put together, and full of interest."—Athenæum.

* * This Series is edited by Sir W. W. Hunter, and forms a popular history of the Indian Empire, in half-crown political biographies. The following volumes have already been published:—Akbar, Albuquerque, Madhaji Sindhia, Dupleix, Warren Hastings, Cornwallis, Elphinstone, Bentinck, Hardinge, Ranjit Singh, Dalhousie, Clyde and Strathairn, Canning, Lawrence, and Mayo.

Volumes on Aurangzeb, Lord Clive, the Marquess of Wellesley, and the Marquess of Hastings will be ready shortly.

A COMPANION VOLUME TO "RULERS OF INDIA."

Twentieth Edition, Revised. Seventy-eight Thousand.

Just Published. Crown 8vo, cloth, superfine paper, price 3s. 6d.

A BRIEF HISTORY of the INDIAN PEOPLES,

from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Sir W. W. HUNTER, K.C.S.I., M.A., LL.D., &c., Editor of the "Rulers of India" Series.

"By far the best manual of Indian history that has hitherto been published."

Times of India.

Nearly ready, SECOND EDITION, REVISED and ENLARGED, 2 vols.

In 3 Parts, demy 8vo, cloth, with Maps and Illustrations, 42s.

ITALY and HER INVADERS. By Thomas

HODGKIN, D.C.L., Litt.D., Fellow of University College, London.

Vol. I. (In Two Parts). THE VISIGOTHIC INVASION.

Vol. II. THE HUNNISH INVASION—THE VANDAL INVASION AND THE HERULIAN MUTINY.

NOTE.—The Author has re-written and considerably enlarged the greater part of the First Volume, which is now published in Two Parts, though for the convenience of those who already possess the later volumes the numbering is unchanged. Part of the Second Volume has also been re-written.

Previously published, Vols. III. and IV. price 36s.

Vol. III.—THE OSTROGOTHIC INVASION. | Vol. IV.—THE IMPERIAL RESTORATION.

Demy 8vo, half-roan, gilt top, ss. 6d.

THE TABLE-TALK of JOHN SELDEN.

Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by S. H. REYNOLDS, M.A., late Fellow and Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford, Editor of the Clarendon Press Edition of "Bacon's Essays."

"One of the finest gems of our literature."—Times.

"Undoubtedly the best edition."—Scoteman.

Just published, square 8vo, cloth, 5s.

HYMNS and CHORALES for SCHOOLS and COLLEGES. By JOHN FARMER, Organist of Balliol College, Oxford.

"Mr. Farmer's reputation as an arranger of hymns and songs for schools is special and high, and a selection from him is sure to be welcome. The tunes appear to be very carefully selected, and are not hackneyed; in the hymns themselves, all the best old favourites suitable for the purpose appear, with divers new ones, and the book is turned out excellently."—Saturday Review.

Just published. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth 4s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORICAL ENGLISH

GRAMMAR. By HENRY SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., formerly President of the Philological Society, and Member of Council of the Shorthand Society.

ALSO BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Just published. Crown 8vo, cloth 4s. 6d.

A MANUAL of CURRENT SHORTHAND,

ORTHOGRAPHIC and PHONETIC.

NEW EDITION, REVISED. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

SECOND MIDDLE ENGLISH PRIMER.

(Extracts from Chaucer.) With Grammar and Glossary by HENRY SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D.

NEW EDITION, REVISED. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

PRINCIPLES of ENGLISH ETYMOLOGY.

First Series. THE NATIVE ELEMENT. By the Rev. WALTER W. SKEAT, Litt.D., LL.D. Edin., M.A. Oxon., Elrington and Bosworth Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Cambridge.

Recently published. Second Series. THE FOREIGN ELEMENT. 10s. 6d.

"The best guide to English etymology that has yet appeared."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

GRAMMAR of the DANO-NORWEGIAN

LANGUAGE. By J. Y. SARGENT, M.A., Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford.

2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 32s.

NOTES on the NICOMACHEAN ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. By J. STEWART, M.A., Student and Tutor of Christ Church, Oxford.

* * The Text adopted in these "Notes" is that of Mr. Bywater's Edition of the Nicomachean Ethics, published at the Clarendon Press in 1893.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

QUINTILIAN INSTITUTIO ORATORIA.

BOOK X. A Revised Text. Edited, for the Use of Colleges and Schools, by W. PETERSON, M.A., LL.D., Principal of University College, Dundee, St. Andrews University.

COMPLETION OF MR. JERRAM'S EDITION OF "VIRGIL'S GEORGICS."

Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

VIRGIL.—GEORGICS. Books III. IV. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by C. S. JERRAM, M.A., late Scholar of Trinity College, Oxford.

Previously published:—BOOKS I., II., 2s. 6d.

"The name of Mr. Jerram on the title-page of a Latin or Greek book is a good guarantee of the excellent work within."—Schoolmaster.

Now ready. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE WORKS of VIRGIL. With an Introduction and Notes by T. L. PAPHILON, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of New College, and A. E. HAIGH, M.A., late Fellow of Hertford, Classical Lecturer at Corpus Christi and Wadham Colleges, Oxford.

* * This Work, which is now complete in two volumes, is also published in Five Parts as follows: Bucolics and Georgics, 3s. 6d. Aeneid, Books I.-III., 3s. Books IV.-VI., 3s. Books VII.-IX., 3s. Books X.-XII., 3s.

Just published. SECOND EDITION, REVISED AND AUGMENTED.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE LOGIC of HEGEL. Translated from the "Encyclopedia of the Philosophical Sciences." By WILLIAM WALLACE, M.A., LL.D., Fellow of Merton College, and Whyte's Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Oxford.

The present volume contains a Translation, which has been revised throughout and compared with the original, of the Logic as given in the first part of Hegel's "Encyclopedia." It is preceded by a Bibliographical Account of the three editions and extracts from the Prefaces of that work, and followed by Notes and Illustrations of a philological rather than a philosophical character on the text, which were not included in the previous edition.

Nearly ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY MECHANICS of SOLIDS and FLUIDS. By A. L. SELBY, M.A., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

HYDROSTATICS and ELEMENTARY

HYDROKINETICS. By GEO. M. MINCHIN, M.A., Professor of Applied Mathematics in the Royal Indian Engineering College, Coopers Hill.

Part I. 8vo, with 8 Plates, cloth, 21s.

CATALOGUE of EASTERN and AUSTRALIAN

LEPIDOPTERA HETEROCERA in the OXFORD UNIVERSITY MUSEUM. By Colonel C. SWINHOE, F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.E.S. Part I. Sphingids and Bombyces.

TWELFTH EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK to the UNIVERSITY and COLLEGES of OXFORD. Revised to August, 1892.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY CALENDAR for 1893.

FULL CATALOGUE SENT POST-FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1075.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

OVER 100 DRAWINGS BY DANIEL VIERGE.

PABLO de SEGOVIA: Adventures of a Spanish Sharper. By FRANCISCO DE QUEVEDO. Introduction on "Vierge and his Art," by JOSEPH PENNELL; and "A Critical Essay on Quevedo and his Writings," by H. E. WATTS. Super-royal 4to, bound in parchment, old style (limited edition only), £3 13s. 6d. net.
"This most sumptuous publication."—Standard.

AN EXHAUSTIVE LIFE OF COWPER.

THE LIFE of WILLIAM COWPER. By Thomas WRIGHT, Principal of Cowper School, Olney. Author of "The Town of Cowper," &c. 21 Full-Page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.—Also an Edition de Luxe (the number of which is strictly limited), printed on hand-made paper, and bound in parchment, 30s. net.

"It is a faithful piece of service, patiently and lovingly performed."—St. James's Gazette.

"Mr. Wright.....has given us a better picture of Cowper at home than has been drawn by any other biographer."—Standard (Leader).

ILLUSTRATED BY JOSEPH PENNELL.

PLAY in PROVENCE. By Joseph and Elizabeth ROBINS PENNELL. With nearly 100 Illustrations by JOSEPH PENNELL. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"Really a charming volume.....The air of France seems to breathe across the page."
St. James's Gazette.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

THE TUSCAN REPUBLICS and GENOA. By BELLA DUFFY. Maps, Illustrations, and Index, large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Bright, picturesque, and genuinely informing."—Globe.

MR. R. F. HORTON'S NEW WORK.

REVELATION and the BIBLE. By R. F. HORTON, M.A., Author of "Inspiration and the Bible," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Its information is of the best, its method is scientifically sound, its exposition lucid, its temper reasonable, and its style singularly clear, flowing, and unlaboured."—Independent.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "PSEUDONYM LIBRARY."

A SPLENDID COUSIN. By Mrs. Andrew Dean. Paper, 1s. 6d., cloth, 2s.

"There is no unnecessary material in this story, and the minor characters are as carefully touched in as the larger ones."—Manchester Guardian.

THE INDEPENDENT NOVEL SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

JEAN de KERDREN. By Philippe Saint Hilaire, Author of "Colette." Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE KELT or GAEL: His Ethnography, Geography, and Philology. By T. de COURCY ATKINS, B.A., Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE GREAT FRENCH WRITERS."

BERNARDIN de ST. PIERRE. By Arvede BARINE. With Introduction by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE CHILDREN'S LIBRARY."

NUTCRACKER and MOUSE-KING. By E. T. A. HOFFMANN. Translated by Ascott R. Hope. Illustrated. Tastefully bound, 2s. 6d.

"THE BEST OF ALL CHILDREN'S MAGAZINES."—SPECTATOR.

ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

Price 1s. Monthly.

The Half-Yearly Volumes make a capital Christmas Present, are elegantly bound in red cloth, gilt, price 6s. each.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

ILLUSTRATED BY JOSEPH PENNELL.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. Described by Mrs.

VAN RENSSELAER, and Illustrated by JOSEPH PENNELL. Royal 8vo, cloth elegant, 25s.—Also an Edition de Luxe, in 2 vols., 20 sets only being for sale in England; size 10 in. by 14 in.; printed on fine plate-paper; the Illustrations from the Original Wood-Blocks, the Full-page ones, and the Seals of the Cathedrals (printed in appropriate colours), on separate sheets, each Copy signed, price £6 6s. each.

"A charming account, charmingly illustrated."—Times.

FOR LOVERS OF THE FINE ARTS.

OLD ITALIAN MASTERS. By W. J. Stillman.

Engravings and Notes by T. Cole. Royal 8vo, cloth elegant, price £2 2s. Also an Edition de Luxe, in two portfolios; size 13 in. by 18 in.; printed on Indian paper, text bound separately; hand-pulled Proofs of the 68 Illustrations from the Original Wood-Blocks, printed on Japan paper, and mounted on thick Japan mat-paper, and signed by the Engraver and Printer; the Illustrations have outline at foot showing tale of picture; price Thirty-five Guineas. This Edition is limited to 125 copies, 12 only being for sale in England.

"They are indeed lovely productions of an eye and hand rarely, if ever, equalled at such work of reproduction, and while they have the warmest praise from such authorities as Mr. Burne-Jones and Mr. G. F. Watts, the most casual student might be led by them to a new appreciation of the superb qualities possessed by the early and middle Italian Masters."

Daily Telegraph (Leader).

MR. LELAND'S NEW WORK.

ETRUSCAN ROMAN REMAINS in POPULAR

TRADITION. By CHARLES GODFREY LELAND, Hon. F.R.S., President of the Gipsy Lore Society, &c. With many Illustrations, and copiously decorated with Head and Tail Pieces by the Author illustrative of Etruscan Art. Small 4to, cloth, 21s.—Also an Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 Copies, with an Original Drawing by Mr. Leland, Numbered and Signed, price £1 11s. 6d.

"A production which must attract scholars and archaeologists as well as the general reader."—Daily Telegraph.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN THOUGHTLAND AND IN DREAMLAND."

ORCHARDSCROFT: the Story of an Artist.

By ELSA D'ESTERRE KEELING. Author of "In Thoughtland and in Dreamland," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Fresh and unaffected, full of tenderness and the love of human kind."—Dundee Advertiser.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "WILD NATURE WON BY KINDNESS."

MORE ABOUT WILD NATURE. By Mrs.

BRIGHTWEN. Author of "Wild Nature Won by Kindness." With Portrait of the Author, and many other Full-Page Illustrations. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A very delightful collection."—Globe.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE CAMEO SERIES."

LOVE SONGS of IRELAND. Collected and

Edited by KATHARINE TYNAN. Half-bound, paper covers, 3s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION.

FURZE BLOSSOMS; Stories and Poems for all Seasons. By ROSA MACKENZIE KETTLE, Author of "Smugglers and Foresters," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Like all that proceeds from the pen of the author, the book is full of a simple grace that bears the test of time....The scenes of many of the tales are placed in the Highlands of Scotland, the natural beauties of which region find in the author an enthusiastic admirer, whose word-pictures are singularly vivid and faithful."—Morning Post.

A LYRIC PLAY.

OLD GAMUL: a Lyric Play. By Thomas

NEWBIGGING. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The story is cleverly worked out."—Glasgow Herald.

REAL COOKERY. By "Grid." Cloth, 2s.

"A capital little book.... The little volume is full of sound advice."—T. A.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

AUSTIN DOBSON'S EIGHTEENTH CENTURY VIGNETTES, by LIONEL JOHNSON	531
THE MEMOIRS OF DEAN HOLE, by the Rev. C. J. ROBINSON	533
CANON MEYRICK'S THE CHURCH IN SPAIN, by the Rev. WENTWORTH WEBSTER	534
GENERAL MACMAHON'S FAR CATHAY AND FARTHER INDIA, by STEPHEN WHEELER	535
DR REMUSAT'S THIBERS, by F. T. MARJALS	535
NEW NOVELS, by G. SAINTSBURY	536
GIFT BOOKS	537
NOTES AND NEWS	539
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	540
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	540
ORIGINAL VERSUS "VENUS ANADYOMENE," by MAURICE HEWLETT	540
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	541
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	541
CORRESPONDENCE—
Mr. W. B. Scott's Autobiography , by Prof. W. Minto; "Cavalry," by Dr. E. B. Taylor; The Orbit of St. Columba , by A. Anson; Dante's "Guizade" —the Medinal Port of Wissant, by Paget Toynbee; The Gospel According to Peter , by the Rev. H. A. Redpath	541
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	544
RIBBECK'S HISTORY OF LATIN POETRY, by PROF. A. S. WILKINS	544
PHOTO-MICROGRAPHS OF WHEAT, by A. B.	545
SCIENCE NOTES	545
PHILOLOGY NOTES	546
MR. FULLEYLOVE'S "LEICESTER," by F. WEDMORE	546
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Morris-Kayoum and the Labyrinth Papyri , by Cope Whitehouse	547
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	547
STAGE NOTES	547
MUSIC OF THE WEEK, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	548

For Advertisements of Schools, Societies, Catalogues, Fine Art, &c., see page 550

GAY & BIRD'S LIST.

At all Booksellers and Libraries.

SHALL GIRLS PROPOSE? and other Papers on Love and Marriage. By a SPECULATIVE BACHELOR. 32mo, bevelled cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE REFLECTIONS of a MARRIED MAN. By ROBERT GRANT, Author of "An Average Man," "The Confessions of a Frivolous Girl," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 4s.

CHILDREN'S RIGHTS. By Kate Douglas WIGGIN, Author of "Timothy's Quest" and "Birds' Christmas Carol." With an Introduction by Emily A. E. Shirreff, President of the London Froebel Society. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

DOROTHY Q., together with a Ballad of the BOSTON TEA-PARTY and GRANDMOTHER'S STORY OF BUNKER HILL BATTLE. By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. 1 vol. crown 8vo. Over 60 Illustrations by Howard Pyle, and many beautiful Borders, Head and Tail Pieces. Bound in grey cloth, with quaint letterings and ornaments in silver. 6s. net. Times.—"A charmingly illustrated edition."

THE ONE-HOSS SHAY. By Oliver Wendell HOLMES. With its Companion Poems, HOW the OLD HORSE WON the BET and The BROOMSTICK TRAIN. Crown 8vo. 62 spirited Illustrations by Howard Pyle. Quaintly bound in deer skin, 7s. 6d. net. "His illustrations are a source of great delight."

Glasgow Herald.
"Exquisitely got-up and illustrated edition."—Truth.

GENOA, the SUPERB. By Virginia W. JOHNSON, Author of "The Lily of the Arno." Demy 8vo, illustrated with Photogravures, handsomely bound and boxed, 12s. 6d. net.

"This volume equals in get-up 'The Lily of the Arno.'"

THE LILY of the ARNO; or, Florence Past and Present. By VIRGINIA W. JOHNSON. Demy 8vo, handsomely bound and boxed, 25 Photogravures, 12s. net.

"This handsome volume is a triumph—it undoubtedly is a triumph—of illustration and topography, quite as much as of literature. Altogether this is a very pleasant, as well as useful and eminently handsome, book."—Spectator.
"A sumptuous volume this. It is enriched by photogravures—really enriched, for most of these are admirable."—Queen.

THOMSON'S SEASONS—Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter. In 4 vols., 12mo., printed on ruled paper, many Plates and Illustrations in Text. The silk binding of these little gems is a chief feature—the four side pieces being masterpieces of block cutting. The four volumes boxed, 10s. 6d. net.

LONDON: 27, KING WILLIAM STREET, WEST STRAND.

WHITTAKER'S NEW BOOKS.

By OLIVER J. LODGE, LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., M.I.E.E., Lyon Jones Professor of Experimental Physics in the University College, Liverpool.

LIGHTNING CONDUCTORS and LIGHTNING GUARDS. A Treatise on the Protection of Buildings, of Telegraph Instruments and Submarine Cables, and of Electric Installations generally, from Damage by Atmospheric Discharges. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 550 pp., 15s.
"A comprehensive and most instructive treatise, which is the work of one of our best authorities on modern theories of electricity and their practical application."—Times.
"There is probably no one who knows more about lightning conductors than Dr. Lodge."—Industries.

By W. PERREN MAYCOCK, M.I.E.E., Author of "A First Book of Electricity and Magnetism."

ELECTRIC LIGHTING and POWER DISTRIBUTION: an Elementary Manual for Students preparing for the Ordinary Grade Examination of the City and Guilds of London Institute and General Readers. With Questions and Ruled Pages for Notes. Part I., with 125 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 2s. 6d. Part II., in the press.

Ready in December.

ELECTRICAL EXPERIMENTS. By G. E. BONNEY, Author of "Induction Coils." With 144 Illustrations. 256 pp., crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
The above work will be attractively bound, and will form an excellent present for a youth interested in the science of Electricity.

COAL PITs and PITMEN. A Short History of the Development of the Coal Trade. By R. NELSON BOYD, M.Inst.C.E. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
THE "GREAT INDUSTRIES" LIBRARY.

"An interesting and useful addition to the Library."—Times.

MINERALOGY: the Characters of Minerals, their Classification and Description. By Dr. F. H. HATCH. With 115 Illustrations. 3s. 6d.
THE "LIBRARY OF POPULAR SCIENCE."

"We cordially recommend this little book of Dr. Hatch's as one of the best that students could purchase."—Science Gossip.

FOR JUNIOR STUDENTS.

PIERRILLE. By Jules Claretie, de l'Académie Française. (Authorised Edition.) Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by J. BOILELLE, Senior French Master at Dulwich College, late Examiner in French to the Intermediate Examination Board, Ireland, and 27 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Ready in December. Seventh year of issue. Price 1s. net.

THE SCHOOL CALENDAR for 1893: a Handbook of Examinations, Scholarships, and Exhibitions. With a Preface by F. STORR, B.A., Chief Master of Modern Side, Merchant Taylors' School.

A List of the County Council Scholarships will be added this year.

"The book is full of information, such as is often and much needed by teachers and guardians, and the arrangement of matter is convenient."—Athenaeum.

"This excellent little book is indispensable to parents and guardians."—Saturday Review.

"This admirably edited little handbook is now a well-established annual."—Journal of Education.

"A most useful publication."—Guardian.

THE NEW MINISTRY, NEW BIOGRAPHIES, &c. 32mo, leatherette, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

DOD'S PARLIAMENTARY COMPANION. Sixtieth Year and Sixty-seventh Issue. In Use in the House of Commons, the Government Offices, and the principal London Clubs.
"The invaluable 'Dod.'"—Saturday Review.

Immediately. Fcap. 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 10s. 6d. net.

DOD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and KNIGHTAGE of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND. Including all the Titled Classes, for 1893. Fifty-third Year.

"For facility of reference it is not surpassed by any of the larger and more pretentious works which deal with the same subject."—Times.

"A popular and really useful book."—Queen.

"For purposes of rapid reference it has no superior."—Athenaeum.

A New and Revised (Twelfth) Edition. Post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

HOBLYN'S DICTIONARY of TERMS USED in MEDICINE and the COLLATERAL SCIENCES. Revised and Enlarged by J. A. P. PRICE, B.A., M.D. Oxon., Assistant Surgeon to the Royal Berkshire Hospital, late Physician to the Royal Hospital for Children and Women.

LONDON: WHITTAKER & CO.,

2, WHITE HART STREET, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

L. REEVE & CO'S NEW WORKS.

THE PHYSIOLOGY of the INVERTEBRATA. By A. B. GRIFFITH, Ph.D., F.R.S. (Edin.), F.C.S. Demy 8vo, with 81 Illustrations, 15s. net.

THE HEMIPTERA HETEROPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDER, F.L.S. Complete in 1 volume. Small Edition, with a Structural Plate, 11s. Large Edition, with 31 Coloured Plates, 45s.

THE LEPIDOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By CHARLES G. BARRETT, F.E.S. Parts I.-VI. Each with four Coloured Plates, 5s. Prospectus and form for Subscribers may be had on application.

LEPIDOPTERA INDICA. By F. Moore, F.Z.S., F.E.S. Part 12, 15s. Also Vol. 1., with 91 Coloured Plates, £9 5s., cloth; £9 15s., half-morocco. Prospectus on application.

THE COLEOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. Large Edition, complete in 5 vols., with 180 Coloured Plates, £14. Small Edition, complete in 5 vols., with 2 Structural Plates, £4.

THE BUTTERFLIES of EUROPE. Described and Figured by H. C. LANG, M.D., F.L.S. With 82 Coloured Plates, containing upwards of 900 Figures. 2 vols., super-royal 8vo, £3 15s.

HANDBOOK of the BRITISH FLORA. By G. BENTHAM, F.R.S. Sixth Edition. Revised by Sir J. D. HOOKER, C.E., K.C.S.I., F.R.S. 10s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATIONS of the BRITISH FLORA. Drawn by W. H. FITCH, F.L.S., and W. G. SMITH, F.L.S. 1,315 Wood Engravings. Third Edition. Revised and Enlarged. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH INSECTS. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates. 11s.

BRITISH BEETLES. By E. C. RYE. New Edition. Revised, and in part Rewritten, by the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH BUTTERFLIES and MOTHS. By H. T. STAINTON. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH BEES. By W. E. SHUCKARD. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH SPIDERS. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

THE EDIBLE MOLLUSCA of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND. With Recipes for Cooking them. By M. S. LOVELL. Second Edition. 12 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH ZOOPHYTES. By A. S. PENNINGTON, F.L.S. 24 Plates. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH WILD FLOWERS. Familiarly Described in the Four Seasons. By THOMAS MOORE, F.L.S. 24 Coloured Plates. 16s.

BRITISH GRASSES. By M. PLUES. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH FERNS. By M. PLUES. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

BRITISH SEAWEEDS. By S. O. GRAY. 16 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

COLLECTIONS and RECOLLECTIONS of NATURAL HISTORY and SPORT in the LIFE of a COUNTRY VICAR. By the Rev. G. C. GREEN. Illustrated with Woodcuts from Sketches by the Author. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

"Will prove most attractive to boys."—Athenaeum.
"A most entertaining little volume."—Land and Water.

A MANUAL of BRITISH ARCHAEOLOGY. By CHARLES BOUTELL, M.A. 20 Coloured Plates. 10s. 6d.

CONTRIBUTIONS to the FLORA of MENTONE and to a WINTER FLORA of the RIVIERA, including the Coast from Marseilles to Genoa. By T. MOGGIDGE, F.L.S. Royal 8vo, with 99 Coloured Plates. 6s.

New Vol., XLVIII., for 1892. 42s., cloth.

THE BOTANICAL MAGAZINE: Figures and Descriptions of New and Rare Plants. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, F.R.S., &c. Third Series, Vols. I. to XLVII., each 42s. Published Monthly, with 6 Plates, 3s. 6d. Coloured. Annual Subscription, 42s.

L. REEVE & CO.,

Publishers to the Home, Colonial, and Indian Governments,
6, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE INDUSTRIAL ARTS of the ANGLO-SAXONS. By Baron J. DE BAYE, Correspondent of the National Society of Antiquaries of France and of the Ministry of Public Instruction. With 17 4to Steel Plates (containing 114 Figures) and 31 Woodcuts in the Text. Royal 4to. 21s.

PREFERENCES in ART, LIFE, and LITERATURE, including Essays on the HISTORY of PRERAPHAELISM and on CONTEMPORARY ENGLISH ART. By HARRY QUILLER, M.A., Trin. Coll. Camb. With 67 Full-Page Plates by many of the leading Artists of the day including FIVE R.A.s and Nine A.R.A.s. Imperial 8vo, uniquely bound, 21s.

TWO NEW BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

- 1. SKETCHES of LIFE and CHARACTER in HUNGARY. By MARGARET FLETCHER. Illustrated throughout by Rose le Quessno. 7s. 6d.
- 2. FROM ADAM'S PEAK to ELEPHANTA (CEYLON and INDIA). By EDWARD CARPENTER. Fully Illustrated. 8vo, 15s.

"The book is so full of life and of unstudied picturesqueness, the illustrations are so admirable in conception and execution, so full of character and verve, that we lay the book down feeling, like Oliver Twist, that we want more."—Daily Chronicle.

The author of this work takes India from a new aspect, paying special regard to the social and incidentally political—life and thought of the natives, their national aspirations and real feeling towards British rule and towards Western social movements, in which latter the author has himself played no inconspicuous part.

THE "DILETTANTE" SERIES, in whole or in part, forms an admirable Christmas Present.

Each 2s. 6d., neatly bound in crocodile cloth, with an Autotype Frontispiece.

- | | | |
|--|---|--|
| (1.) DANTE and his IDEAL.
HERBERT BAYNES, M.R.A.S. | (3 and 4.) THE DOCTOR, and other Poems.
(3s. 6d.) ... Rev. T. E. BROWN, M.A. | (7.) HENRIK IBSEN.
Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A. |
| (2.) BROWNING'S MESSAGE to his TIME.
Dr. EDW. BERDOE. | (5.) GOETHE ... OSCAR BROWNING, M.A. | (8.) WALT WHITMAN ... WM. CLARKE, M.A. |
| | (6.) DANTE ... OSCAR BROWNING, M.A. | (9.) GREEK COMIC POETS, F.A. PALEY, LL.D. |

HISTORY of the ENGLISH LANDED INTEREST:

Customs, Laws, Agriculture. By RUSSELL M. GARNIER, B.A. (Oxon.). 424 pp. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Mr. Garnier is intimate in his subject. Mr. Keble Digby has dealt with its legal aspects; the late Prof. Rogers, Mr. Ashley, Mr. Scribner, Mr. Cunningham, and a host of writers have written of it as economists; and the literature of the subject in all its many sides is prodigious. It was a happy thought on the part of Mr. Garnier to focus some of the scattered rays of light. He writes, it is important to note, with a living knowledge of the rural England of to-day. He has read much and wisely; he has mastered most of the authorities on the subject."—Times. "Full of careful and far-reaching erudition."—Scotsman. "Eminently readable. An important contribution to economic history."—Glasgow Herald.

LEGAL HANDBOOKS SERIES.

POPULAR MANUALS AT POPULAR PRICES.

Edited by ALMARIC RUMSEY, Barrister-at-Law.

1. EXECUTORS and ADMINISTRATORS. 3s. 6d.
2. ELECTORS and ELECTION AGENTS. 2s. 6d.
3. EMPLOYERS and EMPLOYED. 3s. 6d.

The last of these volumes (just published) deals with the whole law of Master and Servant, and Modern Labour Legislation. It is invaluable alike to the Housekeeper, the Domestic Servant, the Employer of Labour, and the Workman.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

JENNY'S CASE. By Mrs. Pinsent. Cheap Edition in 1 vol., cloth, 3s. 6d.

GEORGE ELIOT'S TRANSLATION OF STRAUSS'S "CHRIST."

THE LIFE of CHRIST CRITICALLY EXAMINED.

By DAVID FRIEDRICH STRAUSS.

Translated by GEORGE ELIOT.

New Edition, in One Vol.

With an Introduction by OTTO PFLEIDERER, Professor of Theology at the University of Berlin.

Large 8vo, 15s.

[Shortly.]

A CANAANITISH WOMAN: a Novel. By THOMAS DUNCAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A STUDENT'S CHURCH HISTORY.

HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH, A.D. 1-600. By Dr. W. MOELLER. Translated by ANDREW RUTHERFORD, D.D. 558 pp. 8vo, 15s.

"An excellent handbook for students, and will be valued by all who wish to follow in an elaborate narrative the development of Christianity."—Glasgow Herald. "A distinct advance on Kurtz."—Review of the Churches. "The kind of book a student delights in—loves to handle, loves to consult, and to know."—Expository Times. "In the days when we were divinity students we put our trust in Kurtz. This confidence is now numbered among our early illusions: there is Moeller to flee to and be secure."—Modern Church.

"PHILOSOPHY AT HOME" SERIES.

6. OUTLINES of the PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION. By HERMANN LOTZE. Edited by F. C. CONYBEARE, M.A. (Oxon.). 2s. 6d.

"One of the most suggestive and enlightening books that our age has been privileged to welcome."—Rev. John Owen in the Academy.

NEW POEM BY MR. GEORGE BARLOW.

A LOST MOTHER. With a Frontispiece of Mr. W. BELL SCOTT'S Etching after Wm. BLAKE'S "There Shall Be No More Death." Fcap. 4to, with Rubricated Initials, antique boards, 4s. 6d. LARGE-PAPER EDITION (50 copies only), 7s. 6d. net.

7. THE PROBLEM of REALITY. By E. Belfort BAX, Author of "A Handbook to the History of Philosophy" in "Bohn's Library." 2s. 6d.

Vols. I. to V. consist of New Editions of Mr. T. BAILEY SAUNDERS'S Translations from SCHOPENHAUER.

A BROWNING PRIMER; being a Companion to the Pocket Volume of "Selections from the Poetical Works of Robert Browning." By ESTHER PHOEBE DEFRIES. With an Introduction by Dr. F. J. FURNIVALL. 16mo, half-cloth, paper boards, 1s.

NEW SCIENTIFIC TEXT-BOOKS.

TEXT-BOOK of EMBRYOLOGY of MAN and MAMMALS. By Dr. OSCAR HERTWIG, Professor Extraordinarius of Anatomy and Comparative Anatomy in the University of Berlin. Translated from the Third German Edition by E. L. MARK, Ph.D., Hersey Professor of Anatomy in Harvard University. With 339 Figures in the Text and 2 Lithographic Plates. Demy 8vo, 21s.

* Dr. MARK is also preparing for Messrs. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. an English Edition of KOECHLITZ AND HEIDER'S "INVERTEBRATE EMBRYOLOGY."

BIOLOGY: Text-Book of Elementary. Adapted for the Use of Students for the Examination presented by the Conjoint Board of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons. By H. J. CAMPBELL, M.D., Senior Demonstrator of Biology in Guy's Hospital. 136 Cuts, 6s.

PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY: Introduction to. By Dr. THEODOR ZIEHEN, Professor in Jena. Translated by C. C. VAN LIEW and Dr. OTTO BEYER. Crown 8vo, with 21 Illustrations, 6s.

"We want such a book badly. We can recommend Ziehen as exceedingly well adapted to give the student a clear idea of the scope and the methods of the new science of physiological psychology."—Nature.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION of DISEASE in GREAT BRITAIN. By Dr. ALFRED HAVILAND. With 8 Coloured Maps, royal 8vo, 15s.

"Fore shadows much work which might yet be done in estimating the effects of the forces of Nature on the morbidity and vitality of the nation."—National Observer.

PETROLOGY: Text-Book of. A Description of the Rock-forming Minerals and a Synopsis of the Chief Types of Igneous Rocks. By F. H. HATCH, Ph.D., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of U.K. With 86 Cuts, 7s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE "SOCIAL SCIENCE" SERIES.

THE SOCIAL HORIZON. By the Commissioner of

The Daily News, Author of "Life in our Villages." 2s. 6d.

The DAILY CHRONICLE says: "We have read nothing so fresh, so suggestive, on the social problem for some time..... It is so bright, and clear, and unconventional that any intelligent person who reads it is likely to think more seriously and more intelligently about that problem than he has done before..... To say that a little work of about 160 pages sets one thinking and stirs one better feelings is high praise, and that praise we can unreservedly give to this suggestive little work."

The WESTMINSTER REVIEW says: "It is not given to us to divulge the name of the author of 'The Social Horizon,' but we have not for a long time read a book which has attracted us more. It is one of those thoughtful works which set the reader thinking..... The book stirs up all one's best ideas and impulses, and bears to be read and re-read from end to end."

The NORTH BRITISH DAILY says: "The author of 'Life in our Villages' has given us a most enjoyable book in 'The Social Horizon,' which deals with the question of Socialism in a large and broad fashion..... A little book like this cannot claim to be exhaustive, especially on such a subject, but it may be said in one sense to be better. It is stimulating reading, and no one can read it without feeling the better for it."

THE ETHICS of USURY.

Rev. W. BLISSARD, M.A.

LAND NATIONALISATION.

Dr. ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE.

SOCIALISM: Utopian and Scientific.

F. ENGELS.

EFFECTS of MACHINERY on WAGES.

Prof. J. S. NICHOLSON.

THE IRISH PEASANT

ANON.

THE FALLACY of SAVING.

JOHN M. ROBERTSON.

PENSIONS in OLD AGE.

J. A. SPENDER, M.A.

THE DESTITUTE ALIEN in GREAT BRITAIN.

ARNOLD WHITE.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., PATERNOSTER SQUARE, LONDON.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S NEW WORKS.

A POPULAR ACCOUNT OF THE NEWLY-RECOVERED GOSPEL OF PETER.

With Translation.

By Prof. J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A., Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE DEVOTIONAL LIBRARY.—Volume I.

MEMORANDA SACRA.

Handsomely printed and bound, price 3s. 6d.

THE NEWLY-RECOVERED APOLOGY OF ARISTIDES.

Its Doctrine and Ethics, with Selected Passages from Professor J. Rendel Harris' Translation.

By HELEN B. HARRIS.

Second Edition, handsomely got up.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., with Frontispiece.

GEORGE GILFILLAN.

Letters and Journals, with Memoir.

By ROBERT A. WATSON, M.A., D.D., and ELIZABETH S. WATSON.

With Portrait, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

[Next week.]

BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX.

The Times, the Man, and His Work.

By RICHARD S. STORRS, D.D., LL.D.

8vo, cloth, 9s.

"It is a great character in a great career which is here represented. It can hardly fail to show itself great, from whatever point it may be considered; and stimulating lessons ought surely to come from it."—AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

CLEWS TO HOLY WRIT; OR, THE CHRONOLOGICAL SCRIPTURE CYCLE.

A Scheme for Studying the whole Bible in its Historical Order during three years.

By MARY L. G. PETRIE, B.A. Lond.

Dedicated to the Duchess of Bedford.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

IRISH IDYLLS.

By JANE BARLOW,

Author of "Bogland Studies.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The DAILY CHRONICLE says: "Miss Barlow has attempted to do for the peasantry of Lisconnel, in Ireland, what Mr. Barrie has done for the peasantry of Thrums, in Scotland.....To say that Miss Barlow's book is saturated with the pathos of elementary tragedy is not to say enough. Young writers have often achieved as much, and come to little in the end. We find in her pages the very marrow of sensitive impression. She sees, as only clear eyes see, the tragedies of life, and narrates them as only poets narrate them."

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

Messrs. METHUEN beg to announce that they have published a SECOND EDITION of Mr. NORRIS'S New Novel, "HIS GRACE," which can be obtained at all Libraries.

NORRIS.—HIS GRACE. By W. E. NORRIS, Author of "Mdlle. de Mersae," "Marcia," &c.
2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

"For the combination of high literary qualities which Mr. Norris possesses, a pure, refined, and scholarly style, unaffected pathos, gentle cynicism, and stimulating aperçus of society, we must go back to the most eminent of his predecessors."

"The characters are delineated by the author with his characteristic skill and vivacity, and the story is told with that ease of manners and Thackerayan insight which give strength of flavour to Mr. Norris's novels. No one can depict the English-woman of the better classes with more subtlety."—Glasgow Herald.

PARKER.—PIERRE and his PEOPLE. By GILBERT PARKER. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

"Stories happily conceived and finely executed. There is strength and genius in Mr. Parker's style."—Daily Telegraph.

CLARK RUSSELL.—MY DANISH SWEETHEART. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. With 6 Illustrations by W. H. Overend. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BARING-GOULD.—THE TRAGEDY of the CAESARS: The Emperors of the Julian and Claudian Lines. With numerous Illustrations from Busts, Gems, Cameos, &c. By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of "Mehalah," &c. 2 vols., royal 8vo, 30s.

This book is the only one in English which deals with the personal history of the Caesars, a subject which, for picturesque detail and sombre interest, is not rivalled by any work of fiction. The volumes are copiously illustrated.

BARING-GOULD.—SURVIVALS and SUPERSTITIONS. By S. BARING-GOULD. With Sixty-one Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A book on such subjects as Foundations, Gables, Holes, Gallows, Raising the Hat, Old Ballads, &c.

"Mr. Baring-Gould's contributions to folk-lore and so-called diablerie are the most spirited and entertaining books in their class which we possess. We have here another volume overflowing with interest and with suggestion. We have read Mr. Baring-Gould's book from beginning to end. It is full of quaint and various information, and there is not a dull page in it."—Notes and Queries.

PERRENS.—THE HISTORY of FLORENCE from the TIME of the MEDICIS to the FALL of the REPUBLIC. By F. T. PERRENS. Translated by HANNAH LYNCH. In 3 vols. Vol. I. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

This is a translation from the French of the best history of Florence in existence. This volume covers a period of profound interest—political and literary—and is written with great vivacity.

DRIVER.—SERMONS on SUBJECTS CONNECTED with the OLD TESTAMENT. By S. H. DRIVER, D.D., Canon of Christ Church, Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

An important volume of sermons on Old Testament Criticism preached before the University by the Author of "An Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament."

"This volume will attract attention both on account of the author's name and the subjects of which it treats. Dr. Driver is not only thoroughly acquainted with the literature of the various topics under discussion, but is always deeply reverential, studiously fair to those who differ from him, and writes so clearly and forcibly as to make his meaning unmistakable and his discourses full of interest."—Scotsman.

WELLS.—OXFORD and OXFORD LIFE. By MEMBERS of the UNIVERSITY. Edited by J. WELLS, M.A., Fellow of Wadham College. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

An account of life at Oxford—intellectual, social, and religious—a careful estimate of necessary expenses, a review of recent changes, a statement of the present position of the University, and chapters on Women's Education, aids to study, and University Extension.

"Q."—GREEN BAYS: A Book of Verses. By "Q," Author of "Dead Man's Rock," &c. Fcap 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Also a Limited Edition on Large Dutch Paper, 10s. 6d. net.

[December.]

KAUFMANN.—CHARLES KINGSLEY. By M. KAUFMANN, M.A. Crown 8vo, 5s.

A Life of Kingsley chiefly as Christian Socialist.

"It would be difficult to condense more ably, more strikingly, and more truly Kingsley's words and works."

"An excellent and appreciative account."—World.

Glasgow Herald.

COX.—LAND NATIONALISATION. By HAROLD COX, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"Deserves attention, and throws into a positive and coherent form ideas which have for some time occupied the minds of many men."—Times.

"Admirably designed, and written in a terse, lucid style."—N.T. Daily Mail.

HADFIELD and GIBBINS.—A SHORTER WORKING DAY. By R. A. HADFIELD and H. DE B. GIBBINS, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The above are New Volumes of "Social Questions of To-day Series."

KIMMINS.—THE CHEMISTRY of LIFE and HEALTH. By C. W. KIMMINS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The above is a New Volume of "University Extension Series."

FOUR NEW BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

HARRY COLLINGWOOD.—THE DOCTOR of the "JULIET": a Story of the Sea. By HARRY COLLINGWOOD. Illustrated by Gordon Browne. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The Doctor of the Juliet," well illustrated by Gordon Browne, is one of Harry Collingwood's best efforts. His descriptions of adventure at sea are not surpassed by those of any other writer for boys, while his plots are of an exciting nature."—Morning Post.

MRS. MEADE.—OUT of the FASHION. By L. T. MEADE, Author of "A Girl of the People." Illustrated by W. Paget. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"One of those charmingly written social tales of the present day which this writer knows so well how to write. It is delightful reading, and is well illustrated by W. Paget."—Glasgow Herald.

CUTHELL.—ONLY a GUARDROOM DOG. By Mrs. CUTHELL. With 16 Illustrations by W. Parkinson. Square crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 6s.

RUDYARD KIPLING.—BARRACK-ROOM BALLADS; and other Verses. By RUDYARD KIPLING. Extra post 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

A special Presentation Edition, bound in white buckram, with extra gilt ornament, 7s. 6d.

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS' LIST.

HERMAN MELVILLE'S WORKS.

A Reissue, by arrangement with the family of the late HERMAN MELVILLE, of his famous Romances of the Southern Seas.

Edited, with Biographical and Critical Introduction, by ARTHUR STEDMAN.

The Series will comprise 4 vols., post 8vo, cloth gilt, price 6s. per volume.

1. TYPEE: a Real Romance of the Southern Seas.

2. OMOO: a Sequel to "Typee."

III. MOBY DICK. IV. WHITE JACKET.
[Shortly.] [Shortly.]

THE CUSTOMS and MONUMENTS of PREHISTORIC PEOPLES. By the MARQUIS DE NADAILLAC. Translated, with the permission of the Author, by NANCY BELL (N. D'Anvers). Fully Illustrated. 3vo, 12s. 6d.

CAB and CABOOSE. By Kirk MUNROE, Author of "Under Orders," "Prince Dusty," &c. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth extra, 5s.

The LIFE of THOMAS PAINE. With a History of his Literary, Political, and Religious Career in America, France, and England, to which is added a hitherto Unpublished Sketch of Paine by WILLIAM COBBETT. By MONCURE D. CONWAY. Illustrated. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 25s.

TAXATION and WORK. By EDWARD ATKINSON, Author of "The Industrial Progress of the Nation," &c. 12mo, 5s.

AUTOBIOGRAPHIA; or, the Story of a Life. Being Selections from the Prose Writings of WALT WHITMAN. 12mo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

THE BOOK LOVER: a Guide to the Best Reading. By JAMES BALDWIN. 12mo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

A POWERFUL ROMANCE BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE LEAVENWORTH CASE."

CYNTHIA WAKEHAM'S MONEY: a Novel. By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN, Author of "The Leavenworth Case." 16mo, cloth, with Frontispiece, 2s. 6d.

This striking new story by Miss Green is one of the best the Author has produced.

A BEAUTIFUL GIFT-BOOK.

The CONQUEST of GRANADA.

By WASHINGTON IRVING. Agapida Edition. Printed from entirely new Electrotypes Plates. Illustrated with Photogravures from Photographs (many of which were taken specially for this Edition) by R. II. Lawrence and others. Each Page is surrounded by a Moorish border, the Designs being carefully copied from Moorish Decorations. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth extra, gilt tops, and with slip covers, the binding decorated with Moorish designs (in box) net 25s.

24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

NEW BOOKS.

A HANDBOOK to POLITICAL QUESTIONS of the DAY, and the Arguments on Either Side. With an Introduction. By SYDNEY BUXTON, M.P., Author of "Finance and Politics," &c. Ninth Edition, Revised, 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE MISSION of the CHURCH. Four

Lectures Delivered in the Cathedral Church of St. Asaph. By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, Principal of Pusey House, Oxford; Editor of "Lux Mundi." Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

OUTLINES of ANCIENT EGYPTIAN

HISTORY. Based on the Work of AUGUSTE MARIETTE. Translated and Edited, with Notes, by MARY BRODRICK, of the Egypt Exploration Fund. A New, Revised, and Enlarged Edition. With Table of Cartouches, Map, and Index. Crown 8vo, 5s.

CHARLES DARWIN: his Life Told in an Autobiographical Chapter, and in Selections from his Letters. By his Son, FRANCIS DARWIN, F.R.S., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

With 100 Illustrations by Pritchett, 21s.

DARWIN'S VOYAGE of the "BEAGLE": Journal of Researches into the Natural History and Geology of Countries visited during a Voyage round the World. Popular Edition. Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

A COMPANION VOLUME TO DARWIN'S "VOYAGE OF THE BEAGLE."

NOTES by a NATURALIST. An Account of Observations made during the Voyage of H.M.S. "Challenger" round the World in the Years 1872-1876. By H. N. MOSELEY, M.A., F.R.S., late Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. A New and Revised Edition. With Map, Portrait, and Woodcuts, and a brief Memoir of the Author. Crown 8vo, 9s.

ARCHITECTURE: a Profession or an

Art. Thirteen Short Essays on the Qualifications and Training of Architects. Edited by R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., and T. G. JACKSON, A.R.A. 8vo, 9s.

EXPLOSIVES and their POWER.

Translated and Condensed from the French of M. BERTHELOT, by C. NAPIER HAKE and WILLIAM MACNAB. With a Preface by Lieut.-Colonel J. P. CUNDILL, R.A., H.M. Inspector of Explosives. With Illustrations. 8vo, 24s.

ELEMENTS of AGRICULTURE: a

Text-book prepared under the authority of the Royal Agricultural Society of England. By W. FREEM, LL.D. 500 pp. Fourth Edition. With 250 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

KIRKES' HANDBOOK of PHYSIO-

LOGY. By W. MORRANT BAKER, F.R.C.S., and VINCENT DORMER HARRIS, M.D., London. Thirteenth Edition, with over 500 Illustrations and Coloured Plates. Crown 8vo, 11s.

ITALIAN PAINTERS. Critical Studies of their Works. By GIOVANNI MORELLI (IVAN LERMOLEFF). Translated from the German by CONSTANCE JOCELYN FROULKES, with an Introductory Notice by Sir HENRY LAYARD, G.C.B. The Borghese and Doria Pamphili Galleries in Rome. With Illustrations. 8vo, 15s.

NEW CHAPTERS in GREEK HIS-TORY. Historical Results of Recent Excavations in Greece and Asia Minor. By PERCY GARDNER, M.A., Professor of Archaeology in the University of Oxford. With Illustrations. 8vo, 15s.

From the Spectator, November 19th, 1892:—"The object of this book is to expound the new views of Greek history which have been brought up before us by recent excavations in classical countries. . . . All will be found to repay perusal."

THE UNIVERSITY EXTENSION MANUALS.

This Series of Manuals is now being published by Mr. MURRAY, under the Editorship of Professor KNIGHT, of St. Andrews University, to meet the growing want of the University Extension Movement, and the remarkable success achieved by those volumes already issued proves that this want has been met in a satisfactory manner. Each subject has been undertaken by some recognised expert, and the prices of the volumes have been fixed at as low a rate as is consistent with excellence of workmanship on the part of both author and printer.

The following is a list of the volumes now ready:—

THE STUDY of ANIMAL LIFE.

By J. ARTHUR THOMSON, University of Edinburgh. 80 Illustrations. 5s.

"May be cordially recommended." Nature.

THE REALM of NATURE. A

Manual of Physiography. By HUGH ROBERT MILL, D.Sc., University of Edinburgh, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. With 19 Coloured Maps and 68 Illustrations. 5s.

"A well-produced and most instructive manual of physiography."—Tablet.

ENGLISH COLONIZATION and EMPIRE. By A. CALDECOTT, Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. With Coloured Maps and Plans. 2s. 6d.

THE FINE ARTS. By Prof.

BALDWIN BROWN, University of Edinburgh. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

THE ELEMENTS of ETHICS.

By JOHN H. MUIRHEAD, Balliol College, Oxford. 2s.

THE USE and ABUSE of MONEY. By Dr. W. GUNNINGHAM, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Professor of Economic Science, King's College, London. 3s.

"The best that has yet appeared in this series, careful in style as in thought." Pall Mall Gazette.

THE PHILOSOPHY of the BEAUTIFUL. By Prof. KNIGHT, University of St. Andrews. 3s. 6d.

FRENCH LITERATURE. By

H. G. KEENE, Wadham College, Oxford, Fellow of the University of Calcutta. 3s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

Published by A. D. Innes & Co.

THE DAWN of HISTORY. By C. F. KEARY. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CHURCH LORE GLEANINGS. By T. F. THURSELTON DYER. Large crown 8vo, Illustrated, 5s.

NATURE and WOODCRAFT. By JOHN WATSON. Illustrated by G. E. Lodge. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE READER'S SHAKESPEARE. Price 6s. each Volume.

This Edition has been printed from a Fount of New Type at the University Press, Oxford. The convenient size and large clear type of these Volumes render them more pleasant and easy to read than any other Edition published. Complete in Nine Volumes. With Portrait. Extra 8vo, cloth.

Vols. I.—III. contain the Comedies.
Vols. IV.—V. contain the Histories.
Vols. VI.—VIII. contain the Tragedies.
Vol. IX. Songs, Sonnets, and Poems.

The present Edition contains the complete Writings of the Poet, and the unexpurgated text is throughout given unnumbered with notes.

THE GOSPEL and the HOME: Readings for Busy People. By CAROLINE M. HALLETT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

ON the CATHOLIC FAITH (Notes and Questions) Compiled chiefly from the works (and in the words) of the late Rev. E. B. PUSEY. With a Preface by the Rev. T. T. CARTER, Honorary Canon of Christ Church. Second Edition, Fourth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

By THE REV. CANON JELF.

MOTHER, HOME, and HEAVEN. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE SECRET TRIALS of the CHRISTIAN LIFE. Crown 8vo, uniform with "Mother, Home, and Heaven," 5s.

By THE LATE ARCHDEACON WILBERFORCE, A.M.

THE DOCTRINE of the INCARNATION of our LORD JESUS CHRIST. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE DOCTRINE of the HOLY EUCHARIST. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

By THE LATE REV. E. B. PUSEY.

THE MINOR PROPHETS, with a Commentary, Explanatory and Practical, and Introductions to the several Books. 1 vol., 4to, £1 11s. 6d.

DANIEL the PROPHET. Nine Lectures Delivered in the Divinity School of the University of Oxford. With copious Notes. Seventh Edition (1890), 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

WHAT IS OF FAITH AS TO EVERLASTING PUNISHMENT? In Reply to Dr. Farrar's Challenge in his "Eternal Hope." 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

By ROMA WHITE, Author of "Punchinello's Romance."

BROWNIES and ROSE-LEAVES. Profusely Illustrated by L. LESLIE BROOKE. With Cover designed by the Artist. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"A delightful medley of verse, prose, and charming pictures."
"Is bound to have attractions for younger bairns."—Yorkshire Post.
"Shows that there are still writers among us who can give us acceptable fairy tales."—Cassell's Magazine.

By L. T. MEADE.

A RING of RUBIES. With Illustrations by L. LESLIE BROOKE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

By THE AUTHOR OF "TIP-CAT."

"DEAR." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"A charming study of girls' character."—Spectator.

"Dear" fully deserves her name, and finds her way without fail to the reader's heart."—Spectator.

Uniform with "Brownies and Rose-Leaves."

SHREDS and PATCHES. By E. N. LEIGH FRY. Illustrated by EDITH ELLISON. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

PAUL'S FRIEND. By Stella Austin. With Sixteen Illustrations by S. B. GATES. Large crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE DAINTY BOOKS.

"Deserve their title."—National Observer.
"Certainly deserve their name. All three are fascinating little volumes, convenient in shape, prettily bound, and charmingly illustrated."—Athenaeum.

"Dainty" 4to, (5) by 3), Uniform, Illustrated, Gilt Top.

Each volume, 2s. 6d.

The series is intended for children of all ages. Each volume will contain numerous illustrations.

"FOR GROWN-UP CHILDREN." By L. B. WILFORD. With Illustrations by T. PYM.

"Bright, graceful, and with a high purpose underlying the dainty trifling."—Athenaeum.

"We have rarely found anything prettier than the 'Difficulties of a Daring.'"—Literary World.

MUM FIDGETS. By Constance MILMAN. Author of "The Doll Dramas." With Illustrations by EDITH ELLISON.

"Sure to be popular in the schoolroom."—Athenaeum.
"Any little girl would be glad to find a place on her bookshelf for the adventures of Sally and Betty."—Literary World.

MASTER BARTLEMY. By Frances E. CROMPTON. Author of "Friday's Child." With Illustrations by T. PYM.

"We are glad to speak of this little book with quite unmixed praise."—Spectator.
"A very sweet and pure story."—Athenaeum.
"A delightfully humorous story, the best we have seen this year."—Globe.

LONDON: A. D. INNES & CO.,

31 AND 32, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

WALTER SCOTT'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

INTERNATIONAL HUMOUR.

NEW SERIES.

Large crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt top, 3s. 6d.; roan, gilt edges, boxed, 6s.

Each containing 400 to 500 pages, with numerous illustrations.

Now ready.

THE HUMOUR of FRANCE. Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by ELIZABETH LEE. With numerous illustrations by Paul Fézeny.

THE HUMOUR of GERMANY. Translated, with an Introduction and Notes by HANS MÜLLER CASENOV. With numerous illustrations by C. E. Brock.

THE HUMOUR of ITALY. Translated, with an Introduction and Notes, by A. WERNER. With 50 illustrations and a Frontispiece by Arturo Faldi. Other Volumes to follow.

AUTHORISED VERSION, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

PEER GYNT: a Dramatic Poem. By HENRIK IBSEN. Translated by WILLIAM and CHARLES ARCHER.

"Peer Gynt" is a fantastical, satirical drama of enormous interest, and the present translation of it is a masterpiece of fluent, powerful, graceful, and literal rendering."—Daily Chronicle.

THE INSPECTOR-GENERAL. A Russian Comedy. By GOGOL. Translated by ARTHUR A. SYKES. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A delightful comedy, verging a little too often perhaps for modern tastes upon knockabout farce, but fresh, ingenious, stimulating, seldom out of touch with the realities of life. This story has the simplicity of the true classic."—Spectator, in the Star.

CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES (20 vols.).

PUBLIC HEALTH PROBLEMS. By Dr. JOHN F. J. SYKES, B.Sc. (Public Health), M.R. (Edin.), Medical Officer of Health for St. Pancras, London, and Honorary Secretary of the Incorporated Society of Medical Officers of Health. With numerous illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE SCOTT LIBRARY (77 vols.).

THE BOOK of MARVELLOUS ADVENTURES, and other BOOKS of the "MORTE D'ARTHUR." With an Introduction by ERNEST RHYS. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt top, 1s. 6d.

The previous volume from the "Morte d'Arthur" published in the "Scott Library" is entitled "The Noble and Joyous History of King Arthur." The two volumes together give the complete text of Malory's "Morte d'Arthur."

THE CANTERBURY POETS (77 vols.).

POEMS of the HON. RODEN NOEL. A Selection. With an Introduction by ROBERT BUCHANAN. Square 8vo, cloth, cut and uncut edges, 1s.

GREAT WRITERS (38 vols.).

LIFE of VOLTAIRE. By Francis ESPINASSE. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 1s. 6d.

AMONG the CAMPS: or, Young People's Stories of the War. By THOMAS NELSON PAGE. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations. Crown 4to, cloth elegant, 6s.

Ready shortly, crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

THE NEW BORDER TALES. By Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS, Bart. With Illustrations by James Torrance.

NEW EDITION.—Ready shortly, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A DRAMA in MUSLIN. By George MOORE.

Imperial 8vo, Japanese cover, in wooden box, price 30s. net.

AYAME-SAN: a Japanese Romance of the Twenty-third Year of Meiji (1890). By A. M. Illustrated from Photographs by W. K. Burton (Professor in the Imperial University of Japan). Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

With 12 Full-Page Illustrations by Charles E. Brock.

FROM AUSTRALIA and JAPAN. By A. M.

A collection of stories, marked by singular audacity and power, by a new writer. Remarkable as efforts of realism, many of them abound in out-of-the-way adventure, and invade regions as yet little traversed by fiction.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

With 6 Full-Page Illustrations by C. N. D. Hammond.

FOR LUST of GOLD: a Romance. A Narrative of the Adventures of Francis Boulmer, Anthony Goddard, and certain others, in their Search for the Golden City of Manoa. By AARON WATSON.

THE MUSIC of the POETS: a Musicians' Birthday Book. Edited by ELEANORE D'ESTERRE-KEELING. NEW EDITION, IN NEW BINDING, READY NOVEMBER 25.

In the new edition there are added about 40 reproductions in facsimile of autographs of distinguished singers and instrumentalists, including Sarasate, Joachim, Sir Charles Hallé, Palerewsky, Stavenhagen, Henschel, Trebelli, Miss Macintyre, Jean Géraldy, &c. 4to, cloth elegant, emblematic design on cover, gilt edges, 6s. May also be had in a variety of fancy bindings.

SONGS and BALLADS of NORTHERN ENGLAND. Collected and edited by JOHN STOKOE. Harmonised and Arranged for Pianoforte by SAMUEL REAY, Mus. Bac. Oxon.

The object of the present series of parts is to present a comprehensive collection of Songs and Ballads of the "North Country," with accompanying melodies. The text of the Songs and Ballads has been carefully collated by the Editor, Mr. John Stokoe, with the most authoritative texts. The melodies have also been verified by him at the best known sources.

Handsomely bound in cloth gilt, for presentation, price 10s. 6d. net.

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED,

24, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C.

BLACKIE & SON'S STANDARD WORKS OF REFERENCE

New, Enlarged, and Cheaper Edition.

Just published, in 1 large vol., super royal 8vo, 1,334 pages, with 900 illustrations, cloth, price 12s. 6d.; library sheep, 17s. 6d.; half-russia, 20s.

Ogilvie's COMPREHENSIVE ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

This DICTIONARY has long been known as one of the most valuable works of reference in the English language. It is now issued, with a LARGE SUPPLEMENT of additional words and many VALUABLE APPENDICES, at the low price of 12s. 6d.

In 1 vol., fcap. 4to, 864 pages, containing over 80,000 entries, cloth, coloured edges, 5s.; half-roxburgh, 6s. 6d.; half-morocco, 9s.

A CONCISE DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Etymological and Pronouncing, Literary, Scientific, and Technical.

By CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.,

Editor of Ogilvie's "Imperial Dictionary," New Edition, "Blackie's Modern Cyclopaedia," &c.

"We can heartily recommend this neat and handy volume to all who want a copious and trustworthy English dictionary of reasonable dimensions."—Athenaeum.

In 4 vols., imperial 8vo, cloth, £5; or half-morocco, £6 6s.

THE IMPERIAL DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A Complete Encyclopædic Lexicon, Literary, Etymological, Scientific, Technological and Pronouncing.

By JOHN OGILVIE, LL.D.

New Edition, carefully Revised and greatly Augmented.

Edited by CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.

Illustrated by above 3,000 Engravings on Wood.

"So far as vocabulary and treatment are concerned, we should not wish for anything better than the new 'Imperial.' The etymology is clear and concise, and the illustrations are copious, appropriate and well executed."—Times.

"It is the best English lexicon of the time."—Spectator.

In 8 vols., square 8vo, cloth, 48s.; or half-morocco, 68s.

BLACKIE'S MODERN CYCLOPEDIA

Of Universal Information.

Edited by CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.

With Numerous Pictorial Illustrations and a Series of Maps.

"A model and a marvel of accurate information."—Spectator.

"Some handy form of encyclopædia has long been wanted. The information is succinctly given, sufficiently copious and strictly relevant."—Saturday Review.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

BLACKIE & SON'S

New Illustrated Story Books.

NEW BOOKS BY O. A. HENTY.

BERIC the BRITON: a Story of the Roman Invasion. By G. A. HENTY. With 12 Page Illustrations by W. Parkinson. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

"'Beric the Briton' is good all through. We are not aware that any one has given us quite so vigorous a picture of Britain in the days of the Roman Conquest"—Spectator.

IN GREEK WATERS: a Story of the Grecian War of Independence (1821-1827). By G. A. HENTY. With 12 Page Illustrations by W. S. Stacey, and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

"The story teems with incidents of an exciting nature, and will hold boys enthralled from the opening to the end."—Saturday Review.

CONDEMNED as a NIHILIST: a Story of Escape from Siberia. By G. A. HENTY. With 8 Page Illustrations by Walter Paget. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

"One of Mr. Henty's best stories, full of information, but also full of exciting incidents described without exaggeration."—Record.

ALSO BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Price 6s. each.

Price 5s. each.

The Dash for Khartoum.
Redskin and Cowboy.
By Light of Conquest.
By England's Aid.
With Lee in Virginia.
By Pike and Dyke.
The Lion of St. Mark.
Captain Bailey's Heir.
Bonnie Prince Charlie.
For the Temple.
The Young Carthaginian.
With Wolfe in Canada.
The Lion of the North.
With Clive in India.
In Freedom's Cause.
Through the Fray.
Under Drake's Flag.
True to the Old Flag.

Held Fast for England.
Maori and Settler.
One of the 25th.
In the Reign of Terror.
Orange and Green.
Bravest of the Brave.
A Final Reckoning.
The Cat of Bubastes.
For Name and Fame.
Dragon and the Raven.
St. George for England.
By Sheer Pluck.
Facing Death.

Chapter of Adventures. 3s. 6d.
Sturdy and Strong. 2s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY ROBERT LEIGHTON.

THE THIRSTY SWORD: a Story of the Norse Invasion of Scotland (1262-1263). By ROBERT LEIGHTON. With 8 Page Illustrations by Alfred Pearse, and a Map. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

"A stirring historical fiction There is a great deal of good work in 'The Thirsty Sword,' which has some striking characters and descriptions in it."—Spectator.

NEW BOOK BY ANNE BEALE.

THE HEIRESS of COURTLEROY. By ANNE BEALE. Author of "Squire Lisle's Bequest," "Queen of the May," &c. With 8 Page Illustrations by T. C. H. Castle. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 5s.

"This charming story."—Quiver.

NEW BOOK BY ANNIE E. ARMSTRONG.

A VERY ODD GIRL; or, Life at the Gabled Farm. By ANNIE E. ARMSTRONG. With 6 Page Illustrations by S. T. Dadd. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 5s. 6d.

"A very interesting and bright story for school girls."—University Correspondent.

NEW BOOK BY C. J. HYNÉ.

THE CAPTURED CRUISER; or, Two Years from Land. By C. J. HYNÉ. With 6 Page Illustrations by F. Brangwyn. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether a capital story and cleverly illustrated."—Saturday Review.

NEW BOOK BY EDGAR PICKERING.

AN OLD-TIME YARN. Containing the Adventures of Anthony Ingram and his Shipmates in the West Indies and Mexico with Hawkins and Drake. By EDGAR PICKERING. Illustrated by 6 Page Pictures drawn by Alfred Pearse. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

"The whole story is well told."—Journal of Education.

* * Blackie & Son's New Illustrated Catalogue of Books suitable for Presentation, School Prizes, Rewards, &c., with Synopsis of their Contents, sent post free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & COMPANY, LIMITED.

SEVENTH THOUSAND NOW READY.

ILLUSTRATED BY HUGH THOMSON.

THE BALLAD OF BEAU BROCADE,

AND OTHER POEMS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

By AUSTIN DOBSON.

With Fifty Illustrations by Hugh Thomson. Crown 8vo, 5s.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES."

MAN and the GLACIAL PERIOD. By G. FREDERICK WRIGHT, D.D., LL.D., Author of "The Ice Age in North America," &c. With an Appendix on "Tertiary Man," by Professor H. W. HAYNES. With 111 Illustrations and Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"This volume forms one of the 'International Scientific Series,' a collection of books which has largely aided the popular culture of science. It gives a very complete account of the great ice age, the nature, origin, and duration of which period has formed subject-matter for an immense amount of discussion in geological circles."

SANCHI and its REMAINS. A Full Description of the Ancient Buildings, Sculptures, and Inscriptions at Sanchi, near Bhillai, in Central India. With remarks on the evidence they supply as to the comparatively modern date of the Buddhism of Gotama, or Sakya Muni. By the Lieut. General FREDERICK CHARLES MAISEV, and an Introductory Note by Major-General Sir ALEX. CUNNINGHAM, K.C.I.E. Royal 4to, with 40 Full-page Plates, strongly bound, £2 10s.

NEW EDITION, REVISED by Professor RAY LANKESTER from EIGHTH GERMAN EDITION.

THE HISTORY of CREATION; or, the Development of the Earth and its Inhabitants by the Action of Natural Causes. A Popular Exposition of the Doctrine of Evolution. From the latest German Edition of ERNST HAECKEL. Translation Revised by Professor E. RAY LANKESTER. Fourth Edition, with numerous Illustrations, 2 vols., large post 8vo, 32s.

The new portions of the Work have been necessitated by the progress of knowledge since the appearance of the first English edition in 1876. They comprise an account of recent theories which have grown out of Darwin's great doctrine, and of many new results of investigation, &c.

NEW and IMPROVED EDITION.

LOMBARD STREET: a Description of the Money Market. By WALTER BAGEHOT. Tenth Edition, with Notes, bringing the Work up to the Present time, by E. JOHNSTONE. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HINDUSTANI IDIOMS. With Vocabulary and Explanatory Notes.

For the use of Candidates for the Higher Standard. By Colonel A. N. PHILLIPS, late Indian Army. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"In the hope of rendering assistance to those who wish to learn Hindustani as they would learn a European language, idiomatically and as spoken by the natives, instead of merely stringing together a number of words in slavish imitation of the English idiom, I offer this little book to the public as the result of many years spent in India in active work amongst the natives of that country."—Extract from PREFACE.

PAST and FUTURE: Being a Second Edition, with Addenda, of "SATURN'S KINGDOM; or, FABLE and FACT." By CHARLES MOORE JESSOP, M.B.C.P. Lond., Deputy Surgeon-General H.M.'s Forces (retired). Crown 8vo, 5s.

SPECTATOR.—"The 'Ape and Man' question is treated with lucidity, a quality noticeable in the book, and is extremely productive of reflection. Mr. Jessop speaks of gaps in biological history, and this chapter, well-reasoned as it is, 'inferentially' hints at one between apes and talking men."

BRADFORD OBSERVER.—"The book is an epitome, by a clear-headed man, of the chief results of the modern scientific spirit."

Crown 8vo, 2s.

THE CHRIST in the TWO TESTAMENTS. By ADAM CLARKE ROWLEY, M.A., Vicar of Sutterton, Lincolnshire. With an Introduction by the LORD BISHOP OF LINCOLN.

RECENT POETRY.

ESTHER, LOVE LYRICS, and NATALIA'S RESURRECTION. By WILFRID SCAWEN BLUNT. Elzevir 8vo, 7s. 6d.

TABLET.—"Mr. Wilfrid Scawen Blunt's new poems show all the old mastery of gentle and pathetic thought, with the mastery of form which those others also possessed."

WEEKLY REGISTER.—"A new volume from Mr. Wilfrid Blunt is an event to all lovers of poetry."

SOMNIA MEDICI. Three Series. By JOHN A. GOODCHILD. Small crown 8vo. Second Edition. 3s. 6d. each.

"I judge these poems to be the work of one who is far more than a follower of my own."—TENNYSON.

LITERARY WORLD.—"The chief feature of these poems is their strength. Dr. Goodchild is a master of rhyme and melody; but he is most at home in subjects of a weird and mystic kind, and in these he fairly startles the reader in his recognition of his great poetical power."

AN ODE to the SUN, and other Poems. By R. WARWICK BOND, Author of "The Immortals, and other Poems." Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CHURCH TIMES.—"The author of 'The Immortals,' who in his earlier work gave promise of poetic attainment, gives further proof in this volume of his undoubted felicity of expression and genuine feeling."

EARLY POEMS. By Sir REGINALD JOHN CUST. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.
FROM HEART to HEART. By the Author of "Fraternity." Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

CARMELA; or the Plague of Naples. Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

MORNING POST.—"A work of considerable promise."

THE PROFESSOR, and other Poems. By the Author of "Moods," &c. Small crown 8vo, 5s.

LITERARY WORLD.—"The poems show a large measure of insight, and a genuine sympathy with many aspects of thought and feeling."

ESSAYS in VERSE. By MAY SINCLAIR. Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHARING CROSS ROAD.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

Buyers of Christmas Presents and School Prizes are requested to ask the Bookseller to show them the New Books Published by the RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

If the Bookseller should not have them in Stock, any of the Books in this List will be sent, by parcel post, direct from the Publisher, Mr. R. BRADSHAW, 56, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, on receipt of the published price. Cheques and Money Orders to be made payable to Mr. F. G. SARGENT (Cashier). CATALOGUES GRATIS.

HENRY MARTYN, Saint and Scholar. By George Smith, C.I.E., LL.D., Author of "Life of William Carey," &c. With Portrait and Illustrations ... 10/6
 "Every one must be the better for reading a life like this."—Church Times.
 "It should find a place on every minister's bookshelf and in every church library."—Independent.

VICTORIA, R.I.: Her Life and Reign. By Dr. Macaulay. With many Engravings. Handsome cloth, gilt edges ... 10/6

LONDON PICTURES. Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. Profusely Illustrated. Handsome cloth, gilt edges ... 8/-

SCOTTISH PICTURES. Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By S. G. GREEN, D.D. Profusely Illustrated. New and Revised Edition. Handsome cloth, gilt edges ... 8/-

IRISH PICTURES. Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By Richard LOVETT, M.A. With Illustrations. Handsome cloth, gilt edges ... 8/-

WELSH PICTURES. Drawn with Pen and Pencil. Edited by RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. With 72 Illustrations. Handsome cloth, gilt edges. Just published ... 8/-

SEA PICTURES. Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By James MACAULAY, M.A., M.D. Profusely Illustrated. Handsome cloth, gilt edges ... 8/-

"THOSE HOLY FIELDS" Palestine Illustrated by Pen and Pencil. By Dr. S. MANNING. Many Engravings. Handsome cloth, gilt edges ... 8/-

UNITED STATES PICTURES. Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By R. LOVETT, M.A. With a Map and more than 100 Engravings. Handsome cloth, gilt ... 8/-

CANADIAN PICTURES. Drawn with Pen and Pencil. By the MARQUIS OF LORNE. With numerous fine Engravings by E. Whymper. Handsome cloth, gilt ... 8/-

INDOOR GAMES and RECREATIONS for BOYS. Edited by G. A. HUTCHISON. Illustrated with hundreds of Engravings. Cloth, gilt edges ... 8/-

THE BOYS OWN ANNUAL for 1892. 832 pages of Popular Illustrated Reading for Boys and Young Men. Handsome cloth ... 8/-

THE GIRL'S OWN INDOOR BOOK. Edited by Charles Peters. With over 150 Illustrations. Cloth, gilt edges ... 8/-

THE GIRL'S OWN ANNUAL for 1892. 832 pages of Interesting Reading and Pictures for Girls and Young Women. Handsome cloth ... 8/-

JAMES GILMOUR of MONGOLIA. His Diaries, Letters, and Reports. Edited and Arranged by RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. With Portraits, &c. ... 7/6

THE LEISURE HOUR ANNUAL for 1892. 860 pages of Popular and Useful Reading. With many Illustrations. Handsome cloth ... 7/6

THE SUNDAY AT HOME ANNUAL for 1892. 828 pages of Interesting Sunday Reading and Pictures. Handsome cloth ... 7/6

HEROES of the GOODWIN SANDS. By the Rev. Thomas STANLEY TREANOR, M.A., Chaplain of the Missions to Seamen, Deal. With Illustrations. SECOND EDITION now ready ... 3/6

"A book of most engrossing interest, and as stimulating as it is readable."—Record.
 "People are waking up now to some sense of the debt we owe to those whose trade, we may almost say, is martyrdom: and this book has come at a seasonable time."—Manchester Guardian.

"An admirable Christmas gift."—Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette.
THE STORY of UGANDA, and the Victoria Nyanza Mission. By S. G. STOCK. With Illustrations ... 3/6

"The story of Uganda has been partially told by many persons in many ways. But Miss Stock has gathered the fragments together and made of them a continuous narrative. This narrative comes down to the beginning of this year."—Guardian.

TALES FOR THE TWILIGHT HOUR.

1. OUR STREET. By Leslie Keith, Author of "Of all Degrees." "Great Grandmother Severn," &c. Illustrated ... 3/-

"A capital sketch of life in a quiet street."—Spectator.
 "It is delightfully natural and homely."—Christian World.

2. THE SHADOW on the HEARTH. By Rev. T. S. Millington, M.A., Author of "Straight to the Mark," "No Choice," &c. Illustrated ... 3/-

"An excellent tale of life and experience in a rural parish."—Glasgow Herald.
 "A really interesting tale for family reading."—Daily Telegraph.

3. HALF-BROTHERS. By Hesba Stretton, Author of "Jessica's First Prayer," "Cobwebs and Cables," &c. ... 5/-

"An acceptable and thoroughly pleasant work in the author's best style."—Daily Telegraph.
 "It is full of adventure, and shows that this favourite author has lost none of her skill."—British Weekly.

A large number of attractively bound books have been recently published by the Society at prices from 6d. to 2s. 6d. each.

PUBLISHED BY THE

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY, 56, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON;

AND SOLD BY ALL BOOKSELLERS.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, paper covers, 2s. 6d. net; cloth, 3s. net.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO PETER and THE REVELATION OF PETER.

Two Lectures on the Newly Recovered Fragments, together with the Original Texts.

By J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D.,

Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Christ's College;

And MONTAGUE RHODES JAMES, M.A.,

Fellow and Dean of King's College.

THE COLLECTED MATHEMATICAL PAPERS of ARTHUR

CAYLEY, M.A., F.R.S., Sadlerian Professor of Pure Mathematics in the University of Cambridge. Vol. V. Demy 4to, 23s. (To be completed in 10 vols.) [Immediately.]

NEW VOLUME of the CAMBRIDGE BIBLE for SCHOOLS and COLLEGES.

THE BOOKS of EZRA and NEHEMIAH. By the Rev.

H. E. RYLE, B.D., Hulsean Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge.

[Nearly ready.]

NEW VOLUME of the SMALLER CAMBRIDGE BIBLE for SCHOOLS.

THE BOOK of JUDGES. By J. S. Black, M.A. With

Map. 1s.

[Now ready.]

THE CAMBRIDGE MILTON FOR SCHOOLS.

With Introductions, Notes, and Indexes, by A. WILSON VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge.

COMUS and ARCADES. 3s.

ODE on the NATIVITY, L'ALLEGRO, IL PENSEROSO, and LYCIDAS. 2s. 6d.

SAMSON AGONISTES 2s. 6d.

PARADISE LOST. Books XI. & XII. 2s. Books V. & VI. 2s.

BOOKS I. and II. is the press.

"The Eleventh Book of 'Paradise Lost' has been edited in a masterly style for the 'Pitt Press Series' by Mr. A. Wilson Verity. Our gratitude for the excellent edition before us is accompanied by a lively hope that we shall in due course receive the rest of the work annotated by the same able pen."—Guardian, September 14th, 1892.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

TO THE CLERGY FOR LOCALISATION.

THE PENNY POST.

Monthly, 32 pages, price One Penny.

CONTAINS—Complete Serial Stories—Descriptive Articles—Miscellaneous Articles—Notes from and on Books—Music—Poetry—Fiction.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

FORTY-SECOND YEAR OF ISSUE.

EXTENSIVELY LOCALISED IN COUNTRY PARISHES.

Specimen Number, together with Notes on Localising this Magazine, on receipt of 1d. Stamp

NEW VOLUME FOR 1892 NOW READY.

232 pp., 8vo, sewn in wrapper, 1s., post free, 1s. 2d.; neatly bound in cloth, 2s., post free, 2s. 1d.

Publishers' cloth cases for binding, 1s.

"The Penny Post," an old and trusted friend, continues its wholesome work."
 "A really wonderful pennyworth."—Church Review.
 "The Penny Post" excels itself this month. Innumerable are the good things for which Churchmen are indebted to this magazine, which we may well call the oldest and most popular of Church miscellanies."—Church Review.
 "The Penny Post" is a sound Church magazine, cheap and readable, and in strong contrast to the many un denominational, wishy-washy publications circulated amongst our Church-people by Clergymen of the 'safe' school."—Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette.
 "This favourite periodical well fulfils its title as a magazine for all readers."—English Churchman.

PARKER & CO., 6, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, LONDON.

STRANGE YET TRUE:

Interesting and Memorable Stories Retold.

By JAMES MACAULAY, M.D., Editor of the Leisure Hour, &c.

With many Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"Among the five-and-twenty true stories in Dr. Macaulay's book, none are trifling, and many are of the highest interest."—Athenaeum.

JAMES NISBET & CO., 21, BERNERS STREET, W.

EDWARD STANFORD'S PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready, at all the Libraries and the leading Booksellers, medium 8vo, cloth, price 21s.; or bound in vellum, gilt top, 31s. 6d.

SHORT STALKS;

Or, HUNTING CAMPS, NORTH, SOUTH, EAST, AND WEST.

By EDWARD NORTH BUXTON.

With numerous fine Illustrations by Whymper, Lodge, Wolf, and others.

Prospectus, with Specimens of the Illustrations, free on application.

From THE TIMES, December 2, 1892:—

"It is some time since we have come across so pleasant and attractive a record of sport, travel, and adventure as this. To the general public Mr. Buxton is well known as an active public man, who has been Chairman of the London School Board, High Sheriff of his county, and Member of Parliament for one of its divisions. He here appears not in any of these capacities, but as a keen sportsman and traveller, who has employed his rare and brief holidays as Englishmen love to employ them, in rapid travel and the pursuit of wild game in the remote districts of two hemispheres. But it is because he is something more than a sportsman that his book is so attractive. It is the work of a man who sees things in their true proportion, and, spending his life in the active discharge of such public and private duties as fall to his lot, takes his holidays kindly and cheerily and spends them not unprofitably. We should add that the illustrations of the volume are for the most part excellent."

Now ready, large post 4to, cloth, price 10s. 6d. net.

THE FAYUM AND LAKE MÖERIS.

By Major R. H. BROWN, R.E., Inspector-General of Irrigation, Upper Egypt.

With a Prefatory Note by Colonel Sir COLIN SCOTT-MONCRIEFF, K.C.M.G., C.S.I., Illustrations from Photographs by the Author, and a New Map of the Fayum.

"The book is well illustrated, excellently got up, and forms a valuable addition to the knowledge which we possess of one of the most interesting of all lands."—Times.

Just published, medium 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d. net.

CASTOROLOGIA;

Or, the History and Traditions of the Canadian Beaver.

By HORACE T. MARTIN, F.Z.S., &c.

With a number of Illustrations.

"Mr. Martin seems to have spared no pains in hunting up information, and in reproducing the illustrations of old and rare books, and the result is a most tasteful volume, full of information, and eminently readable."—Manchester Guardian.

Crown 8vo, wrapper, price 1s.; per post, 1s. 1d.

HOW TO PACK, HOW TO DRESS, HOW TO KEEP WELL, ON A WINTER TOUR IN INDIA.

By the Hon. Mrs. NEVILLE LYTTELTON.

"Will be found of great use."—Overland Mail.

"An ideal instance of good advice 'in a nutshell.'"—Full Mall Gazette.

Just published, SECOND EDITION, large post 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

TANGANYIKA: Eleven Years in Central Africa.

By EDWARD COODE HORE, Master Mariner.

With Portrait, Maps, and a number of Original Illustrations.

"A simple, straightforward narrative of missionary enterprise and endeavour, and a vivid picture of actual life in Central Africa."—Times.

Just published, crown 8vo, boards, price 7s.

GUIDE TO PROMOTION:

An Aid to Officers of all Arms in Preparing for Examination in Regimental Duties.

Part I. RANKS of LIEUTENANT, CAPTAIN, and MAJOR.

By Lieutenant-Colonel Sisson C. Pratt (late R.A.),

Author of "Military Law: its Procedure and Practice," &c.

"A new Guide to Promotion on the lines of that which under Colonel Bannatyne's editorship held its own for years against all rivals. It was a happy idea to base this Guide on so excellent a model, and it is pretty certain to meet with success."—Army and Navy Gazette.

Demy 8vo, wrapper, price 1s.; by post, 1s. 1d.

JUPITER AND HIS SYSTEM.

By ELLEN MARY CLERKE.

"Miss Clerke has prepared a pamphlet in which our present knowledge concerning Jupiter and the chief problems at present presented for solution are concisely set out with an absence of technicality and, at the same time, clear intelligibility that are to be warmly commended."—Morning Post.

POPULAR SCIENTIFIC BOOKS.

By ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY (Mrs. FISHER).

THE FAIRYLAND of SCIENCE. Twenty-fourth Thousand, with 74 Illustrations, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 6s.; calf, marble edges, 11s.

"Her methods of presenting certain facts and phenomena difficult to grasp are most original and striking, and admirably calculated to enable the reader to realise the truth.... It deserves to take a permanent place in the literature of youth."—Times.

THROUGH MAGIC GLASSES, and other Lectures.

(A Sequel to "The Fairyland of Science.") With nearly 100 Illustrations, cloth gilt, gilt edges, price 6s.; bound in calf, 11s.

"A sequel to that very delightful book, 'The Fairyland of Science,' and deals with the marvels revealed by the telescope, the microscope, and the photographic camera. For young people of scientific tastes a better book could not be found than this."—Saturday Review.

LIFE and HER CHILDREN: Glimpses of Animal

Life, from the Amoeba to the Insects. Thirteenth Thousand, with upwards of 100 Illustrations, cloth gilt, gilt edges, price 6s.; calf extra, 11s.

"The work forms a charming introduction to the study of zoology—the science of living things—which, we trust, will find its way into many hands."—Nature.

WINNERS in LIFE'S RACE; or, the Great Back-boned Family. With Numerous Illustrations, cloth extra, gilt edges, price 8s. 6d.; calf extra, 11s.

"We can conceive no better gift-book than this."—Spectator.

A SHORT HISTORY of NATURAL SCIENCE; and of the Progress of Discovery, from the Time of the Greeks to the Present Time. Fourth Edition, Revised and Rearranged, with 77 Illustrations, cloth gilt, gilt edges, price 8s. 6d.; calf extra, 11s.

"It is an admirable book, written with a fulness and accuracy which is rarely to be found in compendiums of this sort. Any one who reads carefully to the end will have got a fair general notion of the vastness of physical science, and the means of pursuing more completely any special region of it which may be desired. It is an excellent book for young people, and one not to be despised by their elders."—Guardian.

ANIMALS from the LIFE. 255 Coloured Illustrations, Drawn by HEINRICH LEUTEMANN. With descriptive Letterpress. Edited by ARABELLA B. BUCKLEY. Crown 8vo, handsome cloth binding, price 10s. 6d.

STANFORD'S RECENT ATLASES.

Dedicated by permission to HER MAJESTY the QUEEN.

STANFORD'S LONDON ATLAS of UNIVERSAL GEOGRAPHY, Exhibiting the Physical and Political Divisions of the Various Countries of the World. 90 Maps, with a List of Names, with Latitudes and Longitudes. Imperial folio, half-morocco extra, with Thumb Index, price £12; morocco, £15. Size, when shut, 16 in. by 23 in.

"In respect of its wealth of maps of the British Empire all over the world, it is probably unsurpassed."—Times.

QUARTO EDITION, Revised and Enlarged.

STANFORD'S LONDON ATLAS of UNIVERSAL GEOGRAPHY, containing 48 Coloured Maps, carefully drawn and beautifully engraved on Steel and Copper Plates, and a List of Names, with Latitudes and Longitudes. Fourth Edition, imperial 4to, half-morocco, cloth sides, gilt edges, price 30s. Size, when shut, 12 in. by 16 in.

"We have used it constantly for years, and we have never found it surpassed for the combined merits of handiness, cheapness, accuracy, and clearness."—Saturday Review.

STANFORD'S GUINEA ATLAS of MODERN

GEOGRAPHY, containing 38 Maps, carefully drawn and beautifully engraved on Copper Plates, coloured to show the latest Political Boundaries and the Leading Physical Features; also an Alphabetical List of over 30,000 names, with Latitudes and Longitudes. Handsomely bound, gilt edges, price 21s. Size when shut, 8½ in. by 12 in.

"We have found that it is as good as it looks. Higher praise we could not award it."—Journal of Education.

STANFORD'S HANDY ATLAS of MODERN

GEOGRAPHY, consisting of 30 Maps, each 14 in. by 11 in., engraved in the best style, giving the Leading Physical Features, and coloured to show the latest Political Boundaries; also an Alphabetical List of over 30,000 names, with Latitudes and Longitudes. Bound in cloth, price 10s. 6d. Size when shut, 7½ in. by 12 in.

"Handsomely and durably bound, beautifully printed on fine paper, and embodying the results of the latest geographical researches, this inexpensive atlas is wholly admirable."—European Mail.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 and 27, Cockspur Street, Charing Cross, S.W.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

EDNA LYALL'S NOVELS.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, 6s.

DONOVAN.
WE TWO.

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.
KNIGHT-ERRANT.

WON BY WAITING.
A HARDY NORSEMAN.

HURST & BLACKETT'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, bevelled boards, each 3s. 6d.

PART of the PROPERTY. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

CASPAR BROOKE'S DAUGHTER. By ADELINE SERGEANT.

ONE REASON WHY. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

A CROOKED PATH. By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

The AWAKENING of MARY FENWICK
By BEATRICE WHITBY.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS. By MABEL HART.

MAHME NOUSIE. By G. MANVILLE FENN.

HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN."

MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE. By M. E. LE CLERC.

A MARCH in the RANKS. By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

NINETTE. By the AUTHOR of "VERA," "BLUE ROSES," &c.

THE IDES of MARCH. By G. M. ROBINS.

Each Work Complete in 1 vol., price 5s., Illustrated by Sir J. E. MILLAIS, Sir JOHN GILBERT, HOLMAN HUNT, JOHN LEECH, BIRKET FOSTER, LASLETT POTT, JOHN TENNIEL, E. J. POYNTER, F. SANDYS, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

Of Cheap Editions of Popular Modern Works.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX."

John Halifax, Gentleman.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women.
A Life for a Life.
Nothing New.
The Woman's Kingdom.
Mistress and Maid.

Christian's Mistake.
A Noble Life.
Hannah.
The Unkind Word.
A Brave Lady.
Studies from Life.
Young Mrs. Jardine.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SAM SLICK."

Nature and Human Nature.
Wise Saws and Modern Instances.
The Old Judge; or, Life in a Colony.
Traits of American Humour.
The Americans at Home.

BY ELIOT WarBURTON.

The Crescent and the Cross. | Darien.

BY F. W. ROBINSON.

Grandmother's Money. | No Church.

BY JULIA KAVANAGH.

Nathalie. | Adele.

BY AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

Barbara's History. | Lord Brackenbury.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

Adam Graeme.
Laird of Norlaw.
Agnes.
Life of Irving.

A Rose in June.
Phoebe, Junior.
It was a Lover and his Lass.

BY DR. GEORGE MACDONALD.

David Elginbrod.
Robert Falconer.

Alec Forbes.
Sir Gibbie.

BY JOHN CORDY JEAFFRESON.

The Real Lord Byron. | A Book about Doctors.

BY VARIOUS AUTHORS.

Through the Long Night. By Mrs. E. LYNN LINTON.
Margaret and her Bridesmaids.
The Valley of a Hundred Fires.
Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. NORTON.
St. Olave's. By the Author of "Janita's Cross."
My Little Lady. By E. F. POYNTER.
Les Misérables. By VICTOR HUGO.
Annals of an Eventful Life. By Dr. DASENT.
Life of Marie Antoinette. By Prof. C. D. YONGE.
Sir Bernard Burke's Family Romance.
Freer's Life of Jeanne D'Albret.
Burke's Romance of the Forum.
Dixon's New America.
Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb.
Cardinal Wiseman's Popes.
The Englishwoman in Italy. By Mrs. GRETTON.

Messrs. Henry & Co.'s Announcements.

LONDON: HENRY & CO. ROYAL STREET

CHAPMAN & HALL'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW EDITIONS.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

The ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY EDITION. 30 vols., demy 8vo, 10s. per volume, with the Original Illustrations.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

The LIBRARY EDITION. 30 vols., crown 8vo, 8s. per volume, with the Original Illustrations.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

The POPULAR LIBRARY EDITION. 30 vols., crown 8vo, 4s. per volume, with Illustrations selected from the Household Edition.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

The HOUSEHOLD EDITION. 21 vols., crown 4to, 2s. to 5s. per volume, with 835 Illustrations.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

The CROWN EDITION. 17 vols., large crown 8vo, 5s. per volume, with all the Original Illustrations.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

The CABINET EDITION. 32 vols., small fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d. per volume. Each volume contains 8 Illustrations.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

The PICTORIAL EDITION. 17 vols., royal 8vo, 3s. 6d. per volume, with over 500 Illustrations from the Household Edition.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

The ORIGINAL EDITIONS. In demy 8vo.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

The CHARLES DICKENS EDITION. 21 vols., crown 8vo, 2s to 4s. per volume. Each volume contains 8 Illustrations.

NOW ISSUING IN MONTHLY VOLUMES.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

The HALF-CROWN EDITION. With all the Original Illustrations. Ten Volumes are now ready.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S WORKS.

The LIBRARY EDITION. 34 vols., demy 8vo, 9s. per volume.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S WORKS.

The ASHBURTON EDITION. 20 vols., demy 8vo, 8s. per volume.

THOMAS CARLYLE'S WORKS.

PEOPLE'S EDITION. 37 vols., small crown 8vo, 1s. per volume.

GEORGE MEREDITH'S WORKS.

NEW and UNIFORM EDITION. 11 vols., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. per volume.

GEORGE MEREDITH'S WORKS.

SIX-SHILLING EDITION. 11 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. per volume.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S WORKS.

The CHRONICLES of BARSETSHIRE. 8 vols., large crown 8vo, 6s. per volume.

W. H. MALLOCK.

A HUMAN DOCUMENT. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. [This day.]

HUMAN ORIGINS. Evidence from History and Science. By SAMUEL LAING. Demy 8vo. [Seventh Thousand.]

PROBLEMS of the FUTURE. By SAMUEL LAING. Demy 8vo. [Ninth Thousand.]

MODERN SCIENCE and MODERN THOUGHT. By SAMUEL LAING. Demy 8vo. [Thirteenth Thousand.]

A MODERN ZOROASTRIAN. By SAMUEL LAING. Demy 8vo. [Sixth Thousand.]

AN ENGLISHMAN in PARIS: Notes and Recollections during the reign of Louis Philippe and the Empire. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 18s. [Seventh Thousand.]

THE NATURALIST in LA PLATA. With numerous Illustrations. By W. H. HUDSON. Demy 8vo, 16s. [Second Edition.]

SHOOTING and SALMON FISHING: Hints and Recollections. By AUGUSTUS GRIMBLE. Demy 8vo, 16s. [Second Edition.]

THE RACEHORSE in TRAINING. By WILLIAM DAY. Demy 8vo, 9s. [Seventh Edition.]

FROM PEKIN to CALAIS. By H. DE WINDT. Numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Second Edition.]

LIFE of the Right Hon. W. E. FORSTER. By T. WEMYSS REID. Demy 8vo, 16s. 6d. [Fifth Edition.]

THE HIGHLANDS of CENTRAL INDIA: Natural History and Sport. By Capt. FORSYTH. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. [Second Edition.]

LIFE in ANCIENT EGYPT and ASSYRIA. By G. MASPERO. 188 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Third Thousand.]

RECOLLECTIONS of MY YOUTH. By ERNEST RENAN. REVISED by Madame RENAN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Second Edition.]

THE STORY of an AFRICAN FARM. By OLIVE SCHREINER. Crown 8vo, 1s. [New Edition.]

SPORT. By BROMLEY-DAVENPORT. With numerous Illustrations by General CREALOCK. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Cheap Edition.]

LOG-BOOK of a FISHERMAN and ZOOLOGIST. By FRANK BUCKLAND. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Seventh Thousand.]

OFFICIAL HANDBOOK of the NATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL for COOKERY. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Twenty-first Thousand.]

THE PYTCHLEY BOOK of REFINED COOKERY. By Major L—. Crown 8vo, 8s. [Fourth Thousand.]

HILDA'S "WHERE IS IT?" of RECIPES. By Miss H. J. DUCKETT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Fourth Thousand.]

FOOD. By Prof. CHURCH. New and Enlarged Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. (South Kensington Museum Handbook). [This day.]

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons' BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS.

ACROSS FRANCE in a CARAVAN.

Being some Account of a Journey from Bordeaux to Genoa in the "Escargot," taken in the Winter 1888-90. By the Author of "A Day of My Life at Eton." With 50 Illustrations by John Wallace, after Sketches by the Author, and a Map. Demy 8vo, 15s.

VOYAGE of the NYANZA, R.N.Y.C.

Being the Record of a Three Years' Cruise in a Schooner Yacht in the Atlantic and Pacific, and her subsequent Shipwreck. By J. CUMMING DEWAR, late Captain King's Dragoon Guards and 11th Prince Albert's Hussars. With 2 Autogravures, numerous Full-page and other Illustrations and a Map. Demy 8vo, 21s.

CHINESE STORIES. By Robert K.

DOUGLAS. With numerous Illustrations by Parkinson, Forester, and others. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

COLUMBA: a Drama. By John

HUNTLEY SKRINE, Warden of Glenalmond, Author of "A Memory of Edward Thring." Fcap. 4to, 6s.

WITHIN an HOUR of LONDON TOWN.

AMONG WILD BIRDS and their HAUNTS. By "A SON of the MARSHES," Author of "On Surrey Hills." Edited by J. A. OWEN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ANNALS of a FISHING VILLAGE.

By the SAME AUTHOR. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s.

MERIDIANA: Noontide Essays. By

Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P., F.S.A., &c. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS. Cheap

Edition. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo. ADAM EDE 3s. 6d.—THE MILL on the FLOSS. 3s. 6d.—FELIX HOLT. 3s. 6d.—SCENES of CLERICAL LIFE. 3s.—SILAS MARNER. 2s. 6d.—ROMOLA. 3s. 6d.—DANIEL DERONDA. 7s. 6d.—MIDDLEMARCH. 7s. 6d. Handsomely bound in half-calf, 50s.; half-Persian morocco, gilt top, 52s.; half-Turkey morocco, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

GEORGE ELIOT'S LIFE. 7s. 6d.

GEORGE ELIOT'S LIFE and WORKS.

Cabinet Edition. Complete in 24 Volumes, price £6. Each Volume, price 5s., may be had separately; also to be had handsomely bound in half and full calf.

GODS and HEROES; or, The Kingdom of Jupiter. By R. E. FRANCHILLON. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

SELECTIONS from the POEMS of JEANIE MORISON. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED BY SIR NOEL PATON.

LAYS of the SCOTTISH CAVALIERS, and other Poems. By Professor AYTOUN, D.C.L. Small 4to, gilt, cloth, 21s.

THE BOOK-HUNTER. By John Hill

BURTON, Author of "The History of Scotland," "The Scot Abroad." New Edition. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

BON GAULTIER'S BALLADS.

Fifteenth Edition. Illustrated by Doyle, Leech, and Crowquill. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

TALES from "BLACKWOOD." Third

Series. Complete in 6 vols., bound in extra cloth, 15s.; roxburghie, 21s.; half-calf, 25s.; half-morocco, 28s.

TRAVEL, ADVENTURE, and SPORT, from "BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE." Complete in 6 vols. Handsomely bound in cloth, 15s.; and in half-calf, 25s.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

JAMES R. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE AMERICAN ITALY."

IN the LEVANT. By Charles Dudley Warner, Author of "As We Were Saying," &c. With Portrait, 25 Photogravures, and Decorative Head-piece and Initials. 2 vols., large 8vo, cloth, extra gilt tops, 21s. This day.

Richly Illustrated, large 8vo, cloth extra, gilt tops, 16s.

THE ARMIES of TO-DAY. A Description of the Armies of the Leading Nations at the Present Time. By General Viscount WOLSELEY, Brigadier-General WESLEY MERRITT, U.S.A., and others. [This day.]

WILLIAM BELL SCOTT.

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL NOTES of the LIFE of WILLIAM BELL SCOTT, H.R.S.A., LL.D., and Notices of his Artistic and Poetic Circle of Friends, 1830 to 1882. Edited by W. MINTO. Illustrated by Etchings by Himself, and Reproductions of Sketches by Himself and Friends. 2 vols., large 8vo, cloth extra, 32s.

Large 8vo, cloth ornamental, gilt tops, 18s.

THE GREAT STREETS of the WORLD. By Andrew LANG and others. With about 100 Illustrations. [Immediately.]

ON CANADA'S FRONTIER: Sketches of History, Sport, and Adventure; and of the Indians, Missionaries, Fur-traders, and Newer Settlers of Western Canada. By JULIAN RALPH. 8vo, cloth ornamental, gilt tops, 10s. 6d. [Immediately.]

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A NEW ENGLAND NUN."

JANE FIELD: a Novel. By Mary E. Wilkins, Author of "Young Lucretia, and other Stories," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

UNIFORM with "A GROUP of NOBLE DAMES." By the SAME AUTHOR.

TESS of the D'URBERVILLES: a Pure Woman Faithfully Presented. By THOMAS HARDY. With Portrait and New Preface. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [SEVENTEENTH THOUSAND.]

Now Published for the First Time in One Volume.

PETER IBBETSON: a Novel. By George du Maurier. Illustrated with over 80 Drawings by the Author. Imperial 16mo, cloth ornamental, gilt tops, 6s.

STANDARD WORKS.

STUDIES in CHAUCER: his Life and Writings. By Professor THOMAS R. LOUNSBURY. With a Portrait of Chaucer. In 3 vols., 8vo, cloth extra, 42s.

TIMES.—"Will be invaluable to all serious students of English literature."

SIBERIA and the EXILE SYSTEM. By George KENNAN. Profusely Illustrated. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, uncut, gilt tops, 32s.

"I say that this book is one of those few which make epochs in literature. Such books appear but once or twice in a generation; and Mr. Kennan's is undoubtedly one that will leave one of the deepest marks."—STEPNIAN, in the Graphic.

ESSAYS and CRITICISMS. By St. George Mivart, F.R.S. 2 vols., demy 8vo, buckram, 32s.

"Ample store of reading for all tastes, with the one note upon all of candour, reverence, and vigour."—Christian Leader.

PHARAOHS, FELLAHS, and EXPLORERS. By AMELIA B. EDWARDS. Profusely Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, ornamental, 18s.

"Readers who, without being professed Egyptologists, are fascinated by a subject which never relaxes its hold on those who have once yielded to its spell, cannot but be grateful to Miss Edwards for summarising the results of the most recent inquiries and discoveries in a form at once popular, attractive, and adequate. The work is copiously illustrated from various authentic sources."—Times.

JAPONICA. By Sir Edwin Arnold, M.A., K.C.I.E., C.S.I. With Illustrations by Robert Blum. 8vo, cloth, ornamental, 15s.

"A whole year's dream among the islands of the East."—Athenaeum.

THE SIEGE of LUCKNOW: a Diary. By the Honourable Lady INGLIS. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

"A noble record of one of the most heroic deeds of history."—Spectator.

STUDIES in the WAGNERIAN DRAMA. By HENRY E. KREHBIEL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"The book is at once intelligent and readable.....It presents the subject of which it treats in a nutshell."—Athenaeum.

FOR THE CHICAGO EXHIBITION.

KING'S HANDBOOK of the UNITED STATES. With over 2,600 Illustrations and 51 Coloured Maps. 940 pages, 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.
"The most complete, correct, and at the same time condensed epitome of the United States which has ever been issued." General JOHN C. NEW, Consul-General of the United States in London.

A List of recent Books suitable for Christmas Presents on application.

LONDON: JAMES R. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & CO., 45, ALBEMARLE STREET.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Two New Serial Stories commence in the January issue of THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

"DIANA TEMPEST,"

By MARY CHOLMONDELEY, Author of "The Danvers Jewels"; and
"THE ROMANCE OF REGINALD GRAHAM,"
By A NEW WRITER.

NOW READY.

RED-LETTER DAYS of MY LIFE.

By CORNELIA A. H. CROSSE. 2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.

"The author has had opportunities of meeting and studying many distinguished people, and she has made good use thereof. Those who enjoy the literature of anecdote will peruse this work with unabated zest and satisfaction. They will find the volumes full of agreeable diversion, apart from the light they tend to throw upon the literary, artistic, and social history of the middle decades of this reign."—Globe.

NOW READY.

MEMOIRS of EIGHTY YEARS.

By GORDON HAKE. Including Recollections and Anecdotes of many Eminent Persons. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.

"The retrospect of these eventful eighty years is full of piquant variety. Dr. Hake has seen life in very different aspects, and has been familiar with many eminent men. He is a remarkably shrewd analyst of character; consequently all his personal sketches are effective, and some are delightfully satirical."—Saturday Review.

NOW READY.

THE LIFE of JOHN LINNELL.

By ALFRED T. STORY. With Numerous Illustrations from Paintings or Sketches by Linnell. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

"Will not fail in interest to any Englishman, whether he care about art or not."—Saturday Review.
"No one can rise from its perusal without feeling mentally braced and strengthened."—Observer.
"A perfect treasury of anecdotes."—Daily Telegraph.
"Will be valuable to all who wish to inform themselves of the history of a great artist."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH."

GOD'S FOOL. By Maarten

MAARTENS, Author of "An Old Maid's Love," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A very able and, what is perhaps more rare, a moving psychological study. From first to last nothing but compassion is excited by the ill-starred Elias Lossell, shut out, as the result of an accident, from communication with the world around him; and yet, within the narrow bounds of a half-deadened mind, capable of generous as well as emotional feeling."—Morning Post.

FOURTH EDITION.

MRS. BLIGH. By Rhoda Brough-

TON, Author of "Nancy," "Cometh up as a Flower," 1 vol., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

WHEN CHARLES the FIRST was KING. By J. S. FLETCHER. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ELSA."

THE STEP-SISTERS. By E.

McQUEEN GRAY. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NEW EDITIONS.

CLEVEDEN. By Mary Linskill

Author of "Between the Heather and the Northern Sea," and "The Haven Under the Hill." 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

FOR LILIAS. By Rosa Nouchette

CAREY, Author of "Wee Wife," "Nellie's Memo-ries," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Just published, SECOND EDITION, REVISED and ENLARGED, 2 vols.

In 3 Parts, demy 8vo, cloth, with Maps and Illustrations, 42s.
ITALY and HER INVADERS. By THOMAS HODGKIN, D.C.L., Litt.D., Fellow of University College, London.

Vol. I. (In Two Parts). THE VISIGOTHIC INVASION. Vol. II. THE HUNNISH INVASION—THE VANDAL INVASION AND THE HERULIAN MUTINY.

NOTE.—The Author has re-written and considerably enlarged the greater part of the First Volume, which is now published in Two Parts, though for the convenience of those who already possess the later volumes the numbering is unchanged. Part of the Second Volume has also been re-written.

Previously published, Vols. III. and IV., price 38s.

Vol. III. THE OSTROGOTHIC INVASION.

Vol. IV. THE IMPERIAL RESTORATION.

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A COLLECTION of MODERN ARABIC STORIES, BALLADS, POEMS, and PROVERBS. Compiled by A. O. GREEN, (Late) Brigade-Major, Royal Engineers, in Egypt, Author of Green's "Practical Arabic Grammar," &c., for the use of English Officers in Egypt.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY MECHANICS of SOLIDS and FLUIDS. By A. L. SELBY, M.A., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORICAL ENGLISH GRAMMAR. By HENRY SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., formerly President of the Philological Society and Member of Council of the Shorthand Society.

ALSO, BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

A MANUAL of CURRENT SHORT-HAND, ORTHOGRAPHIC and PHONETIC.

COMPLETION OF MR. JERRAM'S EDITION OF "VIRGIL'S GEORGICS."

Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

VIRGIL.—GEORGICS, BOOKS III. IV.

Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by C. S. JERRAM, M.A., late Scholar of Trinity College, Oxford.

Previously published.

BOOKS I. II. 2s. 6d.

"The name of Mr. Jerram on the title-page of a Latin or Greek book is a good guarantee of the excellent work within."—Schoolmaster.

Now ready, in 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE WORKS of VIRGIL. With an

Introduction and Notes by T. L. PAPILLON, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of New College, and A. E. HAIGH, M.A., late Fellow of Hertford, Classical Lecturer at Corpus Christi and Wadham Colleges, Oxford.

* * This Work, which is now complete in two volumes, is also published in Five Parts as follows: Bucolics and Georgics, 3s. 6d. Æneid, Books I.-III., 3s. Books IV.-VI., 3s. Books VII.-IX., 3s. Books X.-XII., 3s.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

QUINTILIANI INSTITUTIONIS

ORATORIAE, BOOK X. A Revised Text. Edited for the Use of Colleges and Schools, by W. PETERSON, M.A., LL.D., Principal of University College, Dundee, St. Andrews University.

TWENTIETH EDITION, REVISED. SEVENTY-EIGHTH THOUSAND.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, superfine paper, 3s. 6d.

A BRIEF HISTORY of the INDIAN

PEOPLES, from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Sir W. W. HUNTER, K.C.S.I., M.A., LL.D., &c., Editor of the "Rulers of India Series."

"By far the best manual of Indian history that has hitherto been published."—Times of India.

Twelfth Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK to the UNIVERSITY and COLLEGES of OXFORD. Revised to August, 1892.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY CALENDAR for 1893.

FULL CATALOGUES UPON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,

CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's PUBLICATIONS.

"The Finest Gift-Book of the Season."

DAILY CHRONICLE.

THE CAPITALS of the WORLD,

In Two Volumes, superbly illustrated, handsomely bound in half-morocco, bevelled boards, gilt edges, price THREE GUINEAS NET. An Illustrated Prospectus sent post on application.

"A superb work.....These volumes one has to read; the life described is as fascinating as the life depicted." Daily News (leader).

"In no similar work have artistic excellence and descriptive power been more liberally put at the service of the world's capitals."—Standard.

"Brightly written, well and profusely illustrated, printed in large type, and handsomely bound, the book on the world's capital cities must be counted among the principal productions of the season.....Altogether the book is certainly one to be welcomed with satisfaction."—Morning Post.

BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA.

By JAMES DOUGLAS. Dedicated to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. With Maps and Plans, 13 Full-page Photographs, Collotype Reproductions from Old Documents, 1 Coloured Reproduction of an Old Picture, and over 100 other Text Illustrations. 2 vols., super-royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, TWO GUINEAS NET.

AFLOAT and ASHORE on the MEDITERRANEAN. By LEE MERIWETHER, Author of "How to See Europe on Fifty Cents a Day," "A Tramp at Home," &c. Crown 8vo, with 24 Full-page Illustrations, cloth, 7s. 6d.

ARTISTIC TRAVEL: a Thousand

Miles towards the Sun. NORMANDY, BRITANNY, the PYRENEES, SPAIN, and ALGERIA. By HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Academy Notes," Author of "The Memoir of Randolph Caldecott," &c. With 130 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

SIXTH EDITION NEXT WEEK.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph Obrwalder, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan, who recently escaped, with two Sisters of Mercy, on Camels, from the Sudan. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A., Director of Military Intelligence, Egyptian Army, and Author of "Mahdism and the Egyptian Sudan." Illustrated by Photographs, Maps, and Special Drawings by Walter C. Horsley. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

TALES of ADVENTURE and STORIES

of TRAVEL of FIFTY YEARS AGO. Edited by JOSEPH CUNDALL. Illustrated with Twenty Plates from "The Annals." Large post 8vo, half-leather, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

"The engravings are admirable....Altogether the volume has a fragrance about it suggestive of lavender and rose-leaves." Leeds Mercury.

THE PRICELESS ORCHID: a Story

of Adventure in the Forests of Yucatan. By PERCY AINSLIE, Author of "Lost in Japan," &c. With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Three New Novels, at all Libraries.

WOLFENBERG.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE MYSTERY of ST. DUNSTAN'S:

a Realistic and Sensational Story of Fleet Street in 1721. By THOMAS WRIGHT, Author of "The Life of William Cowper," &c. Two vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER. By

AMELIA E. BARR, Author of "Jan Vedder's Wife," "Friend Olivia," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"This new novel, Mrs. Barr thinks, is quite comparable to 'Jan Vedder's Wife,' and it will be interesting to see if the public confirm her opinion."—Daily Chronicle.

DECEMBER NUMBER, Now ready, price ONE SHILLING

FASHIONS of TO-DAY.

A High-Class Illustrated Magazine for Gentlemen.

Two Coloured Plates and many other Illustrations, also Presentation Portrait of Mrs. Grover Cleveland, wife of the New President of the United States, from a Pencil Drawing from Life by Carl Becker.

Have you seen the Christmas Number of

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

COMPLETE IN ITSELF. Price ONE SHILLING.

With Coloured Frontispiece and upwards of Fifty Illustrations. And Articles by Archibald Forbes, G. W. Cable, G. R. Tomson, T. B. Aldrich, Octave Thanet, F. D. Millet, and others.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1892.

No. 1075, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Eighteenth Century Vignettes. By Austin Dobson. (Chatto & Windus.)

STEELE'S Letters, Prior's Kitty, Spence's Anecdotes, Captain Coram's Charity, The Female Quixote, Fielding's Voyage to Lisbon, Hanway's Travels, A Garret in Gough-square, Hogarth's Sigismunda, The Citizen of the World, An Old London Bookseller, Gray's Library, The New Chesterfield, A Day at Strawberry Hill, Goldsmith's Library, In Cowper's Arbour, The Quaker of Art, Bewick's Tailpieces, A German in England, Old Vauxhall Gardens—these are Mr. Dobson's themes. Now, the best classification of scholars and of critics is under two heads: those who do, and those who do not, adore the eighteenth century. To its votarists and devotees it is the enchanted, the golden, the incomparable age: our dearest friends lived in it, and our best books were written in it. We know that the ages of Shakspeare and of Milton were greater far than the age of Addison and of Pope, of Johnson and of Burke, of Berkeley and of Gray, of Fielding and of Richardson: we acknowledge the exceeding glory of Wordsworth, Coleridge, Keats; but for pure and genuine pleasure we turn most often and most gladly to the age of the golden mean. Glover's "Leonidas" does not depress us; we can stomach Beattie on Truth; Home's "Douglas" and Mason's "Caractacus" are positively our delights. In the meanest last century book there is something of urbanity, atticism, grace, composure, ease; some felicity of arrangement or charm of manner: the hireling pens of pamphleteers, the pensioned Grubstreet Muses, have a pleasant way of seeming scholarly and grave, or bright and witty. Critics and controversialists, whose whole aim was a brutal bludgeoning or filthy bespattering of their opponents, yet kept about them some air of taste and art. The vile thing was done with a certain happy congruity, a certain dexterous and able grace. For myself, let me confess that the literature of the last century has few dull places: deistical treatises, Christian evidences, third-rate essayists, Odes to Solitude, I can enjoy them all. In a word, the bad writing of the last century is more tolerable than that of any other century; it shows more of the craftsman, the artist, the master of composition and design.

What, then, must be the joy of such an enthusiast for the unenthusiastic century, when he reads Mr. Dobson upon some of the best and greatest charms of that century! After toiling through volumes of a horrid modernity, all weeping and wailing, all fire and frenzy, I turn to the eighteenth century, as Herrick from his hated Devon turned to London:

"I send, I send here my supremest kiss
To thee, my silver-footed Thumasis!"

Like Dr. Birkbeck Hill, that master of last-century literature and true servant of its great writers, I "find in their exquisitely clear style, their admirable common sense, and their freedom from all the tricks of affectation, a delightful contrast to so many of the eminent authors of our own time." And Mr. Dobson has here put together twenty brief and winning sketches of much that is most dear and pleasant in the arts and letters of his cherished age. All are good, some "choicely good"; let us dwell a short while upon each of them.

Mr. Dobson's vignette of Steele is not unworthy to be set beside Thackeray's larger portraits in Esmond and in the Lectures: it should help to keep alive that interest in Sir Richard lately awakened by the publication of an admirable biography. Mr. Dobson, by a few judicious strokes, puts before us the most lovable of wits and worthies: the bustling, sensitive, pleasant creature, of whom Dr. Johnson could say nothing severer than: "Steele, I believe, practised the lighter vices." Even the ridiculous Colley Cibber, in his suit against Steele, informs the Master of the Rolls: "Sir, the Case, in plain Truth and Reality, stands thus: Sir Richard, though no Man alive can write better of Oeconomy than himself, yet perhaps, he is above the Drudgery of practising it." There is hardly any English author more praised, and by more people, for his good nature: "he was," said Young, "the best-natured creature in the world: even in his worst state of health, he seemed to desire nothing but to please and be pleased." His letters to his "Dear Prue," their simple affection, humorous honesty, and touches of very tender sentiment, have well inspired Mr. Dobson to sketch some scenes and ways in the life of this "clever, faulty, kindly," man.

Prior's "Kitty" is her Grace, the famous Duchess of Queensberry, a lady whose charm and beauty were proverbial. Some men are so afraid of being conventional, says Young, that they blush to be found out in a truism:

"If they by chance blurt out, ere well aware,
A swan is white, or Queensberry is fair."

"Kitty, beautiful and young" is a fascinating figure: Prior, Gay, Pope, Swift, were her worshippers; her humours make a charming diversion in "the artificial century." There must have been something very winsome and pleasantly provoking about her Grace: something very generous and upright about her husband, Thomson's "worthy Queensberry," who "yet laments his Gay." Thackeray has hit off excellently Gay's lazy life at Amesbury, under this dual patronage:

"With these kind lordly folks, a real Duke and Duchess, as delightful as those who harboured Don Quixote, and loved that dear old Sancho, Gay lived, and was lapped in cotton, and had his plate of chicken, and his saucer of cream, and frisked, and barked, and wheezed, and grew fat, and so ended."

"How comes it," asked Pope, "that providence has been so unkind to me (who am a greater object of compassion than any fat man alive) that I am forced to drink wine, while you riot in water prepar'd with oranges by the hand of the Duchess of Queensberry? That I am condemned to live by a highway side, like an old Patriarch receiving all guests, where my Portico (as Virgil has it) Mane salutantum totis comit aedibus undam, while you are wrapt into the Idalian groves, sprinkled with rose-water, and live in burrage, balm, and burnet up to the chin, with the Duchess of Queensberry? That I am doom'd to the drudgery of dining at court with the ladies in waiting at Windsor, while you are happily banish'd with the Duchess of Queensberry?"

Swift's correspondence with the duchess and with Gay, as Mr. Dobson observes, has been variously judged: I must own to finding it delightful. All Swift's envious and savage contempt, his mock humility, condescending playfulness, and rare strokes of true tenderness, are in his letters to the great lady, whom he has not seen since she was five years old. There are few pleasanter things in fiction than Smollett's bringing Mr. Matthew Bramble and his companions to Drumlanrig, the Queensberry seat in Scotland, which "puts one in mind of the beautiful city of Palmyra." The duke was all courtesy; "the duchess was equally gracious, and took our ladies under her immediate protection." Prior's "Kitty" entertaining Mrs. Tabitha Bramble! "She died in Savile Row in 1777, of a surfeit of cherries, and was buried at Durrisdor": a name which takes us away from Smollett and Humphry Clinker to Mr. Stevenson and the Master of Ballantrae.

Spence is our next figure. "An extreme poor creature," says the courteous Warburton, to whom the gentle, amiable scholar must have been very contemptible. It is Pope, of course, who has kept Spence alive, because it is Spence who has made Pope so living. But the Anecdotes are full of other interests, and their bibliography is a curious piece of history. Singer's edition was published in 1820, upon the same day as Malone's; but my own copy was presented by Singer to "The Right Honourable Sir George Campbell" upon August 15, 1819, which seems to show that "advance copies" were in existence very early, the title page being dated 1820, and the preface December, 1819. As Johnson has somewhat extinguished Boswell, so Pope has extinguished Spence, who deserves, perhaps, a little more attention than he has commonly received. Every one of his greater critics has been severe upon him:

"At Captain M'Lean's I mentioned Pope's friend, Spence. Johnson: He was a weak conceited man. Boswell: A good scholar, Sir? Johnson: Why, no, Sir. Boswell: He was a pretty scholar. Johnson: You have about reached him."

Gray echoes Johnson:

"I remember to have read Mr. Spence's pretty book. . . . If you ask me what I read, I protest I do not recollect one syllable; but only in general, that they were the best bred sort of men in the world, just the kind of frinds one would wish to meet in a fine summer's evening, if one wished to meet any at all. The heads and tales of the dialogues, published separate in 16mo, would make the sweetest reading in natur for young gentlemen of family and fortune, that are learning to dance."

And he criticises the Polymetis very much in the tone of Lessing, whose references to it in the Laocoon are very frequent. Lessing ascribes to him "much classical erudition," and "a very trustworthy acquaintance with the latest works of ancient art"; but he maintains that "to every reader of taste his book must be absolutely intolerable." Spence took up the precisely opposite method in criticism to that of Lessing; and it is true, as Mr. Dobson observes, that Lemprière superseded him. Spence would be glad to think that his successor was also a Wykehamist. For vir doctissimus Josephus Spence, as another fellow Wykehamist, Lowth, termed him, "Dear Jo," as most of his correspondents called him, "Dear Spanco," as young Lord Middlesex addressed him, was a very patriotic Wykehamist, and one of an interesting little group of literary Wykehamists: Young, Pitt, Spence, the laureate Whitehead, Lowth, "Muscipula" Holdsworth, Theophilus Cibber the actor, brother of Colley; that most attractive youth, Harrison, whose early death was bitterly lamented by Swift; Joseph Warton, Collins, and others. The earlier of these were patronised by Bubb Dodington, and, like Thomson and Voltaire, knew well "the pure Dorsetian downs" at Eastbury. They resemble, in many ways, the quadruple alliance of Etonians: Gray, Walpole, West, and Ashton. Surely Mr. Dobson is incorrect in saying that Pitt translated Homer? His translation of Virgil is fairly well known, and not without its merits. In his fastidious tastes, Italian culture, gentle humour and grace, Spence seems to me a Gray without Gray's genius: a kindly soul, who passed his days in benevolence, helping the Queen's thresher poet and librarian of the grotto, Stephen Duck; assisting Thomson; charitable towards the blind poet and scholar, Dr. Blacklock; and, as Swift "charitably sneers," in "fondling an old mother—in imitation of Pope!" At least, we are greatly in his debt for those solemn and tragic pages, in which he tells us of Pope's wasting away to death, while Bolingbroke bursts into tears, accuses Heaven, and cries out many times: "O great God! what is man?"

Captain Coram's Charity, otherwise the Foundling Hospital, is treated by Mr. Dobson very genially. The old seaman's pleasant memory deserved this tribute. The place is redolent of famous recollections: of Handel and of Hogarth, above all. That irascible little artist writes:

"The portrait I painted with the most pleasure, and in which I particularly wished to excel, was that of Captain Coram for the Foundling Hospital; and if I am so wretched an artist as my enemies assert, it is somewhat strange, that this, which was one of the first I painted the size of life, should stand the test of twenty years' competition, and be generally thought the best portrait in the place, notwithstanding the first painters in the kingdom exerted all their talents to vie with it."

Mr. Dobson recalls Thackeray's use of the old place in Vanity Fair, and his residence hard by; Dickens also has kept up the Captain's memory by his strange creature, Tattycoram, in Little Dorrit; while he also lived in the same quaint and quiet old neighbourhood. And did not Mr. Kenwigs desire his defrauded infants to be taken away to the "Fondling"?

I suppose no place in old London is so constantly mentioned in old literature as the Apollo room at the Devil, by Temple Bar: the dramatists revel in allusions to it. But few stranger scenes, even in Ben's roaring days, can have taken place there than that which Mr. Dobson next describes—the coronation of Mrs. Charlotte Lennox by Dr. Johnson, upon the publication of her first novel. The doctor, for inexplicable reasons, held her superior to the Grecian Mrs. Carter, the moral Miss More, and the vivacious Miss Burney. Goldsmith wrote an epilogue to her play, and was curiously asked, so he told Johnson, to hiss the play in honour of Shakspeare, whom the lady had treated lightly in her Shakspeare Illustrated. She is one of his few contemporaries whom Johnson honoured by quotation in the Dictionary. Her famous book, The Female Quixote, is quite unreadable now, and, spite of Johnson and of Fielding, ought to have been so from the first. But she gave occasion for that inimitable description of the famous revel by the pompous knight, Sir John Hawkins: a revel of tea, coffee, and lemonade upon Johnson's part; the other guests obeyed the "convivial laws" of his early namesake:

"Let no sober bigot here think it a sin,
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle;"

and the injunctions of Drayton in the same place:

"Let not a man drinke, but in draughts profound;
To our God Phoebus let the health go round."

Fielding's Voyage to Lisbon is the next piece in this goodly collection: a praise of a most manly, spirited, pathetic, and neglected masterpiece, by the master whom Mr. Henley does well in calling "worthy to dispute the palm with Cervantes and Sir Walter as the heroic man of letters." That humorous and lusty vagrant, Borrow, made the same voyage on his ludicrous mission of spreading "scripture knowledge" in Spain: a mission in which the Protestant archbishop of Dublin has rashly followed him. Upon landing in Lisbon, Borrow exhorts travellers to "repair to the English church and cemetery, Pere-la-chaise in miniature, where, if they be of England, they may well be excused if they kiss the cold tomb, as I did, of the author of Amelia, the most singular genius which their island ever produced, whose works it has long been the fashion to abuse in public and to read in secret." He quaintly adds: "In the same cemetery rest the mortal remains of Doddridge, another English author of a different stamp, but justly admired and esteemed." Mr. Dobson, indeed, will hardly allow the Journal to be "a literary masterpiece"; yet I can use no other term of a work so enchanting in its fine simplicity and courageous temper.

We pass on to a very different traveller: Jonas Hanway, philanthropist and hater of tea, moralist and patron of the umbrella. A portentous scribbler, and excellent man! His travels, abroad and at home, are only remembered by Johnson's witticisms. Mr. Dobson has not exaggerated the truly repellent character of the latter, the journey from Portsmouth to Kingston: an eight day's journey, says Hawkins, told in two octavo volumes. Mr. Dobson pleasantly describes his purchase of this work in Holborn, a presentation copy to two ladies, embellished with some abominable verse in Hanway's autograph. The only good thing to be said of Hanway's works is that they are perpetually surprising the reader; the titles of Montaigne's Essays are not more delusive. I lately bought, in Holborn also, two volumes of Hanway, with a title-page of sixty-two words; except for a charming frontispiece by Major, the volumes are deadly in their diffuse dullness. Now, and then we have delightful references to "the much admired Mr. Dodd," that rascally parson who seems to have preached charity sermons from his cradle to his gallows; or to "Mr. Whitefield at Tottenham Court," whom, with the sect called Methodists, Mr. Hanway does most vehemently revile. He followed, or preceded, Bishop Lavington upon the same theme, and makes the amazing statement that

"in Cromwell's time it is well-known that the Popish clergy, disguised as Reformers, found their way to our pulpits, and we must not be surprised if the same should happen again amongst the Methodists."

Of which the sober English is, in Newman's words, that Wesley was "the shadow of a Catholic saint." But this wearisome, odd scribbler was a man of most real and practical charity; and Mr. Dobson has dealt kindly with his ways and works.

"A Garret in Gough Square" describes one of the many London homes of Hanway's great antagonist, that champion of tea, whose melancholy disorders, like those of Cowper, may have been increased by his indulgence in "the cups that cheer, but not inebriate," as Cowper sang, "conveying" the phrase from Bishop Berkeley. It is a dignified portrait of the great man's habitation, with touching reverence for his sorrows and cares, with a brave vindication of his literary excellences. Let us hope that Mr. Dobson will do something to dissipate the tiresome superstition, that Johnson's works are a ponderous mass of affected and pedantic verbosity. The flippant persons who are ever prating of the Rambler's heavy dullness would be surprised to find, by experiment, how bright and vigorous is the better part of it. But Johnson has worthy champions in this age; to them we may leave him.

Hogarth's "Sigismunda," that tragical piece, is the next subject. And what more can be said than Mr. Dobson has said? He tells all the petty quarrels and misadventures that surround its history. Let me tell one little fact which would have enraptured poor Hogarth. The present writer lately spent a morning at the National Gallery, and came to the "Sigismunda." Two men, of rusty and ragged appearance, stood in front of it. Said one to the other: "We've been through the whole show, and I say it's the best of the lot. Look at the woman's eyes!"

Mr. Dobson's remarks upon The Citizen of the World are naturally full of zeal and of love for the author, whom he has served in so many ways. The suggestion that these incomparable sketches were suggested by Walpole's anonymous Chinese pamphlet seems extremely probable: it is just the kind of hint which Goldsmith's genius so often wanted to set it working. One can scarcely say too much in praise of Goldsmith's essays: they resemble Addison and Steele on this side, Fielding and Dickens on that; yet they have an incommunicable air of distinction wholly their own: a delicacy and simplicity, a natural felicity, which stamp them as original. Goldsmith's exquisite verse, much as it owes to others, has precisely the same quality and distinction: a kind of innocent, pleasant grace and ease and charm, with touching passages of deep sentiment here and there, whilst all is musical and mellow, perfectly finished and wrought out.

Another paper is upon Goldsmith's Library; and it is curious to reflect that Goldsmith, like Racine, as Mr. Dobson notes, or like Browning, as he might have noted, appears to have kept no copies of his own works. The paper upon Gray's Library is a very different record; the dainty Cambridge scholar, the fastidious recluse or delicate worldling, was a born bookman. Mr. Dobson remarks upon his careful collection of MS. music from Italy: in this Gray resembles Milton, who brought home a similar collection. Indeed, Milton "The Lady of Christ's" and "Miss Gray of Peterhouse" are well worth comparing in their Italian travels and studies.

"An Old London Bookseller" is a sketch of Newbery, once a familiar name with children: a shrewd, genial figure of a man, with his eternal Dr. James's Powder, and his childish classics. All the last century children's books are charming and pretty; and even Mrs. Trimmer has at least one masterpiece. Newbery, like Cowper's Johnson, and Pope's Lintot, and Johnson's Cave, is one of the many booksellers who make the old annals of "The Trade" such pleasant reading.

"The New Chesterfield" is, in part, an apology for that elegant and polite writer, who has been the scorn of stern moralists this many a year. Mr. Dobson shows that much of the notorious Letters is excellently moral and true; and he pleads, as only the singer of "a fine old-fashioned grace" could plead, that "the finished elegance, the watchful urbanity, the perfect ease and self-possession which Fielding commended, and Johnson could not contest, are things too foreign to our restless over-consciousness to be easily intelligible."

It is worth notice that Lord Chatham, in those strangely neglected letters to his nephew, Thomas Pitt, speaks of behaviour, carriage, "deportment," the graces, in the very accents of Chesterfield; and Chatham was no Chesterfield at heart. To such caricatures of exquisite breeding, as the Prince Regent in life or Sir John Chester in literature, we may apply Young's sentiment: "a Half-Chesterfield is quite a fool."

Two of Mr. Dobson's remaining vignettes are pieces of reconstructive antiquarianism in his best manner: "A Day at Strawberry Hill" and "Old Vauxhall Gardens." Within the limits of a brief sketch, they could not be improved; all is there—happy quotation, dexterous allusion, positive knowledge: Georgian England revived in two characteristic scenes of public and of private life.

"In Cowper's Arbour" is a graceful portrait of the lighter, brighter Cowper: the "worldling" of Mr. Birrell's recent essay. This is the Cowper whose letters show us the inveterate fish-eater; the jester with Newton, once of the slave trade, now of the Olney Hymns; the facetious and playful Cowper, all sprightliness and airs.

"I am jealous," writes Lamb to Coleridge, "of your fraternising with Bowles, when I think you relish him more than Burns, or my old favourite, Cowper. But you conciliate matters when you talk of the 'divine chit-chat' of the latter: by the expression, I see you thoroughly relish him."

That is the true Cowper: the Cowper who sat in his pleasant arbour polishing John Gilpin to perfection, and sending his verses over the way to Mr. Wilson, the barber.

I have scarce left myself space to say anything about the three remaining papers: sympathetic "chit-chat" about Stothard, "The Quaker of Art," about Bewick's Tailpieces, and about the adventures of the young German, Pastor Moritz, in the England of 1782. For the first of these, one is especially grateful; as the happy possessor of that "old double-columned edition of the essayists," praised by Mr. Dobson, I am vastly indebted to the graceful art of Stothard. He has suffered, also, by foolish comparisons with Blake. Upon Bewick Mr. Dobson writes with authority, and further—what does not always accompany authority—with charm and ease. In particular, he well insists upon the moral force of the designs: their grimness of humour, sadness of tone, and perfect nicety of truth. The account of Pastor Moritz, a kind of German Partridge or Strap, is delightful enough; but it is a pity that the scene of the Oxford dons drinking and disputing at the Mitre, the gem of the book, was too long for quotation.

If we go through Golden-square, which is most living to us: Mr. Matthew Bramble or Lord Bolingbroke, Mr. Ralph Nickleby or Cardinal Wiseman? That is the sort of question prompted by this book; it is so full of the rich life of all literature and so full of actual life also. The books and the men of the past are as real, or as unreal, as each other; it is Mr. Dobson's fortunate office to bring them out of the dust and ashes back to life. His is not a great book, a masterpiece of learning, of criticism, of history; but it is a masterpiece of cunning craftsmanship. To design and compose these Vignettes, with artful touches of love's labour, is no light thing; one must be something of a Goldsmith, something of a Lamb, to do it. Mr. Dobson's verse is, indeed, of a finer quality: yet I find it hard to say, without foolish airs of enthusiasm, how good is this book of prose.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

The Memories of Dean Hole. (Arnold.)

FAMILY mottoes are generally matters of assumption. Are we wrong in surmising that Dean Hole himself made choice of that which, with his armorial bearings, is stamped on the cover of this entertaining book? For, "Frona vel aurea nolo" may be liberally interpreted to mean "Even a deanery does not prevent me from talking as I please"; and this describes, accurately enough, the course which the genial author has pursued. To a large extent, his "Memories" are of artists and archers, of cricketers, sportsmen, gamblers, and (of course) gardeners; and the stories about these classes who lie outside his own vocation—as well as about those within it—are told with a freedom that is unusual in a church dignitary. Deans, however, are privileged folk. Were it otherwise, and were Dr. Hole a less large-minded and tolerant humourist than he is, one might feel disposed to crave a little more reserve than he sometimes exhibits. Such a phrase as "our comic ecclesiastical history"—though its meaning be perfectly innocent—scarcely suits the lips of one who occupies a prominent place in the Church, and who, we are well assured, has the deepest reverence for its orders and organisation.

But, we must confess, the Dean's book is much more easy to read than to criticise. What can one do for an author who, from a well-stocked and retentive memory, brings out treasures, new and old, for our gratification? To quote his best stories, or to seek to "cap" them, would be an ungracious act, and, moreover, an extremely difficult one. If among them we find some old familiar friends, we have to bear in mind that the Dean himself was on intimate terms with John Leech, and, through him, an occasional contributor to Punch. Nay, more; he dined once at the "hebdomadial board" in Bouverie Street, and was made an honorary member of the mess.

About John Leech, the kindest-hearted of caricaturists, he has a good deal to say. No artist had over more enjoyment of his art than he. Sometimes he would work with marvellous rapidity and finish three drawings on wood between breakfast and luncheon. He was always on the look out for subjects, and though he often found them in the hunting field, he was too cautious a rider to emulate the wonderful feats he depicted. His end came very suddenly.

"On the day before his death he had promised, and had commenced, a drawing for Punch. On the morning of that day he said to his wife, who in her widowhood repeated his words to me, 'Please God, Annie, I will make a fortune yet.' Messrs. Agnew had offered him £1000 for four original pictures. He proposed to give up his work for Punch, which overtaxed his strength, and to take a house in the country. But 'God's finger touched him, and he slept.' A sudden spasm, angina pectoris, and that noble heart was still. That right hand, cold and white as marble, could give and bless no more. His last words were, 'I am going.'"

In contrast with this was the last scene of Tom Hood's life. Weak and emaciated in body, he lay expecting the summons. But the old bright spirit was strong within him, and, pointing to some pungent plasters which the doctor had put on his chest, sighed, "Ah, Leech, so much mustard and so very little beef."

The Dean, except in the hunting-field, does not seem to have handled the brush, but at an early age the pen was in his hand. His first tragedy was written at the age of eight, his first poem at ten, his last sermon, it would seem, at forty or thereabouts. Only twice in twenty years, since he discarded his MS., have words failed him, and then not from want of faith, but want of food or strength. He quotes with approval what the Scotch elder said to the minister.

"The minister made a very free use of notes in the pulpit, and the congregation did not approve. They decided to expostulate, and sent a deputation. He heard their remonstrance, and he informed his visitors, somewhat rudely, that his memory required assistance, and that he intended to use it. 'Weel, then, minister,' said the chief of the legation, 'if ye sae soon forget your own sermons, ye'll nae blame us if we follow your lead.'"

Of ecclesiastics in his own church, the Dean's memories go back to bygone days—days of pluralities and non-residence—when rectors did as little as decency compelled, and that but once in the week, and a clergyman would devote himself to the pursuit of the fox, which, it is charitable to suppose, he mistook for a wolf, and, like a good shepherd, was anxious to destroy. Not that the Dean would exclude the clergy from all part in field sports. Anything to make and keep them manly is permissible (for is he not able to cite an instance where a miner was converted by a curate's hit to square leg?) and, though times are changed, the Dean would still sanction a hard-working parish priest having a day's hunting on one immutable condition—that he shall ride straight to hounds.

The Dean's memories of what he did when, for the first time, he became possessed of a gun will recall like memories in many of his readers. In other sports, he says, experience adds to enjoyment:

"But in shooting there is no joy to compare with the first partridge, pheasant, woodcock, blackcock, grouse, mallard, snipe, or running game. . . . What shall we compare with the eager, intense felicity of boyhood, wandering about the woodlands on a summer's eve, creeping, gun in hand, to the corner of the covert whence the rabbits come forth to graze, and intercepting one of them ere he can reach his refuge?"

It is easy to see that in these reminiscences the Dean feels the keenest pleasure. He wears the gaiters still, it is true, but they are of the wrong colour, and the apron—dignified and distinctive though it be—is a sorry substitute for the old shot belt that encumbered but could not retard the activity of youth.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

The Church in Spain. By Frederick Meyrick. (Wells Gardner & Co.)

WE should have little but praise to give to this history of the Church in Spain, by Canon Meyrick, had the last pages been equal to those preceding them. Its want of proportion is glaring. The volume consists of 450 pages, including index. Gothic and Moorish Spain extend to p. 372. Less than eighty pages are given to the history of the Church in Spain from the time of Ferdinand and Isabella to the present day; and even this short space is curtailed by a needless excursion into the history of Portugal. It would have been far better to have dedicated this volume to the history of the Church of Spain in Roman, Gothic, and Moorish times, say to the advent of the Austrian dynasty, and to have left the more modern Church of Spain for another volume.

Consider for a moment what is necessarily omitted in thus forcing all this later history into four-score pages. The position of Charles V. in Europe with regard to the Protestants is hardly noticed; yet it is this, with the fatal legacy left to Spain by the success of the Moorish wars, the acting as champion of Christendom against the unbeliever and the heretic, which occasioned the greater part of her subsequent misfortunes. It is this legacy, to champion orthodoxy, to crush out heresy, which Philip II. inherited from his father: the office to which both he and Spain were all unequal, but the duties of which, as he understood them, he strove unswervingly to fulfil. Two men in prominent positions in that age lived almost perfectly up to their own ideal. Each has thereby earned for himself the undying hatred of the other half of European Christendom. These two were Calvin at Geneva, Philip II. in Spain. Nothing made Philip swerve from his purpose: neither ambition, nor conquest, nor riches, nor affection. He trampled on the liberties of peoples; he neglected the possessions of half a world. The loss of provinces, of fleets, the sacrifice of his son, of his money, of his time, of his pleasures—all were given without grudging to this. He would not even lend his influence in papal conclave to the choice of a Pope favourable to him politically, but of whose orthodoxy he was not assured. All others quailed at times; in the frightful disasters, the slow decadence which fell upon the country, the faith of Spanish Churchmen, as Ribadaneira tells us pathetically in his Tratado de la Tribulacion, might be sorely tried. But Philip never shrank; he did not even abdicate, as his father did, when all went against him, but died as he had lived, toiling in the same cause to the last, in the meagre cell which he had prepared for himself in his convent palace. Besides this almost dramatic action of Philip II. in Europe, there is the conduct of the Spanish bishops in the Council of Trent, where, according to Vargas, they stoutly upheld the rights of the collective episcopate against papal absolutism and infallibility. There is the history of the foundation of the Spanish Church in the Americas and in the East. Then at home there is the history of regalism, and the strange, fitful hankering after a more national Church, aspirations which did not entirely cease until the present century, when they were destroyed, as in France, by the school of radical ultramontanism, of which Lamennais was the precursor. To the history of the Inquisition some attention is given; but there is nothing on the strange episode of Maria de Agreda, the Ciudad Mystica, and her correspondence with Philip IV. The true story of the expulsion of the Jesuits from Spain, and of the means whereby Carlos III., one of the most superstitious and morbidly conscientious of Spanish sovereigns, was induced to sanction such an act, have never yet been told. The narrative of the changes made in the constitution of the Church in Spain in 1812, 1835, and 1851 would alone more than fill the space which Canon Meyrick has given to the whole period; and these omissions seem to call loudly for a second volume.

But to recur to what our author has done, and done well. It would be difficult to tell the stories of the old Martyrologies better than is done here. It has evidently been a labour of love on the part of the writer. He has felt all the charm, and all the unconscious poetry of these Acta Sanctorum, which held the place in mediaeval literature that novels do now, and with far deeper effect on the reader or the hearer. He has well brought out the consistency of Spanish character, as it is delineated in these histories, whether of Roman, or of Gothic, or of Moorish times, with that of the Spaniards of the Inquisition, and of to-day. At times, of course, where so much is still doubtful, we find Canon Meyrick taking a different view from that which we should take. He knows and follows many of the best, but misses some of the latest, authorities. Like most other historians, in our opinion, he exaggerates the power of the Goths; instead of speaking of the Gothic Church absorbing the Catholic, we should speak of Spaniards and of Catholics absorbing the Goths, as the English did the Normans. He does not remark the changing influence of Moorish civilisation on Spanish, beneficial at first, then wholly the reverse. We never feel certain that the Isidorian or Muzarabic Liturgy was identical with that of Northern Spain before the introduction of the Benedictine rule. The alleged counter-miracle which helped on the introduction of the Roman rite into Toledo is not mentioned. Our author speaks of the condemnation of the writings of Erasmus by the Inquisition, but does not tell of the singular vacillation on this point. The noble charities of Spain, the earliest of their kind in Europe, are left unnoticed. Cardinal Ximenes is likened to Isidore of Seville, and to Julian of Toledo; but a truer parallel would be between him and Cardinal Wolsey, or Richelieu. He was certainly the minister who consolidated despotism in Spain, and he did his work so well that there was no need of a successor. After him the monarchs, if they chose, might govern alone; they might have secretaries and favourites, but had no need of ministers.

These are all, perhaps, matters of opinion. Canon Meyrick's work is really well done; only he has made the mistake of treating one half of his subject as if it were the whole.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

Far Cathay and Farther India. By Major-General A. Ruxton MacMahon. (Hurst & Blackett.)

GEN. MACMAHON was for some years Political Resident at the Court of the King of Burma, the father of the monarch deposed by Lord Dufferin. It is probable that twenty years ago few Englishmen possessed a wider knowledge of the then independent country of Upper Burma, or could speak with more authority about the Lord of the Golden Foot, "Crocodile of Chrysolite," who ruled in barbaric state at Mandalay, about his ministers and councils, and about the various races of Farther India, who were more or less subject to his sway. Gen. MacMahon's work on the Karens is well-known to all who are interested in the history and geography of the Burmese empire. The present volume is more fragmentary and less original. Some chapters are avowedly based on the writings of officials of a younger generation, who know Upper Burma as a British province. Elsewhere, the author relies on his own experience, dating from the days before the conquest. Portions of the book, again, have already appeared in the magazines and reviews; in others we have observations never before put on record. It may be said at once that for Gen. MacMahon to have written a dull or useless work on anything connected with Burma would have been impossible. He saw so much of the Burmese, and under conditions which can never recur, while at the same time he has set down what he saw with such intelligent interest, that the reader who finds no entertainment or instruction in the volume must be dull himself. It would be mere idleness, moreover, to complain of the want of an index and a map.

On the other hand, one may venture to suggest that the author's opinions are not infrequently expressed in a way that leaves room for argument. He frankly criticises the policy, both of the Indian Government and of the local administration, in regard to Burma. Thus we read of inexcusable want of foresight; of the shameful neglect of the English to fulfil their promises—this in regard to the Singphos. We are told that the policy of the Government of India, though paved with the best intentions, was for many years cursed with a moral obliquity of vision which saw no harm in depriving Lower Burma of its surplus revenue. As regards Upper Burma the author speaks of over zealous efforts to stamp out dacoity by shooting and flogging men and burning villages. Nor is Gen. MacMahon content with denouncing the Government he served for its misdealings with the Burmese. An unbending policy of non-interference, he says, with the religions of the people of India has, to the lasting and ineffable reproach of the British Government, entailed intolerable misery and humiliation on many millions of Hindu women. Shameful perfidy, moral obliquity, inhumanity, abiding disgrace—these are rather strong indictments when launched by an officer who has filled high and responsible posts under the Government which he invites all just and honourable men to execrate; and to say the least, they are indictments which are unwarrantable unless they are plainly stated and proved up to the hilt. Yet one cannot always find either abundance of proof or lucidity of statement. Surely there is much to be said both against and for interference with the marriage customs of Hindustan. What proof is there for the statement that

"Over zealous efforts to stamp out dacoity by shooting and flogging men and burning villages, coupled with a want of readiness to pardon offenders who repented of the evil of their ways, hardened men of this stamp and aggravated the difficulty."

Gen. Sir George White, whose sincerity and sound judgment can no more be questioned than his gallantry in the field, was in command of the troops in Upper Burma after the annexation. In a published despatch he writes:—

"I have been three and a-half years in Upper Burma, in a position to know the many and great difficulties against which the Chief Commissioner has had to contend, and to appreciate the unremitting labour and consideration for the true interests of the people which have characterised every measure introduced by him to meet these difficulties; and I cannot close this paper without expressing the regret with which I have observed the systematic misrepresentation which nearly every act of the local administration has undergone at the hands of a section of the local press."

When Gen. MacMahon speaks of the British authorities as "living in a fool's paradise" and otherwise neglecting their duties, does he base his insinuation on trustworthy intelligence or on press telegrams? Living in London, it is possible that he may command better sources of information than Sir George White had access to; but the reader is entitled to know what these sources were.

To question Gen. MacMahon's authority on points of ancient history may appear still more audacious; but his account of the early connexion between India and China might be supplemented. After saying that from very remote times embassies frequently passed between the two countries, the author goes on to tell us that "the first embassy on record is in the middle of the seventh century, A.D." According to Mr. Beal, "the first authentic communication of China with India took place" about 130 B.C., when a Chinese ambassador was sent to the Yue-chi. Later on, about 60 A.D., a Chinese mission reached Magadha. However, this is not a matter of moment; and something remains to be said on a subject more closely connected with the politics of the day. Gen. MacMahon writes:

"Single handed, we can easily beat the French in the little game of diplomacy lately played in India beyond the Ganges; and in alliance with China we can checkmate Russia in the big game"

—that is, in Central Asia. A belief in the value of an Anglo-Chinese alliance against Russian aggression towards India is no doubt entertained by some exponents of Asiatic politics; but it will not bear scrutiny. Even if the Chinese are willing to help us, they could not do so unless they held a strong military position in Eastern Turkestan. The evidence of Col. Mark Bell and Capt. Younghusband, to say nothing of facts which are obvious on the map, completely upsets any calculation of this kind. Were China to make common cause with us against Russia, she would lose Kashgaria; and thereby yet another state separating the dominions of England and Russia in Central Asia would be obliterated. Then as to the French. In the author's opinion, they have now lost all their chances in Indo-China.

"The judicious policy of the British Government in dealing with the Shan States, combined with the tendency of Siam to seek the protection of England in the event of her being coerced in any way by her Gallic neighbours, have [sic] doubtless ere now convinced the French that there is little probability of their dreams being realised."

The French have made more progress and stand on a firmer footing than the author would allow. It is true they cannot be a real danger to us, in a military sense, in this quarter; but they can, and possibly will, close a large commercial field which might otherwise remain open to the British trader. Nor, while it is certain that Siam, unaided, is impotent to resist French aggression, can it be said that the Siamese could safely rely at the present moment on the assistance of Great Britain.

Some admirable observations on trade routes and railway schemes for Indo-China will be found in the concluding chapter of the book. They may be specially commended to the notice of people who would incite the Indian Government to undertake or countenance projects for railways from British Burma to Chinese Yunnan, which, as the author argues, could only be carried out at an immense cost, and would be of little use when constructed. Nor will the reader overlook the remarks on the results of State education in Burma, where our system of public instruction, according to Gen. MacMahon, has done more harm than good. Here again, however, we do not find either a statement of official views or a refutation thereof based on ascertained facts. Every year official reports are published showing that public instruction makes fair progress in Burma; something more is needed than the opinion of a writer who left the province years ago to prove that this progress is deceptive.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

"GREAT FRENCH WRITERS." — Adolphe Thiers. By P. de Rémusat. Translated by Melville B. Anderson. (Fisher Unwin.)

It is always a little dangerous to prophesy. Writing early in the sixties, M. Scherer anticipated that posterity would forget Thiers as a statesman, and think of him only as the historian of the Consulate and the Empire; and, notwithstanding Thiers' earlier achievements in the field of politics, this might possibly have proved to be right if his political career had come to an end in 1862. But in 1863 he stepped forward into the arena again as the opponent of the Empire; and it is as the man to whom France turned, not in vain, during some of the very darkest hours in her history that one mainly thinks of him now. The writer has, in turn, paled a little beside the statesman, who first tried heroically to avert the war with Prussia, and then, "when all was done that man could do," conducted the difficult negotiations for the evacuation of the French territory, quelled the hideous insurrection of the Commune, and restored to France her confidence in herself.

Moreover, though it is as one of "the great French writers" that Thiers figures in the excellent series to which this volume belongs, yet evidently the more purely literary aspect of his career has not had the strongest attraction for his present biographer. And this can readily be understood. For M. de Rémusat, unlike his distinguished father, is better known as a politician than as an author, and his relations with Thiers—it will be remembered that he accompanied the latter during his sad diplomatic wanderings in 1870—were mainly political. Accordingly, in this volume we have a sketch, executed by a hand at once perfectly competent and sympathetic, of the great man's politics—his hostile attitude towards the government of the Restoration, his position during the reign of the Citizen King and the Republic of 1848, his opposition to the Empire, his brief but most beneficent exercise of supreme power, and his not inglorious fall. The career so sketched was certainly not without faults. M. de Rémusat, whose grandfather served the First Empire, and whose father served Louis-Philippe, is scarcely just to the Restoration. It is at least open to question whether the root-and-branch hostility of the Liberals—Thiers among them—was altogether wise. Be that as it may, Thiers clearly did not recognise during the next reign how little Louis-Philippe's government could bear even a constitutional opposition. Then, again, his adulation of the first Napoleon's memory must be accounted a grievous error. Nor, in his fear of anarchy, did he wake sufficiently soon to Napoleon III.'s sinister designs upon the liberties of France. But if these were faults, they were more than amply redeemed by splendid services; and it is due to him—perhaps more than to any other man except Gambetta—that France has now, at last, found what may seem to be a settled form of government.

As a writer, there is much to be said about him too. M. de Goncourt observes, in his notes on men and things, that a great writer is to be known by his use of "rare"—that is original, striking, graphic—epithets. Judged by such a standard, Thiers is simply "nowhere." It may be doubted whether there is one "rare" epithet in all the many volumes of his Histoires de la France Revolution and of the Consulate and the Empire. But in default of such artifices—or, if you will have it so, graces—of language, there are in those Histoires literary beauties of passing excellence. The general arrangement is well ordered and most symmetrical. Complicated as are the events described, the narrative invariably keeps a perfect lucidity. The interest scarcely ever flags, even when matters usually held for dry, such as administration and finance, are in debate. Nor—and here I touch on the question of pure style—is there any attempt to keep the reader's attention by rhetoric or declamation. The language remains always easy, measured, simple, of the most transparent clearness, and not without point and a kind of manly elegance. It is the language, in short, of the old French classical tradition.

No doubt a flaw may be found here and there. Thiers was not an "impeccable master." In those many volumes of his there are, as M. de Rémusat says, and others have said before him, passages in which the style is so easy as to pass beyond the confines of carelessness, the thought so clear as to become commonplace. A writer is seldom an orator with impunity, for the two arts are in many ways distinct; and Thiers, though, curiously enough, he failed like Disraeli in his maiden speech, was one of the greatest political orators of this century, having at command gifts of the rarest kind: a matchless lucidity in exposition, and a singular dexterity in debate. That he occasionally carried his oratorical methods into his books, is not therefore to be wondered at. He did not, however, at all do so habitually; and his books compare, in this respect, very favourably with those of his great rival Guizot, who almost always wrote as if he were making a speech.

With Thiers the man we scarcely make any very near acquaintance in the present biography. M. de Rémusat probably wished to avoid what the French call "reportage"—all the anecdotes, gossip, small personalities that dog, as it were, a great man's fame. And for this M. de Rémusat is to be thanked. Yet I cannot but think that, in his laudable desire to focus our attention on Thiers' public career, he has somewhat neglected to show us the real inner Thiers, and omitted to record facts of legitimate interest in his life. Thiers the statesman is painted for us here in good strong colours; Thiers the orator and writer, in fainter hues; Thiers the art lover and collector, scarcely even in outline; and Thiers the man, only at most in grisaille.

FRANK T. MARZIALS.

NEW NOVELS.

Helen Trevelyan. By John Roy. In 3 vols. (Macmillans.)

God's Fool. By Maarten Maartens. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

A Tangled Web. By Lady Lindsay. In 2 vols. (A. & C. Black.)

The Last Touches. By Mrs. W. K. Clifford. (A. & C. Black.)

Infelix: a Society Story. By Lady Duntze. (Ward & Downey.)

Pierre and his People. By Gilbert Parker. (Methuen.)

Young Lucretia. By Mary Wilkins. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

THE author of Helen Trevelyan reveals himself pretty soon to the wideawake reader as a member of one or other of the Indian services, though we should dissuade any laborious enquirer after personal facts from endeavouring to hunt up the name of John Roy among soldiers, or "politicals," or civilians of any kind. The note, however, is given not merely by the presence of knowledge on every page, but by two slight undernotes of complaint which are very common on Indian official lips—neither, we fear, without provocation, though we trust that both are a little exaggerated. Mr. "John Roy" has drawn a decidedly sanglant (Dryden used the English word in the same sense, but we are too mealy-mouthed for that—now) portrait of Mr. Pitt Wright, the young Englishman of fortune who comes out to India with official and other recommendations, and quarters himself upon everybody, from the Viceroy downwards, as coolly as if he were a conqueror, and in an enemy's country; manifesting not the slightest gratitude to his hosts, and something less than the slightest courtesy to his hostesses. We hope the picture is exaggerated; but we must confess that there is a very remarkable consensus of testimony the other way among Anglo-Indians, some of whom at least are very far removed from any taint of inhospitality or churlishness. As for the second, the older, complaint of the way in which Englishmen at home neglect the interests and the affairs of India, that is natural: it is rather too well founded, but it certainly is exaggerated. Our countrymen in the Land of Regrets are too apt to forget that we neglect and forgot all English interests (including home ones) by turns. However, these things have little to do with the merits of Helen Trevelyan as a novel. These merits are considerable. The painting of manners is always bright and lively; the characters are well defined; the sketch of the cooping up of General Roberts's force at Cabul is first-rate, and many of the fighting passages in the same part of the book are not inferior. Mr. Pitt Wright (though, as we have said, we hope a charge) is a very clever charge of a very disgusting and too common kind of cub. But Mr. Roy has, from inexperience doubtless, fallen into two errors which a critic could have warned him of. He has carried on the time of his story too long. He has anticipated the birth of his heroine; and, after making her marry hero number one (a very good fellow), without any apparent disillusion or disappointment, he has conducted her leisurely into the arms of hero number two (who, be it said in passing, is rather too much of a prig. Both these things have no doubt been done by great novelists; but they are dangerous things to do and best avoided by the novice.

The last book of the very clever author of The Sin of Joost Avelingh is worthy of his reputation for cleverness and for writing attractive, and scarcely in the least exotic, English. It is unworthy of him, we think, in a certain want of compression and in the violent involution and contortion of the plot. To begin a book with an elaborate intimation of a certain murder, then to jump back for a generation or thereabouts and to tell the story in a sufficiently leisurely manner for three volumes, at only the end of which is the murder actually committed and explained, is one of those "studio tricks" which have often been fashionable, and have sometimes succeeded in all arts, but which in no art can be pronounced very good. Moreover, it seems to us that the filling is too voluminous—that ingeniously observed and well written as the story is, there is not enough real matter in it for three volumes, perhaps barely enough for two. However, that may be very much a matter of opinion. There is no doubt about the effectiveness of the finale—the self-sacrifice of “God’s Fool” who, in consequence of an accident in childhood, has suffered from brain affections that have ended in blindness and a form of mental incapacity, which is not adjudged to be incapacity of managing affairs. So that he remains the senior partner and nominal head of a vast business, which is entirely in the hands of his brothers. It would in the case of this kind of book be wrong to hint what this finale is, or the precise nature of the relations between the two brothers, Hendrik and Hubert. These things are well managed; but the chief merit of the book is to be found in the careful and successful portraiture of the bourgeois life of “Koopstad,” and especially the character of Cornelia, Hendrik’s wife. These various excellences indeed may, to some people, atone for the faults noted above; and certainly on any estimate the book is not commonplace.

The idea of Lady Lindsay’s A Tangled Web has enough both of ingenuity and of audacity. It starts from one of those wonderful advertisements which we have all seen, and in which “a lady of title” offers to introduce unchaperoned young ladies (common for choice) into “the best society” for a consideration. The oddity lies in selecting for the purpose a young woman who has a perfect right to enter the best society herself. “Lady Griselda” is a Scottish heiress, who seems to be left in a state of friendlessness and relationlessness rather strange anywhere in a lass with both tocher and pedigree, and nowhere more strange than in Scotland. She is so set upon going au fond de l’inconnu pour trouver du nouveau, that she determines to submit herself to the chaperoning of the advertising Lady Bingham as plain Marjorie Smith, of Australia, overcoming the objections of her factor, and of “Gallikins,” an affectionate companion. Of course she comes in contact with the very people she wishes to avoid—some English relations of her mother’s—and of course she falls in love with one of them; but the reader may be left to find out all about that. For the rest, the thing is sufficiently agreeable, though the manners of Wilfrid Aveling, the lover, seem to leave to desire, and the position of the heroine, Marjorie or Grisell, is distinctly false. But there are periods in which manners often leave to desire, and positions are frequently false.

It was a good notion of Mrs. Clifford’s to issue, shortly after the decided and deserved success of Aunt Anne, a collection of shorter stories. The dates of their original appearances are not, we think, given; but it is pretty certain that they represent an intermediate stage of craftsmanship between Mrs. Keith’s Crime and the later novel, and they certainly also show an advance therein. The opening and title story—which tells how a wily English woman by utilising her natural advantages, succeeded in prevailing on a ferocious French painter, whom she had attracted and rejected in earlier days, to soften a ferociously true portrait of her which he had been induced by money to paint after he became famous—is very clever; and the same quality rarely fails in the other contents of the volume. Mrs. Clifford may also be congratulated on having abandoned for the most part the typographical and other tricks which marred Mrs. Keith’s Crime. It is always wise, when you have power, as Mrs. Clifford has, to leave it to itself. “That will be better for it,” as was said of old. If with power you can conjoin charm, then you do the greatest things. We are not so certain that Mrs. Clifford has yet mastered this conjunction; but there are so many who are unable to give us either one or the other!

Of such is Lady Duntze. A person who calls his or her book “a society novel,” may be said to provoke à outrance any critic of fairly decent taste. For our part, in such cases we make immense allowances. If the offender can be saved, even so as by fire, the almost inconceivably low standard of comparison which he or she invites is always present with us. “I do not write English,” the title pleads; “I cater only for the vulgar; please be lenient with me.” We shall be as lenient as we can. Lady Duntze’s heroine, who has a rather stupid but sufficiently amiable and sufficiently affectionate husband, “takes up with” a most appalling sweep, and being a fool as well as not much better than she should be, poisons herself instead of playing the game through. Thus she fails from the only three conceivable standpoints. “Why did you love anybody but your husband?” says Morality. “Why did you adopt French customs à demi?” says Cynicism. “Why couldn’t you wait for a gentleman?” says Taste. And Jotta Carow is cast in all the three trials.

The stories contained in Pierre and his People are interesting, and the book is not commonplace. It deals with the Hudson’s Bay country—as one is still inclined to call it, notwithstanding the mediatizing of the great company—the country of habitants and voyageurs, of French and Indian half castes, of Irish and Scotch exiles, of English emigrants and travellers, all subjected to an English-American constitution and administration, and to a curious blending (such as hardly exists anywhere now in the United States themselves) of Eastern civilisation and Western savagery of scene. We are not quite sure that in any single instance Mr. Parker has got the story-interest or the story-machinery quite right. He does not seem able to tell a tale; but he has done what is, perhaps, rarer—he has given the atmosphere of an unfamiliar state of life.

We are afraid that Mr. James Payn, who the other day proclaimed his dislike of The Wide, Wide World, would not like Young Lucretia. You cannot please everybody; and there are people, we are told, who think Gil Blas overrated. The Wide, Wide World is not quite so good as Gil Blas; but it has its merits, and those who can perceive them will perceive the merits (especially as they lie in much smaller compass) of Young Lucretia and her companion tales. We like them. They have the virtue which is wanting in so much contemporary American work—they represent the natural actions and thoughts of natural people, not the actions and thoughts, or abstinences from action and thought, of people who have been educated, who have come to the conclusion that there is English literature, French literature, and what not, and who want to go one or a dozen better. We make our compliment to Miss or Mrs. Mary Wilkins, and shall be glad to read another book of hers.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

GIFT BOOKS.

The Girls and I: A Veracious History. By Mrs. Molesworth. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. (Macmillans.) As last year, so again now, Mrs. Molesworth has chosen to keep to her older and better style, with which she first won fame in Carrots. And, for our own part, we hope that she will never again admit into her stories for and about children the disturbing element of the supernatural. “I” is a little boy, the only brother of four sisters, who is inevitably attuned somewhat to the feminine temperaments that surround him and make up his life; for the father is pushed into the background—as is the way with modern fathers—and the grandfather is yet more shadowy. The experienced art of the authoress is well shown in her portrayal of the mixed motives of this boy, who gives us some months of his autobiography. The incidents are of a commonplace kind, though we are introduced to one or two aristocratic personages; and the whole story is very simple and (in the true sense) realistic. There is, of course, something of a mystery, and a few strange coincidences; but without these not even Mrs. Molesworth’s skill would be able surely to hold the attention of young readers. As to the illustrations, whether Mr. Leslie Brooke has improved, or whether we have become more familiar with him, we know not; but we will say that he has reconciled us to Mr. Walter Crane’s retirement from the long partnership. The boy is always admirable, particularly on the title-page.

Gil the Gunner: or, The Youngest Officer in the East. By George Manville Fenn. Illustrated by W. H. Overend (S.P.C.K.). To those who remember the Mutiny and the passions it aroused, it will seem a bold thing on the part of Mr. Manville Fenn to have taken for his hero, or one of his heroes, a ringleader of the revolt. According to the historical facts, not a single native chief—except, perhaps, the Amazon Rani of Jhansi—affords material for this sort of romantic treatment. But we dare say that our author knows his public; and that the present generation of English boys, not born of Anglo-Indian stock, are ready to believe in an Indian Saladin. The nominal hero of the book is a lad, fresh from home, who is appointed to a battery of Bengal Horse Artillery circa 1856. The gunners, of course, were Europeans; but when the sepoy in the same cantonment rose, they managed to carry off the guns with their horses. The helpless indignation of the dismounted gunners, and the clever stratagem by which they recovered their guns and horses, forms the most effective scene in the story. The hero gets severely wounded, and is taken prisoner by the mutineers. Indeed, he owes his life to their Raja—a Muhammadan, by the way—who turns out to be none other than a regimental sycophant whom he has always befriended. All this part seems to us improbable and long drawn out. But at the end we are treated to some good fighting; while the hero is ultimately rescued from a position that is both physically and morally awkward. We have read better books by Mr. Manville Fenn.

Fifty-two Other Stories for Boys. Edited by Alfred H. Miles. (Hutchinson.) Fifty-two Other Stories for Girls. (Same Editor and Publishers.) Fifty-two Fairy Tales. (Same Editor and Publishers.) If among the children of to-day the instinct of gratitude has not been dulled by the extravagance of benefaction, Mr. Miles must surely be as dear to them as were the delightful Peter Parley, and the genial Old Humphrey to their fathers and mothers. His new stories for boys and girls are, we think, if possible, even better than their predecessors, though we are well aware that this is a verdict which to those who only know the predecessors must seem ridiculously extravagant. To boys and girls who take this view, and who are sufficiently alive to their own interests to read the "Gift Book" column of the ACADEMY, we would simply say: "Persuade some father, mother, uncle, aunt, or friend to give you the Other Stories for a Christmas box, and then see if you do not agree with us." All the old favourites, Mr. Henty, Mr. Manville Fenn, Dr. Gordon Stables, Mrs. Linnaeus Banks, Miss Rosa Mulholland, and others are well to the fore, and there are a host of new friends, among whom Mr. A. Lincoln Green, the author of that capital story, "The Vengeance of Yussuf Ben Sadi," deserves special mention. Of Fifty-two Fairy Tales it need only be said that Mr. Andrew Lang, of red, blue, and green editorial fame, has found a friendly but formidable rival. Mr. Miles probably does not profess to be a specialist in fairy lore; but in variety of interest and delightfulness his collection of fairy stories from German, Italian, Spanish, Swedish, and Oriental sources is bad to beat. When the children have gone to bed, the book is tolerably certain to be devoured by their seniors—that is, by such of their seniors as know what is good for them.

Dear. By the Author of "Tip Cat." (Innes.) When a new edition of the history of Christian names is written, a special chapter must be devoted to those which have been inadvertently given. The charming heroine of this charming book got hers in this way. Her absent-minded father had listened to many discussions as to what his little one's name should be, but forgot all about the matter when he held the child in his arms at the font, and there bestowed upon her publicly the name she already bore within his heart. It suited her admirably; and every one seemed to know intuitively what it was, and would address her by it. How she grew up in the poor parsonage, shedding brightness upon all its inmates, is told with just that mixture of pathos and humour which the authoress has at her command and has elsewhere displayed. The country scenes and the country folk are faithfully drawn—not overdrawn nor drawn from fancy; and the "little parson," who reminds one in some points of the good priest in Les Misérables, is, we hope, not without a parallel in the ranks of the Anglican clergy. We suppose it was necessary for the story's sake that Dear should marry the wrong man, but the writer at any rate repented the deed; and we are able to put down this pretty tale with a smile and not a sigh, and that is as it should be.

Little Joan Maitland. By E. C. Phillips. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) This is a book for small children and for baby-lovers among adults. We are introduced to Little Joan Maitland at the earliest possible moment of her infancy, and we lose sight of her at the early age of five or six. But her baby life between these points is very pleasingly and naturally told; and we are persuaded that few readers who can appreciate a small child's history will be able to resist the fascination which Little Joan exercises both within and without the home circle. The humanising effect she produces on the moody temper and desolate life of Sir Howard Glen is another version of the lesson told in such a masterly manner by George Eliot in her incomparable Silas Marner.

Condemned as a Nihilist. By G. A. Henty. (Blackie.) Of course Mr. Henty does with ability whatever he puts his hand to. But in this story of the possibilities that, so to speak, lie in wait for the spirited and adventurous youth who goes to Russia, he seems rather overburdened with his subject. His book seems long, and a considerable portion of it has a "got up" look. Godfrey Bullen, however, who goes to St. Petersburg in connexion with his father's business, and there falling into what used to be considered "bad company," is sent to Siberia as a Nihilist, is a very good example of the English public schoolboy who never ceases to be a public schoolboy. We cannot say much for the Russians and others whose acquaintance Godfrey makes in the course of his travels; they have an unreal look. The escape from Siberia, however, is well told, and the description of prison life is very graphic.

The Guinea Stamp. By Annie S. Swan. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) There is a good deal more both of sin and of misery in this story than is generally to be found in books by Annie S. Swan. Glasgow dreariness and music-hall vulgarity are almost realistically painted. The would-be hero of the story seduces a poor girl; and the undaunted heroine marries the brother of the seduced girl. Still, there is more "grit" in The Guinea Stamp than there is in most stories of the sort; and its author evidently does know Glasgow middle-class life. Three of the leading characters—the miserly Uncle Abel, Gladys Graham (who makes none the worse an heiress that she has to experience very dismal poverty before she secures her fortune), and her gnarled oak of a sweetheart—are admirably sketched.

Strange Yet True. By Dr. Macaulay. (Nisbet.) In this collection Dr. Macaulay gives all sorts and conditions of authentic (or, at least, reasonably authenticated) stories; it is, indeed, a Scotch haggis of those facts which are stranger than fiction. The very different "affairs" of the Armada, The Kent, The Royal George, and The Vega are here given; and Martin Luther, Guy Fawkes, Anson, Thomas Muir, and the Brothers Haldane rub shoulders with each other. But if the meal that Dr. Macaulay supplies suggests "promiscuous feeding," the quality is good. He tells his stories in an eminently "popular" style. This is an admirable book to put into the hands of a lad of the best Sunday-school type.

"THE DAINTY BOOKS." — For Grown-Up Children. By L. B. Walford. Mum Fidgets. By Constance Milman. (Innes.) Charming little volumes are these, with "dainty" covers and pretty illustrations, and we expect they will be among the most popular gift books of the season. Some of Mrs. Walford's stories have, we think, appeared before; but in their new form they will be welcomed by lovers of children even more than by children themselves. They are pictures of child life drawn with a delicate and sympathetic hand. "Mum Fidgets" is amusing and less wildly improbable than "The Two Richards," in which Miss Milman is scarcely at her best.

The Thirsty Sword: a Story of the Norse Invasion of Scotland. By Robert Leighton. (Blackie.) Mr. Leighton has broken new ground, and, with the aid of the printer and the designer (Mr. Alfred Pearce), has produced a volume which will attract the boys. He deals with the invasion of the Western Isles of Scotland in the thirteenth century by Hakon, King of Norway, and has blended fiction and history together in a skilful way. The introduction of a couple of maps is both useful and astute, as they help to give the story an additional degree of vraisemblance, and to counterbalance the marvels and mysteries with which the pages abound. As an antiquary's picture of a remote age, Mr. Leighton's work may be full of blemishes; but as a vigorous tale of doughty deeds and simple virtues—as well as of uncanny creatures—it will secure for itself no small popularity, and will deserve it.

Spitewinter. By Helen Shipton. (S.P.C.K.) The authoress is a well-known and esteemed purveyor of children's fiction, and accordingly we expect good work from her hands. Spitewinter does not rank with her more elaborate efforts, but the story is decidedly pleasing and well told. In its course a question of casuistry crops up, which has been frequently utilised by fiction writers—viz., the obligation of a man who has, as he supposes (though his supposition is wrong), committed the crime of murder to give himself up to justice and so exonerate a suspected person. The duty is not in this instance so hampered by other obligations as to seem impossible; and so the problem, such as it is, is both ethically and readily solved. Eunice Goodwin is a charming heroine, and her crusty but genuine old father is well drawn. Healthy in tone and entertaining in narrative, this book is one to be by all means commended.

Cousin Isabel. By Marion Andrews. (Gardner, Darton & Co.) This is another addition to the many stories based upon the Siege of Londonderry, or at all events taking that exciting episode as an historical background. The actual incidents of the siege are interwoven into the life of "Cousin Isabel" and her relations with a fair amount of skill, and the story is not wholly unworthy of its sensational and heroic environment. It must, however, be regarded as no small tribute to Lord Macaulay's picturesque history of the same events, that it renders almost every other reproduction of it comparatively tame and spiritless. The authoress of Cousin Isabel has, however, attained a more than average success.

THE boy who wishes to run away to sea will probably act promptly if he reads Steady Your Helm! by W. C. Metcalfe (Nisbet). It is crammed with adventures which befall two schoolboys. They make a voyage to China, and discover the skeleton of an uncle who has been thoughtful enough to leave his private papers near him. Then the bones tumble asunder as in a pantomime; but all ends happily. The tone of the book is excellent. The scenes at school are weak and sufficiently fanciful. Every now and then the diction of the story is ludicrous. Who ever heard a boy grumble because "he was classed in the category of idle fellows?" Some of the ruffians might have sailed with Mr. Stevenson, and this is a high recommendation.

New Relations. By Emma Marshall. (Nisbet.) A new story by this popular authoress will be welcomed by girls. Like all Mrs. Marshall's books, this is pleasantly and brightly written. The dialogue is easy and natural; and the characters are well drawn, though we are inclined to think that the stage is rather overcrowded. Notwithstanding this, we can cordially recommend New Relations as a gift book for girls.

St. Dunstan's Clock. By E. Ward. (Seeley.) In this historical tale for children Miss Ward has broken entirely new ground. The story of the great fire of London in 1666 is admirably told, and much insight is given into the ways and manner of life of the shopkeepers in our great city in the seventeenth century. The illustrations are unusually good, and in every way it is a book to be recommended.

A Rough Road. By Mrs. G. Linnaeus Banks. (Blackie.) We rather fancy we have met with this story before under another title; and the supposition, if true, conveys a disagreeable suspicion that "gift books," purporting to be fresh from the author's pen and the printer's type, are in reality products of a bygone "season," with a new title-page and cover. Whether this be so or not, there is no reason in this case why the story should not have achieved immediate success, for it is decidedly entertaining as well as instructive. It tells us—to use the authoress's supplementary title, "How the Boy makes a Man of Himself." The boy is Robert Wallis, who is driven from home by the severity of his schoolmaster father, and who earns his living by trading with needles. The authoress describes the boy's trials and privations with a skill and realistic pathos which could not easily be bettered. The road is decidedly rough, but "it is a long lane that has no turning;" and it ends with the customary extravagantly good fortune which in story books is reserved for good and perseveringly honest boys.

Lilla Thorn's Voyage. By Grace Stebbing. (Nisbet.) We must confess to a feeling of disappointment after reading this book. We remember some capital stories from Miss Stebbing's pen, such as That Aggravating School Girl; but the present one seems to us both feeble and unnatural. Lilla Thorn is a small child with an immense mass of fair hair (which plays an important part in the story), who undertakes a long sea voyage practically alone, though nominally under the charge of some friends. Her numerous adventures on board ship, her rather unnatural conversations, and the crowning excitement of a storm at sea, make up the story. It is a harmless but unnecessary production, and we are sorry to be unable to commend the illustrations.

Mrs. Lupton's Lodgings. By Laura M. Lane. (Partridge.) This is an extremely sentimental story, the events of which oscillate between Mrs. Lupton's lodgings and the British Museum. The characters, one and all, are vividly depicted; indeed they are so real that they may not improbably have been drawn from life. The story has also the advantage of being well illustrated, the head and tail pieces being scraps of views partly from the galleries of the museum, partly from spots in the neighbourhood. This is an employment of photography in the artistic adornment of books of which we are likely to see a large development in the future. The effect of these pictorial scraps in giving a local habitation and a homely reality to the fictitious incidents of a story is unquestionable.

Another Man's Burden. By Austin Clare. (S.P.C.K.) Healthily written and suitable to a parish library. Christopher is a sturdy, honest, north country workman with good stuff in him; and, if Clara be more refined and cultivated than most of her class, she is not impossible, and is a worthy ideal for girls to set before them.

ANOTHER clergyman, the Rev. G. E. Mason, who together with Rev. C. Bodington was sent by the late Archbishop of York to preach missions in New Zealand, gives a sensible account of his expedition in Round the Round World (S.P.C.K.). His impressions of scenery, life, and character are brief and to the point; and colonial religion as here painted will surprise many. Mr. Mason has a keen eye for flowers and natural beauty, and his straightforward narrative would form an excellent companion to anyone making the grand tour of our own days.

MR. E. A. MARTIN publishes a little volume of essays on familiar points of natural history, especially geological subjects, under the title, Amidst Nature's Realms (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.). They are neither better nor worse than many such collections which appeal year after year to young students.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will shortly publish a volume entitled, National Life and Character by Dr. C. H. Pearson (formerly of Oriel College, and late of Melbourne). It is an attempt to investigate the tendency of events, in a rather remote future, on the assumption that there are no great political convulsions, but that causes now beginning to operate receive full effect. The author believes that the higher races of mankind have reached pretty nearly the full limit of expansion; that as nations are confined more and more to their existing limits, State Socialism will prevail everywhere; that this tendency will be favoured by the general extension of military service and by the growth of large towns; that the new society will gain by an increased intensity of patriotic sentiment; but that family life will be to some extent broken up, and that individual character will lose in self-reliance more than it gains in sobriety.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will shortly publish the Japanese play written by Sir Edwin Arnold during his recent residence in Tokyo. It is entitled Adzuma; or, The Japanese Wife; and it aims at telling, in dramatic form and with faithful adherence to native manners, a popular mediæval story of feminine virtue. Though composed as a literary work, it is hoped that it may hereafter be acted on the American and English stage.

MESSRS. EYRE AND SPOTTISWOODE have in the press a fourth volume of the new series of State Trials, covering the period from 1839 to 1843. It will thus include the trials of the Chartists, Frost, Feargus O'Connor, and Thomas Cooper (who died only the other day); of Oxford, Francis, and Bean, for shooting at the Queen; of Lord Cardigan, before the House of Lords, for his duel; and of Moxon, for publishing Shelley's Queen Mab.

DR. JESSOPP'S Studies by a Recluse will be ready next week. The titles of the essays are as follows: "St. Albans and her Historian," "Bury St. Edmunds," "On the Edge of the East Anglian Holy Land," "The Origin of the Towns," "The Land and its Owners," "Random Roaming," "The Real Old Country Gentleman," "A Suggestion for my Titles."

THE next volume in Mr. Archibald Constable's "Oriental Miscellany" will be a reprint of Broughton's Letters written in a Mahratta Camp during the year 1809, with coloured illustrations, a map, and notes. Sir M. E. Grant Duff, the son of the historian of the Mahrattas, contributes an introduction.

MRS. FISHER (Miss Arabella Buckley) has written an elementary book on English history, which will appear immediately in Messrs. Macmillan & Co.'s series of "History Primers."

MR. H. C. ARNOLD FORSTER has been for some time past engaged in the preparation of a series of Historical Readers, designed to meet the most recent requirements of the New Code. The books will be issued by Messrs. Cassell & Co., under the title of Things New and Old; or, Stories from English History; and the earlier Standards are nearly ready for publication.

AMONG the works which Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will publish in the Christmas and New Year season are Old Rabbit, the London, and other Sorcerers, edited by Miss Mary Alicia Owen, with an introduction by Mr. Charles G. Leland, and pictures by Miss Owen and Mr. Louis Wain; Seventy Years of Life in the Victorian Era, embracing a travelling record in Australia, New Zealand, and America, by Mr. J. Vaughan Hughes; Kelt or Gael, a comparative essay, by Mr. T. de Courcy Atkins; St. George and the Dragon, a world-wide legend localised by Miss Sarah Ann Matson, illustrated in outline by Miss Claudia May Southby; Three Generations of Englishmen, by Mrs. Janet Ross, in a new edition entirely revised and greatly altered, with a portrait of Lady Duff Gordon, by Mr. G. F. Watts, now for the first time published.

IN the "Independent Novel" series, Poor Lady Massy, by Miss H. Rutherford Russell, will appear; and in "The Pseudonym Library," Colette, by Philippe St. Hilaire, the author of Jean de Kerdren; also new editions of The Revolution in Tanneur's Lane and Miriam's Schooling, both by Mark Rutherford, and edited by Reuben Shapcott; an illustrated child's book, The Princess Heliotrope, by Miss V. Pendred; a new edition of Purple Blossoms, by Miss R. M. Kettle; and the second volume of Our Earth, by Mr. George Ferguson.

MR. UNWIN has also in preparation The Heart of the Wild Sierras, by the Rev. G. W. White. This work recalls a recent sojourn of the author in Spain. Mr. White has conversed with muleteers, and taken down from their lips a number of songs and melodies.

THE Guild and School of Handicraft announces for publication a Christmas story entitled From Whitechapel to Camelot, by Mr. C. R. Ashbee, with illustrations by M. or N.

THE next volume of Messrs. Henry & Co.'s "Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humour" will be His Lordship, written by Mr. G. B. Burgin, the assistant editor of the Idler.

MESSRS. JAMES BLACKWOOD & Co., of Lovell's-court, have in the press The Maid of Fleet: a Love Romance of the Nineteenth Century, by Mr. George McKeand, with illustrations by Mr. John Faed and Mr. Thomas Faed.

A VOLUME of verse by Mr. R. Alleyne Harris, entitled The Twofold Life, is announced for immediate publication, by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MR. WILLIAM BROCKIE, a Sunderland journalist and author of several local works, has now in the press a volume to be entitled Sunderland Worthies: Natives, Residents, and Visitors.

MR. KINETON PARKES, of the Nicholson Institute, Leek, proposes to publish a series of booklets, in a very limited edition, to be called the "Leek Press Papers." The first will be an address delivered lately at the Leek Town Hall, by Mr. Walter Crane, upon "The Relation of Art to Education and Social Life."

THE Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge announce a new edition of Doris, by the Rev. Mr. Jessopp, the first edition of 5000 having run out in a little over three weeks.

THE same publishers also announce a new edition of Miss Rossetti's Face of the Deep, which was published a few months ago.

A SECOND edition of The Veiled Hand, by Mr. Frederick Wicks, which was issued last month by Messrs. Elen. Remington & Co., is now in the press, and will be ready before Christmas.

HERR BODE, well known in Germany as a student of Goethe literature, having recently died, his unique collection of artistic illustrations to Goethe's "Faust" and the Faust legend has passed into the hands of Dr. Alexander Tille, of Queen Margaret College, Glasgow, who will ultimately bequeath it to the University of Leipzig. Meanwhile, he is about to bring his treasure to London for one evening, when, at the rooms of the Medical Society, 11, Chandos-street, Cavendish-square, they will be exhibited, with comments, on Friday, December 16, at an evening meeting of the English Goethe Society. Prof. Herkomer has been asked to take the chair. The collection comprises about four hundred pieces, mostly original engravings, in some cases photographs after prints. Among the artists represented are Peter Cornelius, Kanlbach, Retzsch, Nehrlich, Ronewka, Seibert, Kreling, L. Mayer, Makart, and others. Cards of invitation may be obtained from Dr. Eugene Oswald, secretary to the Society, 49, Blomfield-road, Maida-hill.

THE Rev. Wentworth Webster has reprinted from the Bulletin of the Bayonne Historical Society a paper entitled "Sur Quelques Inscriptions du Pays Basque et des Environs." He does not profess to have made a complete collection, but only to record such as have caught his eye during a residence of many years. One or two may go back to Roman times, but the majority are quite modern, being written on houses, sundials, clocks, &c.—only very few are in Basque. The following, on a sundial at Ossès, is worthy of being added to Mrs. Gatty's catalogue; orhoit hilcea—"bear death in mind." A sea-tower on the Spanish side of the frontier records that it was erected by King Philip, in 1598, ad reprimenda piratum lutoecinia, which our author thinks may refer to the ravages of Sir Francis Drake. A fragment of the substructure of the guillotine near St. Jean de Luz has an inscription which apparently reads: "La terreur chasse la tyrannie." Mr. Webster says that he has been unable to discover any traces whatever of the Arabs, either in inscriptions, words, or architecture. Incidentally, he gives some good examples of popular etymology. Fuenterrabia is sometimes interpreted to mean "the fountain of the Arabs." But the Basque name is Ondarrabia—"two sand banks," which was corrupted first to unda rapida, and then to fons rapidus. So the Celtic name, Llwybrdun, in Galicia, properly translated as castello do caminho, has become Libredon. Finally, Mr. Webster has a word about the inscriptions in all languages with which M. Antoine d'Abbadie, the traveller and savant, has covered his house.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE English Illustrated Magazine will shortly change hands, Messrs. Macmillan & Co. having disposed of the copyright to Mr. Edward Arnold. The magazine will be published as usual by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. until the March number, after which it will be issued by Mr. Edward Arnold.

OWING to the strong interest shown in Mr. Stopford Brooke's criticism of Lord Tennyson, and to Prof. H. S. Foxwell's paper on the monetary conference now sitting at Brussels, a reprint of the December number of the Contemporary Review has been found necessary.

THE Christmas number of the Strand Magazine will contain an article on the Queen's studies in Hindustani and her warm patronage of Oriental learning, written by Moulvi Rafi-uddin Ahmad. The Queen, who has of late entered upon the acquisition of her new language with zeal, has been pleased to copy two pages out of her Indian diary, both in Hindustani and English, to be facsimiled in the article, and has also perused and revised the portions relating to her studies.

THE January number of the Young Man, which commences a new volume, will contain a complete story by Mr. Barry Pain; some Reminiscences of Browning, by the Rev. H. R.

Haweis; an article on "How to Study Astronomy," by Sir Robert S. Ball; and a character sketch of the Duke of York, by one of his oldest friends, with portraits, facsimile autograph, and other illustrations. Dr. Conan Doyle writes upon "The Best Book of the Year"; Mr. George Manville Fenn commences a new serial story; Mr. H. W. Massingham shows how a young man can make a living by journalism; Mr. F. C. Gould gives some information about "The Art of Caricature," with specimens of his work; and there are other articles by Dr. Stalker, the Rev. W. J. Dawson, Mr. Herbert Paul, &c. The programme for 1893 promises contributions from the Bishop of Ripon, Archdeacon Farrar, Archdeacon Sinclair, Mr. Augustine Birrell, Mr. G. J. Holyoake, Mr. Fred Henderson, Dr. Clifford, the Rev. C. A. Berry, the Dean of Norwich, Mr. R. F. Horton, &c.

A CHARACTER sketch of Mrs. Gladstone, by the Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, will appear in the Young Woman for January, accompanied by a new portrait and sketches of the principal rooms at Hawarden.

AMONG the original articles to appear in the forthcoming issue of the Religious Review of Reviews will be "The Constitution of the Church," II., by Canon Mathews; "The Gospel of the Incarnation," a sermon by the Rev. J. W. Diggle; "The Problem of Poverty," I., by the Rev. A. Finlayson; and "The Church and Poor Law Reform," by the Rev. J. Cairns. The frontispiece will be a portrait of the Bishop of Winchester.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. WILLIAM RIDGEWAY, professor of Greek at Queen's College, Galway, and author of The Origin of Metallic Currency and Weight Standards, published this year by the Cambridge University Press, has been elected to the Disney chair of archaeology at Cambridge, in succession to Canon Browne. The term is for five years, and the duties do not involve regular residence.

MR. FRED. BROWN, head master of the Westminster School of Art, has been appointed to the Slade chair of fine art at University College, London, vacant by the resignation of M. Legros.

PROF. THEODORE AUFRECHT, of Bonn—who compiled a catalogue of the Sanskrit MSS. in the Bodleian as long ago as 1864—has now offered to catalogue the Sanskrit MSS. in the University Library at Cambridge. He proposes to reside in Cambridge for the purpose.

THE general board of studies at Cambridge have approved Mr. J. H. Middleton, Slade professor of fine art and director of the Fitzwilliam Museum, for the degree of Doctor in Letters.

THE following have been elected to honorary fellowships at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge: Mr. A. H. Green, professor of geology at Oxford; Dr. Arthur Ransome, of Manchester; and Mr. G. J. Romanes.

IN response to the memorial already referred to in the ACADEMY, the Council at Cambridge has proposed the appointment of a syndicate "to consider what changes, if any, are advisable and practicable in the times of holding tripos examinations."

At the meeting of the Ethical Society on Sunday next, at 7.30 p.m., at Essex Hall, Strand, Prof. J. Estlin Carpenter will deliver a lecture upon "Moral Ideas in the Book of Isaiah: Three Stages in Ethical Conception."

MR. HENRY FROWDE will shortly publish a book entitled Chapters on Alliterative Verse: a dissertation for the degree of Doctor of Letters, by John Lawrence (M.A. Lond.), reader in English at the University of Prague.

THE University of Cambridge has granted copies of certain books printed at the University Press to the following public libraries: Barking, Clapham, Hull, Lewisham, the People's Palace, Watford, Westminster, and York.

ABOUT this time last year, we noticed the appearance of Minerva: Jahrbuch der Universitäten der Welt, compiled by Dr. R. Kukula, municipal librarian at Klagenfurt, and Herr Karl Trübner, the well-known publisher of Strassburg. We have now received the second issue, with the sub-title changed to Jahrbuch der Gelehrten Welt, and augmented in size more than twofold. This has been effected not only by including other learned bodies besides universities proper, but also by adding some account of their organisation, financial details, &c. Further, help has been sought and obtained from foreigners—such as Prof. Holland, of Oxford, and Dr. Sandys, of Cambridge—so that our criticisms on the first issue are disarmed. Berlin now fills twenty-five pages, and Paris twenty-three, but London only fifteen. To take the last, not only do we have a brief description of London University, with the list of its examiners, and the teaching staff of University and King's Colleges, but also something about the British Museum, the Science and Art Department, the Public Record Office, the Royal Society, &c., &c. Perhaps the only important institutions omitted are the Inns of Court, Gresham College, and the colleges for women. What was before little more than a classified catalogue of university professors, has now become a guide to the learned institutions of the world, and as indispensable as the Almanac de Gotha, the Statesman's Year Book, or Whitaker. The attractiveness of the volume is greatly enhanced by an elegant white binding—which will stand the test of rough handling, though not of dirty fingers—and by an admirable etching of Prof. Mommsen for frontispiece.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

VENUS ANADYOMENE.

(Sandro Botticelli speaks.)*

Hush'd are the myrtles, a stillness
Broods o'er the land; 'tis the hush,
Silent and grey, of the dawn:
Only the sea lips the marge,
Languidly stirs in the sedges,
Ever, afar, lips the land till it melts into sea.

Breathless, a pageant, a mystery
Holds spell-bound the earth—
Men are sleeping, and women
Dream of their passion and travail—
Secret and white as the sea-mist Kypri the Virgin, the Mother, steals up from the sea.

Still; in the grey of the dawning,
Dewy her eyes and her hair,
Wistful, dewy for birth;
Timid she droops, and her tresses
Veil white limbs; with breasts
Shrieking, immaculate, virgin, she looms in the sea.

Now, in the dusk of the myrtles,
Flush'd Aurora, with flowers
Wreath'd in her vesture, and hands
Eager to deck her, with roses
Strews all the shore: and on roses, Languid and rapt, Cytherea stands wet with the sea.

Hail! Maiden Mother, that bringest
Life and the breath of the spring—
Violet and cowslip and thyme!
Clear calls the bird in the thicket,
Wanton the lambs in the pasture:
Kypri the soul of the world on the breath of the sea!

MAURICE HEWLETT.

* In La Nascita Venere, Uffizzi, Florence.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Antiquary still continues its notes on the archaeology of our provincial museums. This month we have a paper by Mr. Ward on that at Hereford. Lacking as this collection is in orderly arrangement, it contains some things of value and more of educational importance. The cast of the tympanum of the Norman door-head at Fownthorpe is, for purposes of instruction, as good as the original. The central group of figures has been thought to be a representation of the Holy Trinity. It is here suggested that the central figure is not God the Father, but the Blessed Virgin, with the infant Jesus on her lap. If the engraving that accompanies the text be trustworthy, this is evidently the true interpretation. A winged lion and a bird act, to use heraldic language, as supporters to the central figure. These may be two of the evangelistic symbols. The lion is of graceful and noble proportions; but the bird is small, more like a dove than an eagle. In the same collection is preserved an iron bell which is asserted to be Anglo-Saxon. We should be glad to know how its date has been ascertained. Mr. R. Munro contributes a paper on the discovery of a lake-dwelling in Somersetshire. It has already appeared in The Times, but its archaeological value is so great as fully to justify its reprint in The Antiquary. We must not conclude without a passing notice of the editor's paper on the mediæval embroidery preserved at Hardwick Hall.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CHAMPION, Edme. Voltaire: Etudes critiques. Paris: Flammarion, 3 fr. 50 c.
- COLEF, J. F. La filiation géologique de toutes les écoles gothiques. Paris: Baudry, 100 fr.
- COMPAYRÉ, G. L'Évolution intellectuelle et morale de l'enfant. Paris: Hachette, 10 fr.
- DARF Russland e. Angriff auf den Bosphorus wagen? Eine militärisch-polit. Studie. Wien: Verlagsanstalt "Reichswehr", 7 M.
- FRIZZONI, G. La Galleria Morelli in Bergamo. Milan: Hoepli, 18 fr.
- GALLAND, G. Der Grosse Kurfürst u. Moritz v. Nassau, der Brasilianer. Studien zur brandenburg. u. holländ. Kunstgeschichte. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Keller, 4 M.
- GEFFROY, Gustave. La Vie artistique. Paris: Dentu, 5 fr.
- GLAJEUX, Bédard des. Les passions criminelles: leurs causes et leurs remèdes. Paris: Plon, 3 fr. 50 c.
- HEBERL'S, F. Briefwechsel m. Freunden u. berühmten Zeitgenossen. 2. Bd. Berlin: Grote, 15 M.
- JACOB, H. Kamerun u. Sudan. Berlin: Bunge, 3 M.
- MORILLON, Paul. Le Roman en France depuis 1610 jusqu'à nos jours. Paris: Masson, 5 fr.
- TAOLARD, Eugène. Mémoires d'un Inspecteur des Finances. Paris: Charles, 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY.

- TEXTE U. UNTERSUCHUNGEN ZUR Geschichte der alchristlichen Literatur. 8. Bd. 1. u. 2. Hft. Gnostische Schriften in koptischer Sprache aus dem Codex Brucianus. Hrsg. v. C. Schmidt. Leipzig: Hinrichs, 22 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ALBERT, P. Matthias Düring, c. deutscher Minorit d. 15 Jahrh. Stuttgart: Ochs, 2 M. 50 Pf.
- ATTINGER, G. Essai sur l'ycurgue et ses institutions. Neuchâtel: Attinger, 2 fr.
- CODR. traditionum westfalicarum. IV. Münster: Theising, 10 M.
- FEILDEGEN, S. Smith u. Turgot. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte u. Theorie der Nationalökonomie. Wien: Holder, 3 M. 50 Pf.
- INVENTARE D. Frankfurter Stadtarchivs. 3. Bd., eingeleitet v. R. Jung. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Vöcker, 3 M. 50 Pf.
- KORTFLEISCH, v. Der Feldzug gegen der Loire u. die Einnahme v. Vendôme am 15. u. 16. Decbr. 1870. Berlin: Mittler, 3 M. 60 Pf.
- MAZZATINTI, G. Inventari dei manoscritti delle Biblioteche d'Italia. Vol. 2. Turin: Loescher, 9 M.
- PHILIPPOVICH, E. v. Grundriss der politischen Oekonomie. 1. Bd. Allgemeine Volkswirtschaftslehre. Freiburg-i.-B.: Mohr, 8 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- (BASTIAN, A.) Wie das Volk denkt. Ein Beitrag zur Beantwortung socialer Fragen auf Grundlage ethn. Elementargedanken in der Lehre vom Menschen. Berlin: Felber, 5 M.
- BERNARD-LAVERGNE. L'Évolution sociale. Paris: Fischbacher, 3 fr.
- CALDI, G. Metodologia generale della interpretazione scientifica. Vol. I. La logica di Aristotele. Turin: Loescher, 10 fr.

ERGEBNISSE der in dem Indischen Ocean von Mitte Juli bis Anfang Novbr. 1889 ausgeführten Plankton-Expedition der Humboldt-Stiftung. Hrsg. v. V. Hensen. 1. Bd. A., u. 2. Bd. K. d. Kiel: Lipsius, 38 M.

HERTLING, G. Frhr. v. John Locke u. die Schule v. Cambridge. Freiburg-i.-B.: Herder, 5 M.

(LEUCKART, H.) Festschrift zum 70. Geburtstag R. L.'s. Leipzig: Engelmann, 120 M.

MOSCHOISY. L'Inde et les Hindous: Notes et impressions. Paris: Fischbacher, 4 fr.

PERGER, W. Geschichte der deutschen Mystik im Mittelalter. 3. Th. Tauler. Der Gottesfreunde vom Oberlande. Merswin. Leipzig: Dörfling, 3 M.

RICHER, Ch. Travaux du laboratoire. T. 1. Système nerveux. Chaleur animale. Paris: Alcan, 12 fr.

PHILOLOGY.

- PERTSCH, W. Die orientalischen Handschriften der Herzogl. Bibliothek zu Gotha. 5. Bd. Gotha: Pertsch, 20 M.
- RABR, A. Die Redaktion der Demosthenischen Kranzrede. Göttingen: Dieterich, 1 M. 20 Pf.
- VERBODEN, aegyptische aus dem Königl. Museum zu Berlin. Griechische Urkunden. 1.—3. Hft. Berlin: Weidmann, 2 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. W. B. SCOTT'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

Aberdeen: Dec. 4, 1892.

I hate literary squabbles, and I should be sorry to add anything to the bitterness which seems to have been roused in some quarters by the publication of Mr. W. B. Scott's Autobiographic Notes. But seeing that, as Mr. Scott's literary executor, I, and I alone, am responsible for what has been put in print, I must protest when charges of malice and uncharitableness are supported by reading into the autobiographer's narrative covert meanings, of which the plain words contain not the faintest suggestion. I do not claim that my discretion as an editor is perfect, nor do I seek to maintain that my old friend was a saint or that he had not a keen sense of the ridiculous; but I think I may fairly claim that his charity and my discretion should be judged by what is actually set forth. I am ready to apologise for any pain that may have been inflicted by my carelessness, but I cannot accept responsibility for offences that are not in the book but in the perverse misconstructions of its interpreters.

I must thank your reviewer, Mr. Sharp, for his courteous references to myself. But his zeal on behalf of friends whom he conceives to be injuriously glanced at has misled him into some trivial misunderstandings, and one or two very serious ones. The worst of these is his suggestion that the autobiographer has cast a slur on the memory of Miss Siddal, "a woman against whose name there was never any taint of scandal." This is simply monstrous. The words on which Mr. Sharp founds are—

"Miss Siddal, with whom Gabriel, in his innocent adolescence, fell in love and married after a long attachment."

Omitting "after a long attachment," underlining "in his innocent adolescence," and construing these words along with some "tactless phrasing in a later passage," Mr. Sharp hints at—he himself knows what. I have read the "tactless phrasing" again and again: I have looked at every reference to Miss Siddal, and I cannot conceive which of two or three possible vile innuendoes Mr. Sharp has in his mind. There is none such in Mr. Scott's narrative. He would not have written, and I would not have printed, anything of the kind.

There is another perverse misconception of a serious kind, against which I must protest. "At page 181" Mr. Sharp says, giving specific references with impressive confidence,

"and more particularly and offensively at page 305, there is what can only be characterised as an outrage upon Mr. William Rossetti and his wife, upon Miss Christina Rossetti, and other relatives and intimate friends. The idea that Rossetti was without loving attendance and affectionate and solicitous friends in his latest years is preposterous."

The outrage is Mr. Sharp's own, and it is hardly ingenious. Nothing strikes the unbiased reader of Mr. Scott's Notes more than the evidences they give of the beautiful, natural, unaffected affection subsisting among the members of the Rossetti family, and, in particular, of the untiring brotherly service of Mr. W. Rossetti. It is the one relief in what Mr. Scott calls the "tragic background" of D. G. Rossetti's life; and "Scotus," as his old friends called him, would not have been the tender-hearted man that I take him to have been if he had shown himself insensible of it. For obvious reasons I cannot dwell upon this: it would be an outrage, indeed, to do so; but the words used by Mr. Scott in closing his tragic story are enough to show how unfounded is Mr. Sharp's suggestion:

"The picture I have drawn had been a painful one to witness in the original, and has been only less so to indicate in narrative, even carefully omitting the most repulsive elements of the scene. At Birington he lived four months or more, till the 9th of April; but the presence of his mother and sister, Christina, cleared the air of the sick-room, and made the period sacred."

I turn to the pages indicated by Mr. Sharp. Nothing but the most forced construction, the most arbitrary separation from the context, can find there the meaning that Mr. Sharp reads into them. The plain reference is to the absence from Rossetti's house of certain friends of the old circle who used to be there. The old man, visiting his friend of thirty years' standing, misses the old familiar faces. Was there anything so very "outrageous" in his thinking that the new friends whom he found there did not quite make up for the loss of the old? It is natural enough that the new friends, among whom he mentions Mr. Sharp himself, and Mr. Theodore Watts, should not think so. But concerning these, Mr. Scott neither says nor insinuates that they were not sufficiently assiduous in their attention. On one occasion he mentions that he found Rossetti alone, and ill, and complaining. But on another of the pages to which Mr. Sharp refers, I find:—

"Happily Watts has been invaluable since then in many ways; fascinated by Rossetti, ill as he was, and always ready and able to serve him."

Distasteful as the subject is, there is one other grave misunderstanding that I must notice before passing to more trivial matters:

"The allegation," Mr. Sharp says, "that Rossetti's success as a poet was due, or partly due, to dishonest criticism is baseless as it is infamous."

Mr. Sharp must pardon me if I point out to him, leaving him to choose his own adjective for his own assertion, that there is no such "allegation," or even remotest hint, in Mr. Scott's Notes. On the contrary, Mr. Scott suggests that Rossetti's poems would have been more "successful" if he had been less morbidly sensitive to criticism, and consequently less anxious to have them reviewed by "friends and henchmen." Mr. Scott's own admiration of Rossetti's genius in poetry is again and again expressed, and everywhere implied. He believed the poems to be capable of making their own way, but perhaps had not equal confidence in the wisdom of the "friends and henchmen." And he records that both he and Mr. W. Rossetti used to warn the poet against "diplomatizing" for friendly reviews. Surely this is very different from alleging that "Rossetti's success as a poet was due to dishonest criticism."

In this connexion, Mr. Sharp accuses the autobiographer of "misstating the date when Mr. Watts began to write criticisms in the weekly papers." I am not likely to undervalue the importance of this event, seeing that I had the honour of being Mr. Watts's first editor; but if Mr. Sharp turns again to the passage that he quotes, and looks at the previous page, he will see that the date is correctly indicated as 1875. But I admit that the dates in Mr. Scott's reminiscences are somewhat puzzling. He confesses and apologises for this himself, and does not pretend to strict chronological sequence.

With regard to a few trivial anecdotes about Mr. Swinburne, which I allowed to stand in the Notes, Mr. Sharp implicitly accepts Mr. Swinburne's violent impeachment of their accuracy:—

"Will it easily be believed," he says, "that the several anecdotes and remarks about Mr. Swinburne's boyhood and youth are either wholly false or so misrepresented as to be false in implication? Mr. Swinburne, however, can speak—and has spoken—for himself."

Yes; Mr. Swinburne has spoken, and we know how Mr. Swinburne can speak when he is angry. If anybody else had vituperated a dead man in such gross and unmeasured terms, one might have felt some answering indignation; but as it is, I can only wonder by what amazing freak of super-irritable imagination Mr. Swinburne has contrived to distort anecdotes so trivial and harmless in intention into offences so stupendous and revolutionary. Of course I owe Mr. Swinburne an apology for printing anything about him at all; and, in tendering it, I can only say that if I had seen in the trifling little reminiscences anything tending to present him in a ridiculous light, I would not have sent them to press. But what are the reminiscences? What, as a matter of fact, does Mr. Scott say? There are only three allusions to Mr. Swinburne altogether, and only two that he complains of as adding a "new terror" to his life. Mr. Scott recalls that when he first met Mr. Swinburne he was struck with his boyish appearance and boyish manners, and that, "not yet recognising in this unique youth the greatest rhythmical genius in English poetry," he was inclined rather to wonder at him as a spoilt child. It seemed to me, and I still think, that if the record of this impression thirty-five years after, when Mr. Swinburne is the acknowledged chief of our poets, tells against anybody or anything, it is only against the reminiscencer's want of discernment in not being able to penetrate at once beneath superficial appearances. The whole point of the reminiscence is the contrast between the outer youth as he appeared at first sight and the genius that was afterwards revealed. As regards the accessories of so simple an anecdote, I confess that I did not think it worth while to make minute inquiry, and Mr. Swinburne's corrections are so wrapt up in his singularly fine and elaborate prose that I cannot yet see where the "mendacity" and "malignity," and other terrific offences, come in. He does not deny that he met Mr. Scott at Wallington about this time, which was the summer or autumn of 1857. I do not see how he can pretend to know what were Mr. Scott's first impressions of him. He retorts furiously that he was not a schoolboy but an undergraduate: Mr. Scott does not say that he was a schoolboy, but only that he looked like one; indeed, Mr. Scott says that he was about to enter Balliol. Mr. Scott guessed his age at 18, but says that he gave the impression of greater youth: it seems that as a matter of fact he was twenty. Oh, the "malignant impertinence of servile invention"! Mr. Scott speaks of "a little fellow on a long-tailed pony": Mr. Swinburne retorts that "Scotus" could not ride. "Scotus" does not say that he could: it is from a post-chaise that he professes to have first seen the youthful poet "turn and wind a fiery Pegasus"; but it is no wonder, if such were his sedentary habits, that in his old age his "habitual condition of mind" was "a state of spiritual disease in which falsehood is to the sufferer what alcohol is to the dipsomaniac." But the "prize for French," the copy of Victor Hugo, which this depraved old man imagines may have had such an influence on the destiny of English letters? I really cannot make out whether Mr. Swinburne wishes us to believe that he did or that he did not receive a prize for

French, or whether this was or was not the identical book that he had under his arm on the real or imaginary occasion: and I agree with him that the "point is too pitifully insignificant for consideration."

As regards the other anecdote, about Mr. Swinburne's reception of Mr. Scott's compliment in his Dedicatio Poetica, I am glad to find that there is no conflict of recollections. Mr. Swinburne repeats in effect what Mr. Scott records, that he accepted the allusion as "a compliment to his personal appearance." Only he considers it necessary to explain at elaborate length that he meant this as a joke or jokelet, and to assure us that this Scotorum Scotissimus or auto-Scot did not see it in its true inwardness. I have my doubts on this last point, but Mr. Swinburne must know; and it certainly deserves to be branded as "the last, worst, and most comical instance" of the malignant old man's "infirmity."

Mr. Sharp, who is generous enough to admit that Mr. Scott's Notes, with all their faults, "are a fascinating addition to autobiographical literature," and that "the author shows one essential quality of the successful prose writer—that of the power to depict a scene with swift touch and bold outlines," counsels me to "prune the two volumes of their misstatements." I am most willing to prune, but I must first have the misstatements pointed out. Mr. Sharp says that he is familiar with "the authentic record, even though it be for the most part at second hand." But I am afraid he is not quite cautious enough in his acceptance of authorities. Perhaps Mr. Theodore Watts will yet assist me. But I could not undertake to "amplify," as Mr. Sharp also advises.

W. MINTO.

P.S.—By the way, Mr. Sharp says that Mr. Scott confided to him "on the spot" the true explanation of certain mysterious sounds heard at Penkill Castle one autumn after Mr. Rossetti's departure, and avers his fear that "the episode has been wittingly clad in mystery and never undressed again!" Would Mr. Sharp mind telling what the true explanation is, because though I often discussed the mystery with Mr. Scott and Miss Boyd, and we were all agreed that there must be some physical explanation, we could never hit upon a satisfactory one?

"COUVADE"—THE GENESIS OF AN ANTHROPOLOGICAL TERM.

Oxford: Dec. 6, 1892.

In the ACADEMY of November 19, Dr. Murray renews his attempt of October 29 to prove that my introduction of the word couvade into English is an abuse.

This time he brings in the authority of the distinguished French philologist, M. Julien Vinson, whose essay on "La Couvade chez les Basques" appears in the Etudes de Linguistique et d'Ethnographie of Hovelacque and Vinson (Paris: 1878). Dr. Murray says he has been interested to find that Prof. Vinson had in 1878 reached the same conclusions as himself as to the reputed evidence for the "couvade" in Béarn. These conclusions of Dr. Murray's are, to put them shortly, that the statements of the various authors who have alleged the existence in modern ages in Béarn of the custom of male child-bed, and called it there by the name couvade, are no evidence, the story being "a literary or pseudo-scientific myth." It seemed to me surprising that M. Vinson, who knows the subject extremely well and has added much to our knowledge of it, should have committed himself to such an opinion; and when I looked again at his essay, I found that Dr. Murray has misunderstood him. M. Vinson criticises, in my opinion far too adversely, the statements as to the custom among the modern Basques; but when he comes to Béarn he does not deny it there, and accepts the word for it as genuine:

"la plupart des auteurs qui ont parlé de cette coutume étrange l'attribuent aux Béarnais, dont le patois a fourni même le mot caractéristique de couvade." His judgment thus goes to support the usual opinion, which I for one have always held, that couvade—or, as Cordier writes it, coubade—is an old Béarnese term for an old Béarnese custom, which is just what Dr. Murray denies. Nor is M. Vinson the only French writer whom he has treated thus. He declares that M. Bladé, in his Etudes sur l'origine des Basques, called the Béarn couvade story an "imposture historique." This is quite incorrect; for it was about Chaho's Basque stories, and not about the statements as to Béarn at all, that M. Bladé used this expression of disbelief.

This is a matter which touches a far larger public than those who care about the history of a quaint old custom and its name. My own impression, and that of others interested in the New English Dictionary who have spoken to me, is that such extension of its editorial work into independent research is not likely to answer well. If a lexicographer, already overburdened with his duties, hastily takes up outlying philological problems which require for their treatment time and care and knowledge of the subject-matter of each, he will produce work going beyond the needs and possibilities of a dictionary, but not far enough to count for much as research. I do not like having to remonstrate thus with Dr. Murray, for whose philological ability I have full respect. But in my former letter I seem not to have spoken plainly enough. When I answered his theory (that the word couvade came from a comic poem of 1790) by pointing out that I had long ago given a reference to its occurrence in a French book of 1658, I thought that the matter was settled. Not so; he returns to the fight as if nothing serious had happened, withdraws the comic poet theory, and substitutes a different one, which is another guess. So unconscious is he of the irony of the situation that, at the moment when he is in the act of shifting from one theory disproved to a contradictory one not established, he expresses a wish "that men of science, before making new words or giving new senses to old words, would ask the advice of students of language who may know the history of the old or have a word of counsel as to the form of the new."

I have only to add that I do not intend to write further on this subject.

EDWARD B. TYLOR.

THE OBIT OF ST. COLUMBA.

Tottenham: Dec. 4, 1892.

Many and grievous have been the schisms in the Christian Church with respect to the celebration of the Paschal feast. Nearly all, if not quite all, have received investigation; but it has been reserved to Dr. MacCarthy to discover others in the Alexandrian celebration, or rather, perhaps, I should say, to indicate them in his letter (ACADEMY, December 3).

The Paschal year of the Alexandrians commenced, Dr. MacCarthy tells us in a footnote, wherein he divulges the Canon containing the Easter formula used by me, on March 23. At the present day, Dr. MacCarthy would, I presume, raise no objection to the celebration of Easter on March 22; neither would St. Cyril have raised any in the fifth century. Consequently, when the first of the Paschal moon, the eighth day of March, and the first day of the week coincided, the Alexandrians celebrated their Easter on March 22, which, according to Dr. MacCarthy, was the last day of their Paschal year. In A.D. 604 this occurred; and the Paschal year of the Alexandrians, which was current, according to the computation of Dr. MacCarthy, from March 23, 603, to March 22, 604, witnessed two celebrations of the Paschal feast. The only sanction that could be found for such a proceeding is in the careless observance by the Jews, in early centuries, of two Paschs before the same vernal equinox. In the Paschal year, however, current from March 23, 604, to March 22, 605 (Dr. MacCarthy's computation), there was no celebration of Easter. Can Dr. MacCarthy inform us how the Alexandrians escaped the charge of abominable, and at the same time ridiculous, heresy involved in their having a Paschal year without a Pasch? A schism so formidable could hardly have escaped notice. Will Dr. MacCarthy please explain.

Dr. MacCarthy's conjecture in the same note, that the lunar regular of April is 10, because the Paschal year is ten days old on April 1, is a very crude and a very insufficient one. The Paschal year would at least commence as early as the first possible Easter day, i.e., March 22. On April 1, by Dr. MacCarthy's reckoning, the Paschal year is, in this case, eleven days old; and if his reasoning be correct, namely, that the age of the year in days gives the lunar regular of April, then that regular ought to be 11. But it is not 11. Mirus computandi preceptor, which, being interpreted, is that Dr. MacCarthy has not mastered the bearings of the epacts, does not understand the regulares, and has not subjected his notion respecting these to the strain of the embolisms. Dr. MacCarthy mentions a paper on the aid he derives from the epacts in correcting A.D. misdating in the Ulster Annals. "How far it is effective may be judged from the fact that" Dr. MacCarthy has "amended the Ulster Annals without full knowledge of their fundamental data" in so far as the exact significance of the epact is concerned.

Dr. MacCarthy complains that I have shown in a "roundabout" way what nobody denies, and then proceeds to set the matter out in a direct manner from a Table by omitting the dominical G from the description of the year 580, and by writing "Easter not later than March 25." The discovery of the xiv. of each possible paschal moon can only be made by calculation, and the manner in which I performed that calculation was a necessary one. Dr. MacCarthy ignores the coincidence of British and Irish custom exhibited in the calculation made respecting the year 631. Dr. MacCarthy asserts that "I seem unaware that the reckoning used in Iona down to 716 was admittedly the cycle of eighty-four years." In my letter of November 19 (ACADEMY), I quoted from a chapter in Moore's History of Ireland; if Dr. MacCarthy had read that chapter, he would have found it needless to assume that I was unaware of what had been "admitted." The peculiarity in diction contained in the phrase, "the reckoning used in Iona down to 716 was admittedly," is noteworthy. Dr. MacCarthy is clearly not as certain about the eighty-four years' cycle as he is about the first day of the Alexandrian Paschal year. The monks of Iona either kept Easter by the cycle of eighty-four years or they did not. Dr. MacCarthy, in "admitting" that they did, without submitting proof, is merely wasting time. The eighty-four years' cycle indicated celebrations of Easter on March 22, 23, 24, none of which days would the British and Irish have accepted. In addition to this, the Irish celebrated, when compelled, on the xiii. of the moon. As they did not keep the Easter indicated, how could they have obeyed the cycle, and what benefit will accrue from "admitting" that they did? Dr. MacCarthy's reasoning appears to be that:—I am unaware that he admits (in company with others) that the Irish used the eighty-four year cycle; that Cummián points out the differences between the cycle and the calculation of xix.; consequently, it lies upon me to compute according to the cycle of eighty-four, and until I do this, my conclusion must remain a "nebulous hypothesis."

We can discover the differences between the cycles without the intervention of Cummián, who does not say that the Irish used the cycle of eighty-four. Hence, detaching this appendage from the chain of Dr. MacCarthy's reasoning, we find that it amounts to this:—Because he and others "admit" (and be it observed have not yet proved) I, and those who, like me, await proof, must assume that he and others who "admit" with him are right. The logic of Dr. MacCarthy is as nebulous as the necessity he is desirous of binding me down to is hypothetical.

A certain refraction of statement made to him in reply is expected of a critic, though not enjoined upon him. Dr. MacCarthy, in speaking of my "admission of having mistaken the Solar Cycle of twenty-eight years for the Lunar of nineteen," oversteps the bounds within which the critic is free to indulge. I have not made any such admission. Neither did I tender the supplementary statement as a proof. Dr. MacCarthy must really pay more attention to the letters he criticises than he does to his proof slips. In objecting to the appearance of "Tigernach," Dr. MacCarthy forgets that, if four-fifths of his own criticisms revolve around that very late writer, Charles Maguire, something more than four-fifths of my paper was devoted to the annalist whose work Maguire reproduces, and who lived four hundred years nearer the time of St. Columba.

Dr. MacCarthy, in his last paragraph, professes to believe that I, in correcting an hagiographical writer who gives neither century nor year, have formed a criterion for the treatment and correction of practised annalists who, in historic times, provide the century, the year, the month, the day of the month, and the day of the week. My critic would have better employed his space in considering the feriae provided in my letter of November 19, than in emitting a criticism pour rire. When Dr. MacCarthy has reconciled the feriae referred to, and when he has demolished the figures relating to the Easter* of 631, I shall be glad to endeavour to make criticism easier by doing my best to prove that St. Patrick reached Ireland in A.D. 433.

A. ANSCOMBE.

DANTE'S "GUIZZANTE"—THE MEDIAEVAL PORT OF WISSANT.

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: Nov. 17, 1892.

In describing the embankment on the borders of the river Phlegethon in Hell, Dante compares it to the dykes built by the Flemings along the sea coast between "Guizzante" and Bruges:—

"Quale i Fiamminghi tra Guizzante e Bruggia, Temendo il flotto che ver lor s'avventa,
Fanno lo schermo, perchè il mar si fuggia."
(Inf. xv. 4-6.)

Most modern commentators assume that Dante is here speaking of Cadsand—a place in the Netherlands, in the province of Zeeland, about fifteen miles N.E. of Bruges—on the authority apparently of Lodovico Guicciardini, who in his description of the Low Countries (written in the sixteenth century) says of that place:—

"Quest' è quel medesimo luogo, del quale il nostro gran poeta Dante fa menzione nel quindicesimo capitolo dell' Inferno, chiamandolo scortatamente, forse per errore di stampa, Guizzante" (see Philalethes and Lubin in loc.)

* The authority for my statement that the Irish did not celebrate later than April 21 is—Article, "Easter," Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, vol. E, p. 595, col. b.

On the strength of this statement it has been proposed to read Cassante, for which, however, there appears to be no MS. authority, the only variants recorded by Witte being Guizzante and Quanto—the latter an obvious error.

The objections to identifying "Guizzante" with Cadsand are, as Mr. A. J. Butler has pointed out, twofold—firstly, Cadsand is not, and never has been, within the boundaries of Flanders; secondly, where it is mentioned by contemporary Italian writers (as, for instance, Villani, Lib. xi. Cap. 70) it is called Gaggiante. On the other hand, "Guizzante" is the undoubted Italian form of Wissant, a place between Calais and Cape Grisnez. This is proved by a reference to Villani, who, in recording the movements of Edward III. after Crecy, describes how he marched along the coast and successively attacked Montreuil, Boulogne, Wissant, and Calais:—

"Partito il re Adoardo dal campo di Creci ove aven avuta la detta vittoria, ed essendo con sua oste a Mosteraolo, credendolosì avere, ch'era della contea e dote della madre, la terra era bene guernita per lo re di Francia de' molti Franceschi rifuggiti dalla sconfitta; si si difesono, e non la potè avere: guastolla intorno, e poi n'andò a Bologna in su lo mare, e fece il somigliante. Poi ne venne a Guizzante, e perchè non era murato, il rubò tutto; e poi vi mise fuoco, e tutta la villa guastarono. E poi ne vennero a Caliese, e quello era murato e afforzato, e dieroni battaglia più volte e nol poterono avere" (xii. 68).

All this district at that period formed part of Flanders, as there is abundant evidence to show. (See quotations below.) The identification of the Italian "Guizzante" with Wissant is further assured by the Provençal form Guissan, which occurs in one of the "Complaints" of Bertran de Born for the death of the "Young King" (son of Henry II. of England). After saying that England, Normandy, Brittany, Ireland, Aquitaine, Gascony, Anjou, Maine, and Touraine, are all affected by his loss, he continues: "Let France not refrain from weeping even as far as Compiègne; nor Flanders from Ghent to the port of Wissant; let even Germany weep!"

"Englès e Norman,
Breto e Irlan,
Guian e Gasco
E Angus pren dan
E Maines e Tors;
Fransa tro Compenha
De plorar nos tenha,
E Flandres de Gan
Trol port de Guissan;
Floren neis li Aleman."

Again, we have in Old French the almost identical form, Guitsand, which occurs in the Chanson de Roland, in the description of the great earthquake just before the death of Roland—"from Besançon to the port of Wissant, not a building but had its walls cracked":

"De Besançon tresqu'as porz de Guitsand (par. Wissant), Nen ad recet dunt murs ne cravent."
(Verses 1429-30.)

Wissant was a place of great importance in the Middle Ages, as being the port par excellence through which passed the traffic between England and the Continent. It has been identified with the Portus Itius, whence Caesar crossed over into Britain; and it appears, from the constant references to it in the Chronicles and in Old French poems, to have been used continuously as the most convenient port of departure for England down to the beginning of the fourteenth century, when the destruction of the town (which Froissart calls "une grosse ville") by Edward III. caused the adjacent port of Boulogne to be used in its stead, the English themselves, after the taking of Calais in 1347, making use of the latter port.

In illustration of what has been said above, I subjoin a few passages which I have come across in various Anglo-Norman poems:

King Arthur embarks at Wissant on his way home to chastise the traitor Mordred:

"Artus oï, et bien savoit
Que Mordret fei ne li portoït . . .
En Bretagne retourneroit . . .
Et de Mordret se vengeroit . . .
Ensi vint Artus à Wissant (var. Guingant)
Del parjure Mordret plaignant."
(Wace: Roman de Brut, vv. 13,437 ff.)

While at Wissant, waiting to embark for England in 1170, Becket is warned that danger awaits him on the other side of the Channel:

"Milun s'en vient ki ert serjant
Au passagier de Withsant:
'Sire volez ke voirs vus cunte
De part mun seigneur le cunte
De Buloinc? Armée gent
De la mer par mal vus atent."
(Fragments d'une Vie de Saint Thomas de Cantorbéry, ed. l'Paul Meyer, p. 23.)

Becket crosses in 1170, from Wissant to Sandwich, avoiding Dover for fear of his foes:

"De sun pais vecir aveit gran desirrier . . .
A Withsant est venuez, ala par le graver,
Pur esgarder l'oré et pur esbancier. . . .
Sainz Thomas l'endemain en une nef entra;
Deus li dona beu vent; à Sanwiz ariva.
Kar l'arriver de Dove, pur la gueit, eschiva."
(Garnier de Pont-Sainte-Maxence: Vie de Saint Thomas de Canterbury, vv. 4,561 ff.)

The "Young King" and William the Marshal cross from Dover to Wissant on their return to the Continent in 1175:

"Tot dreit à Dove s'aveierent;
A mer entrenter maintenant,
Si ariverent à Wissant."
(Guillaume le Maréchal, vv. 2436-8.)

Also in the fourteenth-century Anglo-Norman romance of the outlaw Fulk Fitz-Warrene we read how Fulk and his companions, fleeing from the wrath of King John, made for Dover, and crossed over to Wissant on their way to Paris:

"Fouke tant erra nuyt et jour qu'il vynt à Dove;
e ylece enentra Baudwyn . . . E se minstrent en meer, e ariverent à Withsant."

For the following, which are extracted from various chronicles and other sources, I am indebted to the dissertation of Ducange on the Portus Itius (Glossarium, vol. x., pp. 96-100. About 569, St. Wigan, a companion of St. Columban, crossing from England "appulit ad portum Witsan appellatum, qui videlicet locus ex albetis sabuli interpretatione tale sortitur vocabulum." Here we get a suggestion as to the origin of the name—viz., White-sand, which is repeated by another author: "Ab albedine arenae vulgari nomine appellatur Witsand.")

In 933 Aethelstan's brother, being banished, crosses over "angusto scilicet a Doeria in Withsand mari."

About 1069 the Abbot of Saint Riquier, being minded to visit the English property of the monastery, "ad maris ingressum properavit quem nominant plebeiales Guizant" (here again we have a form almost identical with the Italian Guizzante).

In 1097 St. Anselm on his way to Rome "Withsandum appulit."

In 1110 Henry I. sends his daughter Matilda on her way to wed the Emperor Henry V., "a Dove usque ad Witsand."

In 1179 Henry II., on his return from France, "navem ascendens apud Witsand, in Angliam rediit."

In 1187 Henry II., crossing back to France just before his death, "applicuit apud Witsand in Flandria" (here we have the express statement that Wissant was in Flanders, as again below).

During the reign of Richard Coeur-de-Lion, John, crossing over to France, "Applicuit in Flandria apud Wissand."

It is needless to give any further examples. The above are sufficient to practically establish the identity of "Guizzante" with Wissant, both as regards the form of the word and the situation of the place itself. I need only remark in conclusion that, since the name of the port of Wissant must have been perfectly well known all over the Continent in Dante's time, it is quite unnecessary—pace certain recent theorists—to assume that the poet had been there in person, in order to account for his mention of it.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO PETER.

Sparsholt Vicarage, Wantage: Dec. 2, 1892.

Dr. Swete has wisely put within the reach of students the newly discovered fragment of the apocryphal Gospel of Peter. It affords many opportunities for conjecture as to the real text of the passage. I should like to suggest one or two readings which do not quite agree with those of Dr. Swete.

P. 10, l. 22. περιήρχοντο δὲ πολλοὶ μετὰ λόχων, νομίζοντες ὅτι νύξ ἐστίν [τῆς δὲ] ἐπέσαντο.

Here Dr. Swete has to insert two words. I would read:

περιήρχοντο δὲ πολλοὶ μετὰ λόχων νομίζοντες ὅτι νύξ ἐστίν ἐξίσταντο.

As a confirmation of this reading, we have later on ἐπιστάντας (p. 12, l. 11) for ἐπιστάντας.

P. 12, l. 16. παρήσαν γὰρ καὶ αὐτοὶ (cod. ἄν οἱ) φυλάσσοντες.

ἄλλοι seems a better reading; it explains the presence of the οἱ πρεσβύτεροι mentioned just before.

P. 12, l. 20. τὴν δὲ χεῖρα τοῦ [ὑπορθοῦ]μένου (cod. τὸν δὲ χεῖρα τῶ τουμένου) ὑπ' αὐτῶν ὑπερβαίνουσαν τοὺς οὐρανούς.

For this I would suggest, as approaching more nearly to the original text—τὸν δὲ χειραγωγούμενον ὑπ' αὐτῶν ὑπερβαίνοντα τοὺς οὐρανούς.

It is easy, I think, to see that the reading ὑπερβαίνουσαν was an afterthought after the earlier words had been corrupted.

P. 13, l. 3. Dr. Swete leaves ἀπανδύντες—a most unusual form—alone; surely ἀγωνιῶντες fits in better with the context.

HENRY A. REDPATH.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Dec. 11, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "The Duality of the Mind," by Dr. B. W. Richardson, with Lantern Illustrations.

7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Moral Ideas in the Book of Isaiah: Three Stages in Ethical Conception," by Prof. J. Estlin Carpenter.

MONDAY, Dec. 12, 5 p.m. London Institution: Travers Lecture, "Water Supply, Pollution of Water, Drinking Water," by Major Lamorock Flower.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Generation of Light from Coal Gas," IV., by Prof. Vivian Lewes.

TUESDAY, Dec. 13, 8 p.m. Chemical: "Jean Servais Stas, and the Measurement of the Relative Masses of the Atoms of the Chemical Elements," by Prof. J. W. Mallett.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "The Manufacture of Small Arms," by Mr. John Rigby; "Gas Power for Electric Lighting," by Mr. J. Emerson Dowson.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "Notes on British Guiana," by Mr. Everard F. im Thurn, with Limelight Illustrations.

8.30 p.m. Anthropological.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 14, 4.30 p.m. Egypt Exploration Fund: General Meeting.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Utilisation of Niagara," by Prof. George Forbes.

THURSDAY, Dec. 15, 8 p.m. London Institution: "Ants: A Study of Sociology and Politics among Insects," illustrated, by the Rev. Dr. Dallinger.

8 p.m. Linnean: "The Genera of Taxacea and Conifera," by Dr. Maxwell T. Masters; "The Affinities of the Genus Madrepora," by Mr. George Brook.

8 p.m. Chemical: "The Identity of Caffeine and Theine," by Messrs. W. R. Dunstan and W. F. J. Shephard; "Studies on Isomeric Charge—1, 2, 3, Orthoxylene, Sulphonic Acid, Phenolsulphonic Acid," by Dr. Moody.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

8.30 p.m. Historical: "Notes on the Family of Beton in connexion with some Royal Letters of James VI." (originals exhibited), by Mr. H. Elliot Malden; and "Strafford in the Star Chamber," by Mr. Hubert Hall.

SCIENCE.

RIBBECK'S HISTORY OF LATIN POETRY.

GESCHICHTE DER RÖMISCHEN DICHTUNG. Von Otto Ribbeck.—III. Dichtung der Kaiserzeit. (Stuttgart.)

THE third volume of Prof. Ribbeck's History of Latin Poetry completes the work, except for the "learned supplements" which, in order not to interfere with the character of the book, are reserved for a distinct volume. It begins with the writer whom, on very slight authority, we have agreed to call Manilius, and closes with Namatianus. Hence Prof. Ribbeck does not touch on any of the Christian Latin poets, though both chronologically and on the ground of literary merit Prudentius might claim not to be omitted if Ausonius and Claudian are included. But the reasons for drawing the line, as it has been drawn, are obvious and plausible. The continuity of the tradition which Christianity had filled the world are seen struggling for a while to find expression in the old literary forms. It is less easy to see what excuse there is for the inclusion of a tolerably full account of the life and works of Apuleius. The plea put forward is that he wrote "a poetical prose"; the real reasons seem to be the attraction which this "interesting man" had for the author and the irresistible temptation to give an account of his adventurous romance. Anyhow the sketch of Apuleius is so good that we cannot wish it away.

Of late days the temptation has been to speak and write with undisguised and unmitigated contempt of almost all the Latin poets of the imperial time. Perhaps this is a natural reaction against the unqualified and uncritical admiration which it was at one time equally a matter of fashion to show; but certainly the mark is not hit in that way. Beside evident faults of taste there are abundant traces of power, of grace, of learning, and of fancy; and the best critic is he who best helps us to discover them. Prof. Ribbeck is no advocatus diaboli: he does not make it his mission, as some do, to show how worthless are the writers to whose study he has devoted a life time. His criticism is as genial as it is vigorous; and no one can rise from reading his book without a better appreciation of the merits, as well as the faults, of the poets of whom he treats. There is nothing that is very novel in the book: it is too sound and accurate for that; but it is admirably adapted as a narrative at once lively and trustworthy for the general reader. A good deal of space is still devoted to the analysis of the chief poetical works; and a practice, which was sometimes a little wearisome in the case of Vergil and Horace, is welcome enough with Statius or Claudian. As might have been expected, Prof. Ribbeck does not withdraw his condemnation of Satires X. and XII.-XV. of Juvenal, in spite of the little assent which it has as yet commanded. He is not willing "to take the poet, faults and all," as Dr. Schanz in his recently published History of Roman Literature bids us do. He doubts the genuineness and relevance of the famous Aquinum inscription, and declines to unravel the inextricable confusion in which the anonymous "Lives" leave us by their contradictory accounts. But he does not reject the story of Juvenal's banishment as positively as Dr. Schanz is inclined to do.

There are here and there a few points on which the reader will look with interest for the discussion of the "learned supplement." But the work is not intended for students. Their needs have been met abundantly by Teuffel, especially now that English readers can use his book in the vastly improved form which we owe to Prof. Warr. Or if Teuffel is still (not without excuse) found to be too dry for mortal man to read, there is now Dr. Schanz's work, which is as learned as Teuffel's and much more interesting. Prof. Ribbeck's History of Latin Poetry is essentially a popular work, but one of the best kind, written by a scholar who is himself a first-rate authority on much of the ground which it covers. It fully satisfies the expectations which were aroused by its announcement, and is a worthy supplement to the author's other contributions to our knowledge of Latin literature.

A. S. WILKINS.

PHOTO-MICROGRAPHS OF WHEAT.

The Structure of Wheat shown in a Series of Photo-Micrographs. With Explanatory Remarks. By Robert W. Dunham. (Published for the Author, at 24, Mark-lane, E.C.)

A PHOTO-MICROGRAPH, it may be as well to premise, is the reproduction by photography of any object as magnified by a microscope. Photo-micrography essentially consists in the collaboration of the microscope and photographic camera, and thus the image shown by the microscopic lens is transferred to and recorded by the photographic plate. The album under review contains twenty-one photographs of different parts of the wheat plant, obtained in several instances under high powers. We have used the term album, as this volume, of which the printing, binding, and general execution leave nothing to be desired, is rather a gallery of illustration than a formal treatise. In his concise and lucid introduction, the author enumerates the chief points in which, as he believes, new light has been thrown upon the structure and constitution of the wheat plant by photo-micrography. For the rest, his explanatory text is elaborate in its sympathy, but is perfectly clear in nearly every case.

So far as we are aware, this is the first collection of photo-micrographs of wheat which has been presented to the world. It should be remembered that the existing diagrams of the inner structure of wheat, in so far as they profess to represent microscopic views, are the work of memory. The artist committed to paper, with as much accuracy as he could command, his recollection of the image revealed to him by the microscope or magnifying lens; but under such conditions, details perfectly correct were obviously impossible. Mr. Carruthers, referring to the work of Francis Bauer—whose drawings are preserved in the British Museum, and have been reproduced by the Royal Agricultural Society—has remarked: "no more careful study nor faithful representation of wheat have ever been made"; but a comparison of the section of a wheat straw nodule (magnified sixteen diameters) forming plate 7, with the same section in Bauer's drawings (sheet viii.) will at once give a measure of the superior scientific value of photo-micrography in botanical study. Again, take the integuments of the wheat berry. Hitherto, five distinct coverings have been assigned to the endosperm: namely, the epidermis, epicarp, endocarp, episperm, and embryonic membrane; whereas a careful study of these photographs seems to show that the five skins are but three distinct and separate organisms (see plates 13 to 19). The beautiful photographs, 8, 9, 10, and 11 enable us to trace the process of fertilisation, even to the withering of the stigma on its completion, almost as fully as if we stood in a wheat field, a powerful magnifying glass in hand. Very clear is the structure of the beard. Its hairs are hollow (see plates 13 and 22), and act as conduits, removing superfluous moisture, and thus preventing fermentations, which might injure the floury constituents of the berry. At the base of the crease, embedded in the middle skin, and folded between the outer and the inner skins, is an organ to which Mr. Dunham has given the name "placenta" (see plates 22, 23, 25, and 26), presumably because it is furnished with a cord running downwards through the straw. Apparently the function of the placenta is to filter for the use of the berry the mineral matters that are drawn from the soil by the cord, as may be seen in these photographs. Mineral matter undigested by the placenta remains in the furrow of the berry, and is known to millers as "crease dirt."

Mr. Dunham traverses orthodox teachings as to the respective form and distribution of the two main constituents of the endosperm—the gluten and starch. In his opinion, the so-called gluten cells, which cluster round the periphery of the berry, contain no gluten at all, but mainly cerealine, that lactic ferment to which Mège-Mouries was, we believe, the first to direct attention. These cells, so far as their outward appearance is in question, have been well described by Wittmack. He says:—

"The gluten cells are the outermost cells of the floury kernel. They form a belt of stout walled cells arranged fanwise, and afford considerable protection to the berry. In a longitudinal or cross section they appear as quadrates; viewed from the surface as they meet our eye in the bran, they are seen to have four, five or six sides, and to be joined one to the other after the manner of paving stones."

The remarkable accuracy of these observations is manifest on a glance at plates 20 and 21. On the other hand, Wittmack, as indeed Berthold and others who have studied the structure of wheat with the microscope, saw nothing but gluten in these cells. If that were the only location for this nitrogenous substance, the problem would be perfectly simple, because in that case the miller's labour would result in eliminating the gluten from the flour, and depositing it in the bran sack; whereas experience has shown that a white flour, that is to say a flour from which the bran walls have been all but eliminated, may be as rich in gluten as any baker can desire. The question is: Can gluten be found, like Sir Boyle Roche's bird, in two places at once? But if we admit that hypothesis, there is this difficulty, that gluten, as revealed by these photographs, is a body possessing (like starch) a well-defined form; and that its presence in the so-called gluten cells would argue a modification of that form which is contrary to the whole analogy of wheat anatomy. Mr.

Dunham defines the endosperm as consisting "of gluten walls and starch," and this definition is strongly supported by plates 12, 20, and 21. Of especial interest is plate 12. That was obtained by cutting a slice near the crease, and magnifying the section twelve diameters. Here the endosperm is clearly seen to consist of a fine net, of which the meshes are packed with granules; owing to the tenuity of the material, many of the granules at the bottom right hand corner broke away, and dropped out, but the webbing remained intact. That is entirely in accordance with the respective natures of starch and gluten: the former substance is light and friable, the latter is viscous and more or less elastic. Gluten, as seen in the light of photo-micrography, appears to play a part in the structure of wheat analogous to the girders of a bridge, or it might be compared to the tendons of the human frame. But what then becomes of the gluten granules which Wittmack and his predecessors have described? Mr. Dunham would doubtless reply that those investigators had mistaken starch for gluten granules, which in his scheme have no existence at all. A clear idea of the differentiation in the forms of the main constituents of the wheat berry will be obtained from plate 21, which shows a section through the skins and endosperm. Here may be plainly traced the dividing walls of gluten, while the oval-shaped starch granules are in strong contrast to the smaller and globular granules—held by the author to be cerealine—which lie closely packed in the peripheral cells.

A speculation naturally raised in the mind by these photographs is whether we may not seek in photo-micrography a sure index to the commercial value of wheat. In a rough way the miller can tell from the outward appearance of grain whether it is likely to prove a hard or soft bargain, but the camera gives us an exact characterisation of the constituents of the floury kernel. Is it too much to expect that further experiments and careful observation will, at no distant date, enable the miller's chemist to distinguish between "rotten gluten" and gluten of sound quality, that is, of tensile strength? All things in this world bear their character on their face to those who know how to read the signs. If that anticipation be in any measure fulfilled, then will this work prove of as much practical value as it is of distinct scientific interest.

SCIENCE NOTES.

AN extraordinary meeting of the Chemical Society will be held on Tuesday next, December 13, the anniversary of the death of Jean Servius Stas, when Prof. J. W. Mallet has undertaken to deliver a lecture upon Stas's great work, "The Measurement of the Relative Masses of the Atoms of the Chemical Elements."

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish immediately under the title Pioneers of Science, a popular account, by Prof. Oliver Lodge, of the rise and progress of astronomy. The work is largely biographical, and will be fully illustrated with portraits and diagrams.

At the meeting of the Aristotelian Society on Monday, December 19, Prof. A. R. Greenhill, of the London Mathematical Society, will read a paper on "The Measurement of Space, Time, and Matter."

At the meeting of the London Institution, on Thursday next, at 6 p.m., the Rev. Dr. Dallinger will give an illustrated lecture on "Ants: A Study of Sociology and Politics among Insects."

THE second series of lectures given by the Sunday Lecture Society begins on Sunday next, December 11, when Dr. W. B. Richardsou will lecture on "The Duality of the Mind," in St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 p.m. Lectures will subsequently be given by Dr. Percy Frankland, Mr. Whitworth Wallis, Mr. R. W. Frazer, Prof. Vivian B. Lewes, Mr. Eric Bruce, and Sir James Crichton Browne.

At the general monthly meeting of the Royal Institution, on Monday last, the special thanks of the members were returned to Mr. Ludwig Mond, for a further donation to the fund for carrying on investigations upon liquid oxygen.

The Great World's Farm. By Selina Gaye. (Seeley.) A sentence of Mr. H. Drummond's Tropicat Africa supplies a hint for the somewhat affected title of this book. He looks upon the world as "one vast garden," a farm with no visible tiller of the soil. Here Miss Gaye adds another to the multitude of books which describe the curious adaptations of bird, beast, or flower to their surroundings. She has written carefully and made a wide selection of instances, and the whole 350 pages of her book are crammed with facts and interesting teachings on natural history. Whether for a class book or a prize, this volume, thanks to its illustrations, is equally to be commended. Most of Miss Gaye's examples are chosen from modern books, so that it furnishes a stimulating introduction to many discoveries of recent physical science. Its adult reader, as he remembers the meagre compendiums which professed to interest pupils in natural history thirty or forty years ago, may well deem modern children happy who are taught from such a work.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE King of Sweden and Norway has offered a gold medal for the best essay on the following subject: "A Comparative Treatment of the Grammatical Forms peculiar to the Rig-Veda, Yagur-Veda, Sama-Veda, and Atharva-Veda, distinguishing the Forms peculiar to the Mantras, Brāhmanas, and Upanishads." MSS. should be sent to Prof. Max Müller, at Oxford, not later than March 1, 1894. The prize will be awarded at the Oriental Congress to be held at Geneva in September of that year. The following scholars have consented to act as judges: Prof. Lanman, of Harvard; M. Victor Henry, of Paris; and Prof. Oldenberg, of Kiel.

A SANSKRIT English Dictionary, for the use of both scholars and students, by Prof. A. A. Macdonell, has just been published by Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. Though not much more than one-third of the size of Sir Monier Williams's Dictionary, it contains many words in every page not to be found in that work. All words are transliterated, the accent and derivation also being given. No other Sanskrit Dictionary combines these advantages.

An Avesta Grammar in comparison with Sanskrit. By A. V. Williams Jackson. (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer.) This book is a fitting supplement, or instalment of a supplement, to the completion, five years ago, of Darmesteter and Mills' monumental translation of the Avesta in the "Sacred Books of the East." The English student of Zend has hitherto had nothing to supply the place which De Harlez's Manuel de la Langue de l'Avesta holds for the French student or Geiger's Handbuch der Avesta-sprache for the German. Mr. Jackson has now supplied one portion of our needs, and given us an "Accidence" which for completeness and exhaustiveness may compete even with Bartholomae's Handbuch der Altiranischen Dialecte.

He is a pupil of Prof. Geldner, perhaps the greatest living Zendist, and has made good use of his opportunities; he neglects no fact, however minute, in the language, and puts every fact in the clearest way possible. He promises shortly to complete his work by a volume on Zend syntax and metre; and when he has done so, if only Prof. Geldner will complete his issue of the text and Dr. Stein will give us his long-promised dictionary of the language, the student of Zend will be better equipped for his work than the student of most languages. The general get-up of the book, it is but just to add, reflects great credit on the Stuttgart firm which has produced it; the printing is a marvel of clearness and accuracy. The price is only 3s.

"KEILINSCHRIFTLICHE BIBLIOTHEK." Sammungen von assyrischen und babylonischen Texten in Umschrift und Uebersetzung. Edited by E. Schrader. Vol. III., Part 1. (Berlin: Reuther.) This useful work, of which Prof. Schrader is the editor, is approaching its conclusion. The historical inscriptions of Assyria and later Babylonia have already been placed before the modern reader in transliteration and translation, and the newly-issued volume does the same for the Sumerian inscriptions of the older Babylonian kings. In the fourth volume the editor and his contributors will make a new departure, and deal with the religious and legal cuneiform texts. The Sumerian inscriptions of Tello have been translated by Dr. Jensen, who has also translated the texts which belong to the reign of Khammurabi, as well as the inscription of "Agumkakrīmi." The Sumerian inscriptions of the "kings of Sumer and Accad" have been entrusted to Dr. Winckler. We are grateful to Dr. Jensen for the abundant notes which he has supplied; it is only a pity that other contributors have not followed his example. His translations of the Tello inscriptions are based on those made by M. Arthur Amiaud for the Records of the Past, and are not always improvements upon the latter. The transliteration of the Sumerian texts is a bold and arduous undertaking; as the author himself says, it is inevitable that in the present state of our knowledge older and newer forms must be mixed together. The attempt, however, is praiseworthy, and in such cases "the beginning is half the whole." To the historian of the ancient kingdoms in the valleys of the Euphrates and Tigris, the first three volumes of the Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek will be indispensable.

A MOST excellent and useful series of pocket Grammars and Dictionaries is being published by Hoepli at Milan. Among the latest are a Rumanian Grammar and Vocabulary by Prof. Lovera and a Grammar and Dictionary of the Galla languages by Prof. Viterbo (Grammatica Rumena coll' Aggiunta d'un Vocabolario delle Voci più usuali; Grammatica e Dizionario della Lingua Oromonica). The Dictionary is in two parts, the first being Galla-Italian, and the second Italian-Galla. The sketch of the grammar is prefixed to the second part. Both Grammar and Dictionary are based on the labours of Chiarini and Léon des Avanchers, and have already been published in another form in Cecchi's "Da Zeila alle frontiere del Caffa." In their new form they have been somewhat modified, as well as enlarged by the addition of fresh material. In spite of the small and compact size of the books, the printing is good and clear, and the contents are at once practical and complete.

FINE ART.

MR. FULLEYLOVE'S "LEICESTER."

MR. JOHN FULLEYLOVE has just completed, and has rightly placed on exhibition in the town whose features it illustrates, a series of water-colour drawings of Leicester and its neighbourhood. He has, as will be readily understood, approached this task equipped absolutely for its satisfactory fulfilment.

In a day when so much is changing, the desire to record a vanishing picturesqueness in his native town took hold of Mr. Fulleylove strongly, and accordingly he chronicled in the first instance something of the architectural and antiquarian beauty which is going to-day, and something of that which may be threatened to-morrow; and, having done so much, and his theme, as we may suppose, growing upon him, he sought to give completeness to the record by including something of the modern, by never shrinking from all that is considered unpicturesque and unpaintable (by weakly folk and conventional) in the east-iron bridge, the modern fashionable suburb, the modernised main street, the lines of rail and tram-way, the vast mill that rears itself storey above storey, and by dignified proportions, as well as by mere size, dominates the town whose prosperity it must have assisted.

Thus, the life of to-day has been by no means disregarded, even by an artist so many of whose successes are associated with the more romantic life of an old world, and often of foreign parts of it. One who, more than any other painter of our period, has done justice to the beauty and the antique charm of the English University cities, and who has followed the steps of Petrarch under the skies of Provence, has felt attracted in the end, not only by the quite obvious interest of such a tower as "St. Margaret's Tower," rich with the ornateness of the fifteenth century Gothic, and such a building as the old Town Hall, but by the movement and activity of the modern town, by the sunny greensward of the public park in July weather, by the demolitions at the railway station, by the barges on a grimy canal. It would have been hard, of course, to deny to a draughtsman, whose sympathies are also largely classical, all opportunity for the exposure of that reserved beauty which lies in exquisite proportion, and in controlled and ordered elegance; and so there is here and there an exterior which brings before us the dignity of English classical work, or an interior in which, as in the drawing of the "Old Assembly Rooms," it is easy to fancy that the graceful place is once again peopled by the men and women who—pausing under the music gallery, or surveying themselves in the mirrors—might have served as models to Richardson and Jane Austen.

All these works of Mr. Fulleylove's, so comprehensive and so varied—these sixty or seventy drawings which are an abstract and brief chronicle of so many of the characteristics of his native town and of what lies around it—are in the manner of direct and vigorous records: not idealisations at all, never fanciful, always simple, energetic, and to the point—their simplicity, always learned: their energy always controlled by an instinctive good taste. More "finished," more elaborate, Mr. Fulleylove has, on many occasions, permitted himself to be—he accommodates himself to his material, and understands what is the work which requires to be treated exhaustively—but never has his grip of his subject been more decisive or more immediate than in the vivid little drawings which Londoners, it is to be feared, will have but scanty opportunity of seeing. In them at all events—however much they may differ in subject and attractiveness—the unity of impression has rarely been lost; and this is not invariably the case with the larger and more important drawings. Nothing is mechanical, superfluous, visibly laborious. With that terseness of style in the delivery of the message which demands in the recipient an alertness and intelligence which the lover of every art should be delighted to exercise—nay, should be called upon to exercise in the enjoyment of it—Mr. Fulleylove has expressed, or, at the very least, has suggested, a hundred facts which he has observed and remembered. Much of the history of the town that gave him birth, and much of its condition at this moment, is written down in his flexible and energetic draughtsmanship; and though the exhibition contains no drawing ambitions in scale or long paused over in execution, it affords evidence of the widening of his sympathies. Not only does he approve himself colourist as well as draughtsman, but, more perhaps than hitherto, he has concerned himself with the interest with which changing skies and the accidents of illumination endow such scenes as are not obviously attractive.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MOERIS-FAYOUM AND LABYRINTH PAPYRI.
London: August 5, 1892.

After Dr. Pleijte had been led to republish the Papyri Nos. 1 and 2 of the Museum of Boulaq, with the Harris copy of the Labyrinth Papyrus, because my researches had, in his opinion, demolished the Moeris theory of Linant de Bellefonds, I traced the original to Nettleham Hall, Lincoln. My observations were published in the volume presented to Dr. Leemans. Among the fragments procured at the same time by Mr. Hood was a line of hieroglyphs, which says:

"The two arms of the Canal in the South, opposite Sothis and Anukis: The two arms of the canals in the North, inundating the districts of Horus in Ta-Se."

This line completes the Fayoum Papyrus on the left. At the other end it was part of the Labyrinth Papyrus. The stems of the boats are omitted from the Harris copy, with the following inscriptions:

"Ra it is who enters the Southern pool, mer of ta-Se."

"The Palace of the sky."

"Going in the boat to the pool. . . ."

Mr. Hood most kindly allowed me not only to compare, revise, and complete my "Harris" copy of the Labyrinth Papyrus, but also to copy some other fragments. It is quite possible that there are parts of the papyrus some of whose fragments belong to Lord Amherst. A translation of Papyri Nos. 1 and 2 of Boulaq was given by M. Mariette in the Revue Critique (No. 12, March 23, 1872). Dr. Pleijte explained these papyri, together with the Harris copy of the Labyrinth Papyrus, under the title of Over drie Handschriften op Papyrus, bekend onder de Titels van Papyrus du Lac Moeris, du Fayoum et du Labyrinthe (Amsterdam, 1884).

Papyrus No. 1 was stolen about 1880 from the museum at Boulaq, and is now at Vienna (see my "Note sur trois cartes;" Institut Eg., 3 Fev., 1892). Even if we may never see the discovered fragments of this great monument of ancient Egyptian geography reunited, and in the Museum at Gizeh, at least I trust that an effort may be made to secure their union in a single publication.

The interest in the Fayoum is very great. It was far otherwise when I took Dr. Petrie to Hawara, and into the Wadi Raiyan in 1882; and even when Dr. Schweinfurth, in 1884, wrote to me: "Schnsuechtig erwarte ich Sie zur Aufsuchung des Labyrinths." Eleven thousand Fayoum papyri are catalogued in Vienna. Prof. Mahaffy has shown that he can rival Prof. Karabacek and his associates, whom none may hope to surpass. Major Brown's recent work, The Fayoum and Lake Moeris, is an admirable volume. The new map of the Egyptian Government (scale 1:100,000), and the mention of the subject by Lord Cromer in his reports, 1891 and 1892, show that this long neglected region is interesting from many points of view. Nothing is more remarkable than the total absence of cartographical and geographical literature for a thousand years, although the map of the gold mines to the east of Kenah is dated B.C. 1357.

Mr. Griffith is to be congratulated on his discovery, and Mr. Percy Newberry's publication will be awaited with anxious expectation; but I earnestly hope that he will seek to give us a complete edition of the whole treatise.

COPE WHITEHOUSE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. PERCY E. NEWBERRY, with a staff consisting of Mr. Percy Buckman (artist), Mr. John E. Newberry (architect), and Mr. Howard Carter (draughtsman), is leaving England this week for Upper Egypt to carry on the Archaeological Survey under the auspices of the Egypt Exploration Fund. The great capital of Tel el-Amarna will be the main site of operations for the coming season. The work of Prof. Flinders Petrie during last winter elucidated many points relating to the city itself; but the numerous rock-cut tombs of courtiers of the heretic kings, with their abundant paintings and inscriptions, still await a thorough survey, and promise to throw much light on the official creed and mode of life in a remarkable epoch of Egyptian history.

A MINIATURE portrait of the late Duke of Clarence has recently been painted for the Queen by Mr. H. Charles Heath, upon ivory, in a circle of only $\frac{3}{8}$ of an inch in diameter; and, notwithstanding its minuteness, it is considered a very good likeness. To fully appreciate the delicacy of the work, it is necessary to use a magnifying glass of some power.

THE exhibitions to open next week are—a collection of water-colour drawings by Mr. Walter Severn, at the Fine Art Society's, in New Bond-street; a collection of pictures in oil by great painters of the early English school, at Messrs. Dowdeswell's, also in New Bond-street; and a series of oil-paintings and water-colours, by Mr. Byron Cooper, illustrating "Tennyson's Country," at the gallery in Pall Mall of Messrs. Henry Graves & Co., which has recently been redecorated and lighted by electricity.

A POPULAR edition of the Letters of James Smetham, the artist, which attracted so much attention when they first appeared at the end of last year, will be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. before Christmas.

THE Guild and School of Handicraft has issued A Table of the Arts and Crafts of the Renaissance, prepared by Mr. C. R. Ashbee for the recent summer meeting of University Extension students at Oxford.

M. L.-O. MERSON—best known, perhaps, for his decorative designs in medieval style—has been elected a member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts. Among the competitors were MM. Benjamin Constant and Carolus Duran.

MR. F. HAYERFIELD—whose address is now Christ Church, Oxford—has reprinted from the Archaeological Journal his second annual report on recent discoveries of Roman inscriptions in Britain, covering the period 1890-91 (Exeter: William Pollard). Reserving for the present the large number of military tombstones found in the city wall at Chester, he enumerates all the others that have come to his knowledge, according to the method of arrangement adopted in the Corpus; and of several he is able to supply facsimiles. He then discusses in detail: (1) the bronze tablet from Colchester, dedicated to Mars Medocius, god of the Campases (?), which last word Prof. Rhys is disposed to connect with the Campic Fells in Stirlingshire, finding also other Pictish indications in the inscription; (2) some opinions that have been expressed about the Chester inscriptions, where he concludes that the Ceangi or Deceangi worked lead mines near Flint; (3) a milestone of the usurping emperor Victorinus, whose name—in opposition to M. Cagnat—he supports in the form "Piavonius," not "Pius Avonius"; (4) the altar at Binchester dedicated to the Matres Ollototae, which he has treated more at length in Archaeologia Aeliana; (5) a bronze patera, found at Barochan in Renfrewshire, with a stamp on its handle which (on comparison with other similar stamps) seems to indicate that it was made at Herculaneum by a firm of coppersmiths named Cipius. We may also mention a very interesting silver patera now in the Louvre, which bears the mysterious label "trouvée près de Douvres, dans une propriété appelée Caspet, située aux environs d'Hastings." Where is Caspet?

THE STAGE.

THURSDAY night was appointed for the re-appearance of Mr. Charles Wyndham at the Criterion, along with Miss Mary Moore and Miss Winifred Emery, in the revival of Mr. Isaac Henderson's noteworthy play of "The Silent Battle," which, under its first title of "Agatha," we criticised on its production in the summer.

MR. FRED LESLIE—perhaps the one actor of genius and indisputable charm who adorned that burlesque stage whereon Mr. Hollingshead's "sacred lamp" ever burns—has succumbed, as we regret to record, to an attack of typhoid fever. Mr. Leslie had not of late years been seen quite as much on the London stage as we should like him to have been. Since there has been a double company at the Gaiety, he has spent at least half his time in provincial and American and Australasian journeys; and indeed at no period of his Gaiety engagement has he been employed as much to our delight as in those now far-away days—the first days of the Comedy Theatre, were they not?—when he played the principal part in the "Rip Van Winkle" of Planquette. That piece was hardly a burlesque, though the burlesque element came into the opéra comique; it was hardly indeed opéra comique, so much was there in it that was serious and beautiful as well as light and gay. In it, and in all the sides of it, Leslie was inimitable. Nobody who remembers his grace and his tenderness will think of him simply as the imitator or exaggerator of Jefferson. Nobody who heard him sing, first in the full round voice, then later in the cracked and old one, the melodious and pathetic song, to his child—

"This little head now golden.
Silvered one day must be—" will readily forget the impression that he made. His performance—like that of Mr. Chevalier at the music halls—was of the utmost delicacy of insight and observation, and full of sympathetic charm. Beside him Mr. Lonnen remains wonderfully clever, and Mr. Roberts still shows himself (as Mr. Edward Yates says, practically, in his moi-même this week), a privileged and fortunate and very gifted buffoon. But on the burlesque stage we want artists: we have very few of them; and Fred Leslie was one of the few.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

RAFF's "Lenore" Symphony was performed at Mr. Henschel's third concert last week. The first two movements rank among the composer's highest achievements, and the "death-ride" is a striking piece of programme-music. Yet it certainly fails of its aim, for nowhere does it really inspire terror. The cleverness of the workmanship is felt throughout; but it seems to lack the spark of genius which, in Berlioz's best tone-pictures, always fuses the real with the ideal. Mr. Henschel conducted exceedingly well, both in this work and in the Meistersinger Overture. Miss Evangeline Florence gave a simple artistic rendering of Elsa's "Gesang an die Lüfte."

Monday was the anniversary of Mozart's death, and that may have been the reason why his Clarinet Quintet was selected as the opening piece at last Monday's Popular Concert. Of all Mozart's chamber music this is one of the most beautiful, and, therefore, one of the most attractive. The performance, with Lady Hallé as leader and Herr Mühlfeld as clarinetist, was admirable. M. Paderewski gave an interesting rendering of Chopin's Sonata in B minor (Op. 58). This is not one of the composer's most inspired works; and yet it is a favourite with great pianists, probably on account of the showy writing. The Adagio displays Chopin's strength and also his weakness. The thematic material is full of grace and melancholy beauty, but it is not developed so as to sustain the interest to the end of the movement: one almost wearies of its charm. M. Paderewski interprets the music with feeling and passion. At times, he passed from sentiment to sentimentality, and in the Finale the passion was too violent. He is fond of strong contrasts; and hence his fortes are sometimes too noisy, and his pianos artificial. His use, or rather misuse, of the soft pedal is specially marked. M. Paderewski is undoubtedly a pianist of the first rank, and it is for this very reason that one does not like to see him adopt measures which savour of self-consciousness rather than absorption. He took part afterwards in Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 97). The playing was refined, but lacked the proper breadth and nobility.

On the following afternoon M. Paderewski gave a Recital at St. James's Hall, which was filled to overflowing. The first piece was Handel's dignified Suite in D minor. The Suites of this composer are unduly neglected by pianists, and those of Bach, too, have not been honoured as they deserve. A Suite by either composer would always be preferable to those skilful, but (so far as the listener is concerned) uninteresting, transcriptions of Bach's organ Fugues by Liszt and Tausig. It is easy to understand why pianists like them, for they present great difficulties to overcome. But while occupied in playing with hands alone what Bach intended for both hands and feet, they forget that the instrument on which they are performing gives about as little idea of organ tone and its colour contrasts as a Symphony on the pianoforte gives of the full orchestral score. These things are well enough for educational purposes at school or at home, but not in the concert-room. Our comments are suggested by M. Paderewski's second piece—a transcription of Bach's grand organ Fugue in A minor. He afterwards gave an interesting reading of Weber's romantic Sonata in A flat. There was much to admire in the performance—the delicacy and finish with which some of the passages were played in the opening movement, the brilliant rendering of the Scherzo, and the refinement displayed in the pathetic and dramatic Andante; but there was not always sufficient warmth of tone or fervent feeling. A pianoforte recital without Chopin would not seem complete, though the prominence given to that composer often proves a failure, for so few pianists are able to interpret this music. Of those few, M. Paderewski is one, although we did not admire his playing of the Coda of the Barcarolle. And in the A flat Valse (Op. 34), why did he treat the part for the left hand in the Coda as if it were only accompaniment? His performance of the Etudes in B minor and C minor from Op. 25, two numbers as characteristic as they are difficult, was full of vigour. His admirable rendering of the Mazurka in C (Op. 56, No 2) also deserves mention.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

Where difficulty is experienced in procuring THE ACADEMY with regularity in the Country, it is requested that application be made direct to the Publisher.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom.	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE'S

LIST OF NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

WEDMORE (FREDERICK).

RENUNCIATIONS. (A Chemist in the Suburbs—A Confidence at the Savile—The North Coast and Eleanor). Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. Also 50 copies L.P. 10s. 6d. net. [Ready this day.]

MEYNELL MRS. (ALICE C. THOMPSON).

POEMS. 550 Copies (500 for Sale), small 8vo, 5s. net. Also 50 Copies hand-made paper, 12s. 6d. net. [Ready this day.]

MEYNELL, MRS.

THE RHYTHM of LIFE, and other Essays. 550 Copies (500 for Sale), small 8vo, 5s. net. Also 50 Copies, hand-made paper, 12s. 6d. net. [Ready this day.]

"Mr. Coventry Patmore contributes to the December number of the Fortnightly Review an article entitled 'Mrs. Meynell, Poet and Essayist.'"—Athenaeum, November 19th.

MICHAEL FIELD.

STEPHANIA: a Trialogue, in Three Acts. Frontispiece, Colophon, and Ornament for Binding designed by Selwyn Image. Pott 4to, 6s. net. [Just ready.]

JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

IN the KEY of BLUE, and other Prose Essays. Cover (Blue-bells and Laurel) specially designed by C. S. Ricketts. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net. Also 50 Copies on Dickenson hand-made paper, £1 1s. net. [Next Week.]

OSCAR WILDE.

SALOMÉ: Tragédie en un Acte. First Edition limited to 600 Copies (500 of which are for Sale) for Paris and London. 8vo, 5s. net. [In the press.]
* "Salomé" has been accepted by Madame Bernhardt, but, as is well known, the Lord Chamberlain refused the licence.

JOHN GRAY.

SILVERPOINTS (Poems). Cover (Water and Willow Leaves) and Initial Letters designed by C. S. Ricketts. Limited Edition, long 12mo, 7s. 6d. net. Also 25 Copies on Japanese paper, £1 1s. net.
* The build of this book has been founded throughout on the Aldine Italic Books. [Immediately.]

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

ENGLISH POEMS. Second Edition. 12mo, 5s. net. [Ready.]

ARTHUR HALLAM.

POEMS. Reprinted from the scarce "Remains in Verse and Prose," 1834. Also his Critique from the Englishman's Magazine, 1831. "On SOME of the CHARACTERISTICS of MODERN POETRY, and on the LYRICAL POEMS of ALFRED TENNYSON." With an Introductory Note by RICHARD LE GALLIENNE. Small 8vo, 5s. net. Also 50 Copies on hand-made paper, 12s. 6d. net. [In the press.]

EFFIE JOHNSON.

IN the FIRE, and other Fancies (Fairy Tales). With Frontispiece by Walter Crane. Imperial 16mo, 3s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

WILLIAM BELL SCOTT.

A POET'S HARVEST HOME, with an AFTER-MATH. Limited Edition. Post 12mo, 5s. net. Also 50 Copies on Japanese vellum, 12s. 6d. net. [In the press.]

LONDON: ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE, VIGO STREET, W.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NEW VOLUMES JUST PUBLISHED.

KING HENRY VIII. With a Series of Magnificent Photogravures (Printed on India Paper) from Original Drawings by Sir James Linton, P.R.I. Edition limited to 250 numbered Copies. Price on application to all Booksellers.

A DIARY of the SALISBURY PARLIAMENT. By H. W. Lucy, illustrated by Harry Furniss. 21s.

CASSELL'S NEW BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY, containing Memoirs of the Most Eminent Men and Women of all Ages and Countries. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

A BLOT of INK. Translated from the French of RENÉ BAZIN by Q, Author of "Noughts and Crosses," and PAUL M. FRANCKE. 5s.

BASHFUL FIFTEEN. By L. T. MEADE. Illustrated. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; cloth, gilt edges, 5s.

VOLUMES SUITABLE FOR CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.

FINE-ART VOLUMES.

THE MAGAZINE of ART. Yearly Volume. With 12 Photogravures, Etchings, &c., and about 300 Illustrations. 16s.

HISTORIC HOUSES of the UNITED KINGDOM. Profusely Illustrated. Cloth gilt, 10s. 6d.

RIVERS of GREAT BRITAIN. Descriptive, Historical, Pictorial.

THE ROYAL RIVER. The Thames from Source to Sea. With Several Hundred Original Illustrations. 42s. Popular Edition, 16s.

RIVERS of the EAST COAST. With numerous Engravings. 42s. Popular Edition, 16s.

THE PICTURESQUE MEDITERRANEAN. With a Series of magnificent Illustrations from Original Designs. Complete in 2 vols., 42s. each.

HENRIETTE RONNER, the Painter of Cat Life and Cat Character. With beautiful Phototype Illustrations. Popular Edition, 12s.

A VISION of SAINTS. By LEWIS MORRIS. Edition de Luxe with 20 Full-Page Illustrations. 21s.

PICTURESQUE EUROPE. Popular Edition. Containing 65 Steel Plates and nearly 1,000 Illustrations. 5 vols., 18s. each.

PICTURESQUE AMERICA. With 18 Steel Plates and 800 Original Wood Engravings. 4 vols., 42s. each.

PICTURESQUE CANADA. With 600 Original Illustrations. 2 vols., 63s. each.

PICTURESQUE AUSTRALASIA. With upwards of 1,000 Illustrations. Complete in 4 vols., 7s. 6d. each.

CATHEDRALS, ABBEYS, and CHURCHES of ENGLAND and WALES. With Original Illustrations. Popular Edition. 2 vols., 25s.

ABBEYS and CHURCHES of ENGLAND and WALES. Fully illustrated. Series I and II. Fine-Paper Edition. 21s. each.

THE CABINET PORTRAIT GALLERY. Series I, 2, and 3. Each containing 36 Cabinet Photographs of Eminent Men and Women of the Day. With Biographical Sketches. 15s. each.

ILLUSTRATED HISTORY of MUSIC. By EMIL NAUMANN. Edited by Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY. 2 vols., 31s. 6d.

QUEEN SUMMER. Containing 40 pages of Designs by Walter Crane, printed in Colours. 6s.

FLORA'S FEAST. With 40 pages of Pictures by Walter Crane, in Colours. 5s.

ROBINSON CRUSOE. Cassell's New Fine-Art Edition of. With upwards of 100 Illustrations by Walter Paget. 7s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED EDITIONS OF SHAKESPEARE.

EDITIONS DE LUXE OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

OTHELLO. Illustrated by Frank Dicksee, R.A. 70s.

KING HENRY IV. Illustrated by Edward Grützner. 70s.

AS YOU LIKE IT. Illustrated by Émile Bayard. 70s.

THE PLAYS of SHAKESPEARE. Edited by Prof. Henry Morley. Complete in 13 vols., in box, 21s.

CASSELL'S MINIATURE SHAKESPEARE. Illustrated. 12 vols., 12s.; or handsomely bound, 21s.

THE ROYAL SHAKESPEARE. Complete in 3 vols., 15s. each.

THE LEOPOLD SHAKESPEARE. With about 400 Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED SHAKESPEARE. With about 600 Illustrations. Complete in 3 vols., 63s.

ILLUSTRATED VOLUMES.

THE WORLD of ROMANCE. Illustrated throughout. 9s.

THE STORY of AFRICA and its EXPLORERS. By Dr. ROBERT BROWN. Fully illustrated. Vol. I., 7s. 6d.

THE WORLD of ADVENTURE. Illustrated. 3 vols., 9s. each.

THE QUIVER. Yearly Volume. Illustrated, 7s. 6d.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE. Yearly Volume. Illustrated. 9s.

CASSELL'S SATURDAY JOURNAL. Illustrated, 7s. 6d.

OUR EARTH and its STORY. Complete in 3 vols., 9s. each.

THE LIFE and TIMES of QUEEN VICTORIA. Illustrated throughout. 2 vols., 9s. each.

PEOPLES of the WORLD. By Dr. ROBERT BROWN. 6 vols., 7s. 6d. each.

OUR OWN COUNTRY. With 1,200 Illustrations. 6 vols., 7s. 6d. each.

ILLUSTRATED BRITISH BALLADS. 2 vols., 15s.

OLD and NEW EDINBURGH. Illustrated. 3 vols., 9s. each.

GREATER LONDON. By E. WALFORD. With 400 Illustrations. 2 vols., 9s. each.

OLD and NEW LONDON. Illustrated. 6 vols., 9s. each.

GLEANINGS from POPULAR AUTHORS. Illustrated. 2 vols., 9s. each.

THE WORLD of WONDERS. Illustrated. 2 vols., 7s. 6d. each.

CITIES of the WORLD. Illustrated throughout. 4 vols., 7s. 6d. each.

LIBRARY of ENGLISH LITERATURE. By Prof. HENRY MORLEY. Complete in 5 vols., 7s. 6d. each.

CASSELL'S NEW POPULAR EDUCATOR. With New Illustrations, Coloured Plates, New Maps in Colours, New Type, &c. Complete in 8 vols., 5s. each.

CASSELL'S STOREHOUSE of GENERAL INFORMATION. Fully Illustrated. Vols. I., II., and III. 5s. each.

HISTORIES.

MODERN EUROPE, A HISTORY of. By C. A. FYFE, M.A. With Full-Page Illustrations. 3 vols., 7s. 6d. each.

ENGLAND, CASSELL'S HISTORY of. Revised throughout and Illustrated with Original Engravings. Vols. I. to V. 9s. each.

UNIVERSAL HISTORY, CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED. Illustrated throughout. 4 vols., 9s. each.

BRITISH BATTLES on LAND and SEA. 4 vols., 9s. each.

UNITED STATES, CASSELL'S HISTORY of the. 3 vols., 9s. each.

INDIA, CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED HISTORY of. 2 vols., 9s. each.

RUSSO-TURKISH WAR, HISTORY of. 2 vols., 9s. each.

HISTORY of PROTESTANTISM. 3 vols., 9s. each.

VOLUMES ILLUSTRATED BY DORÉ.

DORÉ'S DANTE'S INFERNO. Cheap Edition. 7s. 6d.

DORÉ'S BIBLE, The. Popular Edition. 15s.

DORÉ'S MILTON'S PARADISE LOST. 21s.

DORÉ GALLERY, The. With 250 Illustrations. 42s.

RELIGIOUS WORKS.

WORKS BY ARCHDEACON FARRAR.

THE LIFE of CHRIST. Cheap Illustrated Edition, cloth, 7s. 6d.; cloth, full gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.; Library Edition, Thirty-second Edition, 2 vols., 21s.; or morocco, 42s.; Popular Edition, 6s.

THE LIFE and WORK of ST. PAUL. Illustrated Edition, 21s.; or morocco, 42s.; Library Edition, Twentieth Thousand, 2 vols., 21s.; Popular Edition, 6s.

THE EARLY DAYS of CHRISTIANITY. Library Edition, Ninth Thousand, 2 vols., 21s.; morocco, 42s.; Popular Edition, 6s.

THE OLD TESTAMENT COMMENTARY. Edited by Bishop ELLICOTT. 5 vols., 21s. each.

THE NEW TESTAMENT COMMENTARY. Edited by Bishop ELLICOTT. 3 vols., 21s. each.

NEW LIGHT on the BIBLE and the HOLY LAND. By B. T. A. EVETTS. Illustrated. Cloth, 21s.

THE HOLY LAND and the BIBLE. By the Rev. CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE, D.D., LL.D., Edin. Illustrated Edition, 21s.; Library Edition, 2 vols., 21s.

CONQUESTS of the CROSS. By EDWIN HODDER. Illustrated. 3 vols., 9s. each.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS and HOLY WAR. With 200 Illustrations. 16s.

SCIENTIFIC WORKS.

THE STORY of the HEAVENS. By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL, F.R.S., F.R.A.S. With Coloured Plates and Wood Engravings. Cheap Edition. 12s. 6d.

STAR-LAND. Being Talks with Young People about the Wonders of the Heavens. By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL, F.R.S. Illustrated. Third Edition. 6s.

SCIENCE for ALL. Edited by Dr. ROBERT BROWN, M.A., F.L.S., &c. With about 1,500 Illustrations. 5 vols., 9s. each.

CASSELL'S NEW NATURAL HISTORY. Edited by Prof. P. MARTIN DUNCAN, M.B., F.R.S. With 2,000 Illustrations. In 6 vols., 9s. each.

ELECTRICITY in the SERVICE of MAN. Translated and Edited by R. WORMELL, D.Sc., M.A. With nearly 850 Illustrations. Cheap Edition. 7s.

ILLUSTRATED BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

FAIRWAY ISLAND. By HORACE HUTCHINSON. Cloth gilt, 5s.

BOB LOVELL'S CAREER. A Story of American Railway Life. By EDWARD S. ELLIS. Cloth gilt, 5s.

A BUNDLE of TALES. By MAGGIE BROWN, SAM BROWN, and AUST ETHEL. 3s. 6d.

THE PEEP of DAY. Cassell's Illustrated Edition. 2s. 6d.

FAIRY TALES in OTHER LANDS. By JULIA GODDARD. 3s. 6d.

"LITTLE FOLKS" HALF YEARLY VOLUME. With about 200 Illustrations and Coloured Pictures. Boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth, 5s.

BO-PEEP. Yearly Volume. Illustrated. Boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. 6d.

* * * Upwards of 1,000 Volumes suitable for Gift-Books will be found in CASSELL & COMPANY'S COMPLETE CATALOGUE, a copy of which will be forwarded post-free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON; PARIS AND MELBOURNE.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING and SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

UNIVERSITY TYPE-WRITING

OFFICE, OXFORD (16, King Edward Street)—MSS. of all descriptions typed and prepared for the press. Literary, Scientific, Medical, and Foreign MSS. carefully copied and revised by experienced typists. Notes taken at the Bodleian. Shorthand Clerk and Typist sent any distance by train. Translations.—For price list and information address the Secretary.

TYPEWRITING.—LADY seeks EM-

PLOYMENT, all kinds of Copying, Home Work. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words); for 5,000 words or over, 1s. per Thousand. Cash on or before delivery.—A. NIGHTINGALL, The Avenue, Stevenage.

AUTHORS, ACTORS, PUBLISHERS,
and PUBLIC SCHOOL MANAGERS should send MSS., Plays, Examination Papers, &c., requiring to be carefully and accurately typewritten, to RAYNE & CO., 39, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

"FRANCESCA: Roadside Songs of Tuscany."—To complete the Catalogue, OWNERS of DRAWINGS by Miss FRANCESCA ALEXANDER who have not already communicated them are respectfully REQUESTED to ADDRESS the SECRETARY of John Ruskin, Esq., Brantwood, Coniston, Lancashire.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.—The THIRTY-FIRST WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES is now OPEN, 5, FALMOUTH EAST. From 10 till 5. Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY,

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

THURSDAY, 15th DECEMBER, at 8.30 P.M.
The following Papers will be read:—"NOTES on the FAMILY of BETON in Connection with some ROYAL LETTERS—JAMES VI. (originals exhibited)" by HENRY ELLIOT MALDEN, M.A., F.R.Hist.S. "STRAFFORD in the STAR CHAMBER," by HUBERT HALL, F.S.A., F.R.Hist.S.
20, Hanover Square, W.

HANOVER SQUARE.—TWO SETS of ROOMS (with use of Meeting Room), adapted for Scientific Societies, To BE LET.—Apply to J. BARNOW, 3, Hanover Square, W.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., Ouseley, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided as easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: A Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 73d., and tins, 1s. 13d., Labelled:

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists, LONDON.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

EDUCATIONAL LECTURES—Session 1892-1893.

A Series of Ten Educational Lectures will be given, under the auspices of the Royal Geographical Society, by Mr. H. J. MACKINDER, M.A., Reader in Geography at the University of Oxford, in the Hall of the University of London, Burlington Gardens (by kind permission of the Senate), on successive Fridays, beginning on the third Friday of January (the 20th), at 8 p.m. To these Lectures, Fellows of the Society will be admitted free. Fellows can obtain tickets for members of their families at a fee of 5s. each for the Course. To bona fide Teachers, Students of the London University Extension Society, and Training College Students, the fee will be 5s. To the general public the fee will be 10s. In all cases the names of the holders will be written on the tickets, which are not transferable; and the holders may at any time be asked to write their names in a book in the entrance hall. Applications for tickets to be made to the Secretary, 1, Savile Row, Burlington Gardens, W. The subject of Mr. Mackinder's Lectures will be—"The Relations of Geography to History in Europe and Asia" (1) The Theatre of History. (2) The Roads to the Indies. (3) The Belt of Desert and Steppe. (4) The Gates of India and China. (5) The Approaches to Europe. (6) The History of Russia as a Commentary on its Geography. (7) The Alps as a Factor in European History. (8) The Approaches to Italy. (9) The Divisions of Gaul. (10) Some Geographical Analyses of British History. The Course will be fully illustrated. In connexion with these Lectures, Special Classes will be held for those who wish to pursue the subjects further. They will be under the superintendence of the Society's Librarian, Helen Rowar Mill, D.Sc. Details as to fees, &c., will be subsequently announced.

NATIONAL HOME READING UNION.

DANTE AND SHAKESPEARE COURSES.

SUPPLEMENTS dealing with courses of reading in the works of Dante and Shakespeare, and giving every possible assistance to students are now published with the MONTHLY MAGAZINES of the N. H. R. UNION for GENERAL READERS (Special Courses). The DANTE SUPPLEMENT is written by Mr. A. J. BUTLER, M.A., the SHAKESPEARE SUPPLEMENT by Professor C. H. HERFORD, M.A., Litt.D. It is hoped that the Union may constitute a connecting link between existing Shakespeare and Dante Societies and may facilitate the establishment of such societies where they do not already exist.

Information as to membership and subscriptions may be obtained from the GENERAL SECRETARY, N. H. R. U., Surrey House, Victoria Embankment, London, W.C.

CITY of MANCHESTER.—MUNI-

CIPAL SCHOOL OF ART, Cavendish Street.—The Technical Instruction Committee of the City Council invite APPLICATIONS for the position of HEAD MASTER and also that of SECOND MASTER. Payment will be by salary alone, and candidates may receive private information regarding salaries upon application to Mr. Councillor HOX, Chairman of the Technical Instruction Committee, Town Hall, Manchester. Letters of application enclosed Head or Second Master, with copies of recent testimonials, full particulars as to age, previous training, career, experience, and attainments, must be sent on or before December 22nd, 1892, to Mr. J. H. REYNOLDS, Director and Secretary, Municipal Technical School, Manchester. Personal application to any member of the Committee is not allowed.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT.

The Royal Naval School.
About TWENTY FOUNDATION and ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £50 to £30, offered in April. Full particulars of Head Master.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH

WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE,
CARDIFF.

The Council is prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR of LATIN. The stipend of the Professor will be £350 per annum. Applications together with testimonials must be sent in before January the 10th. For further information apply to University College, Cardiff,
November 30th, 1892.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

or the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

THE CITY BRANCH

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

Is Now Removed from 2, King Street, Cheapside, to 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
(MANSON HOUSE EXP.)

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY.

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 31, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
211, Drompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

From Messrs. Ward & Downey's List.

ANGELICA KAUFFMANN: a Biography.
With a List of her Paintings and Drawings, and some Illustrative Reproductions thereof. By FRANCES A. GERARD. 1 vol., 15s.

Four Books treating continuously of the Social History of England from the Restoration to the Present Time.

(1) SOCIAL ENGLAND from the RESTORATION to the REVOLUTION. By W. C. SYDNEY, Author of "England and the English in the Eighteenth Century." 1 vol., 10s. 6d. [Now ready.]

"He has an eye for what is picturesque, a taste for what is curious, and enough sense to divide his survey equitably between the scandals and follies of the time and the social life of the rest of England."

"He has apparently consulted all the best known and most approved authorities on the subject of which he treats with judgment and assiduity, and the result is a compilation which is both entertaining and instructive."—World.

(2) ENGLAND and the ENGLISH in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By W. C. SYDNEY. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 24s.

"Mr. Sydney has succeeded in picturing the men and women, costumes and pastimes, coffee-houses and clubs, vices, follies, and superstitions of the past century in a highly graphic and realistic manner.... a useful and delightful book."—Daily Telegraph.

(3) SOCIAL ENGLAND UNDER the REGENCY. By JOHN ASHTON. Illustrated with reproductions of contemporary Sketches. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"These two volumes are entertaining reading, and the numerous illustrations which they contain, reproduced from prints and caricatures of the time, are not their least instructive feature."

(4) GOSSIP of the CENTURY: Personal and Traditional Memories—Social, Literary, Artistic. With copious Illustrations, chiefly Portraits. By the Author of "Flemish Interiors." 2 vols., demy 8vo, 42s. [Now ready.]

"He has told his story well. The anecdotes relating to George III.'s family are numerous, and will amuse readers fond of courtly gossip."—Spectator.

TWO NEW BOOKS for CHILDREN.

THOSE MIDSUMMER FAIRIES. By THEODORA ELMSLIE, Author of "The Little Lady of Lavender." With 20 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s.

"The illustrations are extremely beautiful."—Manchester Examiner.

PIXIE. By Mrs. Blagden, Author of "Trash," &c. With Illustrations by Edwin J. Ellis. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A NEW NOVEL by MR. WESTALL.

ROY of ROY'S COURT. By William WESTALL. 2 vols.

A NEW NOVEL by R. ASHE KING.

A GERALDINE. By R. Ashe King. 2 vols.

WARD & DOWNEY, YORK ST., COVENT GARDEN.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY.

TODD LECTURE SERIES—VOL. III.

THE CODEX PALATINO-VATICANUS.
No. 820 (Texts, Translations, and Indices). By B. MACCARTHY, D.D. pp. 459, 7s. 6d.

ACADEMY'S TRANSACTIONS—XXX., 1 & 2.

ON the TUMULI and INSCRIBED STONES at NEW GRANGE, DOWTH, and KNOWTH. By GEORGE COFFEY, A.I.B. Plates 1 to VI and Map. (November, 1892.) 8s.

ON an OGAM INSCRIPTION supposed to bear an ANGLO-SAXON NAME. By the Right Rev. CHARLES GRAVES, D.D., Lord Bishop of Limerick. (November, 1892.) 1s.

WILLIAMS & NORDGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

Monthly, Price 3d., or Post Free 3d.

THE POSITIVIST REVIEW. Edited by E. S. DESLY. The First Number, to be published (January), will contain articles by FREDERIC HARRISON, J. H. BRIDGES and THE EDITOR.

REVIEWS & TURNER, 196, STRAND.

Now Ready. Crown 8vo, cloth, Price 5s.

SECOND EDITION OF

"IN THE SERVICE OF LOVE."

By MRS. A. WALLACE, with Portrait.

JOHN FLACK, 122, 11th Holborn, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HEHR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions of value. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

CONSTABLE'S ORIENTAL MISCELLANY.

Vol. 1. BERNIER'S TRAVELS in the MOGUL EMPIRE. An Entirely New Edition, with a Frontispiece printed in 18 colours on Japanese paper, other Illustrations and Three Maps. By ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE, Mem. As. Soc. Bengal, F.S.A. Scot. Crown 8vo, pp. liv—500. Price 6s. net.

Vol. 2. POPULAR READINGS in SCIENCE. By JOHN GALL, M.A., LL.B., late Professor of Mathematics and Physics, Canning College, Lucknow, and DAVID ROBERTSON, M.A., LL.B., B.Sc. With 56 Diagrams, a Glossary of Technical Terms, and an Index. Crown 8vo, pp. 468. Price 5s. net.

Vol. 3. AURENG-ZEBE: a Tragedy, by JOHN DRYDEN; and Book II. of THE CHACE, a Poem by WILLIAM SOMERVILLE. Edited, with Biographical Memoirs and Copious Notes, by K. DEIGHTON, B.A., Editor of "Select Plays of Shakespeare." With a Portrait of Dryden, and a Coloured Reproduction of an Indian Painting of the Emperor Akbar Deer-stalking. Crown 8vo, pp. xiii.—222. Price 5s. net.

"An interesting reprint of Dryden's Tragedy.... If any one wishes to realise by an hour's easy reading the vast gulf which separates our knowledge of India and our conceptions about India at the close of this nineteenth century from the views of our ancestors about India in the last quarter of the seventeenth century, we recommend this book to his notice. Mr. Deighton's copious and suggestive foot notes will render the perusal both profitable and pleasant."—Times.

Vol. 4. LETTERS from a MAH-RATTA CAMP. By THOMAS DUER BROUGHTON. A New Edition, with an Introduction by the Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I., F.R.S., Notes, Coloured and other Illustrations, very full Index and a Map. Price 6s. net.

A HANDSOME GIFT-BOOK.

INDIAN FIELD SPORTS. A Series of Ten Coloured Plates selected and Reproduced from the Engravings first Published in 1807, after Designs by Captain Thos. Williamson, of the Bengal Army. With an Introduction and a Description of each Plate. Oblong 4to. Printed on Hand-made Paper, and handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, gilt top, price 10s. 6d.

STUDIES in MOHAMMEDANISM, Historical and Doctrinal, with a Chapter on Islam in England. By JOHN J. POOL. With a Frontispiece and Index, pp. xvi.—120. Crown 8vo, full cloth, price 6s.

"As a 'popular text-book,' dealing with some of the most picturesque aspects of Islam, it deserves more than ordinary attention."—Times.

THE INDIAN MAGAZINE and REVIEW. A Publication which aims at interesting its Readers in the People of India, in their Literature, their History, their Art, and their Customs; their various Phases of Development, and particularly in their Progress. Sixpence Monthly. Subscription, 5s. per annum, post-free.

14, PARLIAMENT STREET, WESTMINSTER.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA:

A DICTIONARY OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE.

Entirely New Edition, in Ten Volumes, Imperial 8vo.

WITH NUMEROUS MAPS AND WOOD ENGRAVINGS.

NINE VOLUMES NOW READY.

VOL. X., COMPLETING the WORK, in JANUARY, 1893.

PRICES OF COMPLETE SETS:

Cloth	£5 0 0
Half-morocco, or Half-calf	7 10 0
Half-morocco extra, or Half-russia	8 10 0

Sets can also be had in tree calf, and in full morocco.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA contains upwards of Thirty Thousand Articles, and is illustrated by more than Three Thousand Five Hundred Wood Engravings, and Fifty Coloured Maps.

Nearly One Thousand Contributors, including many of the most eminent authorities in every department of knowledge, have assisted in the preparation of this Work.

"Everybody who wants a handy compendium of universal knowledge, thoroughly 'up to date,' must get Chambers's 'Encyclopædia.'"—St. James's Gazette.

"The best Encyclopædia ever brought out."—Daily Chronicle.

"For practical utility these volumes could hardly be exceeded."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"This edition of Chambers's 'Encyclopædia' is perhaps the cheapest book ever published."

The Speaker.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED, 47, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON; AND EDINBURGH.

NATIONAL All the Profits are divided among the Assured.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.
PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED, £4,000,000.
INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.
PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with provision for Old Age.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Fourth Edition, pp. 290, 5s.
PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Argument against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.
HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.
Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.
THE GOD of the AMEN. and other Sermons. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., Author of "The Holy of Holies," "The Unchanging Christ," &c.

"Dr. MacLaren is, perhaps, the finest sermon builder of living preachers."—Christian Commonwealth.
"His insight into Scripture and gift of simple pulpit exposition is unrivalled."—Independent (New York).

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers, 21 and 22, FERNIVAL STREET, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each committed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.
BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also.
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

PROF. LOISELLE'S DISCOVERIES. THE PHYSIOLOGICAL ART OF NEVER FORGETTING—unlike mnemonics. Lost memories restored—the words made good, and the best better. Any book learned in one reading. Speaking without notes. A self-teaching method for all subjects. Invaluable to the Legal, Medical, Clerical, Musical, Dramatic, and all other Professions and Businesses. Last Edition contains ONE THOUSAND APPLICATIONS!!!
PROSPECTUS POST FREE.
With opinions of Mr. R. A. FLEETOR, DR. ANDREW WILSON, &c.
Great inducements to Correspondence Classes in
NEVER FORGETTING and CURE for MIND WANDERING
Also taught in Classes or Privately at the address below.
PROF. LOISELLE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW VOLUME OF POEMS BY LORD TENNYSON.

THE DEATH of OENONE, AKBAR'S DREAM, and other Poems. By ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON, Poet Laureate. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW BOOK BY MR. P. G. HAMERTON.

MAN in ART. By Philip G. Hamerton. Illustrated by Etchings and Photographs from Sketches by Sir F. Leighton, Alma Tadema, Watts, Sir John Gilbert, Luke Fildes, Dicksee, G. Leslie, Gonzalo Coques, Philippe de Champaigne, Maes, Schalken, Murillo, Ghirlandajo, Aïry Scheffer, Moreau, Botticelli, Pisano, Giovanni Bellini, Borgognone, Walen, Woolner, M. de Roton, Macklin, Rude, Luca della Robbia, Tassaert, Bellanger, Fra Angelico, Albert Dürer, Lucas of Leyden, Rembrandt, Etched or Photographed by Norman Hurst, Rhead, C. O. Murray, M. Manasse, Didier, Flameng, Gaspil Process, Dujardin, Annan and Swan, Amand Durand, Guillaume, Pierre Gusman. Printed on J. Dickinson & Co.'s Hand-made Paper. Crown 8vo, £3 13s. 6d. net.

* * EDITION DE LUXE (limited to 175 Copies, 50 of which are for America), printed on John Dickinson & Co.'s Hand-made Paper, and the Illustrations on Japanese vellum. £10 10s. net.

THREE NEW NOVELS.

THE HEIR-PRESUMPTIVE & the HEIR-APPARENT.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.
GLASGOW HERALD.—"A book such as no living fictionist could have written—a book which one reads with sustained eagerness of interest, and lays down with a sigh of satisfied pleasure."

DON ORSINO. By F. Marion Crawford. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

ATHENÆUM.—"A story with many strong points, told with all the spirit we are wont to expect from the author."

CALMIRE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

* * A New Novel which has already created a great sensation in America, where it has been described "as the greatest Novel in many respects which has appeared within the present decade."

NEW VOLUMES OF MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

SKETCHES BY BOZ. By Charles Dickens. With 44 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CHRISTMAS BOOKS. By Charles Dickens. 65 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

DOMBEY and SON. By Charles Dickens. With 56 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF MR. CHARLES BOOTH'S WELL-KNOWN WORK

LIFE and LABOUR of the PEOPLE in LONDON.

Edited by CHARLES BOOTH. Vol. I. EAST CENTRAL and SOUTH LONDON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

* * The remaining Volumes—Vol. II. STREETS and POPULATION CLASSIFIED—Vol. III. BLOCKS of BUILDINGS, SCHOOLS, and IMMIGRATION—Vol. IV. EAST LONDON INDUSTRIES—will follow at monthly intervals, uniform in size and price.

THE THEORY of WAGES and its APPLICATION to the EIGHT HOURS QUESTION and other LABOUR PROBLEMS. By HERBERT M. THOMPSON, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE "ENGLISH CITIZEN" SERIES.

CHEAPER EDITION.—NEW VOLUME.

THE ELECTORATE and the LEGISLATURE. By SPENCER WALPOLE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED BOOKS FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

ILLUSTRATED BY HUGH THOMSON.
THE VICAR of WAKEFIELD. By Oliver Goldsmith. With 182 Illustrations by Hugh Thomson, and Preface by AUSTIN DOBSON. Crown 8vo, 6s. Also with uncut edges, paper label, 6s.

CRANFORD. By Mrs. Gaskell. With Preface by Anne THACKERAY RITCHIE, and 100 Illustrations by Hugh Thomson. Crown 8vo, 6s. Also with uncut edges, paper label, 6s.

DAYS with SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY. Reprinted from "The Spectator." With Illustrations by Hugh Thomson. New Edition. Crown 8vo, elegant, 6s.

CANON ATKINSON'S CHRISTMAS BOOKS.
SCENES in FAIRYLAND; or, Miss Mary's Visits to the Court of Fairy Realm. By Rev. J. C. ATKINSON, D.C.L., Canon of York. With about 40 Illustrations by C. E. Brock. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

FORTY YEARS in a MOORLAND PARISH. Reminiscences and Researches in Danby-in-Cleveland. With Maps and Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

An Edition with extra full-page Illustrations. 8vo, 12s. net.
THE LAST of the GIANT-KILLERS; or, The Exploits of Sir Jack of Danby Dale. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WALKS, TALKS, TRAVELS, and EXPLOITS of TWO SCHOOLBOYS. A Book for Boys. With Illustrations. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

PLAY-HOURS and HALF-HOLIDAYS; or, Further Experiences of Two Schoolboys. New Edition. Illustrated by Coleman. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BOOKS BY MRS. OLIPHANT.
THE MAKERS of VENICE: Doges, Conquerors, Painters, and Men of Letters. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S STANDARD EDITIONS OF THE POETS.

CROWN 8VO, GREEN CLOTH, WITH PORTRAITS, 7s. 6d. EACH.
THE WORKS of ALFRED LORD TENNYSON. New and Enlarged Edition.

COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of MATTHEW ARNOLD.

COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. With Introduction by THOMAS HUGHES.

A NEW TRANSLATION OF "THE PURGATORY."
THE PURGATORY of DANTE ALIGHIERI. An Experiment in Literal Verse Translation. By CHARLES LANCELOT SHADWELL, M.A., B.C.L., with an Introduction by WALTER PATER, M.A. Extra crown 8vo, parchment, 10s. net.

THE TIMES.—"A very skilful and scholarly translation.... a rendering which is always scholarly in execution and dignified in tone, often extraordinarily felicitous, and with scrupulously faithful."

UNIFORM WITH PROF. NORTON'S TRANSLATION OF "THE DIVINE COMEDY."
THE NEW LIFE of DANTE ALIGHIERI. Translated by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

MR. WELLDON'S NEW TRANSLATION OF THE ETHICS.
THE NICOMACHEAN ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. Translated with an Analysis and Critical Notes by J. E. C. WELLDON, M.A., Head Master of Harrow School. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

* * Uniform with Mr. Welldon's Translation of the Politics and Rhetoric already published.

NEW VOLUME OF MR. DAKYNS' TRANSLATION OF XENOPHON.
THE WORKS of XENOPHON. Translated by H. G. DAKYNS, M.A., late Assistant Master in Clifton College. In Four Volumes. Vol. II. Hellenica Books III.—VII. Agesilaus, the Politics, and the Revenues. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION, WITH ANNOTATIONS AND NEW PREFACE
ARISTOTLE on the CONSTITUTION of ATHENS. Translated and Annotated by E. POSTE, M.A., Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. Second Edition. To which are added some new readings in "Paradise Lost." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FOR OLD WESTMINSTER BOYS.
WESTMINSTER SCHOOL REGISTER (The) from 1764 to 1883. Compiled and Edited, with Biographical Notes, by G. F. RUSSELL BARKER, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and ALAN H. STENNING. With Appendices. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

NEW EDITIONS.
IN the GARDEN of DREAMS: Lyrics and Sonnets. By LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON, Author of "Swallow Flights," &c. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SWALLOW FLIGHTS. New Edition of Poems published in 1877, with Ten additional Poems by LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW WORK BY REV. STOPFORD BROOKE.
THE HISTORY of EARLY ENGLISH LITERATURE. Being the History of English Poetry from its Beginnings to the Accession of King Alfred. By the Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A. With a Map. 2 vols., 8vo, 27s. net.

TIMES.—"In Mr. Stopford Brooke's monumental work he strives with rare skill and insight to present our earliest national poetry as a living literature, and not as mere material for research."

NEW VOLUME OF THE CHEAPER REISSUE OF "THE GOLDEN TREASURY" SERIES.

THEOCRITUS, BION, and MOSCHUS. Rendered into English Prose, with an Introductory Essay, by ANDREW LANG, M.A., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. 18mo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

LETTERS of WILLIAM COWPER. Edited, with Introduction, by the Rev. WILLIAM BENHAM, B.D., F.R.S., Rector of St. Edmund the King, Lombard-street.

THE CHILDREN'S TREASURY of LYRICAL POETRY. Selected and Arranged, with Notes, by F. T. PALGRAVE.

THE MAKERS of FLORENCE: Dante, Giotto, Savonarola, and their City. By the SAME. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

ROYAL EDINBURGH: her Saints, Kings, Prophets, and Poets. By the SAME. Illustrated by George Reid, R.S.A. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

JERUSALEM: its History and Hope. With Engravings. 8vo, 21s.

NEW BOOK BY SIR JOHN LUBBOCK.
THE BEAUTIES of NATURE; and the Wonders of the World We Live In. By the Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TIMES.—"Contains delightful gossip about the fairy-land of the animal and plant world—the mountains, the sea, the air, and the stars."

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S CHRISTMAS BOOKS.
THE GIRLS and I. By Mrs. Molesworth. Illustrated by L. LESLIE BROOKE. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d. each.
NURSE HEATHERDALE'S STORY. With Illustrations by LESLIE BROOKE.

A CHRISTMAS POSY. With Illustrations by Walter Crane. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

HERR BABY.	CHRISTMAS-TREE LAND.	THE CUCKOO CLOCK.
GRANDMOTHER DEAR.	"US": AN OLD-	FOUR WINDS FARM.
THE TAPESTRY ROOM.	FASHIONED STORY.	LITTLE MISS PEGGY.
A CHRISTMAS CHILD.	"CARROTS": JUST A	THE RECTORY CHILDREN
ROSY.	LITTLE BOY.	THE CHILDREN OF THE
TWO LITTLE WAIFS.	TELL ME A STORY.	CASTLE.

MACMILLAN'S STANDARD EDITIONS OF THE POETS.

CROWN 8VO, GREEN CLOTH, WITH PORTRAITS, 7s. 6d. EACH.
COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY. Edited by F. G. DOWDEN.

COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS of WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. With Introduction by JOHN MORLEY.

COMPLETE WORKS of SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE. Edited by J. DAKES CAMPBELL.

MACMILLAN AND CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1076.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1892.

Price 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S PUBLICATIONS.

An EDITION DE LUXE of

MR. J. M. BARRIE'S

A WINDOW in THRUMS. With Eighteen

Etchings by WILLIAM HOLE, R.S.A. Large post 4to, printed on hand-made paper, 31s. 6d. Handsomely printed by Messrs. R. & R. Clark, of Edinburgh, on a Special English Hand-made Paper.

The Edition is strictly limited to 550 copies for Great Britain and America, and each copy will be numbered. 50 will be printed with the illustrations on Japanese paper, and signed by the Author and Artist, price THREE GUINEAS each. [In a few days.]

GEORGE GILFILLAN. Letters and Journals:

with Memoir by Dr. and Mrs. R. A. WATSON, of Dundee. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

IRISH IDYLLS. By Jane Barlow, Author of

"Begland Studica." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The DAILY CHRONICLE says: "Miss Barlow has attempted to do for the peasantry of Liscannel, in Ireland, what Mr. Barrie has done for the peasantry of Thrums, in Scotland. . . . To say that Miss Barlow's book is saturated with the pathos of elementary tragedy is not to say enough. We find in her pages the very marrow of sensitive impression. She sees, as only clear eyes see, the tragedies of life, and narrates them as only poets narrate them."

PRESENTATION EDITION.

SONGS of REST. Edited by W. Robertson

NICOLL, M.A., LL.D. Elegantly bound in buckram, gilt top, 5s. [Next week.]

This volume includes the First and Second Series. They have been thoroughly revised, and increased by one-third. 50 copies will be printed on large-paper, price 15s. net.

PRESENTATION EDITION.

IMAGO CHRISTI: the Example of Jesus Christ.

By the Rev. JAMES STALKER, M.A., D.D. Handsomely bound in padded leather, red under gold and red lines, 7s. 6d. net. May be had in calf and Turkey morocco. Also, Twenty-first Thousand, cloth, 5s.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG MEN.

THE FOUR MEN. By the Same Author.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. Fourth Thousand. With Chapters on: Temptation—Conscience—The Religion for To-day—Christ and the Wants of Humanity—Public Spirit—The Evidences of Religion—Youth and Age.

THE BOOKMAN'S LIBRARY.

Edited by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

A Series of Volumes to be issued in connection with THE BOOKMAN. They will consist partly of Reprints and partly of Original Matter. The Volumes will be handsomely printed and bound, and only 500 copies of each will be issued for sale, including Great Britain and America, and 50 copies on large-paper at One Guinea each. The price of the crown 8vo edition will be 7s. 6d. net, and the Publishers reserve the right to increase the price after publication.

Vol. I. THE POETRY of the "DIAL."

[Shortly.]

Vol. II. THE COMPLETE WORKS of EMILY BRONTE.

With Introductory Essays.

[Preparing.]

QUEST and VISION. By W. J. Dawson. Crown

8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"The marks of wide reading pervade the volume, and Mr. Dawson is in the main singularly correct in his allusions. The 'New Realism' is an essay in which Mr. Dawson gets into tolerably close quarters with the writers concerned; indeed, it is an acute and significant piece of criticism. The book as a whole is always attractive in theme, often felicitous in expression, and sometimes subtle and penetrating in judgment."—Speaker.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

1. THE MAKERS of MODERN ENGLISH: a Popular Handbook to the Greater Poets of the Century. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

2. THE REDEMPTION of EDWARD STRAHAN: a Social Story. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A powerful book with a pure and high aim." Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE.

THE GOSPEL of PETER.

A POPULAR ACCOUNT of the NEWLY-RECOVERED GOSPEL of PETER. By Prof. J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A., Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE CHURCH in the ROMAN EMPIRE,

A.D. 64-100. By Professor W. M. RAMSAY, M.A. With Maps and Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, 12s.

The purpose of this work is to trace the history of the relations which the Roman Imperial Government maintained towards the growing power of the Christian Church, and to describe the situation of Christian history within the general history of the Roman Empire before A.D. 180. [Nearly ready.]

CHARACTERS and CHARACTERISTICS of

WILLIAM LAW. Mystic and Nonjuror. Selected and Arranged with an Introduction by ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D., St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, cloth, 9s. [Nearly ready.]

BERNARD of CLAIRVAUX. The Times, The Man, and His Work. By RICHARD S. STORRS, D.D., LL.D. 8vo, cloth, 9s.

"It is a great character in a great career which is here represented. It can hardly fail to show itself great, from whatever point it may be considered; and stimulating lessons ought surely to come from it."—AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

CLEWS to HOLY WRIT; or, The Chronological

Scripture Cycle. A Scheme for Studying the whole Bible in its Historical Order during three years. By MARY L. G. PETRIE, B.A. Lond. Dedicated to the Duchess of Bedford. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE LATE PROF. ELMSLIE.

EXPOSITORY LECTURES and SERMONS.

By W. GRAV ELSLIE, M.A., D.D. Edited by A. N. MACNICOLL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Expositors' Bible.—Completion of Fifth Series.

1. THE ACTS of the APOSTLES. Vol. II.

By the Rev. G. T. STOKES, D.D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Dublin, and Vicar of All Saints'. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

2. THE PSALMS. Vol. I. By the Rev. Alexander

MACLAREN, D.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

THE SERMON YEAR-BOOK for 1892, and Selected Sermons, Outlines, and Texts. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NOW READY, SEVENTH EDITION.

EARTH'S EARLIEST AGES: and their Connection with Modern Spiritualism and Theosophy. By G. H. PEMBER, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THREE NEW GIFT BOOKS FOR BOYS.

WITH FORTY-FIVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS BY J. FINNEMORE.

THE STORY of JOHN G. PATON: Told for Young Folks.

By the Rev. JAMES PATON, B.A. 8vo, cloth, 5s. Sixth Thousand. With Map.

BERT LLOYD'S BOYHOOD: a Story from Nova Scotia.

By J. MACDONALD ONLEY, LL.B. 8vo, handsomely bound, gilt edges, 5s. With 8 Full-page Illustrations by J. Finnemore.

THE STORY of MACKAY of UGANDA: Told for Boys.

By his SISTER. Sixth Thousand. 8vo, 5s. With Portrait and Illustrations.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

LE CARON'S TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AS A SPY, by J. A. HAMILTON	557
LELAND'S EPIGRAMS REMAINS IN POPULAR TRADITION, by REGINALD HUGHES	558
MONTELEONE CONWAY'S LIFE OF TOM PAINE, by WALTER LEWIN	559
A POLISH HISTORICAL NOVEL, by NISSEET BAIN	560
BURNS AND HEW AINSLIE, by WILLIAM WALLACE	561
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTERELL	561
GIFT BOOKS	563
NOTES AND NEWS	561
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	565
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	565
ORIGINAL VERSE: "SAY, PILGRIM, ART THOU FOR THE EAST INDEED?" by PERCY ADDLESHAW	566
OBITUARY: WILLIAM NOEL WOODS, by Dr. J. A. H. MURRAY	566
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	566
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	566
CORRESPONDENCE—
" W. B. Scott's Autobiographical Notes," by Wm. Sharp; The Gospel According to Peter, by E. W. B. Nicholson; "Couvade," by Dr. J. A. H. Murray; Jewish and Indian Parallels, by J. P. K.; Dante's "Gizante," by Prof. Fredericq; "King Solomon's Wives," by A. Lang	567
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	568
MARTIN'S BOOK ABOUT THE BEAVER, by Dr. R. BROWN	569
A MODERN GREEK READING-BOOK	570
CORRESPONDENCE—
The French word "Licorne," by Dr. F. Chance	570
PHILOLOGY NOTES	571
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	571
QUILTER'S PREFERENCES, by F. WEDMORE	572
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	573
STAGE NOTES	573
"IMMENGAROA" AND "ORPHEUS," by J. S. SHEDLOCK	573

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

UNIVERSITY TYPE-WRITING
OFFICE, OXFORD (16, King Edward Street).—MSS. of all descriptions typed and prepared for the press. Literary, Scientific, Medical, and Foreign MSS. carefully copied and revised by experienced typists. Notes taken at the Bodleian. Shorthand Clerk and Typist sent any distance by train. Translations.—For price list and information address the Secretary.

AUTHORS, ACTORS, PUBLISHERS,
and PUBLIC SCHOOL MANAGERS should send MSS., Plays, Examination Papers, &c., requiring to be carefully and accurately typewritten, to RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

A CATALOGUE of good SECOND-HAND BOOKS, Ancient and MODERN, including some rare First Editions of esteemed Modern Authors.—J. WATTS, 50, Robertson-street, Hastings.

BOOKBUYERS should have our LIST of
NEW CHRISTMAS and PRESENTATION BOOKS, just ready. Post free on receipt of address. The largest stock to select from in London.—A. & F. DENNY, Discount Booksellers, 304, Strand, and 28 and 29, Booksellers' Row, W.C.

"FRANCESCA: Roadside Songs of Tuscany."—To Complete the Catalogue, OWNERS of DRAWINGS by Miss FRANCESCA ALEXANDER who have not already communicated them are respectfully REQUESTED to ADDRESS the SECRETARY of John Ruskin, Esq., Brantwood, Coniston, Lancashire.

THE TRUTH about STAMMERING.—Any one interested will receive the latest information and important books on the cure, on loan, post free, without charge.—FITCHER, Messrs. Denton's, 154, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.

AN ENGLISH GENTLEMAN, now at the World's Fair, Chicago, is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as COMMISSION AGENT. Special qualifications for Works of Art.—Address, in first instance, M. GIFFITH, 13, Ashurst Street, Battersea, S.W.

JUST OUT, POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

ORIENTAL CATALOGUE, No. III.

Eighty-four Pages of New and Second-hand books on Oriental Subjects in the English Language, on SALE by

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER & CO., LTD., PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHANCERY CROSS ROAD.

MARK TWAIN says

OF PROF. LOISETTE'S SYSTEM OF MEMORY—
"I had before been able, like most people, to store up and lose things in the dark cellar of my memory, but he showed me how to light up the cellar. It is the difference—no change in figure—between having money where you can't collect it, and having it in your pocket. The information cost me but 1s. yet I value it at a prodigious figure."—Prospectus post free from Prof. A. LOISETTE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

Recently published, crown 8vo, 6s.

DISTINCTION: and the Criticism of Beliefs.

By ALFRED SIDGWICK.

"The whole book is very fresh in thought and expression, and shows many old questions in new and interesting aspects. Take for instance.....the treatment of controversy in Chap. IV. and elsewhere. The discussion of this subject is original and admirable, and seems to me to be one of the most attractive portions of a book which is excellent reading throughout."

"One of that rare but over-timely class of books which.....the most penetrating and surest thinker finds it no waste of time deliberately to peruse.....The book is pregnant with suggestion, and, though likely to be most appreciated by the philosophically trained student, will be found full of instruction by serious readers of all classes. The illustrations employed are culled from many departments of familiar experience."—Journal of Education.

"The volume teems with suggestive thought, both for theoretic consideration and for practical application; the positive results at once enrich philosophic literature in a hitherto neglected department, and are not incommensurate with the effort by which they have been evolved."—Leeds Mercury.

"This is a clever and readable book. It is not a text-book of logic, but a shrewd discussion that plays round some very difficult problems, approaching them with a studied air of carelessness, but with more skill and knowledge than are to be found in many more pretentious volumes.....The whole spirit of the book is healthy."—Manchester Guardian.

"Will certainly prove a valuable aid towards accuracy of thought and accuracy of expression."—Scotsman.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.
or the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.
Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.
THE CITY BRANCH

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
Is Now Removed from 2, King Street, Cheapside, to 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
(MANSION HOUSE END).

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
211, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council is prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR of LATIN. The stipend of the Professor will be £350 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials, must be sent in before January the 10th. For further information apply to IVON JAMES, Registrar, University College, Cardiff, November 30th, 1892.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

FACULTY OF MEDICINE.

The Council is about to proceed to the APPOINTMENT of a PROFESSOR of ANATOMY and a PROFESSOR of PHYSIOLOGY. The stipend in each case will be £350 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials, must be sent in on or before February 10th, 1893.

For further particulars apply to IVON JAMES, Registrar, University College, Cardiff, Dec. 13th, 1892.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.
The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

MISS LOUISA BROUGH (late Registrar of the Teachers' Guild) begs to announce that she has OPENED a high-class REGISTRY for SCHOOLMISTRESSES and PRIVATE GOVERNESSES at 25, Craven Street, Charing Cross, W.C.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT.
The Royal Naval School.
About TWENTY FOUNDATION and ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £50 to £200, offered in April. Full particulars of Head Master.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS and HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH
Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.—The THIRTY-FIRST WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES is now OPEN, 5, PALL MALL EAST. From 10 till 5. Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d.
ALFRED D. FAIRP, R.W.S., Secretary

THE ART UNION of LONDON,
112, STRAND.

President: The EARL of DERBY, K.G. Established 1837.
SUBSCRIBERS for the current year are entitled to an ORIGINAL ETCHING by ROBERT MACBETH, A.R.A., entitled "LATE for the FERRY," in addition to a chance of one out of many Valuable Prizes in Pictures, and other Works of Art. ORDINARY SUBSCRIPTION, ONE GUINEA. SUBSCRIPTIONS for PROOFS, SEVEN, FIVE, THREE, and TWO GUINEAS. The Society issues this year, in two states only, a Fine Mezzotint Engraving of Sir JOHN MILLAR'S Picture, "A SOUVENIR of VELASQUEZ." The Engravings and full particulars may be obtained at the Society's House, 112, Strand, London, W.C.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.
PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Argument against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.
HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. VI., No. 10.—DECEMBER.—1s. 6d. net.
Yearly Subscription (Ten Numbers), 13s. 6d., post free.

CONTENTS.
F. G. KENYON—PAPYRUS FRAGMENTS of HYPERIDES and DEMOSTHENES.
A. ELLMER—CONJECTURES on the CONSOL. ad LIV. and ELEG. I. ad MAECEN.
J. H. KIRKLAND—ON the FORMS QUOIUS, QUOTIEI, QUOM.
J. D.—ON the REMOTE DELIBERATIVE.
FARNELL'S GREEK LYRIC POETRY. WALTER HEADLAM.
HERBERT'S NOTES on THUC. I.—IV. E. C. MARCHANT.
MAX BONNET on the LATINITY of GREGORY of TOURS. II NETTLESHIP.
TAYLOR'S WITNESS of HERMAS to the FOUR GOSPELS. T. K. ABBOTT.
SHORTER NOTICES.
NOTES.
The Gospel and Revelation of Peter. H. N. FIELD Voles. H. A. STROTH.
ARCHAEOLOGY.
Egypt and Mycenaean Antiquities. C. SMITH and C. TONN.
Ridgewell's Origin of Currency and Weight Standards. W. WOOD.
Waldstein's Excavations at Argos. JANE E. HARRISON.
BIBLIOGRAPHY.

DAVID NUTT, 270 and 271, Strand.

Monthly, Price 3d., or Post Free 3d.

THE POSITIVIST REVIEW.

Edited by E. S. BRESLY.

The First Number, to be published January 1, will contain—
HOME RULE for LONDON. By FREDERICK HARRISON.
THE USE and ABUSE of EXPERIMENTS on ANIMALS. By Dr. J. H. FRIDGES.

PAYMENT of MEMBERS of PARLIAMENT. By THE EDITOR
REVIEWS & TURNER, 106, Strand.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

CONSTABLE'S ORIENTAL MISCELLANY.

Vol. 1. BERNIER'S TRAVELS in the MOGUL EMPIRE. An Entirely New Edition, with a Frontispiece printed in 18 colours on Japanese paper, other Illustrations and Three Maps. By ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE, Mem. As. Soc. Bengal, F.S.A. Scot. Crown 8vo, pp. liv—500. Price 6s. net.

Vol. 2. POPULAR READINGS in SCIENCE. By JOHN GALL, M.A., LL.B., late Professor of Mathematics and Physics, Canning College, Lucknow, and DAVID ROBERTSON, M.A., LL.B., B.Sc. With 56 Diagrams, a Glossary of Technical Terms, and an Index. Crown 8vo, pp. 468. Price 5s. net.

Vol. 3. AURENG-ZEBE: a Tragedy, by JOHN DRYDEN; and Book II. of THE CHACE, a Poem by WILLIAM SOMERVILLE. Edited, with Biographical Memoirs and Copious Notes, by K. DEIGHTON, B.A., Editor of "Select Plays of Shakespeare." With a Portrait of Dryden, and a Coloured Reproduction of an Indian Painting of the Emperor Akbar Deer-stalking. Crown 8vo, pp. xiii.—222. Price 5s. net.

"An interesting reprint of Dryden's Tragedy.... If any one wishes to realise by an hour's easy reading the vast gulf which separates our knowledge of India and our conceptions about India at the close of this nineteenth century from the views of our ancestors about India in the last quarter of the seventeenth century, we recommend this book to his notice. Mr. Deighton's copious and suggestive foot notes will render the perusal both profitable and pleasant."—Times.

Vol. 4. LETTERS from a MAHARATTA CAMP. By THOMAS DUER BROUGHTON. A New Edition, with an Introduction by the Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I., F.R.S., Notes, Coloured and other Illustrations, very full Index and a Map. Price 6s. net.

A HANDSOME GIFT-BOOK.

INDIAN FIELD SPORTS. A Series of Ten Coloured Plates selected and Reproduced from the Engravings first Published in 1807, after Designs by Captain Thos. Williamson, of the Bengal Army. With an Introduction and a Description of each Plate. Oblong 4to. Printed on Hand-made Paper, and handsomely bound in cloth, bevelled boards, gilt top, price 10s. 6d.

STUDIES in MOHAMMEDANISM, Historical and Doctrinal, with a Chapter on Islam in England. By JOHN J. POOL. With a Frontispiece and Index, pp. xvi.—120. Crown 8vo, full cloth, price 6s.

"As a 'popular text-book,' dealing with some of the most picturesque aspects of Islam, it deserves more than ordinary attention."—Times.

THE INDIAN MAGAZINE and REVIEW. A Publication which aims at interesting its Readers in the People of India, in their literature, their History, their Art, and their Customs: their various Phases of Development, and particularly in their Progress. Sixpence Monthly. Subscription, 5s. per annum, post-free.

11, PARLIAMENT STREET, WESTMINSTER.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

(TO BE OBTAINED IN TOWN OR COUNTRY.)

NOVELS AT ALL CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

By the Author of
"Molly Bawn"

NORA CREINA.
By Mrs. HUNGERFORD,
Author of "A Life's Remorse,"
"The Hon. Mrs. Vereker," "Lady
Tatty," &c. 3 vols.

"There is a great deal of smart talk and sprightly love-making in 'Nora Creina'.... pleasurable entertainment is afforded by nearly all the minor characters, several of whom are quite delightful people.... as a collection of brilliant and fascinating character sketches 'Nora Creina' has claims to popularity that can scarcely fail to obtain general and cordial recognition."—Daily Telegraph.
"The novel will be read with pleasure."—Scotsman.
"Nora Creina" is as vivacious as any of Mrs. Hungerford's previous efforts."—Spectator.

By Mrs. Lovett Cameron.

A SISTER'S SIN. By the Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Laughter's Heart," &c. 3 vols.

"Mrs. Lovett Cameron never writes trash: she does not overload her novels with 'padding,' and her stories are always told in interesting fashion. Her latest work, 'A Sister's Sin,' will surely become popularly approved. Indeed, we are not quite sure that it is not the best which this engaging writer has yet brought forth from the storehouse of her imagination. Every character is well drawn, each and all are drawn with masterly skill.... the pathos is never overstrained, the situations are natural, and the weaving of the web of retribution is managed with a delicate deftness which cannot but command sympathy and admiration."—Daily Telegraph.
"It is cleverly written and interesting."—Athenaeum.

By Albert Kevill-Davies.

MISS BLANCHARD of CHICAGO
By the Author of "Marriage 'Up to Date,'" "An American Widow," &c. 3 vols.

"The story is brisk and taking and full of incident."—Daily Telegraph.
"Miss Blanchard of Chicago" is a most interesting book, written with a great deal of vivacity and brightness. Very few English authors have 'reduced' their authors' to so fine a point, and with one or two exceptions they are absolutely American enough to make even first-rate look to his monopoly of Westerners.... When Mr. Kevill-Davies tells his story shapely it is charming: replete with life, movement and colour. His characters are well drawn, very distinct.... Miss Blanchard is a delightful girl.... Her father is an admirable sketch, absolutely true to the life, kindly, frank, and sturdy.... We heartily commend this story to anyone who cares to know Americans and Americans as our Atlantic cousins know them, and we can promise readers a most agreeable hour with all Mr. Kevill-Davies's heroes, heroines, and superlatives."—Sunday Review.
"No more revolting swindle has been exposed in fiction since Dickens described Dotheboys Hall."—Truth.
"The phases of life the author presents are given with evident sincerity and knowledge of the ground.... There is plenty of action and purpose with sundry scenes that appear to have been lived through...."

By B. L. Farjeon.

THE MARCH of FATE. By the Author of "The Mystery of M. Felix," "A Young Girl's Life," &c. 3 vols.

"Mr. Farjeon in 'The March of Fate' has no greater rival than himself. In his past books he has accustomed us to somewhat intricate plots, skillfully unravelled, and detective clues which finally resolve themselves into startling conclusions. 'The March of Fate' is, too, in some respects, a detective story, for the threads are in the hands of a private inquiry officer, but it includes other elements of human character and sensational incident, which will doubtless retain the interest of the novel-reader to the very last page.... The author has written a story which has many evidences of cleverness and strength."—Daily Telegraph.
"...the reader may follow the adventures of the fair Honoria, without flagging, to the final chapter."—Athenaeum.

By Mrs. Edward Kennard.

WEDDED to SPORT. By the Author of "The Girl in the Brown Habit," "That Pretty Little Horse Breaker," &c. 3 vols.

"Mrs. Kennard has achieved at least one notable success in 'Wedded to Sport.' Interspersed in the tale are many of those sporting scenes in the delineation of which the authoress has already won her reputation."—Daily Telegraph.
"The book is distinctly read like the interest being well kept up throughout, with a totally different ending to that expected by the reader."—Penny F..
"Graphic as ever in her pictures of the hunting field, and all that pertains to the favourite national pastime.... 'Wedded to Sport' is not wanting either in vivacity or incident."—Morning Post.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

"BELGRAVIA" ANNUAL.
(Illustrated by)
Containing Contributions by HUME NISBET, Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD, EDITH STEWART BREWERY, LEUCIE H. ARMSTRONG, EMILIA AYLMER GOWING, "RITA," and others.

THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER OF "LONDON SOCIETY."
(Illustrated by)
Containing Contributions by the AUTHOR of "MISS MOLLY," CURTIS YORKE, Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER, MAY CROMMELIN, FAYR MAUDOU, and others.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, LONDON.

LAWRENCE & BULLEN.

MASTER FRANCIS RABELAIS.

Five Books of the Lives, Heroic Deeds, and Sayings of Gargantua and his Son Pantagruel. Translated by Sir THOMAS URQUHART and PETER ANTONY MOTTEUX. With an Introduction by ANATOLE MONTEGLION and 11 Illustrations by L. Chalon. 2 vols., imperial 8vo, price £3 3s. net.

[Ready.]

* Also 210 copies on Japanese vellum, with Two Additional Illustrations, £6 6s. net. (All subscribed.)

ANACREON.—The Greek Text, with THOMAS STANLEY'S Translation of the "Anacreontea." Edited by A. H. BULLIEN. With 10 Illustrations by J. R. Weguelin. Fcap. 4to, price £1 1s. net.

[Next week.]

* Also 110 Copies on Japanese vellum, with an additional illustration. Price £2 2s. net.

W. J. LINTON.—EUROPEAN

REPUBLICANS: Recollections of Mazzini and his Friends. Demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

[Ready.]

GRANT ALLEN.—SCIENCE in

ARCADE. Crown 8vo, price 5s. [Ready.]

C. J. WILLS and JOHN DAVIDSON.—LAURA RUTHVEN'S WIDOWHOOD: a Novel. 3 vols. At all Libraries.

"The novel is bright, clever, and humorous."—Scotsman.
"Two authors take credit for the story. One of them must surely be a man of genius."—Speaker.

C. J. WILLS.—JOHN SQUIRES

SECRET: a Novel. Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.
"The narrative is always bright."—St. James's Gazette.
"A rollicking story."—Times.

TOLD in the VERANDAIL.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. [Second Edition].
"The stories are so bright and readable that one can only be surprised that the modesty of the author should have caused him to send the volume forth anonymously."—World.

MORLEY ROBERTS.—KING

BILLY of BALLARAT, and other Stories. Crown 8vo, price 5s. [Second Edition].
MORLEY ROBERTS.—THE

MATE of the VANCOUVER. A Story. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

FAIRY TALES FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

MADAME D'AULNOY'S FAIRY

TALES. With a Preface by ANNE THACKERAY RITCHIE, and numerous Illustrations by Clinton Peters. Fcap. 4to, price 7s. 6d.

RUSSIAN FAIRY TALES.

Translated by R. NISBET BAIN. Illustrated by C. M. Gere. Demy 8vo, price 5s.

"The very best fairy-book that we have seen this year (or indeed for many years)."—Daily Chronicle.

THEO. GIFT.—FAIRY TALES

from the FAR EAST. Illustrated by O. Van Glehn. Fcap. 4to, price 5s.

LAWRENCE & BULLEN,
16, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

Contents for JANUARY, 1893.

- I. DIANA TEMPEST, or NEMESIS. Chaps. I.-III.
- II. THE MISTLETOE.
- III. LETTERS of a MAN of LEISURE.
- IV. ARIOSTO.
- V. GOWER STREET and its REMINISCENCES.
- VI. SQUIRE JACK.
- VII. THE COMING LAUREATE.
- VIII. SAMUEL PALMER.
- IX. BINGHAM'S IDEA.
- X. SPORT in the SNOW; or, Bear-Hunting in Russia.
- XI. A MATTER of COURSE.
- XII. GRAHAM'S ROMANCE; or, Sunlight and Shadow. Chaps. I.-VI.

A NEW SERIAL STORY BY MARY CHOLMONDELEY,
Author of "The Danvers Jewels," and "Sir Charles Danvers," and entitled

"DIANA TEMPEST" Or, Nemesis.

Will commence in the JANUARY Number of TEMPLE BAR, price One Shilling.

ALSO A NEW SERIAL STORY,
THE ROMANCE OF REGINALD GRAHAM;
Or, Sunlight and Shadow.

Will commence in the JANUARY Number of TEMPLE BAR. [Ready Dec. 20.]

BOOKS READY

AT THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

RED-LETTER DAYS of MY LIFE. By CORNELIA A. H. CROSSE. 2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.

THE LIFE of JOHN LINNELL.
By ALFRED T. STORY. With Numerous Illustrations from Paintings or Sketches by Linnell. 2 vols., demy
8vo, 28s.

MEMOIRS of EIGHTY YEARS.
By GORDON HAKE. Including Recollections and Anecdotes of many Eminent Persons. 1 vol, demy
8vo, 15s.

"Leigh Hunt said of 'John Bunce' that it was 'written in better spirits' than any other English book. This is a book that is quite as full of good spirits as 'John Bunce'— quite as full of wit which is wisdom and wisdom which is wit, and a whim finer than Amory's own. These genial pages—pages as full of sunshine as a haymaking on a bright June day."—Athenaeum.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

GOD'S FOOL. By Maarten
MAARTENS, Author of "The Sin of Joost Avelingh," and "An Old Maid's Love." 3 vols.

"The story of Elias, God's Fool, is in some respects beautiful, in all curious, and thickset with gems of thought.
The picture of the creature with the clouded brain, the missing sense, the pure and holy soul, and the unerring sense of right, living in his deafness and darkness by the light and the law of love, is a very fine conception, and its contrast with the meanness and wickedness of his surroundings is worked out with high art."—World.

WHEN CHARLES the FIRST was KING. 3 vols. By J. S. FLETCHER.

THE STEP-SISTERS. 3 vols.
By E. MACQUEEN GRAY.

FOURTH EDITION.

MRS. BLIGH. By Rhoda Brough-
TON, Author of "Good-bye, Sweetheart," "Nancy,"
&c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, paper covers, 2s. 6d. net; cloth, 3s. net.

THE GOSPEL according to PETER and THE REVELATION of PETER. Two Lectures on the Newly Recovered Fragments, together with the Original Texts. By J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Christ's College; and MONTAGUE RHODES JAMES, M.A., Fellow and Dean of King's College.

THE COLLECTED MATHEMATICAL

PAPERS of ARTHUR CAYLEY, M.A., F.R.S., Sadlerian Professor of Pure Mathematics in the University of Cambridge. Vol. V. Demy 4to, 25s. (To be completed in 10 vols.)

CATALOGUE of the MUSIC in the FITZWILLIAM MUSEUM, CAMBRIDGE. By J. A.

FULLER MITTLAND, M.A., F.S.A. Demy 8vo,
7s. 6d. [Immediately.]

NEW VOLUME of the CAMBRIDGE BIBLE for SCHOOLS and COLLEGES.

The BOOKS of EZRA and NEHEMIAH

By the Rev. H. E. RYLE, B.D., Hulsean Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge. 4s. 6d.
[Immediately.]

SUBJECTS FOR

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1893.

Pitt Press Series.

Souvestre.—Un Philosophe sous les
TOITS. Edited with Notes by H. W. EVE, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Head Master of University College School, London. 2s. [Immediately.]

Ponsard.—Charlotte Corday. Edited with Introduction and Notes by ARTHUR R. ROPES, M.A., late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. 2s.

Hauff.—Das Wirthshaus im Spessart.
Edited with Notes by the late A. SCHLOTTMANN,
Ph.D., and by J. W. CARTMELL, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College. 3s. [Immediately.]

Schiller.—Maria Stuart. Edited with Notes by KARL HERMANN BREUL, M.A., Ph.D.,
Lecturer in German at the University of Cambridge.
3s. 6d. [Immediately.]

Caesar.—De Bello Gallico, Books II.,
III., with Maps and English Notes. By A. G. PESKETT,
M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College. 2s.

Vergil.—Aeneid, Book VI., with Notes
by A. SIDGWICK, M.A., Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. 1s. 6d.

Cicero.—De Amicitia. Edited by J. S.
REID, Litt.D., Fellow and Tutor of Gonville and Caius
College. 3s. 6d.

Lucretius.—Book V. With Notes and
Introduction by J. D. DUFF, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College. 2s.

Livy.—Book IX., with Notes and Introduction, by H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., late Head
Master of St. Peter's School, York. 2s. 6d.

Xenophon.—Anabasis, Book VI., with English Notes by ALFRED PRETOR, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's College. 2s. 6d.

Homer.—Odyssey, Book IX., with Introduction and Notes by G. M. EDWARDS, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Sidney Sussex College. 2s. 6d.

Euripides.—Heracleidæ. With Introduction and Explanatory Notes by E. A. BECK, M.A., Fellow of Trinity Hall. 3s. 6d.

Thucydides.—Book VII. With Maps,
Notes, and Introduction, by Rev. H. A. HOLDEN,
M.A., LL.D., Hon. Litt.D., Dublin, sometime Fellow of Trinity College. 5s. Or in Two Parts. Part I., Introduction and Text. Part II., Notes and Indexes.

Milton's Paradise Lost. Books V. and
VI. Edited by A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College. 2s.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

"The finest Gift-book of the Season."—Daily Chronicle.

THE CAPITALS of the WORLD.

In Two Volumes, superbly illustrated, handsomely bound in half-morocco, bevelled boards, gilt edges, price
THREE GUINEAS NET.

"A superb work."—Daily News (leader).
"In no similar work have artistic excellence and descriptive power been more liberally put at the service of the world's capitals."—Standard.

BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA.

By JAMES DOUGLAS. Dedicated to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. With Maps and Plans, 13 Full-page Photographs, Colotype Reproductions from Old Documents, and over 100 other Text Illustrations. 2 vols., super-royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, TWO GUINEAS
NET.

SIXTH EDITION, JUST READY.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the

MAJIDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwald, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A. Fully Illustrated.
Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

STORIES TOLD in an AFRICAN

FOREST by GROWN-UP CHILDREN of AFRICA.
By A. J. MOUNTENEY JEPHSON. With numerous
Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.
"One of the best of Christmas books."—World.

SIX YEARS of ADVENTURE in

CONGO-LAND. By E. J. GLAVE, one of Stanley's
Pioneer Officers. Illustrated with 75 Woodcuts and Penand-Ink Sketches. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

PREACHERS OF THE AGE.—NEW VOLUME.

CHILDREN of GOD.

By the Rev.
EDWARD A. STUART, M.A., Vicar of St. James's,
Holloway. With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TEN CENTURIES of TOILETTE.

From the French of A. ROBIDA. By Mrs. CASHEL
HOEY. New Edition. Small post 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LOUISA MAY ALCOTT: her Life,

Letters, and Journals. Edited by EDNAH D. CHENEY.
With 2 Portraits of Miss Alcott, and a View of her Concord Home. New Edition. 450 pages, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

OUR HUNDRED DAYS in EUROPE.

By Dr. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. Fifth and
Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LIVES of ILLUSTRIOUS SHOE-

MAKERS. By WILLIAM EDWARD WINKS. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THEORY and ANALYSIS of ORNA-

MENT, applied to the Work of Elementary and Technical Schools. By FRANÇOIS LOUIS SCHAUERMANN.
With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 15s.

THE PRICELESS ORCHID: a Story

of Adventure in the Forests of Yucatan. By PERCY
AINSLIE, Author of "Lost in Japan," &c. With 8
Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

ELFIE'S VISIT to CLOUDLAND and

the MOON. By FRANCES V. AUSTEN. With many Illustrations by E. J. Austen. Demy 4to, cloth ex., 3s. 6d.

CAPTAIN JANUARY.

By Laura E.
RICHARDS. With Illustrations by Frank T. Merrill.
Small 4to, cloth, 5s.

THE RAT'S PLAINT: an Old Legend.

Translated from the Original Chinese by ARCHIBALD LITTLE, F.R.G.S. Printed on Japanese crepe paper at Tokyo, in colours, 5s.

NIPONESE RHYMES and JAPANESE

JINGLES. By MAE ST. JOHN BRAMHALL. Printed on Japanese crepe paper at Tokyo, in colours, 5s.

Three New Novels, at all Libraries.

WOLFENBERG.

By William Black.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE MYSTERY of ST. DUNSTAN'S:

a Realistic and Sensational Story of Fleet Street in 1721.
By THOMAS WRIGHT, Author of "The Life of William Cowper," &c. Two vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER.

By
ANELIA E. BARR, Author of "Jan Vedder's Wife,"
"Friend Olivia," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE. Christmas

Number. Complete in itself. Price 1s.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1892.

No. 1076, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Twenty-five Years in the Secret Service. By Major Le Caron. (Heinemann.)

PERHAPS in an age miscalled prosaic, few people have realised that there still exists such a calling as that of a spy: certainly fewer still have conceived that one who follows it can be called above other men a true patriot or a person of exceptional virtue. A sort of mediæval savour seems to hang about the name: the notion is of something fortunately as antiquated as unhonoured. Spies there may be no doubt in war, though even then a person of nice honour is not supposed to clamour for the post: but none now, one thinks, pursue this devious way in civil life. The spy of former days is lost in the impersonal respectability of organisation; and he flourishes now under the name of "detective," or takes on the delusive glamour of literary enterprise, and affects credit as a "reporter." But that there should still be spies of the good old kind, year after year pursuing their hazardous avocation, labouring for a modest pittance at their task of systematic betrayal in hopes of an honoured retirement—rude donati—at last; perfecting the daily practice of treachery, serene in the unruffled consciousness of civic virtue; professionally taking oaths to break them, and ready in the end stoutly to maintain their right to the crown of patriotism, this indeed has somewhat escaped modern comprehension.

We see the miscreant apostles of miscellaneous murder laid by the heels, the war material of Celtic disaffection surprised and confiscated, and filibustering invasions and braggadocio "risings" brought to nought; and we thankfully credit it all to the collective address of "the police." But who dreams of the cool and wary spy, the traitor to treason itself, the Pharisee of revolution praying for the cause that he may be seen of men, who transmits weekly from the very shrine of the conspiracy the names, the plans, and the whereabouts of his unsuspecting associates? Yet upon this slight foundation a great edifice of public safety rests: without his timely aid the police might pace their beat in vain.

Major Le Caron is a man who for twenty years has lived this life, has served his country after his fashion by betraying his friends, has brought himself with marvellous adroitness to the issue of it all without scathe or hurt, and has now settled down to domestic quiet and the composition of his memoirs, with a brow as unruffled and a heart as steady as when he penned despatches from dynamite conventions to Scotland-yard, or strolled from the House of Commons to pour Mr. Parnell's fresh unbosomings into the receptive ear of Mr. Anderson. He mixed with the arch priests of American-Irish sedition, he saw them off their guard, and found some of them honest, silly, drunken fanatics, some coarse pilferers, some ruffians callous and astute as ever went unhung. He draws their portraits with the sharp outline and neat precision of an etcher. The Irish race, with its perpetual passion for playacting, plotting, and intrigue, seems perpetually fecund in producing its own betrayers: the fertility of its schemers in arranging political plans, their astuteness in managing parties, is equalled only by the constant and shameless self-seeking and the open rivalry in self-advancement of those who work the party machine. Without much parade of words, the Major quietly lets us know how Egan, coarse, ill-educated, full of animal spirits, gifted with a fine single eye to his own advantage, lived in Paris a life of cheery self-indulgence at the expense of the dupes who subscribed the funds to which he served as treasurer. He draws us Cronin, murdered beyond doubt, and murdered probably at the instigation of Alexander Sullivan: big, comely, plausible, strutting, always "spoiling for a fight," always greedy of personal prominence. Once a druggist's shopman, he forced his way into the ranks of that curiously compounded calling, the medical profession of the United States, and did a bustling practice in Chicago, till he fell a victim to the man whom he had provoked by exposure and opposed because he wished to oust him from his paradise of malversation. Blackest rogue of all, Alexander Sullivan stands out from this canvas with admirable distinctness: clever, unscrupulous, careful only of himself, subordinating everything to his personal ambition, using Irish politics as a stepping stone to advancement in American affairs, and reckless who or what suffered, if only he succeeded himself. Among the vulgar, sordid crowd of dynamiters, drunken, quarrelsome, incontinent of speech, irresolute in animosity, inconstant in design, we see Sullivan sitting silent in the background, watching and weighing his tools—the doctors, lawyers, priests, and merchants of the Irish-American conspiracy, as avaricious and base, but less dexterous than himself; and still he

"through all this din and turmoil sits and makes no sign. . . . There is no possibility of your missing him as you pass him by. There he sits, quiet, watchful, and alert; you cannot mistake the man. There is a sense of power and intelligence in that clean-cut, clean-shaven face of his, lit up by its bright, daring eyes. Had you but heard him speak, the lesson of his presence would have been complete. His clear trumpet voice, rising and falling with the play of a practised orator; his choice, finished diction; his well-reasoned, well-arranged arguments, and the graceful gesture and movement of his whole body, would prove to you that there at least was a man gifted to command and competent to control."

Yet of all these characters, so sinister yet bold, such strange mixtures of patriotism and unscrupulousness, Major Le Caron's is, for audacity and for patriotism of a kind, the most eminent. Chance and the love of adventure made Thomas Beach turn spy; occasion and the love of his country, it seems, kept him in that ambiguous calling. He served with credit and distinction in the Federal Army during the war; and emerging with the rank of Major and the nom de guerre of Le Caron, he devoted himself to the study and practice of medicine, in its humbler walks of keeping "drug stores" and miscellaneous country cures. An accident brought to the knowledge of the English Home Secretary of the day that young Beach's acquaintance with John O'Neill enabled him to pick the brains of that leaky intriguer, and the government offered him the post of salaried spy in the Fenian camps of America. Le Caron accepted the commission, and discharged his strange duty with courage, fidelity, and success. Over and over again he stood on the verge of detection; and at any moment discovery was like to have cost him his life. Such is at least his own belief, and he surely ought to know; yet it may perhaps be doubted whether the need of lynx-like vigilance was quite so imperative as the reminiscent Major fancies. For twenty years, thanks to Thomas Beach and his periodical reports, we gather that whatever was to be known about Irish-American machinations was known in Scotland-yard. Acting on this information, the "resources of civilisation" made a very fair match of it with the devices of rebellious savagery. Such an unbroken run of ill-luck must surely have convinced the most haphazard of Celts that someone was betraying the association's plans from within. Every illegal association the Irish race ever knew bred its own betrayers as soon as a price was to be earned by the betrayal. To wary rogues like Sullivan, this perpetual succession of thwarted enterprises must have told its own tale; Sullivan cannot have doubted that the British Government had secured the services of some one of his own most devoted servants. To him, however, that mattered little. To be enriched with Irish-American gold and flattered by native American politicians was his end; this was for him the final cause of the Clan-na-Gael, not the liberation of Ireland or the dissolution of Sir William Harcourt. Too much success for dynamite might have compromised him even with the semi-criminal tolerance of American Republican "bosses;" and the credulity and open-handedness of the Irish poor was to Sullivan a very Pactolus, which years of impotent intrigue scarcely at last dried up. Sullivan may never have suspected Le Caron; but he can hardly have doubted that among his friends the British agent was to be found; and finding him after all a blessing in disguise, he was no doubt very contented to leave him in useful and unmolested obscurity.

Whether this be or be not the explanation of Le Caron's long immunity from detection, he certainly played his part out with a cool self-possession that places his nerve and discretion beyond dispute. But his most interesting trait is his own appreciation of himself. He does not see, nor has he ever been able to see, anything to cavil at in the calling of a spy. There are diversities of gifts, that is all: some are politicians, and betray their party; some theologians, and betray their god; his lot has been to be a spy, and he, at least, has never betrayed any man or any cause, except the persons and the cause of his country's foes. The quality above all others on which he piques himself is a nice honour, a truthfulness that weighs words with punctilious scruple, a moral purity that casts a slur in the comparison upon the political chastity of the paragons of public life. Says his preface:

"There is no such thing as romance to be indulged in here. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth is what I have set myself to tell regarding all those matters with which I shall deal. There are many things of course to which I may not refer; but with respect to those upon which I feel at liberty to touch, one unutterable characteristic will apply all through, and that will be the absolute truthfulness of the record.

"This may seem strange language, coming from one who, for over a quarter of a century, has played a double part, and who to-day is not one whit ashamed of any single act done in that capacity. Men's lives, however, are not to be judged by the outward show and the visible suggestions, but rather by the inward sentiments and promptings, which accept conscience at once as the inspirer of action and arbiter of fate. It is hard, I know, to expect people in this cold, prosaic age of ours to fully understand how a man like myself should, of his own free will, have entered upon a life such as I have led, with such pureness of motive and absence of selfish instinct as to entitle me to claim acceptance at the bar of public opinion as an honest and a truthful man.

"Yet such is my claim. When, years ago, as these subsequent pages will show, I was first brought into contact with Fenian affairs, no fell purpose, no material consideration, prompted me to work against the revolutionary plotters. A young man, proud of his native land, and full of patriotic loyalty to its traditions, I had no desire, no intention, to do aught but frustrate the schemes of my country's foes. When, later on, I took my place in the ranks of England's defenders, the same condition of mind prevailed, though the conditions of service varied. . . . There is a popular fiction, I know, which associates with my work fabulous payments and frequent rewards. Would that it had been so! Then would the play of memory be all the sweeter for me. But, alas! the facts were all the other way."

The Major's defence then may evidently be left very safely in his own hands; nor could the mental problem of his case have been more nicely stated. He, an "honest and a truthful man," to whom "conscience is the inspirer of action," played a "double part" for the best years of his life, on a salary of which he laments the inadequacy but not the fact. Certainly, whatever else may be thought of him, his courage is beyond dispute, and the proof is still with us. But, after all, what is there in such a career except its novelty to stir misgivings in the most self-searching breast? The stratagems of war are only less fair than those of love. To the enterprising pressman that is but professional ardour which, on another stage, might lead to Holloway. Who to secure the text of a most secret treaty would not pick an ambassador's pocket? Nay, the country perhaps would doubt if it quite got its money's worth, but for a lurking notion that the most correct and urbane of its diplomatists know how to unlock on occasion the archives of foreign chancelleries. Even George Washington could perhaps have told a lie if he had thought there was a fair chance of not being found out. Perhaps it is only prudery that prefers the Victoria Cross to the honours of the Secret Service; and at any rate Major Le Caron is entitled to be taken at his word, to be regarded as an honest if eccentric patriot, whose adroitness, tenacity, and almost stoical calm are equally beyond dispute and depreciation. And if his virtues are enhanced by their rarity, civilisation may perhaps breathe the more freely for that.

J. A. HAMILTON.

Etruscan Roman Remains in Popular Tradition.

By Charles Godfrey Leland. (Fisher Unwin.)

This fine volume, which is devoted to the witchcraft of the Tuscan Romagna, may be compendiously characterised as antiquarianism touched with humour. In it we have the creator of Hans Breitmann in the character of a witch-finder; and not only has he found the witches, but when found he has made an excellent note of them. Indeed he has persuaded them to reveal their magical secrets, their spells, and their incantations, and these he now gives to us "writ in choice Italian" with a neat metrical translation of his own.

The principal scene of Mr. Leland's labours is the district lying round Forlì and stretching eastwards to the pinewood of Ravenna—which till the eighth century formed part of the Romagna or Exarchate of Eastern Rome. Here witchcraft or stregheria, lovingly termed by the peasants la vecchia religione—"something more than a sorcery and something less than a faith"—still survives, though it can hardly be said to flourish. Here men still appeal to those Etruscan homologues and predecessors of Jove and Bacchus and Mercury, Tinia and Fafnons and Teramo, as well as to the oldest gods of rural Rome, Pan and Silvanus and the Fauns; while a crowd of minor spirits, perhaps more ancient than either, still haunt rock and waterfall and wood, still sport like the white lady below the ruined castle, or play like lubber fiends in the kitchens of the poderi. But though scores of the peasants know much on the subject, it is as amateurs only: when serious work is on hand they go to a respectable strega or stregone (witch or wizard) much as their betters would go to a respectable solicitor. These humble practitioners, who are generally members of mystic families, are (apparently) not impostors; but, on the contrary, have a lively faith in their own powers. Nor is this surprising, seeing that they are denounced in all seriousness by the priests as impious, and are looked askance at by the police. One of Mr. Leland's confidential witches assured him, as Count de Gubernatis assured Mr. Gladstone, that there was ten times as much heathenism in Tuscany as Catholicism, only what the Count called heathenism, she called la vecchia religione. Another, who was so far a Catholic that she wore a medal of a saint on her bosom, protested warmly that the old was her real religion; and, of course, by comparison with witchcraft, Christianity is a thing of yesterday. This "old religion" seems to be in the condition in which so many of the Italian frescoes were a few years ago. It is very ancient and ruinous, and has been repeatedly restored by different hands and at different periods. From time to time great pieces have fallen, and new "unconformable" work has been inserted. The result is that, though a good deal remains, it consists chiefly of crumbling and disjointed fragments, and Mr. Leland has done a great thing in picking up so many pieces and loosely putting them together. He has added a good deal of interesting matter in the way of conjecture and explanation, and the comment, if less valuable than the text, is most agreeably flavoured with the refreshing acid of his humorous personality.

Of course the genuine stregheria is purely heathen, and has nothing to say to the inhabitants of the Christian hell and heaven. But the belief of the early Fathers that the heathen gods were really devils is doubtless responsible for having provided many an old witch story with a new set of Christian characters. The number of witches and wizards still seems considerable, nor is this so odd when we learn that one may become a strega or stregone without intending it. Mr. Leland gives more than one instance where the endowment has been received by a process known to lawyers as a donatio mortis causa. If a dying witch says, "Oh, dear, I have nobody to leave it to," and the priest ventures to reply (as why should he not), "Oh, leave it to me," then he will, on the old lady's death, find himself legatee of her occult powers, and cannot disclaim the legacy. To attempt to make a selection from Mr. Leland's book would, if practicable, be unfair, for the cake is nearly all plums. It must suffice to say that students of the old religion will not look in vain for any spirit entitled to a seat in the Etruscan Pantheon, and for everyone the appropriate invocation is furnished. There is also a fine collection of spells, as distinguished from invocations. There are the spells of the spider and the hare and the green-lizard for the colic, and of the swallow for sore eyes; while anybody who desires to find out if a lover be faithful, or to make anybody else's lover unfaithful, has an embarrassing choice of facilities. These are generally very quaint in form, though many of them are, in substance, common all the world over. Mr. Leland has, too, the true collector's eye for odd bits of information picked from all sorts of out-of-the-way literature. Such, for instance, is the Turkish story of the marriage of Joseph and Potiphar's wife, whose name was, it appears, Zuleika. He tells us, too, that the marriage took place on a Friday, the day of Venus or Turanna, "everywhere the lucky day till the priests spoiled it," so that, as he puts it, "Mrs. Potiphar, as women always do, had her way in the end."

The volume is prettily and profusely illustrated, though very few of the illustrations belong to the strictly indigenous art of Etruria. The greater part of the designs seem to have been taken or made up by Mr. Leland from Hellenic-Etruscan vases and mirrors—work, we may suppose, sent from Greece to the markets of Luna and Tarquinii, or executed in Greek factories established in Etruscan cities. By exception, one or two figures—that, for example, of Cupra, the male version or partner of the Etruscan form of Hera—are of the hybrid Phœnician type, of which examples are common in the Cesnola collection. It is, perhaps, only right to say that, as might be expected, the bed rock of Shamanism, which may truly be said to date from the days before decency, crops out occasionally during Mr. Leland's researches; but the reader who knows anything about sorcery will not be unprepared.

REGINALD HUGHES.

The Life of Thomas Paine. With a History of his Literary, Political, and Religious career in America, France, and England. By Moncure Daniel Conway. In 2 vols. (Putnam's.)

THOMAS PAINE died in the year 1809; and now, eighty-three years afterwards, Mr. Moncure D. Conway undertakes to give to the world something like a complete and accurate account of his career and his opinions. The thought which first suggests itself in the presence of this circumstance is one which, it is evident, has been present in the mind of Mr. Conway himself, and has moved him deeply: namely, that shameless injustice has too long been done to the memory of Thomas Paine. This narrative now before us, which Mr. Conway has striven diligently to make veracious and complete, exhibits Thomas Paine as a person totally different from the vulgar, dissolute, blasphemous, unscrupulous "Tom Paine" of the popular illusion; and if we are to take Mr. Conway's account as substantially correct—which, indeed, we must—it is abundantly clear that the man has been grievously wronged by public opinion.

The publication of this biography, after an interval of eighty-three years, is, however, significant in another way. Not many men, calumniated during life-time and after death, and generally regarded in the light of those calumnies, would have been remembered for so long a period sufficiently well to make such a biography as this, we will not say desirable, but even possible. The slanders and all memory of the person slandered would have died out altogether. The author of The Rights of Man and the Age of Reason is, however, by no means forgotten, either by enemies or by friends. To a good many honest people to-day his name is almost as unwelcome as it was to some of the contemporaries of his later years. That he should be remembered—whether in spite of the scorn with which he has been treated, or in consequence of it—is striking testimony to some quality of greatness in the man and in the work he did. If Thomas Paine had been such a rascal as his enemies have made him out to be, or if he had been a good man of an ordinary kind, the world would have forgotten him before now. As it is, his name at least has survived; so that, even at this late day, it is worth while for Mr. Conway, who thinks he has been wronged, to try and see him righted. Mr. Conway's self-appointed task has not been to lift his hero from obscurity, and show that time and mankind had wronged him in sending him there, but to substitute a true history for a well-known, a too well-known, false history. The many who have never even seen a line of his works, when Mr. Conway's book comes before them, will not need to ask, Who is this Thomas Paine? but only, What is the truth about him?

Let us hope, now that the opportunity is offered, intelligent men and women will take the trouble to learn it by familiarising themselves with the present well-told story of one who, if humanly faulty in some respects, was nevertheless essentially excellent, being an honest, courageous, broad-minded and large-hearted man. It is surely pleasant to find that one we have long regarded as a power for evil was really worthy. If it is good to welcome the repentant sinner, it is still better to discover he was no such sinner as we had supposed. Therefore, we may assume that Mr. Conway's book will come as good tidings to many who have honestly, but ignorantly, thought badly of Thomas Paine. He may not have been quite such a supreme figure in his day as his enthusiastic biographer represents him. A biographer should be well endowed with the critical faculty in active, working order, and Mr. Conway is too much of an enthusiast to be a perfect critic. Still, after making every proper allowance for personal feeling, we are well within the bounds of truth when we say that to France and to America, in their times of extreme need, Thomas Paine was a benefactor. His services to France at the period of the Revolution were much greater than the Revolutionists themselves ever knew; had they appreciated his calm judgment and heeded his wise counsel, the course of history would have been changed for the better. Much of his counsel was heeded in America; and famous contemporaries of his, who had every opportunity of knowing him at his worst as well as at his best, held him in esteem. George Washington, for example, when at the height of his power and popularity, invited the nation to give to Paine some substantial token of its gratitude, and was not ashamed to subscribe himself as his friend. Since Paine's death there have always been some persons ready to bear witness in his favour; but usually they have been comparatively few in numbers, and not always influential. Hitherto no such well sustained appeal as Mr. Conway's, on his behalf, has ever been made to the logic of facts.

Mr. Conway is very angry about the misrepresentation to which Paine has been subjected, and we cannot blame him. Yet if, while writing his book, he could have kept these causes for indignation out of his thoughts, and, ignoring for the time the prevailing prejudice, had presented his weighty facts and drawn his inferences as so much calm, dispassionate history, his work would have been all the better. As it stands, it is frequently suggestive of a brief held on Paine's behalf. Mr. Conway may yet see his way to condense the present narrative into a plain statement, such as we suggest, and to issue it in a form adapted to general circulation, with, perhaps, companion volumes containing Paine's own principal writings. In this way he would reach a much wider audience than he can hope for at present.

It is not difficult to understand how Paine came to be slandered. Misrepresentation seems to have been due, in the first instance, to the action of personal enemies of his own. He was an outspoken man, not only on topics with which the many agreed, but on others about which free criticism is not readily tolerated. Even within the limits of political controversy, he would probably have made some enemies; but, in the long run, more friends. He was not, however, a politician, or, for that matter, a theologian either, so much as a man imbued with a spirit of freedom and a love of justice and truth. Thus his antagonism was to all kinds of fetters and tyranny and sham. He allied himself with parties when their policy was in the direction of his own effort, but he was not a partisan. In France, so long as the king stood for tyranny he was against him; but when the king was dethroned and imprisoned and his life was in danger, he became, in Paine's eyes, a fellow mortal in distress, and Paine incurred some risk to his own life in trying to save that of the unhappy monarch. Paine was a friend of the Revolution while the Revolution was a struggle for liberty; but when the revolutionists proved in their hour of triumph that they, too, were only tyrants, he fell into a state of despair.

"Had this revolution been conducted consistently with its principles," he wrote to Jefferson in 1793, "there was once a good prospect of extending liberty through the greatest part of Europe, but I now relinquish that hope" (Vol. ii., p. 52).

In America, also, he was with the Revolution, but was heretic enough to insist that negroes should have liberty as well as white men. When, in 1801, Louisiana demanded admission as a State, with the right to "continue the importation of negro slaves," Paine reminded the memorialists of the "mischiefs caused in France by the possession of power before they understood principles," and declared their guilty notion of enslaving others was proof of their ignorance of human "rights." It was in the same spirit that he invaded the more dangerous theological territory. Not being a diplomatist, but—to use Mr. Conway's apt phrase—a "soldier for mankind," his onslaught was rather rough and rude, and so aroused bitter enmity. If he had expressed himself differently, he might have avoided trouble. Martyrdom is often the penalty, not of what people do or say, so much as of the way they do or say it. Mr. Matthew Arnold, who made deeper inroads into the popular theology than ever Paine did, was never cast out. But then he attacked with rapier thrusts, while Paine, after the manner of the John Bull he was, attacked with blows. Paine's enemies thereupon fastened upon his faults and magnified them. For a brief period he had taken to excessive drinking; his enemies proclaimed him a drunkard. Of course they called him an atheist: in reality, as any reader of his works can see, he was no atheist, but what was in those days called a deist, something a little different from the modern theist. But, what does it matter now, the particular "ist" he believed in and proclaimed? We are more concerned that the man himself had the courage of his opinions, and was willing to incur the penalties of declaring them because he honestly believed he was thereby doing good.

WALTER LEWIN.

The Deluge: an Historical Novel. By Henryk Sienkiewicz. Translated from the Polish by J. Curtin. In 2 vols. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

THE present volume is the fourth in the great cycle of historical works by means of which the eminent Polish novelist, Sienkiewicz, has set before himself the task of illustrating some of the past glories and calamities of his unhappy country. That a purely historical and mainly descriptive story of such heroic dimensions should find a sale nowadays is surprising perhaps, but it certainly speaks well for the public taste, for Potop (or "The Deluge," to give it its English title) is a work of as indisputable genius as Tolstoi's Peace and War. Like Tolstoi's masterpiece, too, Sienkiewicz's deals with a great national catastrophe, the invasion and partial conquest of Poland by Charles Gustavus of Sweden. In the year 1655—hoping to realise Gustavus Adolphus' dream of empire, and taking advantage of the sore straits of the Polish Republic when involved in a ruinous conflict with its rebellious Cossacks, aided by the Russians—the masterful young Swede crossed the sea with 50,000 men, and burst like a deluge upon Poland. Helped by domestic traitors, he succeeded, within six months, in conquering nearly the whole country. John Casimir, the Polish king, abandoned and betrayed, fled to Silesia; and the end seemed to have come when the mighty Radzivils of Lithuania threw off their allegiance and openly proclaimed Charles Gustavus King of Poland. But deliverance was already at hand. The attempt of the Swedes to storm the monastery of Czenstochowa, the home of the miraculous image of Our Lady, sent a thrill of horror through Catholic Poland, while the insolence of the Northerners galled the pride of the martial nobility to the quick. The nation flew to arms under the heroic Stephen Czarniecki (vir molestissimus, as the Swedish king called him); John Casimir returned from exile; and a war of extermination began against the invader, a war which reduced one half of Poland to ashes, but finally freed her from the most formidable danger that had yet befallen her.

Interwoven with this great national drama is the sweet story of the loves of Kmicic, the young banneret of Orsha, and the matchless lady Olenka Billewicz. The hero, Kmicic, a typical Pole of the period, violent to brutality, brave to extravagance, not without noble instincts, but relapsing into savagery amidst the prevailing lawlessness, Kmicic is already well on his way to the gallows when he falls in with the heroine, who, by the power of her love and the nobility of her character, gradually chastens and subdues him, though his probation is long and bitter and not without many relapses. Finally, however, he purges his past offences by bloody penance and knightly deeds, and is rewarded with the hand and heart of his lady, who, after long doubting him, discovers, to her joy, that her prayers on his behalf have not been altogether in vain.

With infinite skill the author uses this delightful love story simply as a means of thoroughly acquainting us with seventeenth century Poland; and we shall search the literatures of Europe in vain for anything so vivid and so thrilling as the historical tableaux which he unfolds before us with epic breadth and force. Kmicic takes an active part in nearly all the great events of the war, and is brought into contact with all the leading personages of the day. We cannot pay a higher compliment to the author's genius than by saying that his descriptions, both of men and of events, are so enthralling that even the interesting story of Kmicic and Olenka takes the second place in our thoughts, while we follow with bated breath the triumphs of the Swedes and the agonies of the Poles with the intense hope that their respective rôles may ere long be reversed. But, in truth, Sienkiewicz possesses the historical imagination of a Tolstoi or a Meinhold; all he tells us seems stamped with the hallmark of truth. He is a perfect master of the art of description; and whether the scene described be a banquet or a battle-field, a lover's success or a lover's revenge, whether he be terrible or pathetic, grave or gay, he always impresses us with a sense of power. What, for instance, can be finer in its way than the following description of High Mass at the monastery of Czenstochowa? (We have taken the liberty of slightly altering Mr. Curtin's version.)

"In the chapel there was a ruddy gloom not entirely dispersed by the rays of candles burning on the altar. Coloured rays fell also through the window-panes, and all these gleams, red, violet, golden, fiery, quivered on the walls, slipped along the carvings . . . made their way into dark depths bringing forth to sight indistinct forms buried, as it were, in a dream. Mysterious glimmers ran along and united with the darkness, so that all distinction between light and darkness was lost. The candles on the altar had golden halos; the smoke from the censers formed purple mists; the white robes of the monks serving Mass reflected, as it were, the tints of a darkling rainbow. All things there were half visible, half veiled, unearthly; the gleams were unearthly, the gloom was unearthly, mysterious, majestic, beatific, full of prayer, adoration, and holiness. From the nave of the church came the deep sound of human voices like the mighty sound of the sea; but in the chancel deep silence reigned, broken only by the voice of the priest chanting Mass. . . . The organ accompanied the chanting of the priest, and gave forth tones mild and sweet, flowing, as it were, from flutes beyond the earth. At moments their music seemed to distil like water from its source; then, again, they fell softly but swiftly like dense rain showers in

May. Suddenly there was a thunder of drums and clarions. A quiver passed through every heart. The curtain before the ikon [of Our Lady] was drawn aside, and a flood of diamond light flowed down upon the faithful. Groans and weeping were heard throughout the church. 'Salve Regina!' cried the nobles . . . but the peasants cried: 'Most Holy Lady! Golden Lady! Queen of Angels! save us, succour us, have mercy upon us!'

The spirited description of the famous charge of the Lithuanian hussars at the great battle of Warsaw shows that the author is as much at home in the din and turmoil of war as amidst the awfulness of the sanctuary; but it is unfortunately too long to quote in full, while to mutilate it would be a sin. As a specimen of Sienkiewicz's historical portraits, however, we give the following sketch of Charles Gustavus:

"The King took the letter and began to read, while the Polish envoys regarded him curiously, for they had never seen him before. He was a man in the flower of his age, as dark in complexion as though born an Italian or a Spaniard. His long hair, black as a raven's wing, fell behind his ears to his shoulders. . . . His brows were greatly elevated, as if he were in perpetual astonishment. Where his brows approached each other, his forehead was raised into a large protuberance, which gave him the appearance of a lion; a deep wrinkle above his nose, which did not leave him even when he laughed, gave his face a threatening and wrathful expression. His lower lip protruded. . . . He wore cord-like mustaches, brushed out somewhat at the ends. In general, his face indicated an extraordinary man, one of those who, when they walk over the earth, press blood out of it. There was in him grandeur, the pride of a monarch, the strength of a lion, and the vivacity of genius; but though a kindly smile never left his mouth, there was lacking that kindness of heart which illuminates a face from within as a lamp illuminates an alabaster urn."

Do we not seem to see before us in the flesh the monarch who vowed to make the Baltic a Swedish lake, the soldier who led a mail-clad host across the quaking ice of the barely frozen Belt through that terrible night which blanched the hair of the trembling guides?

Unfortunately the English version of this noble work is sadly disfigured by the carelessness and perversity of the translator. Mr. Curtin evidently knows Polish pretty well, and follows his text most conscientiously; but his English is too often slovenly and slipshod, and there is scarcely a page in the book which does not painfully remind us that we are reading a translation. But Mr. Curtin's cardinal offence is a slavish literalness which often verges on absolute absurdity. Thus, to take only a very few instances, such commonplaces as czolem bie (to salute) and badz zdrowa! (Farewell!) are rendered "to beat with the forehead," and "be well!"; blunders like "on the foot!" for "charge!" (biegiem!) are frequent, and the climax of absurdity is reached when such expressions as na wieki or na wieki wieków ("for ever," and "for ever and ever") are translated: "for the ages" and "for the ages of ages!" Mr. Curtin has further disfigured his book by transliterating all the proper names according to a system of phonetics of his own devising, with the most startling and often the most ridiculous results. He is also somewhat hazy as to the proper forms for Polish places, for we find such Polish forms as Poznan (Posen) and Lvoff (Lemberg) side by side with the English forms—Warsaw, Cracow. There is the less excuse for these eccentricities, as Mr. Curtin has already tried his pretence-hand on another Polish work by the same author almost as long as the present one.

R. NISBET BAIN.

BURNS—AND ANOTHER.

"THE PARCHMENT LIBRARY."—Selected Poems of Robert Burns. With an Introduction by Andrew Lang. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

A Pilgrimage to the Land of Burns, and Poems. By Hew Ainslie. With a Memoir of the Author by Thomas C. Latto. (Alexander Gardner.)

THE introduction to the new Selection from Burns is very much what might have been expected from Mr. Andrew Lang; the Selection itself is most decidedly otherwise. In his Letters to Dead Authors he had written, some years before the present volume was published,

"It is a cruel thing for any of your countrymen to feel that, where all the rest love, he can only admire; where all the rest are idolaters, he may not bend the knee, but stands apart and beats upon his breast, observing, not adoring—a critic. Yet to some of us—petty souls, perhaps, and envious—that loud indiscriminate praise of 'Robbie Burns' (for so they style you in their change-house familiarity) has long been ungrateful; and among the treasures of your songs we venture to select and even to reject."

Here we have the spirit not of eulogy but of criticism; and, if it is not quite so pronounced in the Introduction to Mr. Lang's Selection, it is there all the same. He almost goes out of his way to show that his heart, like Mr. Gladstone's, is with Scott rather than with Burns; and he admits regretfully that Burns, and not Scott, is what the present Foreign Secretary has termed Scotland's "Man of Destiny." But, if this introduction is not altogether an ungrudging and unmitigated panegyric, it is graceful, and even in parts heartily appreciative. Thus one is glad to learn that "it is a mere truism to say that Burns purified his national ditties, and gave us golden words for words of very doubtful metal, that Burns is, beyond all possibility of rivalry, the greatest of all truly popular poets," and that as a man he was "kindly, brave, witty, brilliant, upright, generous, pitiful." Mr. Lang might, indeed, have spared himself the trouble of saying—"A Scotchman, writing of Burns, will inevitably feel an enthusiasm which may seem overstrained to the general run of English readers," for his own enthusiasm is admirably restrained. Still, in his character of Scotchman, Mr. Lang would have done well to have proved, as well as have formulated, so grave a charge against his country as that it is "as Puritan in principle as the ideal Israel of the Prophets, and as lax in practice as the ideal Florence of Boccaccio." Again, says Mr. Lang:

"What is 'muslin kail'? what is a 'shangar'?

what is a 'stimpert'? One has put these questions to very loyal and unanglicised Scots, and they have been unable to answer."

Mr. Lang himself, of course, stands beyond suspicion as a "very loyal and unanglicised Scot," and therefore one may ask him what, after all, is a "shangar"?

As for the Selection, it seems chiefly to demonstrate the impossibility of producing a volume of the kind that is calculated to please—we shall not say everybody, but everybody who has a reasonable right to be considered in such a connexion. Certainly "Holy Willie's Prayer"—to take only one of the masterpieces which are conspicuous by their absence from this book—should have been allowed a place in a company which includes "The Jolly Beggars" and the "Epistle to John Rankin." Then there is an air of pedantry about the Selection, which may perhaps be justified as being perfection in matters of detail: thus, not only are Scotch words spelled here as Burns spelled them, but his italics also, which might surely have been dispensed with, are given. But in that case, why should we have the incorrect and worse than meaningless edition of the four lines bearing the title of "The Solemn League and Covenant," and the vastly inferior of the two versions of "Scots wa hae"? Mr. Lang has, however, publicly cried Peccari in this matter of "Scots wha hae," and it may be hoped that a new edition of the Selection will be an improvement on the first. It should be said that the paper and general "get-up" of the book, even as it stands now, are such as to ensure popularity for it, especially in England.

In the year 1792, there was born in Burns's own Ayrshire, and within four years after his death, a minor poet, who owes his reputation mainly to a combination of prose and verse which, under the title of A Pilgrimage to the Land of Burns, was originally published in 1822. This performance has now been republished, along with a number of other poems by its author, Hew Ainslie, and an elaborate but too effusive and ill-compacted biography. Ainslie was a miserably paid copyist in the Register House at Edinburgh, who seems to have been haunted by literary ambitions that he was never able to gratify, and who migrated to America, where, on the whole, he led a happy and useful life. He revisited the United Kingdom, and was lionised in a modest way. Finally, we learn from his biographer that, at Louisville, "to the great sorrow of his kindred and many friends, he passed peacefully to his rest"—would his kindred and friends have preferred him to die in agony?—"on the 11th day of March, 1878, at the patriarchal age of eighty-six." Ainslie was a very good specimen of the healthy-minded, well-intentioned Scotchman in humble life who secures a good deal of pleasure for himself, even if he does not afford it to others, by writing verses—mostly echoes of Burns. His biographer is wroth with Sir Walter Scott—he exclaims: "How difficult it is even for the finest intellect to judge accurately the qualities of a contemporary!"—for privately criticising the Pilgrimage in this fashion:

"It is the work of a very amiable man with a feeling for the beauties of nature and some command of language to describe them. The work has, of course, its faults, one of the greatest of which is a want of that quality, the most necessary to eminent distinction, I mean originality. The author appears rather to have written as he thought Allan Ramsay or Burns would have written in his situation than from the stream of his own thoughts."

Yet there is a great deal of sense, and even of kindly good sense, in Scott's judgment. Hew Ainslie had undoubtedly a feeling for nature, but his power of giving expression to it was no less undoubtedly limited and imitative. Of the successors and disciples of Burns, he is a long way behind not only Cunningham, and Hogg, and Tannahill, but even Motherwell and Thom. Take, for example, the best verse in the best poem he ever wrote:

"Its dowie in the hint o' hairst
At the wa' gang o' the swallow,
When the wind grows cauld an' the burns grow bauld
An' the wuds are hingin' yellow;
But, oh! its dowie far to see
The wa' gang o' her the heart ganga wi'—
The deid-set o' a shining e'e
That darkens the weary warld on thee."

There is a simple idea here, worthy of fitting embodiment, and genuine pathos; but how one misses what Mr. Stevenson styles "a spirit well strung up to the concert pitch of the primeval out-of-doors"! But the poem from which this verse is taken is very much above the average of Hew Ainslie, which is presented in such lines as "Her lips are like to cherries twin

That grow upon ae shank;
Her breath it beats the slamer win'
I' the lowne o' a flow'ry bank."

Or

"In the nick o' the Balloch lived Muirhan Tam,
Weel stentit wi' brochan an' braxy ham;
A breast like a brod, a back like a door,
Wi' a wapping wame that hung down afore."

Or

"They rubbed him on the thorax first,
Then on the abdomen,
And wrought on him those diverse works,
Resuscitators ken."

All things considered, Hew Ainslie deserved an In Memoriam, but not so bulky a volume as this. When one says that no justice can be done to Burns by a Selection, and that ample justice can be done to Ainslie by a Selection, one has leaped the gulf between the two poets.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

NEW NOVELS.

The Ivory Gate. By Walter Besant. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Brilliant Woman. By the Hon. Mrs. Henry Chetwynd. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

Passing the Love of Women. By Mrs. J. H. Needell. In 3 vols. (Frederick Warne.)

Nurse Elisa. By G. Manville Fenn. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

For the Sake of the Family. By May Crommelin. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

A Lost Soul. By W. L. Alden. (Chatto & Windus.)

A New Eden. By F. C. Hyne. (Longmans.)

READERS who are at all imaginative will have their hopes raised by the title of Mr.

Besant's romance. The ivory gate is the gate of dreams. It is through the horn gate that the harder and all too literal experiences of life come to us. Perhaps it is a little disconcerting to find, in a dedicatory note, that the story is based upon some discovery in medical science; but if the reader is wise he will forget all about this, and await the development of the plot with as much unquestioning faith as he can command. And not a little faith is necessary; for it is hardly in a lawyer's office that we should expect to find the ivory gate open, and dreams streaming through it. We assure ourselves that Mr. Edward Dering, the highly respectable family solicitor to whom we are introduced in the first chapter, is anything but a dreamer. His whole life has been spent among solid realities. He scorns idealists, respects property, and believes that the safety of the State consists in letting things alone. His sordid clerk, Checkley, is his master's shadow, a vulgar type of realist who also respects property, though with no other than a mercenary instinct. So remote are the dreams and the ivory gate that the first incidents of the story concern a supposed forgery of a cheque for a large amount. A high-spirited young managing-clerk believes himself to be suspected of the crime, and foolishly resents the suspicion by going away. But other apparent forgeries occur after his flight, and deeds and valuable documents disappear in an altogether unexplained manner. There is now another young managing-clerk in the office, who has just been promoted to the rank of partner when these fresh discoveries are made, and Checkley tries to throw suspicion upon him. But as the plot thickens Checkley's malicious suggestions lose their point. The person in whose favour the cheque was drawn, and to whom shares of considerable value are transferred—by the supposed forgery of Mr. Dering's name—is a Mr. Edmund Gray. This gentleman has been seen and spoken with by various people, but Mr. Dering is unable to trace him. He is eventually unearthed by the one charming girl in the book, a ward of Mr. Dering's, a sister of the runaway clerk, and the fiancée of the young partner. It is perhaps singular that the two young men who are so vitally interested in the finding of Edmund Gray should be content to leave the search to Elsie Arundel; but she can command obedience as well as inspire love. Mr. Besant's secret is known almost from the beginning of the story, but it is hardly fair that it should be revealed here. Suffice it to say that there is a veritable ivory gate in the book, and that it was sometimes entered, sometimes quitted, within the four walls of Mr. Dering's office. With the theory of a possible double life which underlies the tale, the present writer does not concern himself. He has enjoyed the story, which is brilliantly written, and he commends the reading of it to everyone who is not too exacting in the matter of probability.

Whether it often happens that a marriage which starts badly rights itself in the end, no one is quite in a position to say. There is abundant evidence of the unhappy fate which overtakes many unions that appear to begin well; but these are the marriages that occasion remark by the scandals they furnish. The other sort possibly includes many cases in which the progress is from bad to better, rather than from bad to worse. Mrs. Chetwynd describes such a union in A Brilliant Woman. A man who is approaching middle age, and a young, bright, high-spirited girl, are inveigled into matrimony by a match-making aunt of the girl. She persuades each of them that he or she is devotedly loved by the other, and they are fluttered into an engagement and a speedy wedding. Of course, neither has the smallest real knowledge of the other, and perpetual misunderstandings and a growing sense of disappointment are the consequence. The husband is a quiet, cultured, undemonstrative man, of scrupulously high honour; the wife is vain, thoughtless, headstrong, but true at heart. Here are materials for the working out of matrimonial discord; while there are also materials for establishing a union founded in mutual respect as well as in affection. This latter is the result which Mrs. Chetwynd skilfully brings about; but the exigencies of the story require that the time of gladness and peace should not be reached until after successive periods of storm and stress. The plot is very ingeniously constructed. It shows in progressive stages the fine chivalry of the husband, and the hasty misjudgment, the struggle towards magnanimity, and the ultimate nobleness of the wife. They are both highly individual characters, and exceedingly well drawn. So much of the story is told in the relations to each other of the two principal actors in it, that most of the other personages are of necessity slightly sketched in. But Aunt Anne is very lovable, and Mrs. Chetwynd shows a true instinct in making her the first to understand Mrs. Burlington's obscured tenderness and goodness. Flora Haddington is perhaps a little overdrawn, and the Beryl episode at the end might well have been omitted; but the defects in the story are few, while its merits are many.

Though the love of one sex for the other is as essential an element in fiction as it is in life, a novel which does not make a sexual affection its chief motive is to be welcomed by way of change. There are Davids and Jonathans whose mutual fondness for each other well deserves to have its record, and it is an attachment of this kind which is told in Passing the Love of Women. Gilbert Yorke and John Cartwright are boys when we first meet with them in Mrs. Needell's pages, but we follow their fortunes up to manhood; and we find them as boys and men fine fellows of dissimilar natures, but in all circumstances and at all times true and devoted to each other. By one test only could the inference suggested by the title of the book be established, and that test is applied. Both young men fall in love with one girl. According to nearly all human experience an accident of this kind breeds hatred and jealousy between the men. Here it does not mar their friendship. That it involves it in some peril only proves the reality of the bond, which comes out of the ordeal unharmed.

Margery Denison—the interloper—is an attractive and interesting girl; but she falls rapidly in one's esteem during the episode between herself and John Cartwright, after which it is difficult to reinstate her in the place which she originally filled. The story was obviously not an easy one to tell, and Mrs. Needell's marked success in telling it is therefore to be accounted all the greater.

Mr. Manville Fenn is too practised a writer not to be able to construct a fairly good tale out of slight materials. Very slight, however, and somewhat loosely put together are those which go to the making of Nurse Elisia. An overbearing father, who is determined to marry off his sons and daughter to his own liking, is brought to reason by an accident which leaves him a hopeless paralytic; and a Duke's daughter, playing the part of hospital nurse, though in good earnest and very efficiently, vindicates that noble calling from the scorn of people who speak of a nurse as "a hired servant." That is the substance of the story, though it fills out two volumes by an amplitude of trivial details, in the conversations mostly, which have no bearing on the plot and no interest of their own.

It should be deemed a merit in Miss May Crommelin that she has kept her book, For the Sake of the Family, within one volume. But it would not have borne greater expansion. It is just a story of two people who lose each other, and who do not find each other again until many things have happened only because the affair is in a novel instead of in real life. Among the occurrences that would never have come to pass if the severed lovers had been promptly reunited are a murder, a false suspicion as to the criminal, a piece of heroic self-accusation (equally false) to save the innocent suspected one, and much else consequent on events of such a nature. Of the making of many books with as little in them as one finds in this volume there is no end.

Distinctly fresh and clever is Mr. Alden's pleasant-looking little book, A Lost Soul. The story is supposed to be told by a man who has taken a woman's life, but is held by his judges to be insane. He insists firmly on his sanity, and on his right to do what he did. He found the woman embedded in a glacier and frozen to death. He had a theory that intense frost preserves physical life in suspended animation, and he put his theory to the test by thawing the woman. She came to life again under his treatment, and at once began to talk about the tragic event of the previous day, when her husband threw her down a crevasse in the ice. What seemed to her yesterday was a time more than three hundred years back; but though she belonged to the sixteenth century, she was still a young and beautiful woman of five-and-twenty, and her deliverer naturally fell in love with her. The novelty of early sixteenth century recollections, freshly revived late in the nineteenth, is a pleasant feature of the story, the interest of which rapidly deepens. The Countess—for that is the rank of the beautiful resuscitated one, who does not forget that she is a Contarini—refuses to marry her deliverer because he is only a physician, though she consents to love him until she meets with somebody else whom she may love better. This easy morality is explained by the suggestion that she is a splendid animal, and nothing more—for the theory of suspended animation is not intended to preclude the actual severance of soul and body. But carnal passions are stronger than any, and when the lover-physician, his fortune spent, finds that he can no longer support his mistress, for whose affections there is another candidate, he kills her. His own way of putting it is that he took the life he gave, and over which he claims to have had a disposing power. So ends a very fascinating story, brilliantly told.

The New Eden is a sort of puzzle. Does Mr. Hyne mean it for a joke, or does he intend it to convey some not too obvious moral? The humour, if humour there be, has certainly escaped me, and the possible moral is so much obscured that I have not found it. For the rest, the story is fantastic in a way; but whether it was worth writing is a question which Mr. Hyne would have done well to put to himself before he set about the task.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

GIFT BOOKS.

Stories from the Greek Comedians. By the Rev. Alfred J. Church. With sixteen illustrations after the Antique. (Seeley.) We feared that Mr. Church had exhausted that long series of "stories from the classics," by which he has proved himself a benefactor to more than one generation of boys—and girls too. But, fortunately for them, he has bethought himself of providing a companion volume to his Stories from the Greek Tragedians, which came out (we are surprised to learn) so long ago as 1879. Aristophanes is a difficult author to adapt virginibus puerisque; but we need hardly say that we are quite safe in Mr. Church's experienced hands. He has even dared to give us a scene from the "Ecclesiazusae." To Aristophanes he has appended some examples of the New Comedy, taken of course from the versions of Plautus and Terence. We should suppose that no portion of ancient literature is less known, except to professed scholars, than the comedies. They are not well fitted for school use; and in later life they are apt to be found too difficult. Even the brilliant renderings of Hookham Frere are, we fancy, more praised than read. These adaptations, therefore, of Mr. Church supply a distinct want, by giving to English readers some conception of a veiled aspect of Greek life, which, as he somewhere says, occupied the place of the modern novel, combined (we may add) with that of the comic paper and of the music hall. To select the illustrations must have been yet more difficult than to adapt the text. No authorities are quoted; and we cannot say that more than a moderate measure of success has been attained.

More about Wild Nature. By Mrs. Brightwen. (Fisher Unwin.) Emboldened by the success of her Wild Nature Won by Kindness, the authoress has here continued her studies among pets and birds and insects in general. Full of sympathy for nature, and ardently fond of animal life, these sketches, illustrated by her own pencil, are cordially to be welcomed. Not everyone has kept a mongoose or an Indian fruit-eating bat, as has Mrs. Brightwen. Her remarks on the footsteps of birds and quadrupeds in snow form an interesting chapter; while her love of simple pleasures such as abound in the country, and her sensible advice on "Home Museums," would, if followed, open new fields of study to many who would delight in them. The book is dedicated to Sir W. H. Flower, and would form a charming present for any girl with natural history tastes.

Fairway Island. By Horace Hutchinson. With four illustrations by W. S. Stacey. (Cassells.) Mr. Horace Hutchinson, the golfer and chronicler of golf, has joined the great army of those who write stories of adventure for boys. His connexion with Westward Ho!—the place, not the book—has naturally induced him to lay the scene in North Devon; but he was less happily inspired when he chose for time the nineteenth century. The first chapter opens with a simple country episode that might have happened in the present year of grace anywhere on the borders of Exmoor—except that the author makes no attempt to reproduce the dialect still to be heard there. But we are quickly transported to the mid-sea island of Lundy—for such it might have been called without evasion—and to scenes of savagery that a more experienced writer would have thrown a few generations back. The inevitable result is that we never get persuaded of the truth of the story. We have, indeed, the usual stock-in-trade—a lover and his lass, who remain faithful despite deceptive appearances; a stage father, with a fabulous treasure gained from wrecking; a stage villain, who is ultimately hurled over the cliff; a wily old nurse, who is also something of a witch; and a young smith, almost as formidable as the Gow Chrom. Add to this portentous snowstorm, recalling that in Lorna Doone, and hand-to-hand fighting that lasts for several days and through as many chapters, and you have all the ingredients for a great romance, except the necessary genius for mixing them. Possibly boys may be satisfied with it, but critics will never place it in the same class with Treasure Island or even with The Blue Pavilions.

The Doctor of the "Juliet": a Story of the Sea. By Harry Collingwood. With illustrations by Gordon Browne. (Methuen.) Mr. Harry Collingwood, we need hardly say, does know how to tell a story, while Mr. Gordon Browne equally knows how to illustrate. We have read this book through in a not very long midnight sitting; and we can promise that any boy will be delighted to do the same—by daylight. It was rather bold of the author to make the crew of an earl's yacht mutiny and turn pirates, some time in the last half of the present century. Though we are preserved from the black flag, and any actual description of walking the plank, the pirates are genuine enough. And there are the usual exciting incidents of a young man and a girl on a desert island, with a lost treasure and a fragmentary paper—not to mention pearls and rubies. In addition, we are treated to a terrible experience in mid-ocean in an open boat—which is not exactly an open boat, because the hero contrives to rig a covering over the thwarts, and to ride out the storm by means of a sea-anchor; just as afterwards, on a dismasted hulk, he manages to evade a submarine volcano, and to throw oil on the troubled waters. Above all, we admire the way in which the earl is marooned in the second chapter, not to appear again until the penultimate page. Have we not said enough to recommend this last product of Mr. Collingwood's pen to all who still enjoy hairbreadth adventures and escapes told in the good old straightforward fashion?

Story of Allan Gordon; or, from Cabin-boy to Quarter-deck. (Chapman & Hall.) The hero of this tale begins life at a curious Scotch school, where Kirk and Free Church politics predominate over merit. Being unjustly treated, he runs away to sea. The lover of sea stories can guess the rest. Young Gordon is shipwrecked in the Bay of Biscay, and nursed by a beautiful blonde. A cyclone, an encounter with savages, and a typhoon of tremendous violence succeed. The crew of the Gloriana are of a very polished type, not the ordinary ruffians of the novelist. That perseverance and a love of duty are imperatively needed in a sea life is sensibly indicated. Allan Gordon's story is just the book to put in the hands of a boy bitten with a longing for the sea. The late attainment of the school-mate who had unfairly ousted the hero in their school life is delightfully comic; "he had preached no less than eight public sermons to schoolmasters as a warning to them" not to treat boys unfairly.

The Captured Cruiser. By C. J. Hyne. (Blackie.) When we reach the Chilian ironclad and find a handful of English prisoners first capturing their prison and then engaging torpedo boats with all the latest appliances of scientific naval warfare, we feel we are reading a romance intended for schoolboys who will accept uncritically the heroic impossibilities achieved by their favourites in the tale. The fight with the torpedo boats is, however, very spirited, and the adventures of the ironclad on the ice-berg ingeniously improbable. Boys will delight in them. But we consider the opening chapters of the story the best. Frank and Walter are blown out to sea in an empty schooner, which they set on fire to attract the notice of a passing steamship. The narrative is incisive and vivid, and, to our mind, of an altogether higher order of art than the prodigious improbabilities which succeed it. Mr. Hyne has produced a tale full of interest and excitement which boys will delight in. The illustrations are good.

With the Admiral of the Ocean Sea. By Charles Paul Mackie. (Edinburgh: Nelson.) Mr. Mackie has drawn his "narrative of the first voyage to the Western World" mainly from the diary of Christopher Columbus himself, and has done his work with tact and enthusiasm. The chapters describing the immortal voyage, up to the point of the discovery of the New World in the moonlight, are as exciting as if the story they tell were strange to us. The book, we suppose, is intended especially for boys; but it is written in a style so vivid and sure, and is nevertheless so scholarly and accurate in its presentation of facts, that many "old boys" will prefer it to more pretentious histories. In an appendix the author collects his views upon "the main points in dispute" concerning the career of Columbus. His narrative succeeds very thoroughly in presenting us with "a living picture" of the hero's "stupendous achievement."

Englishman's Haven. By W. J. Gordon. (Frederick Warne & Co.) The history of the dead city Louisbourg is well told in this careful and vigorous tale. The reader is left with a clear impression of the early fortunes of the English in Nova Scotia, and will thank Mr. Gordon for enabling him so pleasantly to acquire an acquaintance with an unfrequented bypath in the wide domain of the history of England. Boys will enjoy the excitement and variety of the incidents, and will have no reason to complain that too much instruction is mingled with their amusement. For the tale of the fortunes of the early colonists at Chebucto, now Halifax, and at Annapolis Royal, the principal fort, reads like a description of the doings of schoolboys rather than of staid citizens, and has in it the flavour of romance.

and adventure never absent from the doings of the first founders of colonies and empires. The illustrations help us to realise that we are in the latter half of the eighteenth century and are unusually spirited.

Captain Geoff. By Ismay Thorn. (Wells Gardner & Co.) Those who wish for an intelligent and conscientious variation of the ancient theme of a schoolboy's troubles will appreciate Captain Geoff. The hero encounters the usual persecution at the hands of the villain; he is wrongfully suspected of sneaking to the master, and of breaking into the boat-house of an adjacent nobleman. He wins the annual cricket match for his school "in spite of scorn," and emerges victorious from all his troubles, while the villain dies remorseful and penitent. On one point only are we inclined to quarrel with our author. French masters at English schools are, on the whole, so much more sinned against than sinning that we should have expected Ismay Thorn to have treated of them more sympathetically, and to have been on his guard against fostering school-boy prejudices. M. L'Abbeille is an unkind, and surely an improbable, presentation of one of a long-suffering class of men.

Monk and Knight. By Frank W. Gunsaulus. (Edinburgh: Nelson.) There should be no lack of excitement and interest in a tale which describes the fortunes of a knight who is educated along with Francis I., and turns out to be the son of a Waldensian, and of a monk who falls in with Erasmus and More, and having a Wickliffite father, finally assists Henry VIII. in suppressing the monasteries. The story is, in fact, overcrowded with historical celebrities, and too ambitiously includes in its course a succession of great historical events. The writer lacks the dramatic talent necessary to make his huge collection of stage properties alive and real. And yet by readers who know something of the history of the early years of the sixteenth century our author's conscientious effort to describe the greatest heroes of that time will be treated with indulgence. If Mr. Gunsaulus will severely limit himself to one country and a few historical celebrities, and curtail his reflections and descriptions, he may yet do much better work than this. Or he might merge the novelist in the historian, and give us historical sketches unconfused by romantic accretions. As it is, he falls between two stools, and does not quite satisfy either the historical student or the reader of fiction.

The Fishguard Invasion of the French in 1797. (Fisher Unwin.) A pleasant memory of the fiasco of the French in their three days' invasion of Wales is here well illustrated by facsimile cuts from old prints and of several original documents relating to the abortive invasion. Some people would have preferred that no story should have intertwined with the curious facts of General Tate's expedition. On the other hand, the slight thread of Welsh love-making which runs through the book may please other readers. It will be remembered that the French eventually surrendered, because they were overawed by the national high hats and red shawls of the countrywomen who (literally) manned the surrounding hills: much as centuries before the English had been terrified at Bannockburn.

Lost in the Wilds of Canada. By Eleanor Stredder. (Edinburgh: Nelson.) This story carries the reader back to Cooper's pages with their Crees and Blackfoot Indians. But in Miss Stredder's book these are peaceable, almost amiable, and the gleam of a tomahawk is never seen among the pictures of a Canadian winter. The hero's adventures are sufficiently interesting, and show that the "poor Indian" still retains much of the chivalry with which novelists have been wont to invest him.

Bert Lloyd's Boyhood: a Story from Nova Scotia. By J. Macdonald Oxley. (Hodder & Stoughton.) The tone of this book, with its juvenile religionism, is intensely American. The schools of Nova Scotia, too, are entirely alien from English experience. In his extreme goodness as a schoolboy, and his self-consciousness, the hero's character strikes a note seldom heard among English boys. The scene between him and his boy-friend when ill of fever is extremely unreal. The book may be appreciated in Acadia, but can scarcely be recommended for English boys.

Godiva Darleigh. By Sarah Doudney. (Hutchinson.) This story for girls is full of old-fashioned houses, china, and flowers, and contains plenty of honest old-fashioned love-making. The heroine does nothing to justify her fantastic name, but is remarkably strong-minded, and so determined that she almost makes shipwreck of her life. We seem to have heard before of Belle Espinasse, who became Lady Dun; and some will think of a celebrated poem by Mr. Browning as they read of the man who leapt into the lion's cage, even though he "dealt the creature a blow with a crowbar that sent him back to a corner of the den." There are plenty of incidents in the story, and all the lovers are made happy at the end.

Ourselves and Others. By S. B. James, D.D. (Home Words Publishing Office.) We are not quite clear why Dr. James entitles his twenty-two papers on all sorts of topics Ourselves and Others. It is perhaps to tempt the reader just to peep inside for an answer to the riddle. We have not found the answer, but wherever we have opened the volume we have been entertained. We cannot discover that Dr. James is very profound or very instructive, although he is never thoughtless, and tells us many things we are pleased to know. It is not the matter of the papers that is remarkable, it is the manner: they are eminently readable. We can detect no special characteristic of the style except a certain happy emphasis of phrase, which is not too emphatic, and continually keeps the reader turning the page although he has made up his mind to put the book down. Among the papers that have pleased us most are nine on Alliteration, &c., fourteen on some French and Latin quotations, and seventeen on First and Third Person Singular. These in subject are more distinctly literary than many of the others, and of more permanent value.

We hardly expected to live to see the day when we should think it desirable to make mention in the ACADEMY of Pears' Annual; yet the day has arrived. The designs in illustration of the "Christmas Carol" which Mr. Charles Green has furnished to the present number throw into the shade, we shall venture to say, anything that has hitherto been done in illustration of that which is deservedly the most popular of the Christmas stories of Dickens. Mr. Green seems to us successful at all points. Marley's face upon the door-knocker is rendered with extraordinary suggestiveness. Something more than melodrama is reached in the picture of Mr. Scrooge perusing the inscription on the churchyard tomb. A completely characteristic Christmas geniality and abandon is reached in the design in which, in "Blind Man's Buff" at Scrooge's nephew's party, a blameless young man pursues the young woman in the lace tucker—"not the one with the roses," as Mr. Dickens takes care to tell us. Bob Cratchett freezing in the tank—or trying to avoid that process by warming himself at the candle—is very good; and the whole attitude, mental and physical, of the humble old-fashioned servant towards his employer is conveyed in the amazing illustration which records Mr. Cratchett sitting with knees nervously drawn together, while the now reclaimed and reformed Mr. Scrooge presents the unwonted spectacle of brewing "a bowl of smoking bishop," that he may discuss, over it, the affairs of his clerk.

MESSRS. MARCUS WARD & Co. have sent us some specimens of their Concise Diaries, nicely bound, and of a convenient shape for the pocket. Their peculiarity seems to be that—to economise space—the diary proper is in four parts, one for each quarter of the year; but we fail to see sufficient advantage in this arrangement, to compensate for the risk of losing one of the later parts before it is wanted.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. JOSEPH POPE, assistant clerk to the Canadian Privy Council, and for many years confidential secretary to the late Sir John Macdonald, has in a forward state of preparation a memoir of that statesman. Lady Macdonald has placed at Mr. Pope's disposal the private papers of her husband; and a number of documents, many of them of great public interest, will now for the first time see the light.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in the press The Land of Home Rule, being an account of the history and institutions of the Isle of Man, by Mr. Spencer Walpole, governor of the island.

THE Record Press will shortly issue On Sledge and Horseback to Outcast Siberian Lepers, by Miss Kate Marsden. It is dedicated, by special permission, to the Queen, and is illustrated with original drawings, sketches, &c.

A NEW poem by Mr. Buchanan will be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus next week. The choice of the time for publication is partly explained by the title—The Wandering Jew: A Christmas Carol. The poem, however, is of contemporary interest. It will be followed, after a brief interval, by the second portion of The Outcast.

A NEW story by Mr. B. L. Farjeon is announced. Although sensational, it will present in a novel light some problems of heredity. The title is A Fair Jewess. The heroine is of Christian parentage, but when an infant she is adopted by a Jew as his daughter, and educated accordingly. The story proper commences when she is of age, her earlier years having been swiftly dealt with in a prologue. The work is being designed specially with a view to serial publication, and will appear through the agency of Messrs. Tiltson & Son, of Bolton.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNEY will publish in January a novel by Lady Greville, entitled That Hated Saxon, descriptive of life in the house of an Irish master of hounds. It will be illustrated by Mr. E. J. Ellis.

The Man with Seven Hearts is the title of a volume of Christmas stories, by Mr. Arthur Burrell, which Mr. Elliot Stock announces for immediate publication.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co. will shortly publish an illustrated Church Annual, with special articles on various departments of religious work. Among the writers are the Bishop of Peterborough and Dean Gregory. The illustrations will include portraits of the two archbishops at different stages of their life, and facsimile letters of Lord Tennyson and Mr. Gladstone.

A THIRD edition of The Sinner's Comedy, by "John Oliver Hobbes," has been called for, and will be ready immediately.

MR. HENRY DUNNING MACLEOD has been authorised by the India Currency Commission to prepare for their consideration a scheme for the restoration of the ancient gold standard of India.

AT the monthly meeting of the Bibliographical Society, to be held on Monday next at 20, Hanover-square, Mr. H. B. Wheatley will read a paper on "The Present Condition of English Bibliography, and Suggestions for the Future." The reading of the paper will be followed by a discussion.

THE following are the lecture arrangements at the Royal Institution before Easter: Sir Robert Stawell Ball, six lectures (adapted to a juvenile auditory) on "Astronomy"; Prof. Victor Horsley, ten lectures on "The Brain"; Canon Ainger, three lectures on "Tennyson"; Prof. Patrick Geddes, four lectures on "The Factors of Organic Evolution"; the Rev. Dr. Augustus Jessopp, three lectures on "The Great Revival—a Study in Mediaeval History"; Prof. C. Hubert H. Parry, four lectures on "Expression and Design in Music" (with musical illustrations); Lord Rayleigh, six lectures on "Sound and Vibrations." The Friday evening meetings will begin on January 20, when a discourse will be given by Prof. Dewar on "Liquid Atmospheric Air"; succeeding discourses will probably be given by Mr. Francis Galton, Mr. Alexander Siemens, Prof. Charles Stewart, Prof. A. H. Church, Mr. Edward Hopkinson, Mr. George Simonds, Sir Herbert Maxwell, and Lord Rayleigh.

ON Friday next, Messrs. Sotheby will sell by auction the original MS. of Poems by Two Brothers, most of which is in the handwriting of the late laureate. It includes three poems which did not appear in the printed book. It seems that the publishers, Messrs. J. and J. Jackson, of Louth, were careful to keep together several letters from the two authors about the details of publication, the receipt for £20 for the copyright, &c. These will be sold in the same lot, as also a clean copy of the book, in the original boards, with white paper label.

MESSRS. SOTHEY'S catalogue for next week further comprises an unusual number of those books which collectors value for different reasons. We must be content to mention first editions of Cocker's Decimal Arithmetick (1685), Mrs. Glasse's Art of Cookery (1747), Audubon's Birds of America, Poe's Mesmerism in Articulo Mortis, and some original drawings of Cruikshank for Sketches by Boz.

THE latest issue of "Johns Hopkins University Studies in Historical and Political Science" is devoted to Columbus. It contains (1) an address delivered at the Peabody Institute by Prof. Herbert B. Adams, the editor of the series, on "Columbus and his Discovery of America," which is both eloquent and scholarly; (2) a shorter oration by Prof. Henry Wood; (3) a curious discussion, by Prof. M. Kayserling, about the first Jew in America—it seems that several converts took part in the first expedition of Columbus, one of whom was employed as an interpreter, because of his knowledge of Hebrew, Chaldee, and Arabic; (4) an account, by Dr. Cyrus Adler, of a Turkish MS. which he obtained at Constantinople, giving a description of the New World, with maps and illustrations—the work has been printed, under the title of Hadisi Ner (Constantinople, 1730), and seems to have been written in 1569-70; (5) a catalogue of bibliographies of the discovery of America, compiled by Mr. C. W. Bump, under the headings—Pre-Columbian claims, Columbus, Vesputi and the Cabots; (6) a list of Columbian memorials (including those projected), by the same compiler, from which it appears that the earliest in date is an obelisk at Baltimore, erected by the French consul in 1792, presumably to commemorate the third centenary. The next is the tablet, with an ideal bust, which was placed in the cathedral of Havana in 1822. It is interesting to learn that no less than 115 places have been called after Columbus in the United States alone (mostly east of the Mississippi river, not to mention British Columbia or Columbian names in Central and South America. Finally (7), there is a note on the disputed question of Columbus portraits.

WE have received Bosquejo de la Exposicion Históric-Europea, on the day of its opening. (Madrid: Velasco.) This is not a mere catalogue, but a description of documents, early printed books, and works of art of many kinds, brought together to illustrate the state of Spain in the fifteenth century. The Bulls sent by Leo XIII., the descriptions of MSS., and the bibliography of early printed works are of permanent interest.

THE Law Almanac for 1893 has been sent to us. The sheet is crammed with facts, and destitute of advertisements.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

HENCEFORTH the Art Journal will be published by Messrs. Boussod, Valadon & Co.; and we believe that the editorship also has undergone a change. The programme for the new year announces that "a serious effort will be made to put the Art Journal more in touch with all the recent developments of art and of artistic expression, and it will not be forgotten that the great tendency of modern art is towards impressionism and breadth of treatment."

Among the artists of whom illustrated biographies are promised, we notice the names of Burne-Jones, J. M. Swan, Troyon, Degas, and Claude Monet. Mr. Tate has given exclusive permission for the publication of articles on his gallery of pictures by living British painters, which will soon be transferred by him to the nation; and in the middle of the year, a number of extra pages will be devoted to the various collections of artistic objects brought together at the Chicago Exhibition. Every number will in future contain two full-page illustrations, one an etching or a photograph. Those in preparation include, "Ophelia," by Sir J. E. Millais; "The Annunciation," by Mr. E. Burne-Jones; "Westminster," by Mr. Vicat Cole; and "Flora," by Mr. R. W. Macbeth.

Two new stories will be commenced in the January number of Temple Bar: "Nemesis," by Miss Cholmondeley, author of "The Danvers Jewels"; and "Sunlight and Shadow," by a new writer.

COMMENCING with the January number, the Westminster Review, will in future be published by Messrs. Henry & Co., Bouverie-street.

THE Sunday Friend has been transferred to the Record Press, by whom it will henceforth be published in an enlarged form, with many new features.

IN the January part of Little Folks, which commences a new volume, will appear the opening chapters of a serial story by L. T. Meade, entitled "Beyond the Blue Mountains."

THE January part of Cassell's Saturday Journal will have for frontispiece a tinted reproduction of Mr. F. Barnard's picture of "Bill Sikes."

WITH the commencement of the new year Anglo-Austria, an English monthly magazine for the past three years published at Meran, in the Tyrol, will change its title to the Anglo-Continental Magazine.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. E. B. ELLIOTT, of Queen's, has been elected to the Waynflete chair of pure mathematics at Oxford, which has been founded in connexion with Magdalen College.

MR. J. F. STENNING, of Wadham, has been elected to a senior demyship at the same college, which has been founded as an endowment for original research. Mr. Stenning obtained a first class in the school of Literae Semiticae, and also won many university scholarships for Hebrew and Greek.

THE election to the Lady Margaret chair of divinity at Cambridge, vacant by the death of Dr. Hort, will take place on Tuesday next, December 20, by public voting in the Senate-house of all bachelors and doctors of divinity who are also members of the senate. There are four candidates: Prof. Lumby, the Rev. Dr. A. J. Mason, the Rev. J. Armitage Robinson, and the Rev. Dr. F. Watson.

THE general board of studies at Cambridge have reported in favour of the appointment of a demonstrator of palaeozoology, which subject has, as a matter of fact, been taught in the Woodwardian Museum since 1878.

AS the result of a subscription among the friends of the late Dr. Luard, a new clock has been placed in the tower of Great St. Mary's Church, at Cambridge, as a memorial of him.

THE address delivered by the Rev. Charles Barnes Upton, at the opening of the academic year at Manchester New College, has been published as a pamphlet (Oxford: Blackwell). The subject is "Are Ethics and Theology vitally connected?" and it is largely concerned with the prospectus of the recently founded West London Ethical Society.

THE following letter, composed by Prof. G. G. Ramsay, has been sent by the University of Glasgow to Padua, on the occasion of the Galileo tercentenary:

"Gratias vobis nostri quam maximas referunt quod, in honorem Galilaei Galilaei celebraturi ferias, in partem nos gaudii vestri humanissime vocavistis.

"Quippe viri illius illustrissimi laudes non unius sunt aetatis, non unius temporis aut loci: ubicunque doctrinae florent, ubicunque existit aut scientiae studium aut amor veritatis, illic illius offeruntur laudes qui primus hunc orbem nostrum certis devinxit legibus, stellisque temere adhuc et incertis per infinitum spatium vagantibus suos modos et fœdera imposuit.

"Idem ille veritatis adversus minantium vultus se praebuit tenacissimum; qui, spectra illa priorem ratione philosophorum qui levitate sua omnia sursum ferri crederent, primus in rerum natura quid posset gravitas docuerit, quid eadem posset in moribus constantissimus adversus pericula ostenderit.

"Itaque gratulamur vobis quod ad vos praecipue tanti viri laudes pertinerint; nos autem, ut per labores assiduos adistere feris haud permisum, ita per dilectissimum nostrum Georgium Darwin, virum et suo et patris nomine de rerum scientia optime meritum, gratulationes nostras mittimus, celebrantibusque ferias fausta omnia et felicia precamur."

ON the occasion of the opening of the new buildings of Liverpool University College, on Tuesday last, Mr. James Bryce announced that the Queen had been pleased to bestow £4000, out of the funds of the Duchy of Lancaster, upon the two colleges of the Victoria University, to be applied in some permanent form, as might be agreed upon by the authorities.

A PERFORMANCE of Sheridan's "The Rivals" was to be given this afternoon (Saturday) at Queen's College, Harley-street.

BY a curious blunder—for the lists of the staff of both institutions were before our eyes—we assigned Prof. Ridgway last week to the Royal College at Galway, instead of Cork.

It seems worthy of notice here that no less than three publications on the Gospel of Peter have already issued from Cambridge. The regius professor of divinity—who also promises to lecture upon the subject next term—has brought out a little pamphlet (Macmillans), containing the Greek text, handsomely printed, with a few verbal corrections. The Rev. J. Armitage Robinson, the editor of "Texts and Studies: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature," has joined with Mr. M. R. James, one of the contributors to that series, in publishing two Lectures on the Gospel and the Revelation of Peter, dedicated to the late Prof. Hort (Cambridge University Press). This contains the Greek text of both fragments, together with emendations and marginal references to parallel passages in the New Testament. Both lecturers are particularly happy in indicating the relation of the newly discovered documents to other apocryphal literature. And finally, Mr. J. Rendel Harris, university reader in palaeography, has published a "popular account" (Hodder & Stoughton) in a little volume which we regret to find is dated 1893. The most interesting chapter is that which discusses the relations between the new Gospel and the Harmony of Tatian. For this raises the important question: What other sources besides the Four Gospels may not the spurious Peter have had before him? Mr. Rendel Harris naturally demands a facsimile reproduction of the Akhmim codex, such as he was himself the first to give of the Didachê.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

"SAY, PILGRIM, ART THOU FOR THE EAST INDEED?"—Browning.

AYE, truly, to the golden East I go,
Leaving these city streets, the fog, the rain,
The restless search for rest that none obtain,
The ceaseless noise, the voices strong with woe
For fair things blotted out, for hill and plain
Covered with dismal houses row on row:
Now stop I ever towards the sunrise glow,
To find earth's beauty and God's truth again.

There where the wilderness and ocean meet,
And clumps of palm their slender shadows fling,
The presence of the Invisible I greet:
His speed is as the seabirds on the wing,
His voice is as the blue sea's murmuring,
His peace the desert's in the noonday heat.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

OBITUARY.

WILLIAM NOEL WOODS, B.A.

ONLY a few weeks have passed since the ACADEMY recorded, in the death of Mr. John Peto, the loss of a veteran in the ranks of the workers who rallied to the appeal of the Philological Society for voluntary aid in the preparation of the New English Dictionary. It is now my sorrowful duty to commemorate one of the younger and, at the same time, of the most accomplished of our voluntary labourers, whom a deplorable accident has cut off in his very prime.

Mr. William Noel Woods, of 58, Elgin-road, Addiscombe, son of Mr. W. Fell Woods, of Forest Hill, was born in London in 1856. His school course began in the preparatory department of Rossall, but was mainly passed at Amersham Hall, Caversham, the well-known school of Mr. West, whence he matriculated at the University of London, and entered on the course at University College, going into residence at University Hall. At college he gained the Ricardo scholarship and the Andrews prize, and distinguished himself—among other subjects—in Anglo-Saxon, Early English, and English literature. He took his B.A., with honours, in 1877, and afterwards proceeded to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he read—at first with much promise—for the Moral Science Tripos. Unhappily at this point his health gave way, and he was obliged to cease work entirely. A sea voyage in a sailing vessel to Australia and New Zealand restored him eventually to health; and after his return home he married Miss C. E. Anclay, a student of Bedford College, who, like himself, had taken an honours B.A. degree at the University of London. Mrs. Woods was a most accomplished lady, who, without failing in wifely, and in course of time maternal, duties, yet gave much time and labour to classes for girls and pupil teachers, and to work at Toynbee Hall and elsewhere. Unfortunately she died after a few days' illness in the end of 1890, leaving her husband with a bright little girl, the offspring of their union. This bereavement was a shock from which Mr. Woods never fully recovered; he removed from the home at Westcombe-park, Blackheath, to Addiscombe, and sought in change of scene and devotion to natural history and open air pursuits some palliation of his sorrow. On November 17 last he was practising at a small extemporised target with a revolver, which by some accident exploded in his hands, a bullet entered his brain through the right eye, and death was almost instantaneous.

Mr. Woods began to "read" for the Dictionary shortly after we issued our first appeal in 1879, about the time his health gave way, and read and extracted four books for us. After his return from abroad and settlement at Westcombe-park, finding that the preparatory "reading" was done, he offered himself as a "sub-editor"; and, in conjunction with his accomplished wife, they started with eagerness upon this as the hobby of their leisure hours. During 1885-6 the two sub-edited with scholarly taste a considerable portion of the letter H, and subsequently took the re-sub-editing of large parts of B, C, and F, which, having been sub-edited for the Philological Society in earlier times, now, with the accumulation of additional material and maturation of the final plan, stood in need of much new work. In every successive part of the Dictionary the prefatory note has recorded Mr. Woods's work; and now, when I turn up our sub-editors' record and look at the amount done by him, I am filled anew with admiration and gratitude for its extent, as, in building upon it in the final preparation of the "copy," I am delighted with its scholarly excellence. The bereavement of December, 1890, which cast such a shadow upon Mr. Woods's life, for some time checked his zeal, even in the service of the Dictionary. But from this he had at least partly recovered, and had received a fresh instalment of work, which he had all but finished when the disaster occurred which so prematurely closed his career; and it was from his executor, who found the Dictionary MS. among his effects, and learned from his correspondence what it was and whence it came, that I received somewhat tardy notice of his death. I am sure that lovers of our language will not willingly let die the names of those who, from unselfish devotion and service to that language, have laboured in the cause of the Dictionary; and among these names few deserve more honoured recognition than those of William Noel and Catherine Eyre Woods.

JAMES A. H. MURRAY.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

In the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for November, Antonio Fabié reports upon the work of Señor Berlanga on the new bronze tablet found at Italica, near Seville, of which a Spanish translation is given. The original is a decree of Marcus Aurelius and Commodus in 176 A.D., regulating the expenses of gladiatorial shows given by municipal officers in Spain and Gaul. M. E. M. O. Dognée of Liège has an admirable article, in French, full of interest, on a fine illustrated MS. preserved in the University of Liège. This he proves to be a Latin translation made in Andalusia in the fifteenth century of an Arabic work of Khalaf-abou-Cacem (Albucassis), who died at Cordova in 1122. A full description of the MS. is given, a biography of this celebrated physician, a picture of his times, and also of life in Andalusia in the fifteenth century as depicted in the drawings of the MS. F. Codera describes briefly seven Arabic MSS. from the great Mosque at Tunis, sent to the exhibition of Madrid. Amador de los Rios does the same for the so-called Pandon de Oran, which, on examination, proves not to be the banner taken at Oran by Cardinal Ximenes in 1509, but the earlier banner captured at the battle of the Salado by Alphonso XI. in 1340. Copies and translations of the numerous texts from the Koran inscribed on it are given. Padre Fita prints with comments a Bull of Alexander VI., appointing a Bishop of Greenland in 1492.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BENOIST, Ch. Souverains, hommes d'état, hommes d'église. Paris: Lecène. 3 fr. 50 c.
FROBENIUS, H. Die Heiden-Neger d. ägyptischen Sudan. Berlin: Nitschke. 9 M.
GRAND-CARTRETT, John. XIX^e Siècle. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 20 fr.
GRÉVILLON, Maurice. Les Eléments du beau. Paris: Alcan. 4 fr. 50 c.
HOEHNEL, L. Ritter v. Zum Rudolph-See u. Stephanie-See. Die Forschungserreise d. Grafen Samuel Teleki in Ost-Äquatorial-Afrika 1887-1888, geschildert v. seinem Begleiter. Wien: Holder. 15 M.
HUMMELT, W. v. u. E. M. ARNOT. Briefe an Johann Motherby. hrg. v. H. Meisner. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 3 M. 50 Pf.
MAISONNEUVE-LACOSTE. Inde et Indo-Chine: les pays, les événements, les arts. Paris: Le Soulier. 3 fr. 50 c.
MONUMENTA Germaniae paedagogica. 14. Bd. Geschichte der Erziehung der bayerischen Wittelsbacher von den frühesten Zeiten bis 1750, v. F. Schmidt. Berlin: Hofmann. 15 M.
MÜLLER-GUTTENBRUNN, A. Im Jahrhundert Grillparzers. Wien: Kiehn. 4 M.
SEARHIM, E. u. A. Aus der knrlandschen Vergangenheit. Stuttgart: Cotta. 6 M.
SIEMENS, W. v. Lebenserinnerungen. Berlin: Springer. 5 M.
SPÜLLER, Eug. L'évolution politique et sociale de l'église. Paris: Alcan. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- FEHMANN, J. Beiträge zur Geschichte der Bibel. exegese. 1. Hft. Des Gregorius Abulfarag, gen. Ba-Hebrus, Scholien zum Buche Daniel. Brunn: Epstein. 2 M.
KRAUSE, K. Ch. F. Zur Religionsphilosophie u. speculativen Theologie. Hrg. v. P. Hohlfeld u. A. Wünsche. Leipzig: Schulze. 3 M. 50 Pf.
LAGARDE, P. de. Bibliotheca syriaca a P. de L. collectae, quae ad philologiam pertinent. 50 M. Psalterii graeci quinquagena prima, a P. de L. in usum scholarum edita. 5 M. Göttingen: Dieterich.

HISTORY.

- BRAUN, S. Naumburger Annalen v. J. 799 bis 1613. Hrg. v. Küster. Naumburg: Sieling. 3 M. 50 Pf.
DREFFEL, A. v. Die Sendung d. Cardinal Sfondrato an den Hof Karls V. 1547-1548. 1. Th. München: Franz. 2 M. 20 Pf.
TROSKA, F. Geschichte der Stadt Leobschütz. Leobschütz: Schnurpfel. 6 M. 70 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- NOLL, F. Ueb. heterogene Induktion. Versuch e. Beitrags zur Kenntnis der Reizerscheinungen der Pflanzen. Leipzig: Engelmann. 3 M.
REYER, E. Geologische u. geographische Experimente. 2. Hft. Vulkanische u. Massen-Eruptionen. Leipzig: Engelmann. 1 M. 50 Pf.
ROULE, Louis. L'embryologie générale. Paris: Reinwald. 5 fr.

PHILOLOGY, CLASSICAL ARCHAEOLOGY, ETC.

- BEITBAROZ zur Assyriologie u. vergleichenden semitischen Sprachwissenschaft, hrg. v. F. Delitzsch u. P. Haupt. 2. Bd. 2. Hft. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 20 M.
BIBLIOTHEK, assyriologische, hrg. v. F. Delitzsch u. P. Haupt. XI. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 30 M.
BULL, H. Die Silene in der archaischen Kunst der Griechen. München: Ackermann. 1 M. 80 Pf.
LEHMANN, C. A. De Ciceronis ad Atticum epistulis recensendis et emendandis. Berlin: Weidmann. 6 M.

PICKARD, J. Der Standort der Schauspieler u. d. Choral in griechischen Theater d. 5. Jahrh. München: Ackermann. 1 M.

SCHLUETER, W. Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der alt-eichischen Sprache. 1. Thl. Die schwache Declination in der Sprache d. Heland u. der kleineren as. Denkmäler. Göttingen: Peppmüller. 6 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"W. B. SCOTT'S AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL NOTES."

Rudgwick, Sussex: Dec. 12, 1892.

The ground covered by William Bell Scott's book is so wide, and the statements I felt compelled to challenge are at once so delicate, and so impossible either of direct proof or of direct disproof, that a discussion of the issues between Mr. Minto and myself would be out of the question in the columns of a public paper.

All I ask the reader to do is to consider Scott's remarks upon Mr. Ruskin and Mr. Ruskin's relations to the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood; to consider Scott's remarks upon Mr. Swinburne in relation to that gentleman's contradictions; to consider Scott's remarks upon Dr. Haake, in relation to the latter's own Rossetti-record, recently published, which offers so notable a contrast to that of Scott; to consider all these matters in connexion with my review in the ACADEMY (December 3), and with Mr. Minto's letter in answer to it, in last week's number; and then draw his own conclusions as to the value as a document of the Autobiographical Notes.

With Mr. Scott I had no quarrel, and had cause for none. With Mr. Minto I have no quarrel, and have cause for none. The question is one of evidence.

WILLIAM SHARP.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO PETER.

Bodleian Library, Oxford: Dec. 11, 1892.

Taking Mr. Armitage Robinson's very careful text as the present standard one, I offer the following observations on it and on his accompanying lecture.

P. 83, 2.—οὐδ' εἰς. Οὐδὲ is not elided before Ἡρώδης in the same line, nor does our fragment elide anything except the prepositions ἐπὶ, ἀπὸ, and ὡς. The οὐδὲ of the French text may represent an earlier οὐδ' εἰς—an itacism for οὐδὲ εἰς. I strongly suspect, however, that the early copies had οὐδ' εἰς, and that a copyist's eye has slipped.

P. 83, 2, 3.—καὶ βουληθέντων ἰψασθαι ἀέστη Πειλάτος. The MS. has a gap after καὶ, which the French editor fills with [αὐτῶν]. Read quite certainly καὶ οὐ, &c.

P. 83, 13, 14.—τῆς ἐορτῆς αὐτῶν. I strongly suspect this to be a mere gloss, incorporated by a copyist's error.

P. 84, 17.—The εἶδε of the French text may stand—"was setting" (see Veitch's Greek Verbs).

P. 84, 17, 18.—γράφεται—πεφανεύμενος. Doubtless a mere marginal note, as the absence of γράφεται indicates. The writer of the Gospel had already stated the fact.

P. 84, 24.—αὐτῆς ὥρας. Surely there should be a τῆς either before or after αὐτῆς?

P. 85, 3, 4.—ἐπειδὴ θεασάμενος ἦν ὕπα ἀγαθὸ ἐποίησεν. But has not the writer of the Gospel already told us that Pilate had begged the body from Herod for Joseph?

Surely these words are a marginal note on the malefactor's speech—ὡνείδιζεν αὐτοὺς λέγων Ἡμεῖς δια τὰ κακὰ ἃ ἐποίησαμεν οὕτω πεπνυμένοι· οὗτος δὲ σωτὴρ γενόμενος τῶν ἀνθρώπων, &c. The early copies were transcribed in columns with a space between, on which anyone wrote what notes he liked; and, of course, anything so written might be taken to refer either to the words opposite it in the left-hand column, or to those opposite it in the right-hand column. In the case before us the words were surely written to explain why (in the left-hand column) the malefactor interfered, and called Jesus a saviour of men. The annotator supposed that he must have been a witness of the good deeds of Jesus; and in stating this supposition he has imitated the phraseology of the speech itself. But a subsequent copyist took the words as an addition to the right-hand column, and inserted them there.

In Mr. Robinson's text I count 747 letters between p. 84, 10, αὐτῶν, and p. 85, 1, λαβὼν (excluding the gloss γράφεται—πεφανεύμενος). These ought to represent the length of our column less one line. Of course, uncial MSS., whether vellum or papyrus, vary in the space between the columns, in the number of lines in a column, in the length of the lines, and in the number of letters in a line; but anyone who will look at the Bodleian papyrus of Iliad II., and count the letters in a column, will see that my hypothesis is as technically possible as logically plausible.

P. 85, 19, 20.—ὀμῶτε ὅτι πόσον δίκαιός ἐστιν. Unconstruable? ὀμῶτε is a gloss on the very unusual πόσον. We might accentuate ποσόν, and render "that he is in some degree righteous"; but that would be intolerable.

P. 87, 22, 23.—τίς δὲ ἀποκρίσει ἡμῖν καὶ τὸν λίθον. I doubt the καὶ; there was nothing else to roll away.

P. 88, 4.—ἴδετε. There is no need to change ἴδετε (see Monlton's Winer's N.T. Grammar, ed. 1877, p. 87, note 3).

P. 88, 5.—ὅτι οὐκ ἐστιν. Again unconstruable; and Mr. Robinson suggests adding ὅτι. Read either δ. δ. ἐνέστη or δ. οὐκ ἐστιν ἐκεῖ. It is singular that ἐκεῖ might be dispensed with in the next line; but I don't see how to account for any transposition. Was some reviser of the text offended by the close sequence of ἐκείνου in 3, ἐκεῖ in 5, and ἐκεῖ in 6, and did he consequently cancel ἐκεῖ in 5, without seeing that he was injuring the sense?

A little point of construing also occurs to me: ἐθάπτονται, in p. 83, 11, is not "we should have buried"—which would have been ἐθάψαμεν ἂν—but "we were going to bury."

And now a word as to the cry from the cross, "My power, my power, thou hast (or, hast thou) forsaken me" (Ἡ δύναμις μου, ἡ δύναμις, κατέλειψάς με). Mr. Robinson says:

"The power," then, so often emphasised in S. Luke's Gospel in connexion with the person of our Lord, is here, by a strange perversion of our Lord's quotation from Ps. xxii. 1, described as forsaking Him; the Divine Christ is 'taken up,' the Human Christ remains upon the Cross. Εἰ, Eli, is rendered as 'My power, My power.' We are thus confirmed in the belief that this was the Gospel, as Serapion tells us, of the Docetæ."

Is this quite just to Doketists? The words of Jesus were spoken in Hebrew or Aramaic or a mixture of both; and, according to the greater number of early authorities, the form used in the First Gospel is Eli (not Eloi, which has the weight of authority in the Second Gospel). Mr. Robinson himself tells us that Justin, in interpreting "Israel," says that ἡλ means δύναμις, that Aquila rendered the words "my strong one," and that Eusebius says they mean "my strength." These three men were not Doketists; and why should a Dokesist be charged with "a strange perversion" in rendering el into Greek as Justin and Eusebius rendered it? And surely, if a Dokesist wanted to make out that the divine Christ left the body of the man Jesus before the death of the latter, the one thing he would naturally do would be to cleave to the canonical translation, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me," instead of altering "God" to a word which might mean merely physical strength. Note, moreover, that it is not the δύναμις (which had already forsaken the Κύριος) that ἀνελήφθη "was taken up," but the Κύριος himself.

If Mr. Robinson does not know of the instance, I may mention that the Syriac Doctrine of Addaeus the Apostle, a work probably not later than the third century, also contains a mention of the cry of woe (p. 18 of Wright's translation in the "Ante-Nicene Library").

Finally, I should like to give my own idea of what happened to Serapion. When he went to Rhossus, he probably prohibited the use of unauthorised scriptures. A deputation apparently came to him in great depression because this order stopped the use of their favourite Gospel according to Peter. He supposed they were all orthodox; and, without going through the Gospel, said, "If this is all that seems (τὸ δοκοῦν) to give you discouragement (ὁὖν παρέχειν μικροψυχίαν), let it be read." He afterwards found out that their mind began to lurk in a certain heresy in consequence of what he had said, and so he was going to return speedily. Meanwhile he says they will receive from him a written exposition of the self-contradictions of Marcion—who was a Dokesist—and that he has borrowed a copy of the Gospel of Peter from some of the later Doketists, the sect who first used it, and found that it was mostly orthodox, but that there were Dokesist additions.

The words—Νῦν δὲ μαθὼν ὅτι αἰρέσει τινὶ δ' τοῦς αὐτῶν ἐνεφάλευεν ἐκ τῶν λεχθέντων μοι are rendered by Mr. Robinson as if the last four words belonged to μαθὼν. "But now that I have learned from information given me that their mind was lurking in some hole of heresy." He may be right; but, if so, Serapion's order of words is very unbusiness-like. I, on the other hand, suggest that Serapion's unhappy use of the word δοκοῦν in his answer to the deputation, coupled with the permission to use the Gospel, produced an impression that he was hinting approval of Doketism.

The entire passage is treated fully in my Gospel according to the Hebrews (pp. 87-90 and 115-16), where I proposed for Μαρκίαν καὶ to substitute Μαρκίαν ὡς καὶ. This conjecture is now shown, from Mr. Robinson's lecture, to be confirmed by the Armenian version.

EDWARD W. B. NICHOLSON.

"COUVADE."—THE GENESIS OF A MODERN MYTH.

The Scriptorium, Oxford: Dec. 14, 1892.

In my communication of November 10, I shewed that, at the time when English anthropologists assumed the name couvade for a group of customs reported to exist among various savages, the supposed evidence on which it was alleged that the "man-childbed" had come down to the present day in the Pyrenean region, and was known in Bearnese as la couvade, was no evidence at all, but a crambe of assertions. In my first letter I had stated that couvade was not a Bearnese word—that, in fact, the expression faire la couvade is no more Bearnese than it is Latin or English, but simply obsolete French; and in my second I discussed the use of the seventeenth century French phrase by Rochefort.

I had expected that Dr. Tyler, if he thought it worth his while to say any more on the subject, would do one of two things: either that he would adduce some fresh and actual evidence to show that, notwithstanding the worthlessness of that formerly alleged, the couvade, thing and name, had actually existed after all in the Pyrenean country, and that therefore the term was not so much a misnomer as it seemed; or that he would, in true scientific spirit, admit that there had been a mistake, or long chain of mistakes, and that the name was founded in error. He might still have pleaded that it had been generally accepted, and could not now be well disturbed; that, in one aspect, "language is the record of human error," and that terms of physical science in particular are apt to record only the guesses or mistakes of their first users, which fuller knowledge often completely falsifies. He might have pleaded that from the "firmament" of the first chapter of Genesis, or rather from the στερέωμα of the Septuagint which it renders, down to Lavoisier's "oxygen," and to names much later than "oxygen," language is full of such names given under misconception and error, and that couvade was only one more of them. And I should willingly shake hands with him over such a plea, on the understanding that, when scientists henceforth use couvade, they should use it simply as a name, and should not build theories upon its supposed etymology, as, for example, to explain it as meaning "hatching," and to argue thence that some kind of "hatching" by the father is thereby proved or implied. So we may call the last railway accident a disaster; but if anyone were to assume from this that a sinister star actually caused the collision, and discussed the subject in that light before the Astronomical Society, it would be time for the etymologist to step in and point out that this was modern mythology, a repetition of the process in which Prof. Max Müller has seen the origin of ancient myths.

But "the unexpected always happens": Dr. Tylor has taken neither of these courses. He has alleged no fresh evidence in room of the supposed evidence which has now disappeared; yet he does not heartily accept the conclusion. He lets the question itself go against him by default, and attacks me on two entirely irrelevant matters. First, he alleges that I have misrepresented two recent authors whom I incidentally quoted after my summing up, and who have nothing in the world to do with the chain of "authorities" from whom Dr. Tylor's application of couvade was taken; and, secondly, he tries to shift the issue into a discussion of my duties as an editor of the New English Dictionary. Into this impertinency I certainly will not follow him. If he likes to appeal to "a far wider public" on that matter, it must be done as a substantive motion, and not as an amendment to burk the discussion of couvade, or to disguise the result of that discussion. I will only say that the way in which I may please to spend the scanty leisure which is left to me after giving sixty hours a week to the Dictionary is entirely a matter for myself. If I choose to spend some of it in probing modern myths, which I come across in the course of my work, it is quite as legitimate a recreation as playing golf or teaching the history of religion to the benighted Christians of Aberdeen.

As to the charge that I have misunderstood, and so misused, the words of Bladé and Vinson, if I had done so, it would not in the least affect the question at issue. These are not part of the "authorities" on whom Dr. Tylor's statements were founded; they are investigators like myself, who have written since and formed conclusions upon the evidence before them. But I have neither misunderstood nor misused them. M. Bladé's words imposture historique referred to the statements of Chaho and his followers; and I have shown that Chaho was the chief authority of Francisque Michel, and Michel of Dr. Tylor. Dr. Tylor, in order to convict me of error, now tries to separate the Basque couvade from the Béarnese couvade! I would only refer him, for his answer, to his own treatment of the subject in Early History of Mankind (p. 205). If the phrase imposture historique might be applied to the trunk of the myth tree, surely it may include all the branches. But the fun is, that I referred to M. Bladé's phrase, not to endorse it, but to disavow it, and to state my own opinion that nobody in the historical chain, not even Chaho himself, was a conscious impostor!

As to the charge that I have misrepresented Vinson, if I did not know that Vinson's book had been, in consequence of my asking for it, procured for the Taylorian Library, and eagerly borrowed by Dr. Tylor, I should have supposed that he was writing upon hearsay. The fragment of a sentence quoted by him is not Vinson's conclusion, but one of the elements which he discusses; he actually proceeds to inquire for more than a page as to the sources of the authors who have attributed the custom to the Béarnese, and traces it up, as I have already shown, to Colomès in the seventeenth century, when the thing was already a matter of antrefois. As to the utter want of any evidence of the recent existence of the custom "dans le Béarn ou le pays Basque," Vinson gives an account of the communication made to the Société Scientifique of Pau in 1874 by M. Piche, "ancien conseiller de préfecture des Basses Pyrénées," proposing to that Society to investigate whether this strange custom had ever existed in Béarn or the Basque country, and if so whether any traces of it still remained. For this purpose M. Piche formulated a number of questions for circulation through the district. Vinson says that, "notwithstanding the publicity given to these questions by the journals of the department (i.e., Basses Pyrénées, which comprises Béarn and the French Basque country), no answer had up to the date of his book been received. The fact was, that so long as stray authors had referred to the "man-childhood" as a Béarnese custom of autrefois, or as a thing still practised in obscure and far-off corners of Biscay, the scientific men on the spot had paid no attention to them. But when, through the works of Francisque Michel, Dr. Tylor, and others, it began to be blazed throughout Europe that this strange custom still existed among them, they, or some of them (for M. V. Lespy, the secretary, pooh-poohed the myth), thought it was time to investigate. And the results up to the time of Prof. Vinson's book were nil, while he himself gave it as his personal experience that "il n'a jamais pu rencontrer un cas véritable de couvade, bien que certains chercheurs maladroits et crédules aient été à ce propos, sous ses yeux, l'objet de mystifications plaisantes."

With one of these mystifications I conclude. After Prof. Vinson's essay was published there appeared at length, in the Bulletin of the Société for 1877-8 (vol. vii., p. 74), an official attestation, by M. Jacques Lafourcade, Maire de Labastide-Clairence, of the practice of the couvade in a family at Ayherre, attested also by P. Londaits, Maire d'Ayherre. This seemed to be conclusive: one genuine case of the couvade had at last been discovered. But the incident has a sequel, which has been communicated to me by a well-known contributor to the ACADEMY, Mr. Wentworth Webster, of Sare, Basses Pyrénées, and which I have his permission to publish here, and will give in his own words:—

"A month or two ago, paying a visit to M. L'Abbé Haristoy, Curé de Ciboure, near St. Jean de Luz, I happened to refer to this circumstance. The abbé told me that he was formerly living at Labastide, that he knew all the parties to both attestations, that the whole thing was a farce, and was never intended originally to be taken seriously: that once, when Mme. L. was confined, M. L. was unwell; that the M. Etcheopar, Instituteur, mentioned in the attestation, happened to visit them, and finding M. L. in bed, and his wife getting up, said in a joke that it was a case of la couvade. M. and Mme. L. had never before heard of such a custom; but the two Maires took up the joke and made a formal attestation of the fact, without, at the time, wishing or meaning it to be taken as a scientific fact. Someone, however, sent it to Pau, and so it got into print. I urged M. Haristoy to communicate this statement to one of the Sociétés of which he is a member, or to reprint it in one of the *Revue*s; he has promised to do so."

Strabo's statements as to the physical hardness of the Iberian, Celtic, Thracian, and other women, Mr. Wentworth Webster says, are still often verified in those regions. He has himself seen, in the case of one of his neighbours at St. Jean de Luz, a Spanish woman, who had been confined in the morning, out of doors at five in the afternoon; and he supposes she got her husband his supper as usual, and so "attended to him." Probably, if the husband were indisposed, or tired, or lazy, and in bed, the baby might even have been put in beside him. It has been whispered to me that some of the "mystifications plaisantes" referred to by Prof. Vinson consist of cases in which the wife was thus up and about, while her lord and master went to bed and took the baby, and (for a consideration of course) thus received the visits of "chercheurs maladroits et crédules," or as we sometimes say, "intelligent foreigners." If the Pyrenean region became a showground, this might even become an important source of income to the natives; before that happens, it would be desirable that the Anthropological Institute should appoint a commission to investigate the whole matter historically and locally.

J. A. H. MURRAY.

JEWISH AND INDIAN PARALLELS.

Nervi, Genoa: Dec. 9, 1892.

The parable of the Prodigal Son seems to imply that, in the Jewish law, as in the Hindú law of all schools save the Gauriya, a son had a right to require from his father a partition of the family property.

The account of the man blind from his birth who was given sight seems to imply a belief analogous to that entertained by Hindús, as the ground of certain disabilities in their law, that congenital defects were the punishment of antecedent offences.

Can Dr. Neubauer, Dr. Gaster, or any other of your correspondents tell me if, in the Hebrew documents before our era, there is any trace of the right of a son to compel a partition by his father, or of the doctrine of successive births? If this doctrine and that right were unknown to the early Jews, it would be interesting to consider how far the Buddhist missions to the West may have introduced them.

J. P. K.

DANTE'S "GUIZZANTE."

University of Ghent, Belgium: Dec. 10, 1892.

In Mr. Paget Toynbee's interesting letter on Dante's "Guizzante," I find as the first objection to identifying that place with Cadsand: "Cadsand is not, and never has been, within the boundaries of Flanders."

Let me state that this is an error in mediaeval geography. As a matter of fact, Cadsand was situated in an island belonging to the county of Flanders, in the mouth of the river Scheldt, at the very time when Dante was writing. This situation remained the same till the beginning of the seventeenth century, when Maurice of Nassau conquered it from the King of Spain, Count of Flanders, and joined Cadsand to Sealand with the country around it, called from that time Staats-Vlaanderen—i.e., the Flanders belonging to the States of the Dutch Republic, or Zeeuwisch-Vlaanderen—i.e., the Flanders joined to Sealand (see G. Mees' Historische Atlas van Noord-Nederland).

PAUL FREDERICQ.

"KING SOLOMON'S WIVES."

St. Andrews: Dec. 8, 1892.

May I protest against a habit of second-hand booksellers, who constantly ascribe to me a work called King Solomon's Wives (1887)? The origin of the mistake is innocent; but I have denied the charge before, and when a bookseller advertises a copy as "Presentation copy from the author," adding my name, he seems impudent as well as ignorant.

A. LANG.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Dec. 18, 4 p.m. Sunday Lecture: "The London Water Supply—A Scientific Answer to a Popular Question," by Dr. Percy F. Frankland.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Punishment," by Mr. R. G. Tatton.
MONDAY, Dec. 19, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Towers and Steeples," illustrated, by Mr. Arnold Mitchell.
7.30 p.m. Bibliographical: "The Present Condition of English Bibliography and Suggestions for the Future," by Mr. H. B. Wheatley.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Measurement of Space, Time, and Matter," by Prof. A. G. Greenhill.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Expedition up the Juba River, through Somali Land," by Capt. G. F. Dundas.

TUESDAY, Dec. 20, 7.45 p.m. Statistical: "Distribution and Movement of the Population in India," by Mr. J. A. Balcan.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "Gas Power for Electric Lighting," by Mr. J. Emerson Dowson.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "The Remains of some Gigantic Land Tortoises and of Diplodocus recently discovered in Mauritius," by Dr. Hans Gadow; "Nine New Species of Amphipoda from the Tropical Atlantic," by the Rev. T. H. R. Stebbing; "Some New Species of Worms of the Family Acanthodrilidae and of the Genus Perionyx and other Genera," by Mr. F. E. Bedford.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 21, 7 p.m. Meteorological: "Moving Anticyclones in the Southern Hemisphere," by Mr. H. C. Russell; "The Tracks of Ocean Wind Systems in Transit over Australasia," by Capt. M. W. C. Hepworth; "A New Instrument for Cloud Measurements," by Dr. Nils Ekholm; "Rainfall of Nottinghamshire, 1861-90," by Mr. Henry Mellish.

8 p.m. Geological: "A Sauropodous Dinosaurian Vertebra from the Wealden of Hastings," by Mr. R. Lydekker; "Some Additional remains of Cestraceae and other Fish in the Green Gritty Marls, immediately overlying the Red Marls of the Upper Keuper in Warwickshire," by the Rev. P. B. Brodie; "Calamostachys Hinneyana, Schimp," by Mr. Thomas Hick; "Some Pennsylvanian Calamites," by Mr. W. S. Gresley; "Scandinavian Boulders at Cromer," by Herr Victor Madsen.

8 p.m. Microscopical: "New Species of Rotifera," by Mr. J. Hood; "The Chromatic Curves of Microscope Lenses," by Mr. E. M. Nelson.

SCIENCE.

A BOOK ABOUT THE BEAVER.

Castorologia; or, the History and Traditions of the Canadian Beaver. By Horace T. Martin. An Exhaustive Monograph popularly Written and fully Illustrated. (Stanford.)

THE title of Mr. Martin's work is to a certain extent a misnomer. It is admirably illustrated, and pleasantly written; but it is by no means "exhaustive." Even Mr. Morgan's much more comprehensive volume cannot justly claim that distinction. It does not even say all that might be said regarding the beaver in Eastern Canada, while the Further West is admittedly still represented in the literature of castorology solely by a paper communicated to the Linnean Society by Mr. Green and the reviewer some four and twenty years ago. Indeed, from the absence of any personal allusions in Mr. Martin's treatise, it is difficult to gather whether the author has anything like a familiar acquaintance with the beaver in a state of nature. In the more settled parts of the Dominion this would not be easy to obtain. Even at the time when the reviewer roved the wilds of the New World the beaver—except in the interior of Vancouver Island, then untrodden by any one, and some of the more remote parts of the equally untracked mainland—was a scarce animal, though again, owing to the low price of its fur, beginning to increase in numbers. When I first traversed districts hunted of old by the trappers, beaver dams, old beaver "lodges," and beaver meadows were almost the only "signs" of this once plentiful denizen of the Western waters. Returning a few years later, I was amazed at finding many of these spots swarming with beavers. In crossing from Fort Rupert to Koskeemo Sound in the spring of 1866 I could have shot a score of them; and, when encamped by the shores of the lake, which I named after Gilbert Sproat, the best of all Indian students, it was difficult to sleep for the number which slapped the water with their flat tails at night, apparently attracted by the flare of the unwanted camp-fire. But these were the days of gold-digging, and with beaver at five shillings per pound, the animal, which in the early days of North America was almost the sole source of revenue, was permitted a brief holiday, which is now, with the increased price of its pelt, at an end. The Castor canadensis is still more plentiful than the bison; but in many of the localities where it was growing numerous in the years when America was in the midst of war, when railways across the continent were the dreams of sanguine men, and the Pacific a far-away sea, it must now be either extinct or once more on the wane.

If, however, Mr. Martin's monograph is not quite the last word on the natural history of the beaver, it is a welcome addition to our knowledge of the part it has played in the chronicles of the colony which used to be known as Nouvelle France—and elsewhere; for he does not limit himself to Canada. Mythology and folklore, fossil beavers, and the beaver in Europe—Lord Bute's colony included—the beaver in heraldry, and in taxidermy (where justice is seldom done to it) the beaver in medicine and the arts, and the more important American rodents allied to it—are all discussed, in addition to the anatomy, geographical distribution, and life-history of the animal. As the book contains only 238 pages, some of these chapters are very brief; and one or two of them might, with the facsimile title-pages of old treatises on Castoreum, have been usefully spared, in favour of a much required bibliography of the beaver, an index, and a table of contents.

However, accepting Mr. Martin's book as Mr. Martin has written it, no one capable of forming an instructed opinion can deny it the merit of being a useful contribution to a class of works, of which the number is not embarrassing. So far as the information goes, it is fairly accurate; and the best excuse for the author not going as far as we should have liked may be that he might have gone further than the facts at his disposal warranted. A few notes on some of the chapters are all that our space can find room for. Mr. Martin (p. 58) very justly points out the leading part which the beaver played in the exploration and settlement of the West. It was in pursuit of it that Mackenzie and Fraser, Astor's fur traders, and the pioneers of the North-West and Hudson's Bay Companies penetrated to the Pacific and to the confines of the Arctic Ocean. On Peace River the late Mr. Yale—who built Dunvegan Fort, and whose name lives in the town of Yale—told me that sixty or seventy years ago the price of a musket there was Rocky Mountain sables, worth in London at least £3 a piece, piled up on either side of the weapon placed butt downwards until they were level with the muzzle. For a six-shilling blanket the tariff in beavers was thirteen of the best quality and twenty of a less excellent description—beaver being at that time saleable for about 32s. per lb.—a good beaver skin weighing from one to one and a half pound. Mr. Martin very properly dismisses many of the old fables concerning the beaver, such as the neatly plastered houses and so forth—a myth which it is difficult to explain, unless on the supposition that the animal has in the course of two centuries altered its habits: for from the Atlantic to the Pacific the "house" looks like nothing so much as a bundle of sticks, and might be passed for such by an inexperienced traveller. As a rule, the author is perfectly true in his strictures on the older writers. But I think he is at fault in pinning his faith so implicitly on Samuel Hearne's account. At best this referred solely to the colder portions of Eastern and Northern Canada. In the Far West—on the Pacific coast, for instance, where the streams and lakes frequented by the animal are seldom frozen over during winter—the beaver's habits assuredly vary from those described by Hearne, Richardson, and McKenzie (Edinburgh New Philosophical Journal, vol. xi. pp. 299—302), a valuable paper with which Mr. Martin does not seem to be acquainted. I have put on record (Journ. Linnean Society—Zoology, vol. x.) many observations in direct opposition to those on which the latest historians of the Castor so undeservedly lean. It is, for example, erroneous to affirm (p. 224) that the beaver has only one entrance to its house, or that it is all on one floor; and I must say that I could never quite realise the "canal" which Mr. Morgan has described. The "kitchens" generally number from three to four—most frequently four—but occasionally there are as many as eight, and in one instance, mentioned in my notes, amounted to ten. Sometimes the beaver does not build a house, but lives in a hole or "wash"—a fact which, though evidently unknown to Mr. Martin, confirms his suggestion that its "lodge" is simply a development of the musquash burrow. Mr. Martin (p. 72) accepts Captain Bonneville's dictum that the beaver lays in a store of sticks for winter food. At Fort Macleod I was assured by the late Chief Factor John Tod, one of the oldest and most intelligent of Hudson's Bay officers, that it secures a store of provisions at a convenient distance from its abode. But in Vancouver Island, where there is seldom any severe or long continued frost, the beaver does not accumulate any such hoard, and assuredly does not stack logs in the manner described by Bonneville. My experience is that where they do not become torpid—as they do by the side of waters frozen over for any length of time—they decline to eat bark out of which the sap has passed, though they will sometimes—so the trappers say—gnaw the wood to "keep their teeth down." However, it is impossible to discuss all of these points, many of which Mr. Martin pronounces upon with imperfect knowledge and too much confidence in the writers from whom he compiles so large a portion of his book. Nor can I agree with him as to the toothsome qualities of "beaver meat." A half-starved traveller will stomach anything. Yet after subsisting for nearly a fortnight on the many beavers whom we shot as they repaired their injured dams, I cannot conjure up any of those pleasures of palate over which Mr. Martin, smacking his lips (with second-hand gusto), would fain be so enthusiastic. As for the vaunted beaver tail, I may be permitted to quote the verdict of a certain Pro-Consul, famous for his gastronomic tastes, to whom I introduced this dainty: "The man who, in cold blood, of his own free will, in any strait short of the extremity of famine, could deliberately eat that thing a second time, would relish a mess of whipcord stewed in train oil!" Even the old trappers, with digestions capable of astounding feats, regarded the comrade who could eat two beaver's tails as a trencherman too powerful to be trusted in camp when the larder was running low.

Still, if Mr. Martin's volume is not without faults of omission and commission, it is not the less worthy of study, though we confess a tendency to the quotation of minor poets does not improve the literary flavour of his pages. Also, the fact of Sir John Richardson, Sir Richard Owen, and Sir William Flower being invariably quoted without the knightly prefix, might lead a casual reader to suppose either that the Canadian naturalist is inclined to "bandy words with his sovereign," or that his materials have been collected from very old editions of the works quoted.

ROBERT BROWN.

A MODERN GREEK READING-BOOK.

Neohellenica. By Prof. Constantinides. (Macmillan.)

THIS book is intended to serve at once as a help to the acquisition of the modern Greek language, and as an introduction to modern Greek literature. It is a common and not unfair complaint against the ordinary reading-books which are compiled for beginners, and for persons who need practice in a language, that they are either too difficult or else uninteresting. Both these faults have been avoided in the present volume. The plan which the author has pursued is an original one. Two scholars—the one a Greek called Androcles, the other an Englishman of the name of Wilson, who is supposed to be professor of Greek at Cambridge—discover that they are respectively intending to make a journey to Greece, and agree to travel together; and the book is a record of their conversations, which are here given both in Greek and in English, the two languages being introduced throughout in opposite columns of the same page. The subjects which they discuss are ordinary travellers' topics—the railway, the steamer, hotels, and vehicles, and the objects which they pass on the way. These form the web, so to speak, of the dialogue; but into this are worked numerous other topics, relating mainly to Greece, the Greek people, and the Greek language, which serve a variety of purposes, since they furnish information about the country and the men who have contributed most to its present prosperity and intellectual advancement, together with specimens of Greek as it has been spoken and written in different places and at different periods, and extracts from Greek writers of all ages from the Christian era down to the present century. The last of these subjects—which is introduced in the form of extracts from the Greek traveller's note-book, or from works which he is carrying with him—is methodically treated; for the two companions, while they are in the train or the steamboat, discuss the products of post-classical and modern Greek literature, or specimens of them, seriatim, and the Greek undertakes to initiate his fellow-traveller into their details. The route by which they journey is from London by the Mont Cenis to Brindisi, with halts at some of the most important cities, such as Florence, Rome, and Naples; and from Brindisi by way of Corfu and Patras to Athens. The places passed on the way suggest a variety of interesting themes, but all these are brought round in the end to the question of Greece. Thus the approach to Florence recalls the assistance rendered to the revival of letters by the Greek refugees who settled in that city, both before and after the taking of Constantinople. In connexion with the same place, Dante is mentioned, and specimens of the Divina Commedia are given in Musurus Pasha's Modern Greek translation. In passing through Southern Italy on the way to Brindisi, which district during part of the Middle Ages contained a large number of Greek colonists, an account is furnished of the descendants of those who still occupy parts of the country and speak a peculiar dialect of Greek; and specimens of their songs and proverbs are introduced, with translations. The subject of proverbs suggests a further comparison of such adages as correspond in modern Greek and English; and from these we pass on to Greek riddles, both ancient and modern. Again, when Greek waters are reached, the history of the Armatoles and Klephts is started; and the stirring and pathetic tales of the fall of the fortress of Sulis and the cession of the town of Parga to Ali Pasha are told, and are illustrated by native ballads composed on those subjects. Nor is Byron neglected, and his expedition to Greece and death at Mesolonghi. These points, then, and others of a similar character, form one thread in the discussions or narratives—as the case may be—that are here recorded; and another is furnished, as we have already said, by the history of the literature, the account of which is resumed or dropped according as convenience suggests, and is never allowed to become wearisome or pedantic, but still forms a continuous study. In this way, when the travellers arrive at Athens, the Cambridge professor is supposed to have greatly improved both his acquaintance with the modern Greek language and his knowledge of the mediæval and modern literature of Greece; and we may hope that the same will be the case with Prof. Constantinides' readers, when they reach the end of his volume. Certainly they will not fail to be impressed with the adaptability of the Greek tongue, and the great variety of ideas and subjects which can be expressed in it. At the same time, it cannot be denied that the diction here employed is somewhat above the level of what is commonly in use for conversational purposes among ordinary people in Greece. The author, however, has made considerable concessions in this matter, and does not aim at quite as high a classical standard as some reformers of the language do. He excludes the infinitive and the future, and uses the dative only in the case of pronouns, and in a few phrases. He employs μέ for "with," ὕστερον ἀπὸ for "after," and tolerates both τάρα and ῥῶν, both κάνουν and κάνουσι. Nor need any one quarrel with him if here and there his practice seems a little arbitrary: if ψωμί and κρασί are regularly used for "bread" and "wine," but νερό never for "water"; or if we find πράντα, σαράντα, and ἑξῆς by the side of πενήκοντα, ξήκοντα and ἐννῆκοντα. In conclusion, a word of praise must be accorded to the English translation, which is natural and idiomatic, and not unfrequently extremely felicitous.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE FRENCH WORD "LICORNE."

Sydenham Hill: Dec. 2, 1892.

Diez, Scheler, and Littré seem to me to have been a little too careless and much too offhand in their treatment of the derivation of this difficult word. As their remarks are very brief, and differ somewhat in detail, though the general result is the same, I will give them at full length. Diez (5th ed., 1887) says:

"Licorno und alicorno It., Pg. alicornio [also alicorne], Fr. licorne (f), einhorn; entstellt aus unicornis, Sp. unicornio u. s. v."

Scheler (3rd ed., 1888) has:

"Licorne, It., licorno (cp. lio fante), alicorno; gâté du L. unicornis, Esp. unicornio."

Littré is a little more explicit, and says:

"Portug. alicornio; Ital. alicorno, licorno; corruption du Latin unicornis, l'animal à une corne; de unus, un, une, et corne (pour le changement d'n en l, comparez orphelin). Dans plusieurs pièces du moyen âge il est question de l'unicorne."

They all agree, therefore, that licorne is a corruption of the Lat. unicornis; and Littré seems to think that the n of the older *unicorne became l, and that then the u, after first becoming a perhaps (cf. alicorno), dropped. Scheler's opinion was very likely the same; but, from his quoting the Ital. lio fante, he seems to have been of opinion that in Italian there was some corruption with the word lione = lion; and so far he is right, as I shall show.

But what I contest is, not the change of the n into l, for this is, of course, possible, but the change of the initial u into a, or its dropping altogether. I take the word to be Italian (why will be seen hereafter), and it is quite true that the Italians have been fond of cutting off an initial unaccented vowel. Thus we have notomia = anatomia, piscopo (Petrocchi) = episcopo, micidio = omicidio; but I cannot remember any case in which an initial u (a long full vowel in Italian) has either become a or has been cut off. Besides which, there are a number of other words in Italian beginning with uni, and in no one of them has, so far as I know, the uni been interfered with. In English, some people suppress it sometimes in university, when they substitute the hideous "varsity," but in our case there is no question of its entire suppression. I have been led to the conclusion, therefore, that in licorne the li has nothing whatever to do with the uni of unicorne. But for some little time I was puzzled to find any other explanation for the li. At length the discovery of the Span. alcorno† (Dicc. Enciclop. de la Leng. Esp. Madrid, Gaspar y Roig, 1872) = "rinceronete" or rhinoceros, put me on what I conceive to be the right scent. For then I remembered that in German a rhinoceros is sometimes called a Nushorn (= nosehorn), and I set about thinking how the meaning of nose could be got out of the ali of alicornio. It was a difficult task, but just then my brain happened to be stimulated (by no means for the first time) by the jolting of a railway carriage; and it quickly occurred to me that there might be an old Italian naricornio = rhinoceros, and, on my return home, I was gratified by finding this word in Petrocchi, as the change from it to alicorno is simple. The r became an l—a very common change in Italian (see Diez Gram., 3rd ed., i. 222); and the n being looked upon as part of the article when un alicornio was pronounced, finished by dropping (cf. arancia, formerly narancia—Petrocchi, and anchina = our Nankin, and alicorno (later on licorno) was the result. Then, as lions were among the best known of wild beasts, and so had become mixed up with other animals, as in leopard, which was in Ital. lionpardo and liopardo, and as the li of licorno reminded one of lione and lio, so licorno was turned into

* Licorne, according to Littré, dates back to the fifteenth century only. Unicornio, on the other hand, is found many centuries earlier, in Fr. Michel's old French version of the Psalms (Ps. xxi., 22; A. V. xxii., 21), "et des cornes des unicornes."

† Alcornio would seem to be a misprint for alicornio, for it is found among the ali's (after aliconda), and not among the ale's, as it ought to be.

lioncorno (Florio, 1598), and liocorno,* the latter of which is (with unicorno, and perhaps more frequently) the form still used, for licorno is—I am told by an Italian lady—quite obsolete. Similarly, elefante became lionfante and lifante through the dropping of the e (Petrocchi gives lefante), and the change of the le, which was probably sometimes written li, as in Mid. Eng. (see the N. E. D.), and so recalled the li of lione.

In conclusion, I need scarcely point out why a word which originally denoted a rhinoceros came to signify a unicorn only. The two animals agree in having (as a rule) one horn only, though in the one case it is on the forehead, in the other on the nose.

F. CHANCE.

P.S.—Since writing the above, I have discovered one instance in which an initial u, and that an accented one, has been dropped. This instance is ῥῦρρα, with the diminutive forms ῥῦρρῶλα and ῥῦρρῶλα, which Petrocchi gives = ῥῦρρα (our "hoopoe"). A Tuscan lady tells me that she has heard these words, but only among the peasantry, and Petrocchi gives them below the text; so that they are probably obsolete or but little used among the educated. It seems to me not unlikely that ῥῦρρα was formed, not directly from ῥῦρρα, by the dropping of the u and the transference of the accent, but indirectly from ῥῦρρῶλα. ῥῦρρῶλα, with the accent still remaining on the initial ῥ, would have been difficult to pronounce (for, if the word is still heard in polite society, it is with a secondary accent on the second u which is lengthened); and thus it was, probably, that the initial u came to be dropped. And ῥῦρρῶλα, once adopted, would certainly be looked upon as springing from a form ῥῦρρῶλα, and so this also would come into use. At all events, this one instance of the dropping of an initial u can scarcely be held to weaken my derivation, which is essentially based upon other and weightier grounds.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

M. PHILIPPE BERGER, the Semitic scholar, has been elected a member of the Académie des Inscriptions, by 26 votes to 8, in the room of M. Renan. His competitor was M. Eugène Müntz, the historian of art.

THE December number of the Classical Review (David Nutt) opens with an article by Mr. F. G. Kenyon, in which he identifies a few more fragments of Hyperides, and also of the Second Olynthiac of Demosthenes, in a papyrus from Egypt. Mr. J. H. Kirkland, of Vanderbilt University, discusses at some length the Latin pronominal forms quoius and quoiei, and the preposition quom. Among the reviews, Prof. Sonnenschein again notices a German edition of Plautus; Prof. Nettleship gives an account of a French book on the Latinity of Gregory of Tours; and Mr. T. W. Allen of the Abbé Batiffol's second work on the Greek MSS. in the Vatican, which is connected with the Hellenisation of Southern Italy. In this number, however, archaeology has a large place. Mr. Cecil Smith summarises the tedious controversy (in the ACADEMY and elsewhere) upon the date of Aegean or Mycenaean pottery, with reference to the Egyptian evidence. His method is to state first the facts by which the theory of an early date is supported, and then to give briefly the substance of Mr. Cecil Torr's criticism on each point. Mr. Smith reserves criticism on Prof. Petrie's excavations at Tel el-Amarna, until the full evidence is published; but he adds, from a German source, wall-paintings from three Theban tombs, circa 1600 B.C. Mr. Torr himself contributes a critical review of Walter Leaf's "Companion to the Iliad." Mr. Warwick Wroth discusses Prof. Ridgway's "Origin of Metallic Currency," dealing chiefly with the question of the meaning of Greek coin-types; Miss Jane E. Harrison notices Dr. Waldstein's publication of the results of the excavation of the Heraion at Argos, reserving the prehistoric finds for a separate article; and the Rev. W. Wayte examines from the classical point of view Falkener's "Ancient Games," criticising his mode of dealing with Greek and Latin authors.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Thursday, Dec. 1.)

PROF. JENN, president, in the chair.—The president read a paper on a series of points in Soph. El. 680—763 (the description of the Pythian games), among which were the following:—(1) Verse 686. τῇ φέσει is untenable, even with any of the proposed alterations of τέρματα. Musgrave's τὰ φέσει gives the best solution. It requires us to suppose that this race was either (1) the διανλος, or (2) the δολιχος. The words in v. 684, δρόμου . . οὐ πρώτῃ κρίσει, might be claimed in favour of the δολιχος: for Paus. 6. 13 § 3 (referring to the triple victory of Polites) places the foot-races at Olympia in this order, 1. δολιχος, 2. στάδιον, 3. διανλος. The same order occurs in C. I. G. 1590, 1591 (games at Thespiae, circ. 240 B.C.), and ib. 2211 (games at Chios, circ. 100—80 B.C.). (2) 691 f. δρόμου διανλων πέτασθ' ἂν νομίσεται, | τοῦτων κ.τ.λ. Verse 691 has never been corrected in any tolerable manner. It was probably an interpolation, prompted by a general phrase in the text. Nauck brackets the words διανλων . . τοῦτων, both inclusive, sparing δρόμου. But (a) there would then have been no motive for an interpolated reference to the πέτασθον: and (b) the tone of vv. 688 f. suggests that the unrivalled ἔργα καὶ κράτη of Orestes were not confined to running, but included some feats in the other branch of the γυμνικὸν ἀγώνες, the βαρεῖα ἄθλα. Now, if v. 692 had originally begun with the word ἄθλων, that would have given an opening for the interpolation of v. 691, and the interpolation itself would account for the change of ἄθλων into τοῦτων. Omitting v. 691, we could, indeed, retain τοῦτων in 692; but the neuter pronoun would be awkwardly vague in such a context. (3) 703. For ἐν τοῦτοις ("among" these) Nauck substitutes ἐπὶ τοῦτοις ("next to" them), pronouncing ἐν impossible. The change would be plausible only if the competitors were described as ranged in line for the start. But there is no reason for supposing that the order of mention here is identical with the order presently fixed by lot (709 f.). The Homeric chariot-race (which Sophocles had in mind, as several touches show) warrants the contrary supposition; since the order in which the Homeric competitors are first enumerated (Il. 23. 288 f.) differs from that in which they are afterwards placed by lot (352 f.). (4) 709. ῥ' αὐτοῖς. The objection to ῥ' (ῥῶ) is not merely that tragedy elsewhere admits it only in lyrics, but also that, even then, it is not elided (though the elision has epic precedent). If, as Nauck thinks, the true word is ῥ', a gloss ῶ, marking the local sense, might have led to ῥῶ. ῥ' (ῥῶ) is hardly probable after στάδων δ'. (5) 743. λύων ought not to be changed (as some have proposed) to a word of the contrary sense, such as τεῖων or ἐπισχάνων. The effect of slackening the left rein too soon might be such as the poet describes: who here represents Orestes as forgetful, for once, of Nestor's precept, hitherto observed by him (720 f., Il. 23. 338 f.).—Questions of interpretation in 710, 716—719, 726 f., 731 f., 748, 752 f., were also discussed.—Dr. Postgate communicated emendations of Catullus lxiv 402 "liber ut innuptae poteretur flore naurae," read nuriclae (= nuriculae). And of Propertius ii. 32 35 "quamvis Ida Parim pastorem dicat amasse atque inter pendeas accubuisse deam." Read Rheam (or Rheo). The reference is to the fable preserved in Theocrit. 20. 40 καὶ τὸν, Πέζα, φιλεῖς τὸν Βουκόλον, Tertullian ad nat. 1, 119 "Cybele pastorem suspirat."

ELIZABETHAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, Dec. 7.)

J. A. JENKINSON, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. James Ernest Baker read a paper on "Sir Thomas Browne." The writings of Sir Thomas Browne will never appeal to the taste of "the man in the street"; neither is it to be expected that they will attract the attention of the ordinary reader. They must always prove caviare to the multitude. But to the select few, anxious to satisfy a desire of indulging in peculiar and uncommon speculations, they shall ever prove a source of infinite pleasure and exquisite satisfaction. To such, Sir Thomas Browne will serve as the golden key which shall open the palace of literary enjoyment and delight; that is to say, reverent enjoyment of composing and philosophical reflections on the most solemn and momentous facts of human existence, and unending delight in out-of-the-way learning pertaining to astrology, alchemy, and other unusual objects of interest. And your humourist, too, if he possesses the essential understanding, may glean from his pages a bountiful harvest of wit. For the whimsical absurdities of Sir Thomas Browne are many and extraordinary. Yet the manifestation of the fruition of the humourist will not display itself in the noisy laugh, but in the more endurable smile which shall ripple frequently across his face. Sir Thomas Browne seems to have indulged in the art of writing in order that he might learnedly expatiate on the natural history of the griffin and salamander, the basilisk and the amphibiaena, and discuss with profound solemnity the most obsolete and impenetrable problems. And when you put your book down, you are as far off from the solution of the questions as you were when you commenced to read. But over all his mystifying cogitations are cast the glamour of wise thought, and the irresistible charm of a strangely beautiful and harmonious style. To "A generation ranked In gloomy noddings over life," here is much to be truly thankful for: a delectable privacy which no one may wantonly desecrate. The taste for these writings is an acquired one, and must be obtained by reading them again and again until you come to understand the spirit in which they were conceived. Not until you have made many charges against the fortress shall you find the enemy giving way. Then you will perceive your dislike as dead as Tarpeia under the bucklers of the Sabines. There are few events in Sir Thomas Browne's career that demand particular attention. The best part of his life was passed in tolerable prosperity. No great sorrow laid its hand upon his heart, and the ordinary cares and vicissitudes of the world disturbed neither the tranquillity of his mind nor the serenity of his temper. He was born in London on October 19, 1605, and passed to the majority at Norwich on his seventy-seventh birthday. To an ordinary individual it were no portentous coincidence that a man should die on the date of the day of his birth. We, who have read what he wrote in his Letter to a Friend, know that Sir Thomas regarded such an unusual circumstance as otherwise, though he informs us that "though astrology hath taken witty pains to solve, yet hath it been very wary in making predictions of it." He received his early education at Winchester, and afterwards proceeded to Pembroke College, Oxford, taking his B.A. degree in 1627, and his degree of M.A. in 1629. He chose medicine as a profession, and he practised as a physician for a short time in Oxfordshire. Afterwards he accompanied his father-in-law, Sir Thomas Dutton, on a tour through Ireland, visiting the castles and forts of that country. Next, we find him settling down in the south of France, at Montpellier, where he continued his study of medicine. He journeyed on to the Italian University of Padua. Here, necromancy and astronomy were favourite subjects for discussion; and Browne undoubtedly found himself in congenial society, and able to display to advantage his peculiar mental equipment. He travelled home northwards by way of Protestant Leyden, where he took his degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1633. Arriving in England, he finally settled down at Norwich, where he passed the remainder of his life. He attained considerable reputation as a physician, and corresponded with several well-known men of his time. In 1665 he was elected an honorary fellow of the College of Physicians, virtute et literis ornatissimus. In 1671 Charles II. visited Norwich, and conferred the honour of knighthood on Browne. Evelyn visited his home, and wrote the following charming description of it: "His whole house and garden being a paradise and cabinet of rarities, and that of the best collections, especially medals, books, plants, and natural things." Sir Thomas entertained strange opinions on marriage, which are by no means flattering to the gentle sex. Listen to what he ungraciously maintains: "The whole world was made for man, but only the twelfth of man for woman. Man is the whole world and the breath of God; woman the rib and crooked part of man." He wishes that we might grow like trees, and avoid a ridiculous ceremony. And yet he confesses that he is naturally amorous of all that is beautiful, and discourses very poetically on the music there is in beauty—"the silent note which Cupid strikes is far sweeter than the sound of an instrument." That he should marry just before the announcement of these opinions is perhaps what one naturally expected him to do. But they lived happily together, and had eleven children. That he learnt while on his travels one of the noblest lessons a man can learn in his brief existence—that of gracious toleration of other men's opinions—is evident from the abundant charity with which he treated the Roman Catholics in his writings. Religious bigotry shall, indubitably, not find its saving help in Sir Thomas Browne. We are sorry to say, however, that he had a firm belief in witchcraft; and it is a regrettable incident in his career that in 1664 he helped by his evidence to bring about the death of certain witches tried by Sir Matthew Hale. The first edition of the Religio Medici was published surreptitiously. Lord Dorset sent the volume to Sir Kenelm Digby, then in Winchester House under arrest. Sir Kenelm Digby read it with interest, and immediately wrote, in the course of twenty-four hours, his Observations or Animadversions upon the work. Sir Thomas, hearing of the circulation of the manuscript, wrote to its author and asked him to delay its publication until he published a correct copy. The authorised edition saw the light in 1643, with "an admonition to such as shall peruse the Observations upon a former corrupt copy of this book," the observations referred to being those written by Sir Kenelm Digby. In the intervals of his "drudging practice" Sir Thomas wrote other books. In 1646 he published his Pseudodoxia Epidemica; or Enquiries into Vulgar Errors; in 1658 his Hydriotaphia: Urn Burial, or a discourse on the Sepulchral Urns lately found in Norfolk; and in the same year The Garden of Cyrus; or the Quineuncxial Lozenge, or Network Plantations of the Ancients, Artificially, Naturally, Mystically Considered. They are all singularly curious works, over which you may puzzle your head and yet read with a keen sense of pleasure. Mr. Baker proceeded to criticise at some length the Religio Medici, the Urn Burial, and the Garden of Cyrus, and touched briefly on the Pseudodoxia Epidemica, the Letter to a Friend, the essay on Dreams, and the treatise on Christian Morals. He concluded his paper by observing that possibly it is the style of Sir Thomas Browne which has the greatest attraction for us, the most lasting and enduring charm. No lover of a rightly ordered style can afford to neglect the reading of such masterpieces of English prose as the Religio Medici and Urn Burial. These works we should study chiefly for the refined and artistic enjoyment of the unsurpassable melody of their prose. And this melody is not the pure strain of the thrush or the lark, but the superb and majestic roll of organ music round the roof and pillars of some beautiful cathedral, when the amber sunlight, slanting from stained-glass windows of Christ and saint, trembles through the incense-laden air. It may not possess the exquisite delicacy, the fragrant perfume of thought, the sweetness and copiousness, the grace and magic, the keen brilliancy of phrase appertaining to many writers of this century; but it has variety of finely modulated cadencies, vigorous enunciation of uncommon ideas, an impressive and commanding sedateness, which is specially unique and strikingly original.

* In the Psalm already quoted—viz., xxii., 21 (A.V.)—lions and unicorns are associated together, as they are also in the arms of our royal family, though there, apparently, only because the unicorn was in the Scotch royal arms.

RUSKIN SOCIETY.—(Friday, Dec. 9.)

J. ELLIOTT VINCEY, Esq., vice-president, in the chair.—A paper, entitled "Art on the Modern English Stage," was read by Mr. C. T. J. Hiatt. After making allusion to the actors of the past—such as Garrick, Kean, and Mrs. Siddons—and those of the present day—viz., Irving, Beerbohm-Tree and Hare, Miss Terry and Mrs. Kendal—Mr. Hiatt gave it as his opinion that the true test of the acting of the day is, whether or not it can adequately interpret the drama of the day: not the great classical masterpieces of Shakspeare and the rest, but the average play which the contemporary dramatist produces, for representations of the classics are at present the exception and not the rule. It may be admitted that, although the majority of new plays are failures financially as well as artistically, they very rarely fail through bad acting; on the other hand, their success is frequently owing to good acting. For some years the place of the decorative arts at the theatre has become more and more conspicuous. The mounting of modern plays seems, on the whole, extremely artistic. The modern interiors, for instance, in Mr. Jones's "Crusaders," were positively charming, and in them (adapting a phrase attributed to Mr. Oscar Wilde) "the furniture and ornaments seemed not to have been placed, but to occur." The splendour of the revivals at the Lyceum make them really valuable historical pictures—far more valuable and far more inspiring than the painted history one sees which often passes for art. At present, a modern dramatist must fill the theatre; if he can be artistic while doing so, well and good. He must either write down to the average playgoer or raise the average playgoer up to him. The plays of Mr. H. A. Jones and Mr. Pinero were compared, and referred to as improvements on many plays by former writers. One of the first things to be done is to press into the service of the stage writers who have secured distinction in other, though to some extent allied, literary forms. As an instance of considerable success in this direction, Mr. Hiatt mentioned "Walker, London," by Mr. J. M. Barrie. The piece, as it was originally produced, has been played for three hundred nights, and is still being played; it has needed no cutting, no mutilation of any kind. It is not too much to hope that Mr. Barrie will give us as fine a play as he has already given a novel. Mr. Oscar Wilde has achieved emphatic success with a serious play, "Lady Windermere's Fan"—a play written in such fine English that, in spite of its old-fashioned technics, it deserved the applause with which it was greeted. By accepting such plays as these the public will induce writers of distinction to attempt the drama, and their own taste will improve—for does not the appetite grow by what it feeds upon? Though a State-aided theatre as a means of promoting art on the modern stage is a pleasant dream very unlikely to be realised, a private society, founded with the same intention, is already an accomplished fact—namely, the Independent Theatre—its one desire being to promote good dramatic writing. Plays by Mr. Walter Besant and Mr. George Moore are underlined for production there. In conclusion, Mr. Hiatt appealed to his audience to do all in their power to be the means of introducing to a whole nation a splendid literature—a literature which should be constantly growing. This might be a very hard thing to do, but decidedly no ignoble thing.

FINE ART.

Preferences in Art, Life, and Literature.

By Harry Quilter. (Sonnenschein.)

MR. QUILTER'S Preferences is a bulky volume; but, as I have had occasion to say elsewhere, it is difficult to persuade oneself that it is a book. Yet the author—who puts energy into his work, as well as honesty and shrewdness—has done his best to make it one. Was not the task impossible? What unity can there be between the covers of a volume in one part of which Mr. Quilter traces, with an almost superfluous though dignified care, the history of that pre-Raphaelite movement whose importance (albeit he is by no means a partisan) he seems to exaggerate; in another part of which he tells us very sympathetically what a landlady on the Cornish coast thought of Miss Amy Levy, the young poetess and novelist, a born pessimist, yet a gifted and magnetic young woman, who had stayed with her before Mr. Quilter was her guest; and in yet another part of which he gives, if I dare to say it, final and gorgeous burial in a sarcophagus of gilding and blue cloth to all that remains of perhaps a couple of hundred articles buried previously in the back numbers of The Spectator. In material so miscellaneous as this—and with a discourse on Wilkie Collins thrown in—I do not, for my own part, quite discern the possibilities of a book. What I discern is the possibility of a wonderful scrap-book, compiled for the writer's edification and instruction in righteousness—that his memory might be jogged from time to time as to what and who it was right to admire or right even to condemn.

But to Mr. Quilter it has seemed otherwise. And he has been at a good deal of pains in the careful abridgment and in the partial re-writing, up to date, of the criticisms which, though inspired by no singular and subtle sensitiveness, carried, during a good many years, common sense notions of art into quarters not ready, probably, to receive the last refinements of taste—quarters not likely at all to be in sympathy with them—but in which common sense and some thoughtfulness were at all events open to be appreciated. Imagine the average robust intelligence—little concerned with art at all, though quite sensible in regard to life—imagine the "plain man," to whom the artistic view of things is pure impossibility—imagine him discoursed to, at length and with refinements, on that art of Mr. Whistler's, which must be met half way, or on the design of Albert Moore or Sir Frederic Leighton. Whatever obvious unveracities exist and must exist in these men's works—in order that the qualities they seek for may be fully attained and uninterruptedly displayed—such unveracities are exactly the things which strike the plain man most: he is delighted at his own critical power when he perceives them and points them out to his friends. In art the things that charm him—the things that he thinks serious—are the things with a moral or a sentiment. In other words he is charmed with the sentiment and the moral, and left untouched by the art. Now Mr. Quilter—to do him justice—during the years that he sat in the seat of judgment, did not too much humour this plain man, this average robust intelligence. But he did take account of him, and he had to; and there was something in his own temperament that fitted him to address the plain man with success. The plain man likes a writer who—in his judgment—does not hedge and modify, scrupulously qualify and protect. Mr. Quilter was fearless and abrupt. He was sometimes, as it seems to me, without due sense of proportion. But that is a failing common to most who write under the influence of the immediate impression; and this defect Mr. Quilter has to some extent made good by the thoughtful revision which he has given to such of his old criticism as he has made use of, or allowed to stand, in the present volume. Most of that criticism is sound.

When I mentioned the names of Sir Frederic Leighton, Mr. Whistler, and Mr. Albert Moore, I did not mean to convey the notion that the author of Preferences had given them exactly a back seat—that he had in any particular measure failed to understand them. He simply has not “insisted” on them. He has not been pertinacious in their advocacy. In regard to his relations with an admitted past master of “the gentle art of making enemies”—of the gentle art, rather, of ingeniously misunderstanding what the well-disposed have tried to say in your favour (for that is Mr. Whistler’s accomplishment)—they are, perhaps, eminently creditable to him. Mr. Quilter conceives himself to have been in many ways attacked by one of the most engaging of contemporary painters—quite the most brilliant of contemporary etchers; and, for a while, he felt, he says, indisposed to criticise the artist, since he knew or supposed that he must criticise him with prejudice. He has got over that indisposition. Briefly but strongly he has seen fit to record—and, I think, for my own part, that as judge and as gentleman he could do no less—he has seen fit to record his admiration of this and that Whistlerian masterpiece. And by so doing—by showing a generosity and justice which will commend themselves, as all the world must be convinced, to the Whistlerian conscience—he has had, thus far at least, much the best of the business. Of course the precise measure of his appreciation of Mr. Whistler’s work, in the different parts of it, may well be a matter open to discussion, when his justice and generosity have been allowed. I, myself, for example, could have wished that, in a volume dealing so extensively with the varied art productions of the last twenty years, there had been ample recognition of Mr. Whistler’s extraordinary performances in etching. That there is not, is, after all, but a pardonable instance of that want of complete proportion in Mr. Quilter’s estimates, which has been already indicated.

There is reason to conjecture that Mr. Quilter prides himself a good deal on the character and range of the illustrations which accompany this volume, and which have been printed carefully in Paris. The illustrations do certainly show the wide area of his “preferences,” while his aversions they mercifully leave untouched. And they are on the whole well executed. They render as adequately, perhaps, as black and white can render—under the conditions here laid down—the effect of the originals. Some endeavour to translate in full; some, to afford memoranda. They succeed in different measure. Very good is an illustration that accompanies a thoughtful paper on Mr. Watts’s art, and most excellent is the “Summer Nights” of Mr. Albert Moore. Good, also, are others besides. But reproductions in black and white do but seldom, I admit, stir me to the point of enthusiasm reached, it would seem, by so many. To me the notion that an “illustration” conveys is generally some other notion than the one which it was produced to convey.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. ALFRED GILBERT, A.R.A., the sculptor, has been elected a full member of the Royal Academy.

THE only exhibitions that open next week are: a collection of pictures painted for the Figaro Illustré, at the Goupil Gallery, in New Bond-street; and an oil-painting by M. Luis Falero, entitled “A Comet crossing the Zodiac,” at Messrs. C. E. Cliffords’, in Piccadilly.

MESSRS. DEPREZ & GUTEKUNST are fortunate enough to have in their possession at the present moment an impression of Rembrandt’s “Christ Healing the Sick” (the “Hundred Guilder”), which is hardly, if at all, inferior to the marvellous impression of this masterpiece of the master which appeared in the Richard Fisher sale last season. Like that for which, roughly speaking, about five hundred pounds was given, the impression now in question is, of course, in the second state—first states of the “Hundred Guilder” being even more absolutely introuvable than first states of Méryon’s “Abside de Notre Dame.” In each case it is with the finest impression of the second state that he can lay hands upon that the best endowed collector has generally to content himself.

MR. WHITLEY STOKES has been elected an honorary member of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland.

MR. JAMES PATON, superintendent of the Corporation Galleries of Art at Glasgow, has prepared a fifth edition of the catalogue of pictures and sculpture under his charge, illustrated with several colotype reproductions. This collection, which deserves to be better known, is especially rich in examples of the Dutch school, though it also includes some fine Italian works. Mr. Paton has sought advice from experts, and his descriptive and historical notes display both accuracy and judgment.

WE have received the second Part of Archæologia Oxoniensis (London: Henry Frowde). Mr. C. Oman contributes some notes on the ecclesiastical boundaries of Mediæval England, suggested by a map he is constructing to illustrate the Taxatio Ecclesiastica of 1291. As regards bishoprics, there seem to have been only two revisions of boundaries, both on the Welsh border. The archdeaconries show their later date, by their slavish adherence to county boundaries. By a comparison of the rural deaneries with the hundreds in various parts of England, it appears that in Wessex there is absolutely no resemblance between the two areas; while the hundreds often bear very archaic names, derived from districts or natural features, the rural deaneries are invariably called after considerable towns. In Cornwall the two are co-extensive and bear the same Celtic appellations. This is true likewise of the greater part of Eastern England, with the exception of Norfolk and the Midlands. Mr. Oman’s general conclusion is that the rural deaneries date from the tenth century. Mr. J. Romilly Allen pleads for the establishment of a museum, to contain a collection of casts, models, and photographs, illustrative of early art and architecture in Great Britain. The other articles are of local interest. Mr. J. Park Harrison describes some chevron or sun beads, from Arica in Peru, which apparently reached Peru through the drifting of a vessel across the South Pacific; from the same pen (?) comes a suggestion for the enlargement of the Bodleian, by throwing out two wings into the quadrangle towards the Clarendon Building; while Mr. Henry Balfour writes about a series of stone implements from Perak, which have lately been added to the Pitt-Rivers collection under his charge. Finally, we may mention the notes of recent discoveries, abstracts of the Proceedings of archaeological societies, and of other archaeological publications. The Part is illustrated with several plates.

THE STAGE.

WE saw on Thursday in last week the reproduction of Mr. Henderson’s “Silent Battle,” at the Criterion, with a cast practically the same as that which assisted its success during the initial performances last season—indeed, the only change that we can call to mind is that in the part of the Marchese Lorenzo, the somewhat weak-kneed and hesitating young man of the play, now played, not without skill, by Mr. Frank Worthing. It was originally in the hands of Mr. Lewis Waller. The play itself is hardly one to which justice can be done with ease on a first hearing. We are glad, however, to feel that the verdict upon it, which was pronounced in these columns last May, is not one which there is any reason to over-ride or to modify. It is only needful to confirm it. While in many parts the characterisation is sufficiently simple—broad types rather than peculiar individualities coming up to be portrayed in others (especially in Agatha herself, and in Mr. Dow, of the United States) the personality of the character is strongly marked. The writing is—especially, we think, after the first act—of singular terseness and pregnancy; it is essentially writing that can be spoken with effect. And while the moral of the play is healthy and natural—the conception of life tender rather than austere—it is certain that in the treatment equal justice is done to the saintly or womanly heroine, and to the chiefly heartless and selfish evil-doer whose force is pitted against hers. If the sworn pessimists would only be as just to the good instincts of humanity as Mr. Henderson is to those persons who are to some extent at the mercy of the bad, then the pessimistic drama would have some further title to be attended to than any it now possesses. Of the actual performance of “The Silent Battle”—on the whole eminently satisfactory—we have only space to say that Miss Emery is as conspicuous as heretofore for grace and delicate intention; that Miss Olga Nethersole—though melodramatic and conventional in a few of her touches—is generally clever and sufficient, and in the last scene is nothing less than brilliant and thrilling; and then Mr. Charles Wyndham as John Dow, the cheery, good-hearted, and shrewd American, who puts things right with a will, acts with delightful force, amazing tact, and unquestionable sincerity, and shows himself, indeed, the one comedian on our English stage to whom such a part as this by right belongs.

MUSIC.

“IRMENGARDA” AND “ORPHEUS.”

CHEVALIER L. EMILE BACH is known as a pupil of the Abbé Liszt and as himself a pianist of some distinction. Like his master, however, he is not satisfied with the career of a virtuoso, and is seeking to establish more lasting fame as a composer. His opera, “Irmengarda,” was produced last Thursday week at Covent Garden, and he may congratulate himself on the fact that it was very favourably received. Some operas have failed miserably from the very outset, and to be able to catch the ear of the public at all is a promising sign. Much fault may be found with the work: the libretto is dull, and the music shows many signs of inexperience; but for all that it has a certain life and character. The restlessness of tonality is the outcome of modern influence; and it is all the more noticeable in that the structure of the music is loose, and the orchestration weak. The composer seems determined not to weary his audience by dwelling too long on one theme. The great masters were equally anxious to avoid monotony; but they sought to obtain variety by presenting themes in various forms, developing them and evolving from them material, apparently new, yet bearing traces of its origin. By such means organic unity is attained, but the power to effect this is only acquired by hard study combined with experience. "Irmengarda" shows no traces of serious thought and self-criticism. It seems rather to have been written without any definite plan, without any labour in the proper sense of the word. The very frankness of the music predisposes one in its favour; and a certain dramatic instinct which, in spite of all unfavourable surroundings, makes itself felt from time to time, leads one to think that the composer may possibly one day achieve greater things. "Irmengarda" will not live, but it may prepare the way for a better work. Chevalier Bach has, we believe, something to say; and when he knows how to say it, it will be possible to form a just estimate of his talent. With regard to the performance, the efforts of Mme. Giulia Valda, Miss Guercini, and MM. Guétary and Dufriehe helped greatly towards the success of the evening. Mr. Armbruster conducted with intelligence and vigour.

The performance of Gluck's "Orpheus" at the Lyceum Theatre on Saturday afternoon by the pupils of the Royal College of Music was one of special interest, and it does seem a pity that the work should have been so carefully prepared only to be heard once. The yearly public performances given by the college are not only of inestimable value to the students, but they may ultimately lead to the establishment of a permanent opera-house in which the masterpieces of the classical and romantic schools will form the staple feature. The part of Orpheus was taken by Miss Clara E. Butt. She has a remarkably fine voice; there is not only power in it, but it is of sympathetic quality. As an actress she may have yet much to learn, but she shows a certain natural aptitude for the stage. Miss Butt gives decided promise for the future, and the favourable reception which she met with will no doubt encourage her. Miss Purvis was the Eurydice, and Miss Cain the Eros. For the excellent stage management Mr. Richard Temple deserves the credit: the grouping in the first act, especially, was admirable. The college orchestra, under the direction of Prof. Stanford, acquitted itself well. The restoration of Gluck's ending to the first act was most welcome, and so, too, was the signal failure of some indiscreet friends to obtain an encore for Che farò. The house was crowded.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO
THE ACADEMY.
(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 1	0 8 8	0 4 1

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW ANNOUNCEMENTS.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY,
PRICE ONE SHILLING,
In crown 4to, tastefully printed and illustrated.

THE ANTIQUARY,
1893.

An Illustrated Magazine devoted to the Study of the Past.

EDITED BY
Rev. J. CHARLES COX, LL.D. F.S.A.

The JANUARY NUMBER of the ANTIQUARY, for the year 1893, begins the Twenty-seventh Volume, and the Sixth Volume of the New Series.

The following are some of the Articles which will appear in the New Volume:—

EXCAVATIONS in CRETE. By Dr. FREDERICK HALBHERR, Professor of Greek Epigraphy in the Roman University.

ROMANO-BRITISH ANTIQUITIES. By Mr. F. HAVERSFIELD, M.A., F.S.A. EXCAVATIONS at SILCHESTER. Mr. W. H. ST. JOHN HOPE, M.A. Professor HUNTER, of Berlin, will also contribute to the Antiquary during 1893. The EXCAVATIONS at HADRIAN'S WALL.

OLD STONE MONUMENTS and Early Antiquities of North Wales. By the late Mr. H. H. LINES, of Worcester.

ARCHÆOLOGY in PROVINCIAL MUSEUMS. Mr. A. ARCHIBALD ARMSTRONG, M.A., will write on the Museum of Denon College. Accounts of other Museums will be given by Mr. JOHN WARD, CHANCELLOR FERGUSON, F.S.A., Mr. R. BLAIR, F.S.A., and Mr. ROACH LE SCHONIX.

VISCOUNT DILLON, President of the Royal Archaeological Institute, will contribute "Notes on Medieval Artillery," "The Real Sir Henry Lee of Scott's Woodstock," and "Some Receipts from the Note-book of a Seventeenth Century Lady."

THE EXCAVATIONS of the GLASTONBURY LAKE VILLAGE. By Dr. MONRO, of Edinburgh.

"The BATTLE of ETHANDUNE," by Mr. WALTER MONEY, F.S.A.—"HENRY VIII. at ROCKINGHAM PARK," by Mr. CHARLES WISE—"GAINSBOROUGH DURING THE GREAT CIVIL WAR," by Mr. EDWARD PEACOCK, F.S.A.—"WILL of NICHOLAS CARENT, DEAN of WELLS," by Rev. F. W. WEAVER—and "SOME NOTARIES SIGNS MANUALS," by Very Rev. J. HIRAT.

Under ECCLESIOLOGY may be named "SACRAMENT HOUSES" (illustrated), by Mr. J. E. MICKLETHWAITE, F.S.A.—"CITY BRASSES" (illustrated), by Mr. ANDREW OLIVER—"The NAVE TRIFORIUM of BEVERLEY MINSTER," by Mr. JOHN BILSON—and "A VANISHED TOMB from SELBY ABBEY," by Mr. C. C. HODGES.

Mr. G. L. GOMME, F.S.A., will write on "MUNICIPAL ANTIQUITIES"; and among other Contributors will be Mr. GEORGE PAYNE, F.S.A., Mr. HILTON, F.S.A., Mr. R. C. HOPE, F.S.A., Dr. HARDCASTLE, F.S.A., Rev. E. M. COLE, M.A., and Mr. F. AIDAN HIBBERT, M.A.

The MEETINGS and other PROCEEDINGS of all the Archaeological and kindred Societies of Great Britain and Ireland will be chronicled as they occur.

The Antiquary ought to be in the hands of all working antiquaries, as these sections will keep them au courant with all that is transpiring of archaeological interest throughout the United Kingdom. This information is not obtained from mere newspaper cuttings, but arrangements have been made for the prompt transmission of news from the hon. secretaries or from accredited correspondents of the various societies throughout the Kingdom.

REVIEWS and Notices of New Books bearing on all antiquarian and historical subjects will appear month by month; whilst the columns of the Magazine will continue to be open to terse CORRESPONDENCE and to Queries of an original or abstruse character.

NEW VOLUME OF INDIAN FOLK STORIES.

Dedicated by special permission to Her Majesty the Queen. In handsome large 8vo, printed in the best manner on fine paper, with many characteristic embellishments, and bound in appropriate Oriental binding, price 31s. 6d.

Fifty Large-Paper Copies have been printed on best paper, and will be sold to subscribers at £3 3s.

INDIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENT.

Or, Folk Stories from the Upper Indus. Collected from Oral Narrative by Rev. CHAS. SWYNNERTON, F.S.A. With many quaint illustrations by Native Artists.

In handsome 8vo, tastefully printed and bound, SECOND and CHEAPER EDITION, price 5s.

THE PEASANT SPEECH OF DEVON.

A Collection of Characteristic Words and Phrases in Use in the Rural Districts of Devonshire. With Dialogues, Letters, Anecdotes, Poems, and Proverbs. By SARAH HEWETT.

"The book is a very good little volume, and conveys a great deal of useful knowledge to those who feel an interest in Devonshire speech. The subject is difficult, and the ways of speech are intricate. . . . Books such as this will preserve good words in a sort of fossilised state, and they have our best wishes."—Saturday Review.

In crown 4to, handsomely printed and bound, price 21s.; Large-Paper, price £3 3s.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF HEREFORDSHIRE.

By HENRY T. TIMMINS. A Descriptive Account of the Picturesque Parts of the County. Fully Illustrated by the Author.

"Mr. Timmins has introduced much of the charm of this county in his interesting book, interspersed with graceful illustrations."—Daily Telegraph.

"We recommend the book without hesitation."—Spectator.

Printed on Fine Paper, crown 4to, fully illustrated, and tastefully bound in Roxburgh binding, price 25s.

THE HISTORY OF UFTON COURT, of the PARISH of UFTON, in the COUNTY of BERKS, and of the PERKINS FAMILY. Compiled from Ancient Records. By A. MARY SHARP. With Appendices, containing Pedigrees of Various Families of the Name of Perkins or Parkyns, living in England during the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries; also Notes concerning the Families of the same Names settled in America in the Seventeenth Century.

In 1 handsome vol., bound in cloth, price £2 2s.; 50 Large-Paper Copies, price £4 4s. each.

MEMORIALS OF OLD CHELSEA:

A New History of the Village of Palaces. By ALFRED BEAVER. With numerous illustrations, Plans, and Maps, by the Author.

"A most interesting and valuable history."—Athenæum.

In handsome 8vo cloth, price £1 11s. 6d.; 50 Large-Paper Copies, in Roxburgh, £3 3s. net.

A HISTORY OF THE PARISHES OF ST. IVES, LELANT, TOWEDNACK, and ZENNOR, in the COUNTY of CORNWALL. By JOHN HOBSON MATTHEWS.

"No mere guide-book, no institute lecture, but a bulky and carefully compiled and triply indexed volume, of which not the least valuable portion is to be found in the photostatic illustrations. A chronicle not only of solid value to all connected with the locality itself, but interesting to readers at large; of curious information, interesting to readers at large; such as collections of folk-lore and local customs, gleanings from the Record Office, borough accounts, stories of local celebrities, and tales of contested elections can never fail to supply."—Athenæum.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

JAMES NISBET & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON, Poet Laureate: a Brief Study of his Life and Poetry. By ARTHUR JENKINSON, Author of "A Modern Disciple." Small crown 8vo, 2s.

THE QUESTION OF QUESTIONS: "WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?" By SAMUEL WAINWRIGHT, D.D., Incumbent of St. Stephen's, Clapham Park. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

HOME WEAL and HOME WOE. By Mrs. BAYLY, Author of "Ragged Homes and How to Mend Them," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE HOT SWAMP: a Romance of Old Abbeys. By R. M. BALLANTYNE, With 6 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"The story is a capital one, and is worthy to take rank with the best of Mr. Ballantyne's early efforts."—Standard.

NEW RELATIONS: a Story for Girls. By EMMA MARSHALL. With 6 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"Mrs. Marshall's charming chronicle is brightly written and altogether wholesome and desirable."—Athenaeum.

THE DALRYMPLES. By Agnes Giberne. With 4 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"The tale is simply all that a tale should be. It is full of incident and amusement, and at the same time introduces life lessons which are well worth learning."—Niles.

LILLA THORN'S VOYAGE; or, "That for Remembrance." By GRACE STERLING.

"Another capital book. Lilla Thorn is a most engaging child, the very embodiment of gracefully unconscious impudence."—Times.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "GOLDEN LADDER" SERIES.

A CANDLE in the SEA; or, Winter at Seal's Head. By Rev. A. E. RAND, Author of "A Knight that Smote the Dragon," &c. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"A capital lighthouse story."—Record.

STEADY YOUR HELM; or, Stowed Away. By WM. CHARLES METCALFE, Author of "Above Board," "Frank Weatherall," &c. With 6 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"The story is vigorously told, and is distinctly above the average."—Standard.

BARON and SQUIRE: a Story of the Thirty Years' War. From the German of N. NOELDEGEN. By SARAH M. S. CLARKE (Mrs. Perkins). With 16 Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 5s.

"It is a romance of the school of Sir Walter Scott, abounding in stirring incidents, and not without a certain value as vividly calling up the scenes and events of real history."—Scotsman.

JAMES NISBET & CO., 21, BERNERS STREET, W.

Price 2s. 6d.

SIXTY-NINTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION.

FULCHER'S POCKET BOOK

For 1893.

With an Original Tale, entitled

THE DAUGHTERS OF JOB.

By DARLEY DALE,

Author of "The Village Blacksmith," "Fair Katherine," "Noah's Ark," &c.

ORIGINAL POEMS, ENIGMAS, CHARADES, DOUBLE ACROSTICS, CONUNDRUMS.

CALENDAR AND MEMORANDUM BOOK.

With beautifully executed STEEL ENGRAVINGS:

"Bramford Lock Oates, Suffolk,"

"Train Up a Child in the Way he should Go,"

"View in Kent,"

"Cottages at Gestingthorpe, Essex,"

"St. Mary's Hall, Belchamp, Essex."

Published by PEACOCK, MANSFIELD & Co., London.
HENRY C. PRATT, Sudbury, Suffolk.

NEW WORK by the AUTHOR of "INTO the UNKNOWN."
Now ready, price 4s.

ZERO THE SLAVER:
A Romance of Equatorial Africa.

By LAWRENCE FLETCHER.

N.B.—A Second Edition of "INTO the UNKNOWN" has already been called for, price 4s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL
LIFE ASSURANCE.

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.

PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with provision for Old Age.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

All the Profits are divided among the Assured.

PROVIDENT

PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED,
£4,000,000.

INSTITUTION.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA:

A DICTIONARY OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE.

Entirely New Edition, in Ten Volumes, Imperial 8vo.

WITH NUMEROUS MAPS AND WOOD ENGRAVINGS.

NINE VOLUMES NOW READY.

VOL. X., COMPLETING the WORK, in JANUARY, 1893.

PRICES OF COMPLETE SETS:

Cloth	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	£5 0 0
Half-morocco, or Half-calf	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	7 10 0
Half-morocco extra, or Half-russia	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	8 10 0

Sets can also be had in tree calf, and in full morocco.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA contains upwards of Thirty Thousand Articles, and is illustrated by more than Three Thousand Five Hundred Wood Engravings, and Fifty Coloured Maps.

Nearly One Thousand Contributors, including many of the most eminent authorities in every department of knowledge, have assisted in the preparation of this Work.

"Everybody who wants a handy compendium of universal knowledge, thoroughly 'up to date,' must get Chambers's 'Encyclopædia.'"—St. James's Gazette.

"The best Encyclopædia ever brought out."—Daily Chronicle.

"For practical utility these volumes could hardly be exceeded."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"This edition of Chambers's 'Encyclopædia' is perhaps the cheapest book ever published."

The Speaker.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED, 47, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON; AND EDINBURGH.

Price 2d., by post 2½d.

MODERN VIOLIN MAKERS AND DEALERS.

By the AUTHOR of "OLD VIOLINS and their MAKERS."

See MONDAY'S issue of "THE BAZAAR," which also contains many other interesting articles, and hundreds of announcements of all kinds of Property for Exchange, Wanted, or for Sale by Private Persons. Price 2d., at all Newsagents and Bookstalls. Office, 170, Strand, London.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.
BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

E P P S'S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING
C O C C O A
BOILING WATER OR MILK.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.,
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary book illustrations, catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process,
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

J. M. DENT & CO.'S LIST.

"Good books in goodly form."—SPEAKER.

LANDOR'S LONGER PROSE WORKS.

Vol. I. ready this day.

Edited by C. G. CRUMP.

In Two Volumes, containing Pericles and Aspasia—The Citation and Examination of Shakspeare—The Pentameron—Some hitherto uncollected Conversations, and a copious Index to the Ten Volumes of Landor's Works.

2 vols., crown 8vo, with Frontispieces, 7s. net.

LANDOR'S IMAGINARY CONVERSATIONS.

Edited by C. G. CRUMP.

6 vols., crown 8vo, Photogravure Frontispieces, £1 1s. net.

"Beautifully bound and printed. Deserves to be the standard edition. The notes are full and complete."—Review of Reviews.

LANDOR'S POEMS, DIALOGUES IN VERSE, AND EPIGRAMS.

Edited by C. G. CRUMP.

2 vols., crown 8vo, Frontispieces, 7s. net.

"Contain a landably complete edition of Landor's poetry. The preface is a piece of most sensible criticism."—Athenæum.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF THE TEMPLE LIBRARY.
LAMB'S SPECIMENS OF THE DRAMATISTS

Who Lived about the Time of Shakspeare; together with Extracts from the "Garrick" Plays.

Edited by I. GOLLANCZ, M.A.

2 vols., post 8vo, with Photogravure Frontispieces, 10s. 6d. net.

Of the above, 100 of the usual Large-paper copies will be issued, and suggestions have been received by the Publishers that an EXTRA ILLUSTRATED EDITION would prove acceptable. They purpose, therefore, to issue not more than 150 copies with twenty or more extra Photogravures, consisting of Portraits of the Dramatists and Actors of the period treated of, and Views of some of the early Theatres.

Applications for these copies—the price of which will not exceed £2 10s. for the two volumes—should be sent to the Booksellers at once, that they may reach the Publishers not later than Monday, December 19.

NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF JANE AUSTEN'S NOVELS.

Edited by R. BINIMLEY JOHNSON.

With 30 Photogravures from Drawings by Wm. C. Cooke, and a specially designed Title-page. In 10 vols., fcap. 8vo, cloth, £1 2s. 6d. net.

Also supplied in 10 vols., in cloth, in handsome cloth box; in half-calf and half polished morocco, prices of which, as well as of the limited Large-Paper Edition, may be obtained from the Booksellers.

SENSE and SENSIBILITY. 2 vols., 4s. 6d. net.

PRIDE and PREJUDICE. 2 vols., 4s. 6d. net.

MANSFIELD PARK. 2 vols., 4s. 6d. net.

EMMA. 2 vols., 4s. 6d. net.

NORTHANGER ABBEY and PERSUASION. 2 vols., 4s. 6d. net.

"Promises to be a delightful edition."—Athenæum.

"The new edition of Miss Austen's works... will do more than propitiate the fastidious book-lover who knows how to value an apt concinnity of style and form, such as charms the eye by a true conformity of the external to the inward and spiritual.... The type, paper, and binding make an admirable record, and in Mr. W. C. Cooke we have an artist who promises to prove a notable accession to the present somewhat scanty array of English book-illustrators. A very interesting frontispiece is provided in the portrait of the novelist, after a picture supposed to have been painted by Zoffany, while she was on a visit to Bath, at the age of fifteen. It is a charming and most impressive piece of portraiture."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Johnson's introduction is a model of restrained and scholarly writing."—Daily Chronicle

T. LOVE PEACOCK'S NOVELS.

Edited by R. GARNETT, LL.D.

With 8 Photogravures and specially designed Title-Page.

10 vols., fcap. 8vo, £1 5s. net. 2s. 6d. per vol.

HEADLONG HALL. 1 vol.

MELINCOURT. 2 vols.

NIGHTMARE ABBEY. 1 vol.

MISFORTUNES OF ELPHIN. 1 vol.

MAID MARIAN. 1 vol.

CROTCHET CASTLE. 1 vol.

GRYLL GRANGE. 2 vols.

CALIDORE, & MISCELLANEA 1 vol.

"All good Peacockians must be grateful for this new edition, and the good fortune that is theirs in Dr. Garnett as its editor."—Saturday Review.

"A delightful edition of 'Headlong Hall,' with a judicious introduction by Dr. Garnett, it is interspersed with many pieces of sound criticism."—Athenæum.

LORD TENNYSON'S POEMS.

Messrs. DENT & CO. issue Messrs. Macmillan's Edition of LORD TENNYSON'S POEMS, with 14 ETCHINGS by Herbert Walton and John Jellicoe, crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. Also in leather bindings.

SONGS FROM TENNYSON.

16mo, cloth, gilt edges, with Photographic Frontispiece, 1s. 6d.; with 6 Photographs, 2s. 6d. Also in leather bindings.

J. M. DENT & CO., 69, GREAT EASTERN STREET, LONDON, E.C.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW LIBRARY NOVELS.

A FAMILY LIKENESS. By B. M. Croker, Author of "Diana Barrington," &c. 3 vols.

"The familiar charm of the author of 'Diana Barrington' reasserts itself with undiminished force.... Juliet Carwithen is a wholly delightful heroine."—Spectator.

BARBARA DERING. By Amelie Rives, Author of "The Quick or the Dead," 2 vols.

"It is perhaps one of the most brilliant character studies in English literature."—Woman.

THE IVORY GATE. By Walter Besant, Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c. 3 vols.

"A delightful work."—Scotsman.

MISS JULIET. By Mrs. Alfred Hunt, Author of "Thornicroft's Model," 3 vols.

GEOFFORY HAMILTON. By Edward H. Cooper. 2 vols. Shortly.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY VIGNETTES. By Austin DOBSON. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

"Austin Dobson is the lineal descendant of Addison, Goldsmith, and Gray.... To sit and bask in the sunshine of the eighteenth century with Austin Dobson is a rare and holy joy."—WALTER BESANT in The Author.

THE BRIGHTON ROAD. By Charles G. Harper. With 90 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 10s.

"A charming book."—Full Mail Gazette.

LONDON. By Walter Besant, Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c. With 124 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 18s.

"What J. R. Green has done for England Mr. Besant has attempted, with conspicuous success, for Cockaigne."—Graphic.

THE WANDERING JEW; a Poem. By Robert Buchanan. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Shortly.

THE THOUSAND and ONE DAYS: Persian Tales. Edited by JUSTIN H. MCCARTHY. 2 vols., crown 8vo, half-parchment, 12s.

"A fascinating piece of romance."—Times.

THE ANTIPODEAN: an Illustrated Annual. With an Introduction by the COUNTESS of JERSEY, and 88 Illustrations, 1s.

THE WINDSOR PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and KNIGHTAGE for 1893. Edited by E. WALFORD, M.A. Crown 8vo, Windsor cloth gilt, 12s. 6d.

It gives nearly all the information contained in other similar books, while it gives in addition the blazon of the arms of all hereditary titles, and full accounts of all collateral branches in remainder to them.

TWO HAPPY YEARS in CEYLON. By C. F. Gordon CUMMING. A New Edition, with 28 Illustrations. Small demy 8vo, cloth extra, 8s. 6d.

HOW to PLAY SOLO WHIST. With Illustrative Specimen Hands. By A. S. WILKS and C. F. PARDON. A New Edition. Post 8vo, cloth limp, 2s.

THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS.—Crown 8vo, cloth extra.

THE AMERICAN CLAIMANT. By MARK TWAIN. With 81 Illustrations by Hal Hurst and Dan Beard.

A SOLDIER'S CHILDREN. By JOHN STRANGE WINTER. With 34 Illustrations.

THE DREAM. By Emile Zola, Author of "The Downfall." Translated by ELIZA B. CHASE. With 8 Full-page Illustrations by Jeannot. Shortly.

THE FATE OF HERBERT WAYNE. By E. J. GOODMAN, Author of "Too Curious."

SUSY. By Bret Harte. With a Frontispiece and Vignette by J. A. Christie. Shortly.

MY FLIRTATIONS. By MARGARET WYNMAN. With 13 Illustrations by J. Bernard Partridge.

THE DOWNFALL. By Emile ZOLA. Translated by ERNEST A. VIZETELLY.

BLOOD-ROYAL. By Grant ALLEN, Author of "The Tents of Shem." Shortly.

BIMBI: Stories for Children. By Ouida. With 9 Illustrations by Edmund H. Garrett. Square 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

A ROMANCE of the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By W. H. MALLOCK, Author of "The New Republic." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

MAID MARIAN and ROBIN HOOD: a Romance of Old Sherwood Forest. By J. E. MUDDOCK, Author of "The Dead Man's Secret," &c. With 12 Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE. One Shilling Monthly, or 14s. per year, post free. In addition to Articles upon Subjects in Literature, Science, and Art, "PAGES on PLAYS," by JUSTIN H. MCCARTHY, and "TABLE TALK," by SYLVANUS URBAN, appear Monthly.

SCIENCE-GOSSIP: an Illustrated Medium of Interchange for Students and Lovers of Nature. Devoted to Geology, Botany, Physiology, Chemistry, Zoology, Microscopy, Telescopy, Physiography, Scientific Photography, &c. Edited by Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, F.R.S., &c. Price 4d. Monthly; or 5s. per year post free.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1077.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

GEORGE PHILIP & SON'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

IMPORTANT NEW WORK

BY

SIR ROBERT S. BALL, F.R.S.,

Lowndean Professor of Astronomy and Geometry at the University of Cambridge.

Author of "Starland," "The Story of the Heavens," &c.

This day, small 4to, handsome cloth gift cover (designed by Walter Crane), gilt edges, price 15s.

AN ATLAS OF ASTRONOMY.

Containing 72 Beautifully Executed Plates, with Explanatory Letterpress, and Complete Index.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH says: "Sir Robert Stawell Ball tell us in the preface to 'An Atlas of Astronomy' that he has frequently been asked to recommend a set of maps which would help beginners in the study of the heavens. The Atlas is his answer to that appeal, but during the course of production it has developed into something more than an elementary sideral handbook. The old astronomical hand, equally with the tyro, will find valuable assistance in its pages; for there are no fewer than seventy-two plates, with accompanying explanatory notes, showing the chief planetary phenomena, and also illustrating the nature of comets, solar prominences, nebulae, and mundane tides and seasons. Maps of the moon in its various phases, of the different planets at different times of the year, and elaborate charts of the lesser stars, add greatly to the serviceableness of the volume. Astronomy cannot ever, perhaps, hope to become a popular science in its higher and more exact departments; but it is possible to travel a long way on the road of knowledge of the heavens without a vestige of mathematics, and certainly no better compagnon de voyage could be wished for than the author of 'Starland.'"

GEORGE PHILIP & SON: LONDON, 32, FLEET STREET, E.C.; LIVERPOOL, 45 to 51, SOUTH CASTLE STREET

JUST PUBLISHED,
Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

EXCURSIONS in GREECE to

RECENTLY EXPLORED SITES of CLASSICAL INTEREST: Mycenae, Tiryns, Dodona, Delos, Athens, Olympia, Eleusis, Epidauros, Tanagra. A Popular Account of the Results of Recent Excavations. By CHARLES DIEHL, Professor at the University of Nancy. Translated by EMMA R. PERKINS, Head Mistress of the Thetford Grammar School for Girls. With an Introduction by REGINALD STUART POOLE, LL.D., Professor of Archaeology at University College, London. With 9 Plans, and 41 Illustrations.

The aim M. Diehl has set before himself in this book is—discarding the technicalities of Archaeology and leaving on one side its more obscure problems—to present in a clear and simple form the chief results of the excavations which, within the last twenty years, have done so much to enlarge our knowledge of the art, the life, and the religion of the Greeks.

LONDON: H. GREVEL & CO.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNE

BOOKS.

ON JANUARY 2nd, WILL BE
ROBERT LOWE VISCOUNT

By

J. F. HOGAN, Author of "The Irish in Austria."
* This biography specially deals with Mr. Lowe's
GOSSIP of the CENTURY.

Traditional Memories—Social, Literary, Artistic.
Portraits. By the Author of "Flemish Interiors."
* The two volumes are, in fact, a kind of encyclopedia of govt. monarchs, statesmen, doctors, writers, actors, singers, soldiers, men of fashion. —Daily News. * He has told his story well. —Spectator.

SOCIAL ENGLAND from the RESTORATION to the REVOLUTION. By W. C. SYDNEY, Author of "England and the English in the Eighteenth Century." 1 vol., 10s. 6d.

* He has an eye for what is picturesque, a taste for what is curious, and enough sense to divide his survey nimbly between the scandals and follies of the town and the sober life of the rest of England. —Times.

MR. WESTALL'S NEW NOVEL.

ROY of ROY'S COURT. By William Westall.

2 vols.
* It is a breezy book dealing with a stormy period of our country's history. Adults will read it with pleasure and boys with enthusiasm. —Daily Chronicle.
* The book may be heartily commended to all who love a good novel of adventure. —Manchester Guardian.
* Roy of Roy's Court is a fine healthy story of stirring personal adventure. —Scotsman.

WARD & DOWNEY, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Just published, medium 8vo, handsome cloth binding, price 21s.

BRITISH NEW GUINEA.

By J. P. THOMSON. With contributions by Baron Sir FERDINAND VON MUELLER, Sir WILLIAM MACGREGOR, K.C.M.G., and others. With over 50 beautiful Engravings and a Coloured Map.

The Westminster Review says: "A model of its kind. It is excellently got up without and within: its illustrations are good; its method and matter are good; and its Appendices are most valuable."

Just published, demy 8vo, illustrated cloth cover, price 16s.

UP THE NIGER.

An Account of the Government Mission to the "Black Nile" under Sir Claude Maxwell MacDonald, K.C.M.G. By Captain H. F. MOCKLER-FERRYMAN, F.R.G.S., F.Z.S. With numerous Original Illustrations and a Map.

The Daily Chronicle says: "A more interesting work has seldom come before us. Those who desire a pleasant, unassuming, and perfectly trustworthy account, will find it in Captain Mockler-Ferryman's unpretentious, but well-written and well-illustrated pages."

Just published, forming Vol. VII. of the "World's Great Explorers and Explorations," crown 8vo, neat cloth cover, price 4s. 6d.; or in handsome cloth gift cover (designed by Lewis F. Day), gilt edges, 5s.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS.

By CLEMENTS R. MARKHAM, C.B. With 25 Illustrations and numerous Coloured Maps.

The Athenaeum says: "The best compendium of the times of Columbus and his followers that has yet been written in our language."

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

MAN in ART. By Philip G. Hamerton. Illustrated by Etchings and Photographs from Sketches by Sir F. Leighton, Alma Tadema, Watts, Dicksee, G. Leslie, Murillo, Ghirlandajo, Ary Scheffer, Botticelli, Pisano, Della Robbia, Tassart, Fra Angelico, Albert Dürer, Rembrandt. Etched or Photographed by Norman Hirst, M. Manasse, Flameng, Amand Durand, Guillaume, Pierre Gusman. £3 13s. 6d. net.

CATHEDRAL and UNIVERSITY SERMONS.

By the late very Rev. R. W. CHURCH, D.C.L., Dean of St. Paul's. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE GOSPEL of LIFE. Thoughts Introductory to the Study of Christian Doctrine. By BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., Bishop of Durham. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE DOCTRINE of the PROPHETS. The Warburton Lectures for 1886-1890. By A. F. KIRKPATRICK, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, Cambridge, and Canon of Ely. Crown 8vo, 6s.

COMPLETION OF THE SECOND VOLUME.

Now ready, Vol. II., super-royal 8vo, cloth, 12s. net.

A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE.

By J. R. GREEN, M.A. Illustrated Edition. Edited by Mrs. J. R. GREEN and Miss KATE NORGATE. Vol. II. (containing Parts XI. to XX.) With Coloured Plates and numerous Illustrations.

* Cases for binding, 1s. 6d. net.

* J. J. Parts I.-X. 12s. net, still on sale.

THE ART of WORLDLY WISDOM. By

BALTHASAR GRACIAN. Translated from the Spanish by JOSEPH JACOBS. With Vignette. 18mo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

* New Volume of the Golden Treasury Series.

FOOTPRINTS of STATESMEN during the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY in ENGLAND. By the Hon. REGINALD H. BRETT. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS.

RECORDS of TENNYSON, RUSKIN, and BROWNING. By ANNIE RITCHIE. Second Edition. Globe 8vo, cloth, 5s.

LETTERS of JAMES SMETHAM. With an Introductory Memoir. Edited by SARAH SMETHAM and WILLIAM DAVIS. With a Portrait. Second and Cheaper Edition. Globe 8vo, 5s.

* THESE LETTERS—These letters are the finest sort of record of the man, a noble, an inspiring record, and they are, as letters, perhaps among the best ever written."

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

WRIGHT'S LIFE OF COMPTON, by W. P. COURTNEY . . .	581
BENT'S RUINED CITIES OF MASHONALAND, by Prof. A. H. KEANE . . .	582
WALTER BESANT'S LONDON, by F. RYLAND . . .	582
GERMAN CRITICISM OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, by Prof. CHRYSE . . .	583
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE . . .	585
RECENT LITERATURE . . .	586
NOTES AND NEWS . . .	587
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES . . .	588
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . .	588
THE PRESENT ASPECT OF THE LONDON UNIVERSITY PROBLEM, by Prof. KARL PEARSON . . .	589
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . .	590
CORRESPONDENCE—
“W. B. Scott's Autobiographical Notes,” by A. C. Swinburne and W. M. Rossetti; The Obit of St. Columba , by the Rev. Dr. B. MacCarthy; Dante's “Guizante,” by Paget Toynbee and J. G. Alger; The Gospel According to Peter , by Prof. J. H. Bernard and E. W. H. Nicholson . . .	590
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . .	593
DR. SIMAIKA'S ROMAN EGYPT, by Prof. SAYCE . . .	593
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Library of Moses , by Prof. Flinders Petrie . . .	593
SCIENCE NOTES . . .	594
ART BOOKS . . .	594
CORRESPONDENCE—
A Roman Inscription from Carthage , by F. Haverfield . . .	594
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .	595
STAGE NOTES . . .	595
VERDI'S “REQUIEM,” by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . .	595

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations.—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

UNIVERSITY TYPE-WRITING
OFFICE, OXFORD (16, King Edward Street).—MSS. of all descriptions typed and prepared for the press. Literary, Scientific, Medical, and Foreign MSS. carefully copied and revised by experienced typists. Notes taken at the Balliol. Shorthand Clerk and Typist sent any distance by train. Translations.—For price list and information address the Secretary.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

THE TRUTH about STAMMERING.—
Any one interested will receive the latest information and important books on the Cure, on loan, post free, without charge.—FRUWELL, Messrs. Deacons, 154, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.

AN ENGLISH GENTLEMAN, now at the World's Fair, Chicago, is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as COMMISSION AGENT. Special qualifications for Works of Art.—Address, in first instance, M. GRIFFITH, 13, Ashurst Street, Battersea, S.W.

PRIVATE COLLECTOR'S DUPLICATE
COINS for SALE or EXCHANGE.—English Silver and Copper, of most reigns, in very fine condition, also a few Patterns and Proofs. United States Cents and Half Cents in Mint Condition, and early American Coppers in very fine condition. Wanted.—Apply, by letter only, to Z., Parisian Institute, 36, Strand, M.

HAKLUYT SOCIETY.

Established for the purpose of printing rare or unpublished Voyages and Travels.

Subscription One Guinea a Year.
Two Volumes Issued Annually.

The following Work has been recently issued to Subscribers:—
THE TRAVELS OF PIETRO DELLA VALLE in INDIA. 2 vols. (Edited by E. GREY.)

Shortly to appear are—

THE VOYAGES OF CAPTAIN LUKE FOXE and CAPTAIN JAMES TO HUDSON'S BAY, 1631. (MILLER CHRISTY.)

DALLAM'S and COVELL'S EARLY TRAVELS to the LEVANT. (J. THEODORE BENT.)

THE FIRST VOYAGE of COLUMBUS from NAVARRRETE, CADIZ and CORTREAL. (C. R. MARKHAM.)
Favourable terms of purchase of back Volumes, by members and others, may be had on application to Mr. C. J. CLARK, 4, Lincoln's Inn Fields.

E. DELMAR MORGAN, Hon. Sec.,
15, Roland Gardens, S.W.

THROAT AND COUGH

Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use

EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES.

In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing.

Sold only in boxes, 7½d., and tins, 1s. 1½d., Labelled:

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homeopathic Chemists, LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

or the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

THE CITY BRANCH

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
Is Now Removed from 2, King Street, Cheapside, to 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
(MANSION HOUSE END).

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

FACULTY OF MEDICINE.

The Council is about to proceed to the APPOINTMENT of a PROFESSOR of ANATOMY and a PROFESSOR of PHYSIOLOGY. The Stipend in each case will be £380 per annum. Applications, together with printed copies of testimonials, must be sent in on or before February 10th, 1893.

For further particulars apply to University College, Cardiff,
Dec. 13th, 1892.

IVON JAMES, Registrar.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT.
The Royal Naval School.

About TWENTY FOUNDATION and ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, £50 to £20, offered in April. Full particulars of Head Master.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.—The THIRTY-FIRST WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES is now OPEN, 5, Pall Mall East. From 10 till 5. Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; “SPRING,” by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTO TYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

“THE GREAT MASTERS”

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, “AUTOTYPE: A Decorative and Educational Art,” post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Sole Proprietors and Managers.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE LOST PARADISE. Mr. Charles Warner, Messrs. Charles Dalton, G. W. Cockburn, W. C. Ahingdon, W. A. Elliott, T. B. Thalberg, Sant Matthews, Howard Russell, Welton Dale, J. Northcote; Miss Evelyn Millard, Miss Clara Jecks, Miss Grace Warner, Miss Ethel Hope, Miss A. Rogers, Miss Marion Dolby, and Miss Dorothy Dorr.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE GUARDSMAN. Messrs. Arthur Cecil, Elliot, W. Draycott, C. P. Little, Compton Coutts, R. Nisbly, E. Bertram, and Weedon Grossmith; Mesdames Ellaline Terriss, Agnes Thomas, Isabel Eliason, Irene Rickards, and Caroline Hill. 8.15, CRAZED. Messrs. C. P. Lattie, S. Warden, and Miss S. Grey.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, THE SILENT BATTLE. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Herbert Waring, F. Worthing, C. W. Somerset, A. Aynesworth; Misses Winifred Emery, O. Nethersole, R. Leclercq, Minnie Terry, and Miss Mary Moore. At 8.15, HEADS OR TAILS.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. CHARLES H. HAWTREY.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, TO-DAY. Mr. Charles Brookfield, Mr. James Nelson, Mr. Wyse, and Mr. Chas. Hawtre; Miss Vane Featherston, Miss Ethel Matthews, Miss Henderson, Miss Polak and Lottie Venn. At 8, MY LORD IN LIVERY.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGEE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, INCOGNITA. Messrs. Harry Monkhouse, Wallace Brownlow, John Child, Charles Gilbert Fred Kaye, T. A. Shale; Misses Aida Jenoure, Susie Vaughan, St. Cyr, Emmeline Orford, Florence Darley. At 7.45, BEEF TEA.

OPERA COMIQUE.

Lessee, Mr. EDWARD COMPTON.

Under the Management of WILLIE EDWIN.

TO-NIGHT, at 8.15, will be produced, a new Musical Farical Comedy, in three acts, entitled TROOPER CLAIRETTE.

By MM. H. Raymond and A. Mars. Music by M. Victor Roger.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'LY CASTE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, HADDON HALL. Messrs. W. H. Denny, Chas. Kenningham, Richard Green, Bowden Haswell, J. Macaulay; Mesdames Lucile Hill, Dorothy Vane, Nita Cole, and R. Brandism.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, LIBERTY HALL. Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. Nutcombe Gould, H. H. Vincent, Ben Webster, Alfred Holles, V. Sansbury, Master R. Saker, and Edward Righton; Misses Fanny Coleman, Maude Millett, Craig, and Marion Terry.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, WALKER, LONDON. Mr. J. L. Toole; Messrs. C. M. Lowe, Cecil Ramsey, Seymour Hicks, George Shelton; Misses Eliza Johnstone, Effie Linton, Mary Ansell, Brough, Ainsworth, Irene Vanbrugh. At 8, DAISY'S ESCAPE. Messrs. John Billington, Shelton, Lowne, Brunton; Misses Brough, Loveday.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s. post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John, by ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE IMPERIAL AND ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW.

JANUARY, 1893.—CONTENTS.

AVE, KAISAR-HIND: A PLEA IN PERSIAN AND ARABIC, the chronograms giving the date 1893, followed by an Urdu Prize-Translation of the "National Anthem."

SIR WILLIAM WEDDERBURN, Bart.: "RUSSIANISED OFFICIALISM IN INDIA": The Fly in the Ointment.

JOHN DACOSTA: "OUR INDIAN TRANS-FRONTIER EXPEDITIONS": their Aim and their Result.

DR. G. W. LEITNER: "RECENT EVENTS IN CHILAS and CHITRAL" (Illustrated). Portrait of and Letters from, Militar Nizam-ul-Mulk of Chitral.

A CHINESE OFFICIAL VIEW on the "OPIUM QUESTION."

F. T. PIGGOTT (late Legal Adviser to the Japanese Cabinet): "THE JAPAN CONSTITUTION." II. Exteriority and Portugal.

PHILO-AFRICANUS: "UGANDA": a Review of the whole Question.

ROBERT BEADON: "THE SOLUTION OF THE COLONIAL QUESTION": Definite Proposals of the Imperial Federation League.

CHARLES JOHNSTON, R.C.S. (retired): "THE YELLOW MEN OF INDIA."

CHARLES G. LELAND: "THE SALAGRAMA, or HOLY STONE."

PROP. G. DUGAT: "INEDITED FRAGMENTS OF ARABIC ANTHOLOGY."

A. COTTERELL TUPP (late Accountant-General, Bombay): "THE MONETARY CONFERENCE AND PLANS TO RESTORE SILVER."

DR. C. W. LEITNER: "CUSTOMS AND HISTORY OF DARDIS-TAN (Illustrated) (CHILAS, DARTY, TANGIR, GILGIT, YAKSA, NAGRA, CHITRAL, and KASHMIR)."

SIDNEY HARTLAND: "A MARRIAGE CUSTOM OF THE ABORIGINES OF BENAL": a Study in the Symbolism of Marriage Ceremonies.

CORRESPONDENCE, NOTES, &c.:—The Pamirs and Chitral—Korea, A. Meunier (Tientsin)—Anglo-Russian Relations, General KIRKEE—The Physical Geography of Persia (a Reply), C. E. BRIDGEMAN—The Monetary Conference and the Silver Question—Jottings from Lahore, D. A. NICHOLSON—Reviews and Notices—Summary of Events in Asia, Africa, and the Colonies—Publications of the Tenth International Congress of Orientalists (Lisbon), &c., &c.

Exceeding 260 pp., royal 8vo, price 5s.; yearly, £1.

Publishing Department—

ORIENTAL UNIVERSITY INSTITUTE, WORKING, AND SIMPSON, MARSHALL & CO., E.C.

INDIA.

Edited by H. MORSE STEPHENS, M.A.

"INDIA," the accredited Organ of the Indian National Congress, will appear in an entirely new form on January 1, 1893, and will henceforth be published punctually on the 1st of every month.

CONTENTS.—JANUARY.

INDIANA.—Paragraphs on Indian Topics.

The Moderation of the Indian National Congress.

Trial by Jury in Bengal.

The Mysore Representative Assembly: an Object Lesson in Indian Local Self-Government.

THE VOICE OF INDIA: Selections from the Indian Press.

THE VOICE OF ENGLAND ON INDIA: Selections from the English Press on Indian Matters.

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.—The British Committee: Letter to the Secretary of State for India on the Bengal Municipalities Amendment Act.

Memorial of Friends of Female Education in India to the Secretary of State for India on behalf of the Poona Native Girls' High School.

Letter of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, M.P., to the Indian National Congress.

SPECIAL ARTICLES.—

Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, M.P., on his Election.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., on Bhang.

REVIEWS: European Military Adventures of Hindustan—The Land-Tenures of India—Indian Folk-Lore—Lord Lawrence—An Australian Statesman on Indian Irrigation—A Brief History of India—Indian Art—Early Protestant Missionaries in India.

GOSSIP: About Men and Books.

SCHEME of an INDIAN MONTHLY BIBLIOGRAPHY.

Price 6d.; or 6s. a year, post free.

Offices: 84 and 85, Palace Chambers, Westminster, S.W.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 927.—JANUARY, 1893.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—EARLS COURT: A NOVEL OF PROVINCIAL LIFE, chaps. I.-V.—PROFITABLE FARMING, AND EMPLOYMENT OF LABOUR, by John Boyd Kinnear.—SUMMERS AND WINTERS AT BALMAWHAPPE.—THE FRENCH IN WEST AFRICA, by Archer P. Crouch.—A VICTIM OF CIRCUMSTANCES.—RECENT GERMAN FICTION.—MOBS.—CHRISTIAN ORSECK: BIKELAS AND THE MARQUESS OF BUTE, by John Stuart Blackie.—ORNAMENT, by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.—OUR MISSION IN EGYPT.—A RETROSPECT AND A PROSPECT.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process, For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Lace, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

NOW READY.

CHRISTMAS DOUBLE NUMBER OF

THE STRAND MAGAZINE.

Edited by GEORGE NEWNES.

With Presentation Plate,

Containing an important Article descriptive of

THE QUEEN'S STUDIES IN HINDUSTANI, which Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to peruse and revise.

Also the commencement of the Second Series of

THE ADVENTURES OF SHERLOCK HOLMES.

By Dr. A. CONAN DOYLE.

An Illustrated Interview with Dr. Russell, the veteran War Correspondent, by Harry How.

And many other Articles and Stories, with 144 Illustrations.

Price 1s.; post free, 1s. 1½d.

SUITABLE FOR CHRISTMAS OR NEW YEAR'S PRESENTS.

NINTH THOUSAND.

THE ADVENTURES OF SHERLOCK HOLMES. By A. CONAN DOYLE. Beautifully printed on extra thick paper, with 101 Illustrations; 321 pages, tastefully bound in cloth, with gilt edges, price 6s.; post free, 6s. 6d.

FOURTH THOUSAND OF SECOND EDITION.

THE SIGN OF FOUR. By A. Conan DOYLE. 283 pages, cloth, price 3s. 6d.; post free, 3s. 9d.

FOURTH THOUSAND.

THE STRAND MAGAZINE. Vol. IV.

With nearly 1,000 Illustrations. 681 pages, cloth, gilt edges, price 6s. 6d.; post free, 7s. Volumes I., II., and III. may also be obtained at 6s. each; post free, 6s. 6d. each.

*. Binding Covers for Strand Magazine, Vol. IV., are now ready, price 1s.; post free, 1s. 3d.

GEORGE NEWNES, LIMITED,

8, 9, 10, and 11, Southampton Street, and Exeter Street, Strand, London, W.C.

Now ready, 5s. net.

CLARKE ASPINALL:

A Biography.

By WALTER LEWIN.

London: E. W. ALLEN, Ave Maria Lane.

Price 2d., by post 2½d.

MODERN VIOLIN MAKERS AND DEALERS.

By the AUTHOR of "OLD VIOLINS and their MAKERS."

See MONDAY'S Issue of "THE BAZAAR," which also contains many other interesting articles, and hundreds of announcements of all kinds of Property for Exchange, Wanted, or for Sale by Private Persons. Price 2d., at all Newsagents and Bookstalls. Office, 179, Strand, London.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also,

ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

PROF. LOISETTE'S DISCOVERIES. THE PHYSIOLOGICAL ART OF NEVER FORGETTING—unlike mnemonics lost memories restored—the worst made good, and the best better, any book learned in one reading. Speaking without notes. A re-creating method for all subjects. Invaluable to the Legal, Medical, Clerical, Musical, Dramatic, and all other Professions and Businesses. Last Edition contains

MEMORY AND SUCCESS

ONE THOUSAND APPLICATIONS IN PROSPECTUS POST FREE. With opinions of Mr. R. A. PROCTOR, DR. ANDREW WILSON, &c.

Greatest Inducement to Correspondence Classes in NEVER FORGETTING and CURE for MIND WANDERING Also taught in Classes or Privately at the address below.

PROF. LOISETTE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

COMPLETION OF THE CABINET EDITION OF MR. LECKY'S "ENGLAND."

THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND in the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By WILLIAM E. H. LECKY. CABINET EDITION. 12 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each. England, 7 vols.; Ireland, 5 vols.)

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY.

NEW VOLUME.

COURSING and FALCONRY. By HARDING COX and the Hon. GERALD LASCELLES. With 20 Plates and 56 Illustrations in the Text by John Charlton, R. H. Moore, G. E. Lodge, L. Speed, &c. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

FIFTY YEARS in the MAKING of AUSTRALIAN HISTORY. By Sir HENRY PARKES, G.C.M.G. Premier of New South Wales, 1872-5, 1877, 1878-9. With 2 Portraits. 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

THE RUINED CITIES OF MASHONALAND. being a Record of Excavation and Exploration in 1891. By J. THEODORE BENT, F.S.A., F.R.G.S. With a Chapter on the Orientation and Mensuration of the Temples by H. M. W. SWAN. With 5 Maps and Plans, 13 Plates, and 191 Illustrations in the Text. 8vo, 18s.

AN ANALYSIS OF the IDEAS of ECONOMICS. By L. P. SHIRRES, B.A., of King's College, Cambridge; Member of Her Majesty's Bengal Civil Service, and sometime Finance Under-Secretary to the Government of Bengal. Crown 8vo, 6s.

HISTORY of CIVILISATION in ENGLAND and FRANCE, SPAIN and SCOTLAND. By HENRY THOMAS BUCKLE. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

A SANSKRIT-ENGLISH DICTIONARY: being a Practical Handbook, with Transliteration, Accentuation, and Etymological Analysis throughout. Compiled by ARTHUR A. MACDONELL, M.A., Ph.D., (Deputy) Professor of Sanskrit in the University of Oxford. 4to, 42s.

OLD and NEW ASTRONOMY. By RICHARD A. PROCTOR and A. COWPER RAYNAUD. With 31 Plates and 472 Illustrations in the Text. 4to, 36s.

*. The issue of this book in Parts is now completed. Part 13, APPENDIX, price 1s., now ready. Cases for Binding can be obtained through all Booksellers.

LAY DOWN YOUR ARMS: the Autobiography of Martha von Tilling. By BERTHA von SUTTNER. Authorised Translation by T. HOLMES. Revised by the Author. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

*. This is a translation of a romance which has obtained a great success on the Continent under the name of "Die Waffen Nieder." Baroness Suttner's object in this story is to awake the attention of all thinking persons to the evils of war, and to the possibility of finding a remedy for it in a voluntary establishment of arbitration tribunals and mutual disarmament.

New Serial Story by the AUTHOR of "THE HOUSE of the WOLF." See LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE for JANUARY.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.—January.

A GENTLEMAN of FRANCE: being the Memoirs of Gaston de Bonne, Sieur de Marsac. By STANLEY J. WEYMAN, Author of "The House of the Wolf." Chaps. I.—III.

REMINISCENCES OF EDINBURGH SOCIETY nearly FIFTY YEARS AGO. By the AUTHOR of "LETTERS FROM THE BALTIC."

A FEAT of '92. By A. H. BERRYLY.

THE GENTLEMAN OPPOSITE. By E. CHILTON.

THE "DONNA" in 1892.—I. By the AUTHOR of "CHARLES LAWDER. II. By the EDITOR.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS of VILLAGE LIFE. By Rev. J. VAUGHAN.

THE MINISTER'S MONEY. By W. J. LACEY.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

NEW YORK: 15, EAST 16TH STREET.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Two New Serial Stories commence in the January issue of

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE,
NOW READY.

"DIANA TEMPEST,"

By MARY CHOLMONDELEY, Author of
"The Danvers Jewels"; and

"THE ROMANCE OF REGINALD GRAHAM,"
By A NEW WRITER.

NOW READY.

MEMOIRS of EIGHTY YEARS.

By GORDON HAKE. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 15s.
"Leigh Hunt said of 'John Bunce' that it was 'written in better spirits' than any other English book. This is a book that is quite as full of good spirits as 'John Bunce'—quite as full of wit which is wisdom and wisdom which is wit, and a whiff finer than Amory's own.... These genial pages—pages as full of sunshine as a haymaking on a bright June day."—Athenaeum.

NOW READY.

THE LIFE of JOHN LINNELL.

By ALFRED T. STORY. With Numerous Illustrations from Paintings or Sketches by Linnell. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 28s.

"Will not fail in interest to any Englishman, whether he care about art or not."—Saturday Review.

"No one can rise from its perusal without feeling mentally braced and strengthened."—Observer.

"A perfect treasury of anecdotes."—Daily Telegraph.

"Will be valuable to all who wish to inform themselves of the history of a great artist."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW READY.

RED-LETTER DAYS of MY LIFE.

By CORNELIA A. H. CROSSE. 2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.

"A book that contains memoirs of Wordsworth, Coleridge, Whewell, Faraday, Kinglake, and the Brownings, could hardly fail to be entertaining. But Mrs. Crosse has exercised the principle of selection, and there is little in her book that is not new, and very little indeed that could have been omitted with advantage—qualities too rare in memoirs."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SIN OF JOOST AVELINGH."

GOD'S FOOL. By Maarten

MAARTENS, Author of "An Old Maid's Love." 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A very able and, what is perhaps more rare, a moving psychological study. From first to last nothing but compassion is excited by the ill-starred Elias Loswell, shut out, as the result of an accident, from communication with the world around him; and yet, within the narrow bounds of a half-deadened mind, capable of generous as well as emotional feeling."—Morning Post.

FOURTH EDITION.

MRS. BLIGH. By Rhoda Brough-

TON, Author of "Nancy," "Cometh up as a Flower." 1 vol., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

WHEN CHARLES the FIRST

was KING. By J. S. FLETCHER. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ELSA."

THE STEP-SISTERS. By E.

M-QUEEN GRAY. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE LATEST ADDITIONS TO BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

FOR LILIAS. By Rosa Nouchette

CAREY, Author of "Wee Wife," "Nellie's Memoirs," &c. A New Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

CLEVEDEN. By Mary Linskill,

Author of "Between the Heather and the Northern Sea." A New Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

Second Edition, fcap. 8vo.

STRAY VERSES, 1889-1890. By

ROBERT LORD HOUGHTON, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. With Dedicatory Verses to the Memory of Lord Tennyson. [In January.]

With Portrait, 8vo, 14s.

SIR HENRY MAINE: a Brief Memoir of his Life. By the Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF. With some of his Indian Speeches and Minutes. Selected and Edited by WHITLEY STOKES, D.C.L. [This day.]

Fourth Edition, greatly improved, with many New Illustrations, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

FREAM'S ELEMENTS of AGRI- CULTURE.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE MISSION of the CHURCH. By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, Editor of "Lux Mundi."

With very many Illustrations, medium 8vo, 15s.

THE ENGLISH FLOWER GARDEN;

Design, Views, and Plants. By W. ROBINSON, F.R.S. Third Edition, with many fine additional Engravings.

8vo, 14s.

THE GREAT ENIGMA. By W. S. LILLY.

"An important contribution to the Apologetics of Theism. This great argument which involves a critical examination of some of the main currents of modern speculative thought is presented with rare dialectical skill. A powerful book—more powerful perhaps in its negative dialectic than in its constructive efforts, but in any case a serious and sustained polemic against some of the dominant tendencies of modern agnostic thought."—Times.

With Portrait, Coloured Plates, Illustrations, and Map, medium 8vo, 18s.

BATES' RECORDS of a NATURALIST on the AMAZONS. A New Edition of the Unabridged Work. With a Memoir of the Author by EDWARD CLODD. [This day.]

With Tables of Cartouches, Map, and Index, crown 8vo, 5s.

MARIETTE'S OUTLINES of ANCIENT EGYPTIAN HISTORY. Translated and Edited, with Notes, by MARY BRODRICK. A New, Revised, and Enlarged Edition.

With Portrait, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A POPULAR EDITION of the LIFE of CHARLES DARWIN. By his Son, FRANCIS DARWIN, F.R.S.

Library Edition, with 100 Illustrations by Pritchett, 21s.

DARWIN'S VOYAGE of the BEAGLE.

Or Popular Edition, Woodcuts, 3s. 6d.

A COMPANION VOLUME TO DARWIN'S "VOYAGE."

A New and Revised Edition, crown 8vo, 9s.

MOSELEY'S NOTES by a NATU-

RALIST during the VOYAGE of H.M.S. "CHALLENGER" ROUND the WORLD in the YEARS 1872-1876. With Map, Portrait, and Woodcuts, and a Brief Memoir of the Author.

Crown 8vo, Ninth Edition, 7s. 6d.

THE COUNTRY BANKER: his Clients, Cares, and Work. By GEORGE RAE.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

MURRAY'S HANDBOOK to the RIVIERA. From Marseilles to Pisa. A New Edition, with numerous New Maps engraved on a large scale, and a Chapter containing some Hints to Invalids on the Climate.

8vo, 9s.

ARCHITECTURE; a Profession or an

Art. By NORMAN SHAW, R.A., T. G. JACKSON, A.R.A., and others.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

"One of the most acceptable Gift-books of the Season." Times.

"The finest Gift-book of the Season."—Daily Chronicle.

THE CAPITALS of the WORLD.

In Two Volumes, superbly illustrated, handsomely bound in half-morocco, bevelled boards, gilt edges,

Price THREE GUINEAS NET.

An Illustrated Prospectus sent post free on application.

"In no similar work have artistic excellence and descriptive power been more liberally put at the service of the world's capitals." Standard.

BOMBAY and WESTERN INDIA.

By JAMES DOUGLAS. Dedicated to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. With Maps and Plans, 13 Full-page Photogravures, Collotype Reproductions from Old Documents, 1 Coloured Reproduction of an Old Picture, and over 100 other Text Illustrations. 2 vols., super-royal 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 42s. net.

TALES of ADVENTURE and STORIES of TRAVEL of FIFTY YEARS AGO. Edited by JOSEPH CUNDALL. Illustrated with 20 Plates from "The Annuals." Large post 8vo, half-leather, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

Amongst the Contributors are Coleridge, Sir Walter Scott, Lord Byron, William Howitt, Thackeray, Dickens, Barry Cornwall, and, alone, amongst living men, the Duke of Rutland, the Lord John Manners of long ago. The engravings are admirable. They represent some of the famous pictures of Holbein, Wilkie, Lawrence, Turner, MacIise, Stothard, and David Roberts.

SEVENTH EDITION, JUST READY.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwiler, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A. Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT in OLD

ENGLISH VERSE. By Rev. C. J. ABBEY, Rector of Checkendon, Oxon. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Mr. Abbey brings to his task the three essential qualifications of fine poetic sensibility, genuine piety, and extensive theological learning."—Times.

"SHEPHERD" SMITH, the UNIVER-

SALIST: the Story of a Mind. Being the Life of James E. Smith, M.A. By W. ANDERSON SMITH. With Photogravure Portrait and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"An interesting volume, commemorating a remarkable life and a character of outstanding originality. It is a valuable addition to the literary and spiritual history of the century."—Scotsman.

FRANCIS BACON and his SECRET

SOCIETY: an Attempt to Collect and Unite the Lost Links of a Long and Strong Chain. By Mrs. HENRY POTT. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 8s. 6d.

"The industry that has collected all the facts in Mrs. Pott's book, and the ingenuity that has drawn such strange conclusions.... are stupendous."—Spectator.

HOLIDAY GIFT-BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

STORIES TOLD in an AFRICAN

FOREST by GROWN-UP CHILDREN of AFRICA. By A. J. MOUNTENEY JEPHSON, one of Mr. Stanley's Officers. With numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Walter W. Buckley. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"One of the best of the Christmas books."—World.

SIX YEARS of ADVENTURE in

CONGO-LAND. By E. J. GLAVE, one of Stanley's Pioneer Officers. With an Introduction by HENRY M. STANLEY. Beautifully Illustrated. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

MISTRESS BRANICAN. By Jules

VERNE, Author of "Five Weeks in a Balloon," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"A writer without a book by Jules Verne would scarcely be intelligible."—Globe.

AXEL EBERSEN, the Graduate of Upsala. By ANDRIE LAURIE, Author of "The Conquest of the Moon," &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"An admirably constructed story."—Scotsman.

SANDY CARMICHAEL. By C. J. Hyne,

Author of "The Captured Cruiser," &c. With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"One of the best stories we have read."—Spectator.

THE PRICELESS ORCHID: a Story

of Adventure in the Forests of Yucatan. By PERCY AINSLIE, Author of "Lost in Japan," &c. With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"There is not a dull page in the whole book."—Guardian.

ELFIE'S VISIT to CLOUDLAND and the MOON. By FRANCES V. AUSTEN. With many Illustrations. Demy 4to, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1892.

No. 1077, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Life of William Cowper. By Thomas Wright. (Fisher Unwin.)

THERE is such a charm in the melancholy of Cowper that any Life of him must present many points of interest; and this volume, massive though it be, by the principal of the school at Olney which is called after his name, is no exception to the rule. The enthusiasm which animated the former work on The Town of Cowper has not abandoned Mr. Wright in his present enterprise.

From the first page to the last the task is pursued with unflagging energy. One qualification for his labours on the career of Cowper is possessed by him in a larger degree than by any of his predecessors, and it is not likely that he will be excelled in this respect by any of his successors. He has lived for many years in the town which formed a hermitage for the poet during the most active years of his life (if such a term can be applied to any part of it), and from its inhabitants he has picked up every scrap of legendary history that could be gleaned. The houses in which Cowper and his friends lived are familiar to him from the cellar to the garret. He knows every inch of the country over which the poet used to take his daily walks, can describe its present condition from personal knowledge, and can present to us, from the points which his inquiries have succeeded in collecting, a picture of its state in the past. What an advantage this is may be easily seen by a reference to the pages descriptive of the town of Olney and the changes which have taken place in it during the last century; by a perusal of the particulars of the charming old mansion of Gayhurst, which delighted Cowper so much on his first visit that he playfully confessed "to need the talents of Cox or Langford, the auctioneers, to do the whole scene justice"; or by the details of the walks at Weston Underwood, the home of the Throckmortons, amid the stillness of which the poet used to roam almost daily. Moreover, the work is admirably illustrated and printed in type almost incapable of improvement. Still, with all these advantages its pages cannot be called "easy reading," and this drawback is partly due to the 201 sections into which the text is divided. This system of division undoubtedly enables the reader to close the volume at any moment, but with equal certainty it breaks unduly the connexion of the narrative.

Much has been done in recent years for the illustration of Cowper's life, and further matter still is promised. His Letters, which have never yet been collected into any one harmonious whole, and many of which only appeared with frequent and unjustifiable excisions, have been read by Mr. Wright "in consecutive order"; and he promises to issue, "as soon as possible," the whole set of Cowper's epistles now in print or in manuscript, "with annotations." Such a scheme is worthy of all encouragement, and let us hope that these editorial notes and comments will not be pushed to any indefensible excess. The diary of Samuel Teedon, a schoolmaster at Olney—who exercised a great influence over Cowper's mind during many years of his life, an influence, as we learn, far beyond that of either Newton or Lady Hesketh—has been laid open to his inspection by its present owner, and this too will soon be published "with annotations." From such unpoetical sources as ledgers and day-books of the local tradesmen many new facts have been drawn; and now for the first time the parish registers of Olney have yielded up their buried entries about the acquaintances by whom Cowper was surrounded. Occasionally Mr. Wright may be said to err in his ready acquiescence in the gossip of previous chroniclers. It does not add to the fun of "John Gilpin" to know the name of its subject, even if his identity could be settled beyond the possibility of doubt; but for my part I should certainly require better evidence than that hitherto supplied to the world to induce me to accept as conclusive the statement which has been made as to his name. It rests on the assertion of a writer in the Aldine Magazine for 1839, who received the assurance fifty years previously from a certain "John Annesley Colet."

Mr. Wright accepts, and is justified in so doing, the fatal dream of Cowper at the end of February, 1773, as one of the chief factors in bringing about the unhappy condition of mind in which he was enchained for the last twenty-seven years of his life. It is true that this dream is only a fresh proof of the habitual morbidness with which Cowper was seized, but the hold which it possessed over his intellect effectually prevented him from returning to sanity. The exact words expressed in the vision are unknown to us; they were studiously concealed by the unhappy dreamer. But their substance is no secret. They conveyed to him that his soul was slain beyond redemption. He was hopelessly lost to any possibility of salvation: such was the sombre thought ever present in his mind. There was much in the circumstances surrounding his life to cut off all chance of his recurring to a healthier frame of mind. While Newton was at Olney, he pressed Cowper into his service as a helper; and the sensitive recluse who shrank from any appearance in public was driven into leading prayer-meetings, by which "his mind was always greatly agitated for some hours preceding." He suffered, too, from want of variety in occupation, and from lack of sufficient opportunities of relaxation in harmless amusement. Agreeable friends were always welcomed with warmth by him; but they could not enter into the secluded recesses of his life with the Unwins at Huntingdon nor were they likely to be found in any number in the still less attractive town of Olney or in the small village of Weston Underwood. When he did adopt some occupation for his leisure hours, the tasks were not always felicitously chosen. The pain of translating Homer must often have proved very wearisome to his spirit. The drudgery of "playing the commentator" on the works of Milton became a burden beyond endurance. At the close of his life, other cares pressed heavily upon him. His protégé, Dick Coleman, whom he had educated from an infant, did not justify his patron's bounty. When the scapegrace made his way to London, money had to be supplied for his return to Olney; and when he came back to Bedfordshire, the only way to conceal his intoxication from the poet was to expel him from the house. Cowper tried a second experiment in charity of this kind, and having failed in his 'prentice hand on man, hoped for better fortune in training a little girl. The second trial proved almost as disastrous as the first. The girl thought of nothing but finery, and when Mrs. Unwin became infirm, habitually neglected her.

The friends of Cowper are favoured with much attention on Mr. Wright's part. Mrs. Unwin, Lady Hesketh, and Lady Austin are the chief; and if he does not conceal the gloom and anxiety caused to the poet by the decay in health of the first of these ladies, he bestows a still warmer acknowledgment on the services rendered to him while she was still in the enjoyment of health. Cowper knew but few of the literary men of his day. Hayley was the chief of his associates in literature; and on his visit to Hayley under that Sussex hill, "which in Buckinghamshire might well pass for a mountain," he was introduced to Hurdis, the professor of poetry, and to Charlotte Smith, the unfortunate woman who was driven by stern necessity into that practice of novel writing which is now the chosen amusement of so many hundreds of her sex. His connexion, the young John Johnson, "Johnny of Norfolk," as he was sportively called, was also a poet with a MS. poem for his relative's praise or censure; and although Thomas Park, who made acquaintance with him in 1792, is now better known as an antiquary, he, too, had another poem for Cowper to criticise. Mrs. King, the wife of a neighbouring parson, was possessed of much literary taste; and Rose, who largely ministered to his happiness in his later years, had sufficient discernments to present him with a copy of Burns's poems.

A few passages, carelessly if not ungrammatically expressed, have fallen under my notice while reading this volume. Mr. Wright would do well to correct to "Glynn" the name of the physician mentioned on p. 192, and to revise the dates on p. 203. Pitt did not, as stated on p. 313, dissolve on finding that his majority had dwindled to one, but when the majority against him had been reduced to that vanishing point. The name of Dean Burgon is misspelt more than once.

W. P. COURTNEY.

The Ruined Cities of Mashonaland, being a Record of Excavation and Exploration in 1891. By J. Theodore Bent. (Longmans.)

AIDED by grants from the Royal Geographical Society, the British Association, and the Chartered South Africa Company, Mr. Bent, who had already done some practical archaeological work in Persia and the Levant, undertook last year to explore and report upon the remarkable monuments scattered over the uplands between the Limpopo and the Zambesi, with a view, if possible, to determining their date and origin. He was accompanied, as on previous journeys, by his wife, who took most of the photographs, and by Mr. R. N. W. Swan, who prepared the maps and plans by which this volume is profusely illustrated. The expedition, which occupied just a twelvemonth (January 1891 to January 1892) naturally directed its attention chiefly to the great circular building of Zimbabwe and the other structures on the neighbouring heights at Fort Victoria, which, if not the oldest, are certainly the most important, and in a sense the prototypes of all the others. Here two months were well spent in clearing the ground of the vegetation covering the ruins, studying their general plan and more striking details, excavating some of the most likely spots, and collecting numerous objects of art or symbolism, weapons and implements in clay, soapstone, bronze, and iron, thus brought to light. But in estimating the value of Mr. Bent's main conclusions it is important to note that the ruins cover a vast area, much of which still remains untouched. Still, all the more salient features of Zimbabwe have doubtless been revealed, and these compared with the analogous structures visited at Mangwendi's, Chipunza's, Makoni's, and other more northern districts on the Mashonaland plateau.

It results from the distinctly pagan character of all these remains, as well as from the historical references to them, which at all events go back to the first appearance of the Portuguese on the east coast some four hundred years ago, that neither the Portuguese themselves, nor the Arabs of the Mohammedan period, had any hand in their erection. Still less can they be attributed to any of the indigenous negroid Bantu populations, whose knowledge of architecture has not yet got beyond the earth and wooden stage. The great strength of the outer walls and their strategic position on commanding sites, taken in connexion with the curious finds at Zimbabwe, the crucibles and the long rows of gold crushing-stones still in situ in several places, show plainly that the buildings were erected by some highly civilised intruding people of antiquity, whose sole object in settling in that country was the quest of gold, and a prominent feature of whose religion was phallic worship. Few will feel disposed to question these general conclusions of Mr. Bent, whose further inference that all the conditions point at some Semitic people, Arabs rather than Phœnicians, Himyarites of the South rather than any of the Northern tribes, also seems reasonable. It is noteworthy that in remote prehistoric times the Himyarites crossed over from Yemen and established themselves in Abyssinia, where they founded the Axumite empire, and where they are still represented by the Tigré, Amharic, and Shoa nations, all of Geez (Himyaritic) speech. It is announced that Mr. Bent is about to visit Abyssinia for the purpose of exploring the ruins of Axum, which of all ruins in the world are the most likely to throw light on those of Mashona and Manica lands.

Other inferences are not so obvious: as, for instance, that the Dutch Boers are to be specially censured for calling the giraffe a "camel leopard" (sic), and the leopard a "tiger"; that the ruminants seen by Mr. Bent on the banks of the Pungwe were "deer of every conceivable species," and not antelopes; that clicks are heard north of the Zambesi, in such words as "Nyanza" or "Mpwapwa," or at all except from intruding Zulu-Kafirs; that Dos Santos wrote a work on Asia ("De Asia"); that all the Mashonas should be called Makalangas, or that there is any reason why their country should not be called "Mashonaland"; that Karl Mauch was the first to visit the Zimbabwe ruins in modern times, and that this word Zimbabwe means "here is the great kraal," thus worked out: "Zi is the Abantu root for a village, anzi being in Zulu the term for a collection of kraals. Zimbab would signify something the same, or rather 'the great kraal,' and we is the terminal denoting an exclamation," argal, &c. It is surprising that Mr. Bent should have committed himself to such an astounding derivation as this, which violates the whole spirit of Bantu speech. He frequently quotes De Barros; and De Barros had already given the correct meaning of the word "a court" or "royal residence," the components, as elsewhere explained by this writer, "being nzimba, a house, residence, and mbuie, a lord or chief, hence nzimba-mbuie, zimbabye, zimbaoui, &c., as it is variously written. In the wide-spread Chinyanja language of Nyassaland mbuie still means a lord, and nyumba a house, where ny interchanges with nj, nz." But it is impossible to follow Mr. Bent when he leaves his own special province.

A protest must also be raised against his slipshod style, which teems with solecisms and vulgarities of all kinds that a little attention might have easily avoided. We have occurring within a few pages such expressions as "the natives and their chiefs have little or no identity (sic) left to them"; "as we only lost two out of thirty-six [oxen] from this disease we voted it successful"; "a lot of the youths"; "the northward road becoming hideous again"; "the Bechuanaland feud tribes"; "in this pond we intended to do good things in the washing line"; "everything was arranged in the most beautiful manner," and many other "beautiful" specimens of the sermo pedestris.

Mr. Swan's plans and maps are all good, and most helpful in following the text. He also contributes a chapter on the orientation and measurements of the Zimbabwe ruins, besides appendices on the Geography and Meteorology of Mashonaland, lists of stations astronomically observed, and other useful matter.

A. H. KEANE.

London. By Walter Besant. (Chatto & Windus.)

SOME of us who look back to the earlier novels of Mr. Besant feel a grudge against him, that he has for so long been producing books compounded of a mixture of antiquarianism and fiction. Sometimes the result is a historical novel; sometimes, as now, a more entertaining contribution to general literature. In the present volume his endeavour has been to present

"pictures of the City of London—instantaneous photographs, showing the streets, the buildings, and the citizens at work and at play. Above all the citizens, with their daily life in the streets, in the shops, in the churches, and in the houses; the merchant in the quays and on 'Change; the shopkeeper of Cheapside; the priests and the monks and the friars; the shouting of those who sell; the laughter and singing of those who feast and drink; the ringing of the bells; the dragging of the criminal to the pillory; the Riding of the Lord Mayor and aldermen; the river with its boats and barges; the cheerful sound of pipe and tabor; the stage with its tumblers and its rope-dancers; the 'prentices with their elms; the evening dance in the streets. I want my pictures to show all these things."

This quotation not only puts before us the aims and method of the book, but gives us a fair specimen of its style. Mr. Besant is a little slapdash and a little given to under rate difficulties. Still, it is a pleasure in these hesitating and sceptical days to come across a man who feels equal to the task of catching "the cheerful sound of pipe and tabor" by means of instantaneous photography.

In the first chapter Mr. Besant espouses with much enthusiasm the opinion adopted by Mr. Loftie among others, that London, or rather Augusta, was deserted for a time during the English conquest, and that when the East Saxons entered it they found it desolate and ruinous. The hypothesis, which previous writers have put forward with becoming hesitation, presents no difficulties for our author, who is evidently proud of his argument in favour of it. But he seems to carry "cocksureness" here and elsewhere to an unnecessary pitch; and he certainly does not strengthen his presentation of the case by the imaginary "unpublished chapter from the Chronicle of a layman, a British citizen," supposed to have fled from the doomed city, a chapter written as no published chapter from any early Chronicle assuredly is. In his desire to be picturesque and realistic Mr. Besant frequently interpolates passages of this sort—letters, dialogues, and so forth, due entirely to his own imagination, but far inferior in vividness and point to actual extracts from contemporary records. And as he also shows a curious dislike to give the names of his authorities, the plain man who looks at his pictures is likely to get a somewhat confused impression as to where fact ends and fiction begins.

* Paper contributed to Murray's South Africa (1891).

Unfortunately Mr. Besant is so intent on his camera that he forgets such trifles as names and dates. The general reader, whose ignorance is not easily fathomed, is left to sort the pictures without much guide. Thus, in the second chapter there is nothing to warn him that the not very intelligible account of a Mystery play in the church of St. George, Botolph-lane (p. 77), does not refer to the "later Saxon times," which is the last chronological reference (p. 76). In fact, if he takes the passage in its plain and natural sense, there is a direct suggestion that such a play could be seen before the Conquest; for after the description of the lives of women "in the later Saxon times" the author adds, "Let us walk into the narrow streets and see something more closely of the townfolk," and in the course of the walk invites us to see the Mystery. The mention of Walter Map (p. 79) tells the student that we have skipped a couple of centuries, but the general reader is quite as likely as not to overlook it.

Making allowances for these things and for Mr. Besant's somewhat aggressive air of superiority toward monks and priests and such poor creatures, his chapters on Mediaeval London are pleasant reading. Here and there he seems a little surprised at what most other folk have known for a long time. He is struck by the number of churches in London dedicated to early French saints, especially St. Martin. The Prayer-book calendar is evidence of this popularity of French saints in England up to the time of the Reformation. The constant intercourse between the British Church and that of Gaul, the part played by missionaries coming from French monasteries, especially that founded by St. Martin at Marmontier, in the conversion of the west and north of the island, as well as the immense reputation of many of the French saints in Western Europe, all help to explain this popularity. St. Augustine was himself consecrated archbishop at Arles, while several of his companions came from Gaul. As might be expected, Mr. Besant warmly denounces the destruction of the venerable college and chapel of St. Katherine's by the Tower, which had survived the Reformation and the chances and changes of history until the present century, and he prophesies that some day it will be sent back to East London.

Notwithstanding a certain want of sympathy with the romantic and the religious sides of mediaeval life, Mr. Besant's account is not unfair to the middle ages. He sees that the condition of the people was not so bad as it has sometimes been painted; that with regard to the treatment of criminals, the intercourse between the classes and the masses, the amusements of the poor, and some other matters, things were really better before the Reformation than during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

In his chapters on Tudor London, Mr. Besant calls emphatic attention to the hideous havoc made by the Reformers in the city. The senseless and brutal destruction of sacred buildings, libraries, monuments, and works of art, the wicked waste of valuable things which can never be replaced, these, even apart from the spoliation of the poor, are almost enough to make one doubt whether the great movement of the sixteenth century did not, on the whole, bring more loss than gain. The author is perhaps too good a Protestant to be touched with a doubt of this sort; but his picture of ruin is vivid and appalling. Unfortunately, here again his want of regard for chronology is a little reckless. Sir Thomas Browne, born in 1605, could hardly have been a favourite among sixteenth century readers, nor can Lucy Hutchinson, who was born in 1620, be bracketed with Lady Jane Grey as a Tudor blue-stocking; the song on p. 245, if properly quoted, is obviously at least a century later than Elizabeth's reign; and the play of "Troilus and Cressida" can hardly be dated before the death of Stowe. These, however, are small specks in Mr. Besant's interesting gossip.

The book improves towards the end; the last two chapters are distinctly the best. The chapter on the London of Charles II. is largely taken up by descriptions of the Plague and the Fire. Of course Pepys is drawn on, but hardly as much as he deserves. (By the way, what authority has Mr. Besant for speaking of Sir John Evelyn?) Mr. Besant reminds us that there was some chance that the city would be rebuilt on a symmetrical plan after the fire. He says, in his optimistic way,

"Had either [plan] been adopted, the City of London would have been as artificial and as regular as a new American town, or the city of Turin. Very happily, while the Lord Mayor and Aldermen were considering the matter the people had already begun to build. A most fortunate thing it was that the city rose again on its old lines, with its winding streets and narrow lanes."

The truth is, that if the wide avenues radiating from St. Paul's had been adopted, as proposed by Wren, there would have been no need to constantly destroy seventeenth century buildings in order to make the streets of sufficient width to accommodate the modern traffic. The great thoroughfares would have had more character and architectural beauty than they have to-day, when destruction of the old has to precede every improvement.

In the final chapter Mr. Besant gives a bright, though of course fragmentary, account of bourgeois life in the middle of the eighteenth century. It is pleasant to find the biographer of the Chaplain of the Fleet defending the character of the clergy of that day against the charges of slothfulness and worldliness usually made against them. He points out that, at a time when doctrinal orthodoxy was regarded as more important than it commonly is nowadays, the clergyman's first and most obvious duty was to preach. There was little philanthropic and educational work; not much visiting; no Bible classes, mothers' meetings, or magic-lantern lectures. But, per contra, the clergyman was a divine and a scholar. Nowadays he is neither.

"We have no divines now, and very few scholars among the parish clergy, or even among the bishops. Here and there one or two divines are found upon the episcopal bench and one or two at Oxford or Cambridge; in the parish churches none. We do not ask for divines or even for preachers; we want organisers, administrators, athletes, and singers. And the only reason for calling the time of George the Second a dead time for the Church seems to be that its clergy were not like our own."

No doubt the abuse of the Georgian clergy has been a little overdone, as Messrs. Abbey and Overton's interesting volumes clearly show. But Mr. Besant has tried to prove too much. The London clergy were not a fair sample for the whole body. In very few country towns, not to speak of villages, was daily service kept up as it was in London, where in nearly half the churches—14 out of 109—daily service was the rule. Parson Barnabas, Parson Trulliber, and Mr. Supple came from country parishes. The fox-hunting convivial parson was not a scholar or a divine, any more than is the average country vicar of to-day.

Readable as these later chapters are, they are necessarily incomplete and a little scrappy. There are great omissions. We get, for instance, little or no account of the play, the opera, the oratorio, the club, the gambling-hell, the prize-ring, and the bear-ring—all of which come fairly into Mr. Besant's design. The accounts of expenditure are new and interesting, though they would have been more valuable if exact particulars as to their origin and authenticity had been given. And, like the earlier chapters, these also contain some extraordinary slips. Mr. Besant must surely know that Taylor, the water-poet, did not live "a little later" than Lord Nelson, but nearly two centuries before him.

There is nothing in the title-page or preface to indicate that the work originally appeared in the pages of an Anglo-American monthly magazine, as I believe was the case. This omission may be in agreement with the common practice, but is surely hardly fair to the reader or the buyer.

The illustrations are numerous, and on the whole excellent. Many of them are reproductions of early and authentic woodcuts; but the sources are seldom indicated. If the origin and date had been added, the interior of the Red Bull Playhouse on p. 279—which is the well-known cut for Kirkman's Drolls (1672)—would hardly be given as an illustration of the strictly Tudor drama. The artists' names might have been mentioned.

There are a few misprints:—"Exported" (p. 192, l. 9 from the bottom) should be "imported." On p. 342, in the quotation from Trivia, "Carnavian" should be "Cornavian," as in the quarto edition of Gay (1720); though some of the later editions have "Carnavian."

F. RYLAND.

GERMAN CRITICISM OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

"HANDKOMMENTAR ZUM ALTEN TESTAMENT," herausgeg. von W. Nowack. I. Die Psalmen, von Fr. Baethgen. II. Das Buch Jesaja, von Bernh. Duhm. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.)

A PLAN for a new commentary on the Old Testament, thoroughly up to date in scholarship, will excite general interest among students. The programme adds, with an allusion to recent German expository works, that it will not be too elaborate for practical clergymen, and that it will neither hush up difficulties nor condescend to illegitimate scientific compromise. Two volumes of the series are now before us, and we can at any rate say that they are not written in the interests of any theological or critical school. The programme is no doubt carried out in some respects more fully by Duhm than by Baethgen; but in intention there is no difference between them. Both are good and conscientious historical theologians; but Duhm is the more mature and more consistent of the two. A few words must be said about this: to understand either scholar, we must know his antecedents. First, as to the commentator on the Psalms. Known originally as a fine Syriac scholar, he brought out in 1888 an archaeological and philological work on the Old Semitic names of God.* But he was no Dryasdust; he interspersed his really valuable notices of famous and obscure divinities with statements on the current controversy as to the history of Biblical religion. Here is a specimen. The writer is arguing that "in spite of his sometimes troubled faith, we are fully entitled to call David a monotheist." He remarks:

"For the justification of this, see especially Ps. xviii., which, in my opinion, is as certainly by David as Judges v. is by Deborah. Stade, it is true, decrees that David cannot have composed any Psalms, and it is my own conviction that most of the songs in our Psalter which bear the heading 'of David' come from other poets. But on external and internal grounds Ps. xviii. cannot well be denied to him."

He then proceeds to quote vv. 37-38 and 41-42 as in perfect harmony with the accounts of David's wars in Samuel, and remarks that "such a mode of thought does not, as Kuenen supposes, imply a low religious standpoint, as is clear from the noble words with which the Psalm opens; while the exclamation in v. 32 unconditionally excludes every form of polytheism." In other words, you may quote any part of Samuel that suits the Davidic authorship of the Psalm, and reject all those parts which conclusively prove that David was not a conscious believer in the God of prophetic religion. Elsewhere Baethgen expresses the opinion that the result which he has reached with regard to the divine name Shaddai will be "greedily caught up as a new argument for the post-Exilic origin of the so-called 'Grundschrift' and its complete untrustworthiness in questions of the history of religion." The work from which these quotations are made was written in 1888. We are bound, I think, to look with some suspicion on the results of the Psalm-criticism of such a writer.

And yet, beyond question, Prof. Baethgen has made progress since 1888. There is not a word of apologetics in the present volume. No attempt is made to prop up any doctrines; once only have I noticed a reference to the Christian Messiah. Indeed, a number of favourite proof-passages of theologians are at once removed by the nation-theory, of which the author has become almost too thorough a supporter. If it was a shock to the older orthodox divines to hear that shahath (Ps. xvi. 10) could not mean "corruption," what must it be to the present generation to be told that the speaker in Ps. xvi. is the people of Israel? But I must not enter at length into this subject, and will only add that Prof. Baethgen some years ago made an elaborate study of the fragments and compends of Theodore of Mopsuestia on the Psalms. Just as he swears by the versions in text-criticism, so he may almost be said to swear by Theodore in the interpretation of the Psalms; and I think that in both cases he is not as discriminating as could be wished. On the "higher criticism," too, he has presumably made progress since 1888. His present view of Ps. xviii. is certainly an improvement on that which he then put forward. He believes in an original Davidic "song of triumph," which, to use a significant Germanism, has been worked over. Not only the form but the contents of this supposed song have been seriously modified by a later writer, and it is difficult to see how the result can be called Davidic at all. No other certainly Davidic Psalm is admitted (though Baethgen states boldly that Psalms iii. and iv. may be David's work), and only thirty or forty Psalms are referred to the pre-Exilic period, among which neither Ps. ii. nor Ps. cx. is included. Four Psalms (among them Ps. ii. and cx.), and probably several more, are Maccabaeian. Some of the rest are Exilic, but most post-Exilic.

Ought not reasonable critics to be contented with this? it may be asked. Surely not. The author has not yet quite thrown off his educational prejudices. He has given up the traditional belief respecting "Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," but apparently retains fragments of the orthodox view of the religious state of Judah before the Exile. He can scarcely yet have done justice to the theory of the historical development of the religion of Israel, of which Kuenen is the greatest though not at all a perfect exponent. Thirty or forty pre-Exilic Psalms! But unless these Psalms have been so "worked over" as to be virtually post-Exilic, this seems (I speak modestly, out of deference to Prof. Davidson and his expected Old Testament Theology) historically impossible. Altogether, I recommend the book, but without that warmth of praise which I could have wished. The programme of the publisher is not fully carried out. Even those archaeological lights, which from the character of the Beiträge one might have expected, are wanting, while the ideas of the Psalter are greatly neglected. The Introduction is, no doubt, helpful; it presents multum in parvo. But even this is marred, not only by the author's half-hearted criticism (which is at present very pardonable), but by his inability to discuss matters with other scholars. Frankly, I must maintain that he ought either to have studied my own work on the origin and ideas of the Psalter, or to have abstained from criticising it. His criticism of Prof. Robertson Smith's view of the date of Psalms xlv., lxxiv., and lxxix. is also very inadequate. As a younger scholar, Prof. Baethgen was specially called upon to wait till he had time to digest his reading. It is a pleasure to me to add that, in a field in which he has before now proved his competence (the use of the versions in text-criticism), Prof. Baethgen shines, though even here a certain narrowness of view often prevents him from arriving at satisfactory results.

Prof. Duhm, who by his Theologie der Propheten (1875) proved his capacity alike for analytic and synthetic critical work, and his grasp of what was then a bold and revolutionary theory, is an older, and, one may say without offence, a riper exegete than Prof. Baethgen. I will not assert that his Isaiah is well adapted for busy clergymen, but at any rate he goes more into those points which interest the largest number of students. The historical and exegetical study of the Book of Isaiah is materially advanced by this masterly work. That it is in a high degree original, and therefore does much more than bring the student abreast of the generally received opinions of critics, cannot be denied. But this is the penalty which an editor has to pay for inviting the best scholars of the time to contribute to his series. And it may fairly be questioned whether the opposite plan, which would probably be adopted in a similar series in England, has not still greater disadvantages. For the traditional opinions of critics are continually being superseded; and to learn nothing but the generally received opinions is to be condemned at no distant date to go through the process of unlearning. Wisely, therefore, does the publisher in his programme speak of introducing the reader to the actual position of the problems of critical research; and if Prof. Duhm goes beyond even those who pass for advanced critics, yet, in the very act of doing so, he changes the position of the problems. The programme of the publisher is in my opinion fully carried out by Prof. Duhm, though I willingly admit that the student of Isaiah cannot dispense with the moderating influences of a more cautiously progressive work, like Dillmann's recent commentary.

One of the best tests of the critical capacity of a commentator is his attitude towards Isaiah xl.-lxvi. To treat these chapters as a continuous work, written at the same period and from the same religious standpoint, was only defensible as an exaggerated protest against the extreme disintegration of some too bold critics. I have had the pleasure of noticing within the last few years how widely diffused the sense of this truth has become. But no such comprehensive and thorough examination of Isaiah xl.-lxvi. has yet been produced as that which we have here. In his Theologie des Propheten we can only trace a few slight germs of Duhm's present theory. He recognises that chapters xl.-lxvi. do not by any means form a symmetrical whole. The ideas of chaps. xl.-xlviii. are less developed than those of chaps. xlix.-lv.; and it is not impossible, according to Duhm in 1875, that the passages on the Servant of Yahvé (xlii. 1-7, xlix. 1-6, l. 4-9, lii. 13, liii. 12), proceed from an older writing, of the age, perhaps, of Jeremiah. Chapters lvi.-lix, have certain peculiarities of their own, for the explanation of which reference is made to Ewald. Chapter lx. forms a provisional close of the book, which is expanded, and to some extent superseded by chaps. lxi.-lxvi. Now, however, Duhm can indicate the work of three distinct writers in these concluding chapters of the traditional Isaiah. The oldest is the so-called Deutero-Isaiah, who wrote about B.C. 540, and probably lived near the Lebanon: he is the author of chaps. xl.-lv. (exclusive of the later insertions). From a later, and no doubt a post-Exilic writer, come the metrical passages on the Servant of Yahvè (xlii. 1-5, xlix. 1-6, l. 4-9, lii. 13, liii. 12). These pieces have points of contact with the Deutero-Isaiah as well as with Jeremiah and the book of Job, but were not known to the Deutero-Isaiah, since he makes no reference or allusion to them. Still later is the author of the third writing (chaps. lvi.-lxvi.) who may be called the Trito-Isaiah. The two halves of this work (chaps. lvi.-lx. and lxi.-lxvi.) appear to have been transposed by the editor of the composite work (Isa. xl.-lxvi.). The Trito-Isaiah lived and wrote in Jerusalem shortly before the public life of Nehemiah.

* Beiträge zur semitischen Religionsgeschichte (reviewed by Prof. Sayce in the ACADEMY of November 10, 1888.)

Prof. Duhm is equally keen and still more startling in his criticism of Isa. i.-xxxv. He holds that these chapters include very late additions, some of which were made at the close of the second century B.C. I will not take up space here with specifying them. Though much less advanced than Duhm, I find myself often in virtual agreement with him; notably I am struck by the extent to which our observations coincide in chap. xix. It will be easy for reviewers to quarrel with the author; but the most conscientious of them will acknowledge that in keenness of insight Prof. Duhm surpasses all his predecessors, and that for every objection which does not relate to fundamental critical principles he has a reply which cannot be treated with contempt. We in England are, no doubt, accustomed to call such criticism "subjective"; but we are each of us in turn compelled to make terms with "subjective criticism," and some of us have found out before now that duly regulated "subjectivity" is an essential quality of every able critic. Certainly a prepared student of Isaiah may learn more from the present work than from any of the previous commentaries, not only in exegesis but in criticism, and not only in questions of date and authorship but in the correction of the text (largely dictated by considerations of metre). One of the best specimens of his criticism will be found in Isa. iv. To some extent he defends this against Stade—i.e., he declines to strike out vv. 5, 6, as a post-Exilic addition; but this is only because he is prepared to assign the whole of the chapter from v. 2 onwards to a later editor. The words, "for upon all glory is a (nuptial) canopy," are a still later insertion, presupposing the view that Yahvè is Israel's bridegroom, and the late reading וברא (for וברא). In v. 6a Duhm follows the Septuagint, giving an adequate explanation of the interpretation in our text. Among minor suggestions, perhaps that on liii. 9b deserves special mention.

He reads צַדִּיק, rendering not "oppressor," but "deceiver" (from צָדַק, defraudavit).

T. K. CHEYNE.

NEW NOVELS.

Children of the Ghetto. By I. Zangwill. In 3 vols. (Heinemann.)

The Medicine Lady. By L. T. Meade. In 3 vols. (Cassells.)

Sir Godfrey's Granddaughters. By Rosa Nouchette Carey. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

A Family Likeness. A Sketch in the Himalayas. By B. M. Croker. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Orchardcroft. By Elsa D'Esterro Keeling. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Malbournians. By Francis Adams. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

Sybil Trevelyan. By Lyndon (Mrs. Reginald Hughes). (New York: Wurd & Drummond.)

Far from To-day. By Gertrude Hall. (Boston, U.S.A.: Roberts.)

MR. ZANGWILL'S first three-volume novel proves that he has other endowments besides humour, either of the old or the new kind. Indeed, Children of the Ghetto is rather deficient in humour of any kind, the only episode with a genuine smile in it being the ineffectual love-making of a young Hebrew who manifests a quite unhebraic timidity and shyness, and comes to grief by failing to take to heart the maxim "faint heart never won fair lady." Of late years the Jew has been increasingly en vogue in English fiction. George Eliot in Daniel Deronda, and Mr. Hall Caine in The Rector, have treated him from the outside in a romantic and idealising fashion. The author of Violet Moses, a clever but rather cynical book published some two years ago, seemed to write from the inside as one native and to the manner born; but in intimacy of knowledge and unrelenting realism of handling, Mr. Zangwill leaves his predecessors far behind him. Dutch painting has a method which is, when rightly employed, interesting and attractive; but its elaborate verisimilitude is apt to be wearisome when applied to the details of a life with which we are altogether unfamiliar, because the spectator's pleasure in homely realistic art depends very largely on his ability to compare the representation with the thing represented. Mr. Zangwill has hardly laid this consideration sufficiently to heart, and in many portions of Children of the Ghetto the wood of narrative is hidden by the leafage of information: we feel that what we are reading is hardly a novel, but a clever treatise on the minutiae of manner and custom among the Jewish poor of London, illustrated by sketches of imaginary typical characters. Pope's advice, "In every work regard the writer's end," is, however, sensible as well as just; and in Mr. Zangwill's book the picture of Jewish life is the main thing, while the story is altogether subordinate. He has taken pains that the Hebraic effect shall not be weakened or confused by the introduction of an alien element. On a rough estimate we are introduced to about fifty men, women, and children, and there is not a Gentile among them. We do not remain all the time in the Ghetto, for in the drawing-room of Mrs. Henry Goldsmith we breathe an atmosphere of painful respectability; but it is respectability with a Hebrew difference, and the difference is not made to seem a pleasant one. That a Jewish club should have given Mr. Zangwill a banquet in recognition of his services to the race, surprises us, though some may think that his warning against the narrowing effect of separatist traditions is very good service indeed. But this is dangerous ground. The matter in hand is the literary quality of Mr. Zangwill's novel, and this is decidedly good. His materials are not always well digested, but in the main he manages to achieve the effect at which he aims, and this is the really important thing.

Mrs. Meade's story is a rather striking and also rather depressing example of the "medicated novel," a kind of book to which, it will be remembered, Dr. O. W. Holmes's old lady friend expressed such a very strong objection. The heroine is a young woman with a somewhat unbalanced judgment, an uncomfortably alert conscience, and a morbidly excitable nervous system: just the sort of person who, if she wishes to preserve her mental equilibrium, ought not to burden herself with the weight of a great responsibility. Of course the one thing which she ought not to do is the one thing that she does, and the result of her doing it is to make A Medicine Lady one of the most harrowing of recent novels. Cecilia Harvey, who has many claims to be described, not sarcastically but honestly, as a beautiful soul, begins her melancholy life very appropriately by mistaking her vocation. She becomes a hospital nurse, and is dismissed from her post because a sudden failure of nerve endangers the life of a little patient to whom she is devotedly attached. This incident brings her into contact with Dr. Digby, a rising young man from whom great things are expected in the medical world; and early in the story Digby and Cecilia are married. He is an English Koch, who is working his way to a discovery of the cure of consumption by inoculation; but he is accidentally killed before his discovery is perfected, and he leaves behind him a solemn charge that his papers and his lymph are to be either destroyed or placed in the hands of a medical colleague. Poor Cecilia's feverish anxiety to do the right thing prompts her first to one course and then to the other; and finally, becoming aware that she is herself in the first stage of consumption, she resolves that she will make personal trial of the remedy and let her action be determined by the result. In a few weeks her alarming symptoms pass away, and she becomes stronger than she has ever been before; and being convinced that she has in her possession a remedial agency of proved efficacy and inestimable value, she begins quietly among the poor of her neighbourhood the work by which she earns the title of "the medicine lady." Of course, in the end her husband's fears are abundantly justified. Some of her patients are cured, but others are killed; and when she realises that her own child is among the victims of her temerity, the over-wrought brain gives way, and she walks through the crowd of women who are cursing and stoning her with "a smile upon her face, an insane light in her eyes." Such a story is a gratuitously harrowing enforcement of the moral that "a little learning is a dangerous thing"; but, apart from its dismalness, A Medicine Lady is a clever and attractive novel. The villainous Dr. Phillips, who tries to steal Digby's secret, is the only character who is obviously unsatisfactory; and from the villains of ordinary fiction no sensible person expects much in the way of vraisemblance.

After the perusal of the third volume of Mrs. Meade's book, one naturally wants to be soothed, and Sir Godfrey's Granddaughters is pre-eminently soothing. There is nothing "intense" about the book; it is simply a quiet story of the life of rural gentlepeople who "act as sich," and the substance of the novel is well matched by the cultivated refinement of Miss Carey's literary style. As, however, the above sentences may read like a politely disguised imputation of dullness, it must be added that there is plenty of interest, though it is the interest given by delicately truthful characterisation rather than by exciting sequence of events. Sir Godfrey's ill-conditioned obstinacy in insisting that Gerda shall marry the man whom he has chosen for her instead of the man whom she has chosen for herself, and the late conversion of the Skimpoleau Julius, are possibly a little overdone; but where everything else is so good, Miss Carey must be allowed the benefit of a very shadowy doubt. The vicar, whose ascetic standard of duty makes him a domestic tyrant in spite of himself, has freshness as well as truth of portraiture, and there are half a dozen of Miss Carey's characters who are not one whit less excellent. Sir Godfrey's Granddaughters is certainly one of the pleasantest of recent contributions to domestic fiction; it is not lacking in humour, and there are passages of true and unstrained pathos.

Indian novels may be roughly divided into stories of mutiny horrors and hill-station scandals; and as Mrs. Croker's book deals with neither, it has the virtue of freshness. Nor is it a solitary virtue, for A Family Likeness is in every way a likeable book, strong in character and incident, brisk in narrative, and not lacking in pleasant humour. Mrs. Croker always had in her the root of the matter; but her early books were somewhat shapeless, and they gave one the impression that she had not acquired perfect command of her materials. This difficulty has been surmounted; and A Family Likeness is a really workmanlike performance, with a beginning, a middle, and an end, all in their places and in due proportion. Juliet Carwithen, whose remarkable likeness to the portrait of a remote ancestress provides the novel with its keystone, is the daughter of a man who for reasons of his own has never acknowledged her existence, and has hidden her away in an obscure village on the Himalayan slope.

Here she is discovered by that pleasantly young fellow, Gerald Romilly, who has fallen in love with the face on the canvas, and who very properly transfers his affection from the Juliet of paint to the Juliet of flesh and blood. The love story of course provides the book with its centre of interest, and is a very good story of its kind; but the accessories in the shape of sketches of out-of-the-way life in India are the real attraction of a very bright and interesting novel.

Miss Keeling's Orchardcroft is a very pleasant story of two children who were raised from the slums to a most desirable and un-slumlike position—one by the happy accident of adoption, the other by the force of native genius. It need hardly be said that in the end they get married and live happily ever afterwards; but it must be set down that, in the course of her progress to this desirable consummation, Miss Keeling makes manifest—not for the first time—her skill in the truthful and sympathetic delineation of the simplicities of life, especially of the life of the poor and of little children. The early chapters are decidedly the best because the least conventional, but the book is attractive from first to last.

I suppose I am right in inferring that the author of The Melbournians is the same Mr. Francis Adams who has recently been showing to Mrs. Humphry Ward, Mr. Hardy, and Mr. Caine the error of their ways in the matter of novel-writing. If he be so, they have their revenge, for their enemy has written a book; and it is not a book which any human being in his senses would think of preferring to Robert Elsmere, Tess, or The Deemster. The story is a very loose-jointed affair, the characters are either unsubstantial or unattractive, and Mr. Adams's literary tastes, as indicated by the style of The Melbournians, seem to oscillate between fine writing and flippancy. Of one of his young women we read that "She seemed a sort of moon, with pure and benignant light, and we all remember that the moon is the heavenly Diana whose one little amorous weakness was for a shepherd boy, who slept (and perchance even snored a little) through all the discreet infliction of her kisses."

There is no humour in this kind of thing: it is not even smart; it has simply the vulgarity which young men and women who write in amateur magazines mistake for cleverness. Indeed, The Melbournians is an eminently youthful book, and the pity is that its youthfulness is not of a more pleasing sort.

Sybil Trevyllian is a perfectly irreproachable story, and, like not a few irreproachable books and people, it strikes one as being a little dull. The writing is easy and correct; the young people to whom the book is mainly devoted are natural and lifelike (though the utter prostration of Lorrie by Nixie's faithlessness is surely overdone); and the supply of quiet incident is well maintained; but there is a certain indescribable lack of vivacity which keeps the interest of the reader at a depressingly low temperature. This is a pity, for it is a novel which for various reasons one would like to praise with some heartiness.

The six stories in the dainty volume entitled Far from To-Day are of imagination all compact. The American short tales, which have of late attained a wide and well-deserved popularity in this country, have not been lacking in this vitalising quality; but the art of Mrs. Slosson and Miss Wilkins is that of imaginative realism, while that of Miss Gertrude Hall is that of imaginative romance: theirs is the work of impassioned observation, hers of impassioned invention. There is in her book a fine, delicate fantasy that reminds one of Hawthorne in his sweetest moods; and while Hawthorne had certain gifts which are all his own, the new writer exhibits a certain winning tenderness in which he was generally deficient. The second story in the book, for example, has, like Transformation, a faun for its central figure; and while Sylvanus is less impressive than Donatello, he is more tenderly and familiarly human. In the domain of pure romance it is long since we have had anything so rich in simple beauty as is the work which is to be found between the covers of Far from To-Day.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

RECENT LITERATURE.

Memoirs of Eighty Years. By Gordon Hake, Physician. (Bentley.) The long life of which this volume is the record began on March 10, 1809, when the writer was born at Leeds, the son of a father of remotely German lineage. His mother (her nephew was the celebrated General Charles Gordon)—a lady who was accustomed to style such members of her father's family as were in trade "the scum of the earth"—was, according to the testimony of her son, "the most emotional woman that I ever had the pleasure of knowing." The greater part of his school days were spent at Christ's Hospital, and he presents a melancholy picture of the life and educational methods of the place:—"It was a sort of Russian system—every official, every monitor was a spy, and the steward was a willing knout, a creature emotional as a reptile, servile as a dog, and as a cat cruel." On leaving school, he commenced his professional studies under Thomas Hodgson, the friend of Sir Astley Cooper, passing in 1827 to London, where he studied anatomy under Caesar Hawkins in Great Windmill-street, and chemistry under Faraday and Brand in the Royal Institution. Then, after a visit to the Scottish universities, he started for the continent, and remained for about a year in Florence, there making the acquaintance of Trelawny, Landor, Kirkup, and many other persons of note. On his return, Dr. Hake settled in Brighton, acting for five years as physician to the dispensary; and we have brief references to the celebrities of the place. Then came a residence at Bury St. Edmunds, and such personalities as the Duke of Norfolk, the Marquis of Bristol, Sir George and Sir Charles Napier, and Sir Charles Lyell flit across his pages; and we have recollections of George Borrow, which are among the best things in the book. Next, in 1854, he visited America, and at Boston lectured on scientific subjects. It was in 1871 that he first met Rossetti, a warm admirer of his verse, and he speedily became a chosen friend of the brilliant circle of the poet-painter. For a time his son acted as Rossetti's secretary, and later, Dr. Hake's professional skill and devoted companionship did much to comfort the artist's last years of declining health. In 1873 he again started for the continent, studying art and writing verses in Italy, and more recently he has resided in St. John's Wood. Considering the varied nature of Dr. Hake's life, and the hosts of eminent men with whom he has been brought into contact, we should have certainly expected more of interest in the present volume, pictures of personalities more graphic and unforgettable than any it contains, anecdotes of greater point and significance. The author states that "in writing these memoirs, a love of my fellows has dominated my pen, as it does, always, in what I compose for serious perusal"; yet his estimates of his contemporaries are by no means always of a genial kind. Landor "was not a nice man; he was violent in his conversation"; Thackeray "was a very disagreeable companion to those who did not want to boast that they knew him"; Lawrence (sic) Oliphant had "such amiability of countenance as to leave little room for intellectual expression." We must, however, remember that the book has been written at the age of eighty-three, under the pressure of severe bodily suffering; and if we would receive the best that Dr. Hake has to give us, we must turn to his work in verse, which has won for him a distinctive and an honourable place among the poets of our time. A closer revision of the proof-sheets of the volume would have removed some irritating inaccuracies. Stobbs' figures as "Stobbs' Castle" and as "Stobbs' House"; "Bread-albine" is given as the name of a place on more pages than the errata correct; and at page 176 a Vandyck portrait in the Angerstein collection is ascribed to Rembrandt; while again, on page 61, one of the recent additions to the National Gallery, elegantly described by Dr. Hake as "a Charles the King on a cart-horse" is styled "a preposterous Rembrandt," the information being added that Rembrandt paints "only grace."

Recollections of George Butler. By Josephine E. Butler. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.) It is fitting that the Life of so saintly a man as the late Canon Butler should be written, and it is by her who knew him best that this labour of love has been performed. To compare this book with Lucy Hutchinson's memoirs of her husband naturally occurs to the reader. The resemblance is indeed a striking one, not only between the subjects of each biography, but also between the biographers. The same deep religious spirit and devotion to husband characterises the pages of both. A nation which produces many such wives and mothers as Lucy Hutchinson and Josephine Butler must be both great and happy. George Butler himself was a remarkable man. Lord Coleridge in writing to his widow thanks God for "such a friend." Mr. Froude, after an unbroken friendship of fifty years, describes him as "true, frank, faithful in all his ways." There is, in fact, a genius for friendship in the Butler family. The grandfather of the Canon was the Rev. Weeden Butler, the assistant in his literary and clerical work of Dr. Dodd. In some last lines written in prison, "the unfortunate Dr. Dodd" speaks of—

"Butler, the only faithful friend."

Weeden Butler stood by his side at Tyburn, and on the following night carried his body to Cowley, and there had it buried. Strange to say, the last sermon Canon Butler preached was on "The Sacredness of Friendship," the hereditary virtue of his family. His father, Dr. George Butler, was head master of Harrow during a memorable time, and could reckon Byron and Peel among his pupils. "There goes Byron straggling up the hill like a ship in a storm, without rudder or compass." The speaker was Mrs. Drury, the wife of "Old Harry," and the hill Harrow Hill—the hill of Charles II.'s "church visible." George Butler, the eldest of the family, was a Harrow boy, but not under his father. In 1838 he went up to Trinity, Cambridge. His stay there was brief, and it was at Oxford that he maintained in the "schools" the family traditions of brilliant scholarship. On January 8, 1852, he married Miss Josephine Grey, daughter of John Grey, of Dilston. The young married couple spent five years at Oxford, and their quiet life there is well described in Chapter V. —a charming piece of biography, not only reflecting the critical spirit of the university, but the religious spirit of the writer.

"Some painting of Raphael was being discussed and criticised. I said I found the face insipid. 'Insipid! Of course, it must be,' said a distinguished college tutor; 'a woman's face when engaged in prayer could never wear any other expression than that of insipidity.' 'What?' I asked; 'when one converses with a man of high intelligence and noble soul, if there be any answering chord in one's own mind, does one's expression immediately become insipid? Does it not rather beam with increased intelligence and exalted thought? And how much more if one converses face to face with the highest intelligence of all! Then every faculty of the mind and emotion of the soul is called to its highest exercise.'"

The late Canon and his wife looked at things solely from the Christian point of view. They believed that some day every wrong would be set right, for the simple reason that Christ said it would be so. They would come to no terms of any kind with evil. "Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not?"—these words might fitly be applied to the subject of this work. To have acted differently in a certain notable agitation would, in his opinion, have been conduct worthy of the priest and the Levite, who, seeing a brother fallen, robbed and wounded, passed by on the other side. Canon Butler was nothing if not fearless. Admitting, therefore, the rectitude of his conduct, some critics have asked whether his wife has exercised a sound discretion in referring to this painful matter. In our opinion, Mrs. Butler had no other alternative. A biographer must tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. To have omitted an account of the work to which George Butler devoted the best years of his life would have given an incomplete view of his character. As to Mrs. Butler's treatment of the question, nothing could be more judicious. We have rarely seen a better specimen of how to say it than the pages devoted to her husband's part in the great moral crusade. No one knew better than Canon Butler the truth of the adage about all work and no play. Here we have a glimpse of the Sage of Chelsea:

"Froude is very well. He and I were playing lawn tennis yesterday in the square, when old Carlyle came round to take him for a drive in an omnibus, which he does about three times a week. Froude hid himself behind the bushes, and the old philosopher, unable to see him anywhere, retired, and we continued our game."

Seeing how widely George Butler and Mr. Froude differed on many important subjects, Mrs. Butler naturally asked herself what might be the foundation of so strong a friendship. Some light was thrown on the matter during their stay with Mr. Froude in the summer of 1876. Her husband and her host were for a long time in deep converse, which she happened to overhear. Their topic was not politics nor literature, but flies for fishing. There was an "out-of-door" friendship. This book can be recommended as the story of a well-spent life well told.

Echoes of Old County Life. By J. K. Fowler. (Arnold.) The present fashion, that every old man (sometimes old woman as well) should write Reminiscences or Recollections, bids fair ere long to become a literary nuisance. Mr. Fowler's Echoes must be honourably excepted. He is not so much a collector of gossip and old society scandals, as a faithful witness of manners and customs during the second and third quarters of the century. He trusts that these sketches may possess "an historical value, depicting as they do a series of events—social, sporting, literary, agricultural, and political—which stirred many thousands of minds in the middle of the nineteenth century." The Macaulay of the future will find much that is noteworthy in his memories of elections before and after the Reform Bill, in the humours of the "blooms" of sixty years ago in their inns or the hunting field, in his reminiscences of assize courts, boards of guardians, prison discipline, and the like. From his connexion with the old "White Hart" Inn at Aylesbury and the Prebendal Farm, Mr. Fowler was naturally brought into close relations with a large number of men remarkable in politics or social estimation, and his anecdotes are well told and sufficiently amusing. It is only to be expected that a few should be ben trovato or hackneyed, and Bishop Wilberforce forms an inviting personality on whom all tellers of good things may father their productions. Mr. Fowler recalls seeing Sir Walter Scott at Aylesbury, and not many live who remember the late Lord Granville and Lord Kinnaird as Masters of the Buck-hounds. There is an interesting account of the Rochester Room in the "White Hart," which was pulled down in 1864, and which was the scene not only of the feasting of many a gay company, followed by many high jinks, but also of the grey horse's feat in 1851 of clearing at a bound the table in it when laid for dinner. The anecdotes of Count d'Orsay are amusing, but every one will turn with most delight to the two chapters on Disraeli, who honoured Mr. Fowler with his friendship. Never ill-natured, and with not a word to hurt either the feelings of the living or the friends of the dead, these Echoes of Old County Life are genial, festive, amusing, and cannot fail to delight both young and old.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish, early in the new year, Memoirs of My Indian Career, by the late Sir George Campbell. It will be in two volumes, illustrated with a portrait and a map.

MESSRS. LONGMANS announce a new book, by the Rev. Thomas Mozley, to be entitled The Creed or a Philosophy.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNEY will publish, in the first week of January, a short biography of Robert Lowe, Viscount Sherbrooke, dealing specially with his career at Sydney. It is written by Mr. J. F. Hogan, author of "The Irish in Australia."

His Honour Judge O'Connor Morris has in the press two military biographies: a volume on Napoleon in the "Heroes" series of Messrs. Putnam's, to appear immediately after Christmas; and a critical sketch of Moltke, which will be published by Messrs. Ward & Downey in the spring.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS announce an edition, in four volumes, of Mr. Charles Reade's masterpiece, The Cloister and the Hearth, with an introduction by Mr. Walter Besant. Each volume will have a frontispiece.

THE new volume of the "Gentleman's Magazine Library," which Mr. Elliot Stock announces for immediate publication, will be the third in the section on Topography, dealing with the counties of Derby, Dorset, and Devon.

MESSRS. W. G. BACON & Co. have just completed a new Library and Commercial Atlas and Gazetteer of the World, containing 40 entirely new maps, 100 new inset maps, index to 60,000 names of places, with the latest populations from official sources, descriptive letter-press, diagrams, tables of statistics, &c.

THE Equitable Publishing Company have in the press a book entitled Hand-Cuffed, a series of detective stories related by Inspector Maurice Moser, and written by Mr. Charles F. Rideal.

THE next volume of the Scott Library, to be published in January, will be a Selection of the Essays of Montaigne, with a prefatory note by Mr. Percival Chubb.

A WHITE marble monument has been sent to Alicante, to be erected over the tomb of the late Prof. Freeman. It bears the following inscription:

"To the pious memory of Edward Augustus Freeman, who enshrined in letters for all time the early history of England, the Norman Conquest, and the destinies of Sicily. Fired with a zeal for topographical research, he was struck down in the midst of a journey in Spain by sudden sickness, and died there March 16, 1892."

MR. ARTHUR L. SALMON contributes a study of Chatterton's poetry to the December number of Poet-Lore, in which he somewhat discountenances the "Chatterton Superstition."

DON EDUARDO SAAVEDRA has put forth an important Estudio sobre la Invasión de los Arabes en España. (Madrid.) He gives maps and records of the first nine campaigns of the Moors, from 711 to 715.

MR. E. W. B. NICHOLSON has been encouraged to issue two more of his series of "Bodleian Facsimile Reprints" (London: Bernard Quaritch). One is of special interest at the present time: it is a photolithograph of the Latin version (Paris, 1493) of the famous letter of Columbus announcing his discovery of the New World. The other—though in appearance only a slip of white-brown paper with a black-letter imprint—is yet more curious. For it is the first bookseller's advertisement that is known to have been issued in England, being a statement that certain liturgical works are to be obtained at Caxton's place of business in Westminster. The date is probably 1477. By a curious coincidence, it happens that this same Advertisement is also reproduced in facsimile, as an illustration to a paper on the Althorp Library, in the current number of Northamptonshire Notes and Queries (Elliot Stock). The Althorp copy of the Advertisement has an interpretation in modern handwriting of the note—supplico stet cedula—"Pray, do not pull down the advertisement"—which MS. inscription the writer of the paper absurdly supposes to be an instruction to the bookbinder. We believe that these two copies of the Advertisement—in the Bodleian and in the Althorp Library—are the only ones known to be in existence.

THE Public Schools Year Book (Sonnenschein)—which is now in its fourth year of publication—contains some new features of interest in an appendix. Among these, we may mention the public schools bibliography, and the classified list of public schoolboys in the new Parliament. It appears that Eton has no less than 112 representatives, of whom 97 are Unionists, while St. Paul's has only one. We must protest, with all our force, against the reprehensible practice of mixing up the advertisements with the text; it is hardly possible to tell where the one leaves off and the other begins.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES

India—a monthly journal which has, for the last three years, been the organ of the National Congress—will begin a new series with the January number, under the editorship of Mr. H. Morse Stephens, lecturer on Indian history at Cambridge. Henceforth, there will be two parts: one mainly political, containing leading articles, selections from the Indian press, reports of proceedings in Parliament, &c.; the other mainly literary, giving original papers by writers of authority, reviews of new books, and a bibliography of all publications of the previous month on Indian subjects, with a summary of the contents of magazine articles. The object of the editor is to give expression to all the ideas—political, social, economic, literary, artistic, and scientific—which, under English guidance, are gradually but surely welding all the peoples of the vast Indian peninsula into a united nation. It may be worth adding that the annual subscription is just the same number of rupees in India as shillings in England.

THE January number of the Antiquary will begin a twenty-seventh volume. The programme for the year announces the continuation of several series: such as quarterly reports on new discoveries of Romano-British antiquities, by Mr. F. Haverfield; illustrated articles on excavations in Crete, by Prof. F. Halbherr, of Rome; "Old Stone Monuments of North Wales," by the late H. H. Lines; and "Archæology in Provincial Museums," by various writers. Mr. W. H. St. John Hope will report upon the results of excavations at Silchester; Dr. Munro, of Edinburgh, upon the further exploration of the Glastonbury lake village; and there will also be an account of the important work to be undertaken at Hadrian's Wall. Among individual contributors, Lord Dillon will write upon "Mediæval Artillery," and "The Real Sir Henry Lee of Woodstock"; Mr. Edward Peacock upon "Gainsborough During the Civil War"; Mr. J. E. Micklethwaite, upon "Sacrament Houses," with illustrations; and Mr. G. L. Gomme, upon "Municipal Antiquities." Prof. Hübner, of Berlin, has also promised to contribute. Altogether, we feel justified in saying that the Antiquary has entered upon a new lease of life, under the editorship of the Rev. Dr. J. Charles Cox.

THE Century for January will contain an article on Whittier by Miss Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, with a frontispiece portrait; and a paper entitled "An Illustrator of Dickens," by Mr. Arthur Allechin. This is a slight biography of Hablot K. Browne, the originator of Mr. Micawber; and, in addition to some unpublished Dickensiana, will give numerous specimens of the artist's work, including a portrait. Mark Twain also will contribute a story called "The £1,000,000 Bank-note."

THE forthcoming number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review will open with a set of Persian and Arabic verses, printed entirely in golden letters, in praise of the Kaiser-i-Hind, and also giving as a chronogram the year 1893. This is followed by a translation into Hindustani of "God save the Queen!" Another curiosity will be several letters from Nizam-ul-Mulk of Chitral, who, according to the latest news, seems to have established himself as de facto ruler of that remote region. Among other articles will be: "Russianised Officialism in India," by Sir William Wedderburn; "A Chinese View of the Opium Question"; "The Monetary Conference and the Currency Commission," by Mr. A. C. Tupp, late accountant-general to the Bombay government; "The Yellow Men of India," by Mr. Charles Johnston; "The Salagrama, or Holy Stone of India and Italy," by Mr. Charles G. Leland; and "A Marriage Custom of the Aborigines of Bengal," by Mr. Sidney Harland. African and colonial questions also receive attention.

THE chief feature in the January number of St. Nicholas will be an illustrated story by Mr. Rudyard Kipling, entitled "The Potted Princess."

THE January number of the Reliquary will contain: the first of a series of illustrated articles on the Pre-Conquest Churches in the old kingdom of Northumbria, by Mr. C. C. Hodges, of Hexham; a paper on the Barber-Surgeons' Company of Chester, by Mr. H. Taylor, being one of a series on the Trade Guilds of Chester; a paper on the Hermitages in Worcestershire, by Mr. J. Noake; and another, illustrated, by Mr. J. Lewis André, on Hindolvestone Church, Norfolk, the tower of which unfortunately fell last August, demolishing the greater part of the edifice.

THE Newbery House Magazine for January will contain the following articles:—"The Necessity for Amended Legislation in dealing with Habitual Drunkards," by Sir Dyce Duckworth; "Old Age Pensions and Friendly Societies," by the Rev. J. Frome Wilkinson; "The Lords' Report on Hospitals," by Mr. B. Burford Rawlings; and "A Few Words about the New English Dictionary," by a Sub-Editor. Canon Furse's speech delivered at a meeting of the E. C. U., on the Past of the Church of England, is also reproduced in article form.

MR. KARL BLIND will treat, in the forthcoming number of the United Service Magazine, of "Russia's Truest Aim in Asia"—that is, of the steadily pursued policy of the Czars to approach the frontiers of India, and to bring about the overthrow of the Asiatic empire of England.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE Rev. Dr. J. R. Lumby has been unanimously elected to be Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, in succession to the late Dr. Hort. The Norrisian chair of divinity, which Dr. Lumby has occupied since 1879, thus becomes vacant. The appointment is vested in the heads of houses.

MR. S. R. GARDINER—whose present fellowship at All Souls is, we believe, honorary—has been elected a fellow of Merton College, Oxford, under the statute authorising the election of persons eminent in literature or science, with a view to the prosecution of their researches.

DR. WALTER LEAF has been nominated by the crown to the senate of the University of London. Meanwhile, the vacancy caused by the death of Lord Sherbrooke falls to be filled up from among scientific graduates by Convocation; and the day fixed for voting is Tuesday, January 17. There are three candidates in the field; Dr. J. W. Collins, Mr. H. G. Howse, and Mr. A. W. Bennett, representatives of medicine, surgery, and science.

THE Association for the Promotion of a Professional University for London was to hold a general meeting on Wednesday of this week, to receive a report from the executive committee. The substance of the report is an account of a meeting held on December 7 between the executive committee and a special committee of the Senate of London University, as a result of which the Vice-Chancellor (Sir James Paget) stated that, in his opinion, there was a general agreement in the aims of the two bodies. Prof. Karl Pearson has resigned the secretaryship of the association, and is succeeded by Prof. Weldon.

UNDER the new statutes of Aberdeen University, the chairs of logic and English literature, both hitherto filled by Prof. W. Minto, will be separated; and Prof. Minto has announced his intention of remaining professor of English. Some of his old pupils, to the number of over 350, have taken the opportunity to present him with an address of congratulation, from which we take the following extract:—

"You taught us that the study of English was as interesting and certainly as serious as the study of any language. From you we learned to value the great heritage of our tongue and to cultivate what, because it was familiar, we had neglected. In literature you opened to us new worlds. It was on your introduction that to many of us books first became friends and English literature a companion."

We are asked to call attention to the existence, in connexion with University College, Gower-street, of an Old Students' Association, whose members meet informally once in each term with a view to renewing old acquaintanceships and seeing something of the present life of the college. The president this year is Prof. Carey Foster; Prof. Henry Morley is vice-president, and Prof. Hill treasurer.

THE January number of Good Words has an in memoriam notice of Richard Lewis Nettleship, written by his schoolfellow, the Rev. H. D. Rawnsley, and illustrated with a portrait. It gives some details about his few last days in Switzerland.

THE PRESENT ASPECT OF THE LONDON UNIVERSITY PROBLEM.

To some of our readers it may seem that any discussion of the London university problem at the present moment is idle. We have for the time being a Government in power which is supported by so small a majority, and yet has so much difficult legislation in hand, that it is very unlikely to consider any scheme of university reform which does not please all parties. But no scheme can possibly be devised by the ingenuity of man which can satisfy the higher educational needs of London, the commercialism of some of the medical schools, the pragmatical claims of Convocation, the gubernatorial instincts of the lay councils, and the marketplace demands of "extension" enthusiasts. To grant a Charter or to carry a Bill which would provide a really great university for London, means to snub, and snub thoroughly, one or more of these groups of aspirants to academic power. This might be accomplished by a Government just entering office with a large majority at its back, or by a retiring Government fully conscious that its chance at the hustings was nil; but from a Government which has to count every vote, there is no hope of any near solution of our university problem. It may, perhaps, be suggested, that the Government will simply adopt the suggestions of the present Royal Commission. This would certainly be a safe policy for the Government, if the Commissioners had been such that their judgment would be really authoritative with the public. We fear, however, that the Commission is a weak one as compared either with the previous Commission,* or with that of the Duke of Devonshire's on technical education; and a weak Commission is almost certain to seek refuge in compromises, alienating all enthusiastic support in the hope of radically offending nobody. The Government, for its own peace of mind, will probably shelve any report the Commission may make; and if the report be of the nature of a compromise, shelved and disregarded it will remain for all time.

In reality, if we look at the political outlook, there appears small chance for some time to come of academical reform in London being taken in hand by any Government. The breathing space which the rejection of the Gresham charter has thus given to the friends of higher education, might well be used to familiarise the public with the highest ideal of university organisation and the special degrees of competency and incompetency in our present teaching institutions. From this standpoint the present Commission may do yeoman's service, if it speaks out plainly what it thinks about: (1) the fight between the medical schools of London and of the North for the privilege of manufacturing the general practitioner; (2) the assertions of the Extensionists, that their teaching constitutes the "democratic" university of the future, and the one that is especially needful for London; (3) the due fulfilment of the trusts which have been assigned to the lay councils, not with the view of clothing them with a little brief authority, but with the hope that those trusts might be developed in the true interests of higher education; and (4) the real value of Convocations and Congregations of graduates in the management of university affairs.

It is, perhaps, too much to urge that the Commission should endeavour to get a great scheme on to the statute book, leaving its complete realisation to be deferred until Burlington-gardens and the colleges choose to drop into the places assigned to them. That, indeed, would be the ideal; but the ideal, we are told, is the plaything of "one-ideal fanatics," and not the loadstone of the practical man—the polysynthetic opportunist. However, if the Commission throws some strong light on the four problems we have stated above, it will have aided the education of the public mind, and we may, perhaps, pardon any attempt at compromise in the sure hope that an unstable Government will not feel bound to risk anything in carrying a measure suggested by a Commission for which it is in no way responsible.

With all due respect, therefore, for the judgment of our friend, the polysynthetic opportunist, we believe that the time is essentially one not for compromise, but for the education of public opinion. Here it is not only the Commissioners but other educational authorities who can be of service to the cause. Let them hold up for inspection the sort of university we should like in London if we had to start afresh. They will be surprised to find how ready existing institutions will be to fit themselves into such a university, when the strings of the public purse are tied against them by public opinion, if they refuse to do so. It is in the guidance of public opinion that the Association for the Promotion of a Professorial University for London has done good work, and may still do if it avoids the pitfalls of compromise on the one hand and of vague statement on the other. That Association started with a perfectly definite programme. The Gresham scheme had failed owing to its essentially federal character; accordingly, the Association instructed its committee "to organise evidence to be laid before the Royal Commission in favour of a professorial as distinguished from a federal university." In a circular letter issued with the authority of the executive the following paragraph appears, which distinctly and clearly marks the gulf which separates the position originally taken by the Association from that of the Gresham chartists:

"It seems quite impossible, by means of any federation of colleges, to permanently improve the condition of higher education in London. The creation of a homogeneous academic body, with power to absorb, not to federate, existing institutions of academic rank, seems the real solution of the problem. An academic body of this character might well be organised, so far as teaching is concerned, on the broad lines of a Scottish university. Such a corporation may be conveniently spoken of as a professorial university, to distinguish it from a collegiate or federal university. In the latter, the university must inevitably be a union of competing teachers, for examining and degree-giving purposes only. A federal university may be all that is possible when the constituent colleges are situated in different towns, as is the case in the Victoria University; but it cannot be efficient in London, where the colleges would appeal to the same range of students, and to the same public for patronage and pecuniary support."

The proposals adopted by the Association were consistent in their main outlines with a great professorial university of the German type; and the further and obvious step that the Association ought to have taken was the preparation of a draft charter and an enabling act embodying its principles, and serving to enlighten the public on the details of its proposals. As might naturally be expected, the new Commission has led to a new crop of schemes for university reform. The Extensionists have their scheme for a "democratic" university, an annuum gathering of representatives of School Board, County Council, City Corporation and what not. Convocation has put forward a new scheme, embodying, of course, an increase of power for Convocation. The Senate of Burlington-gardens has also adopted a new set of resolutions, and lastly, Prof. Huxley has published a scheme of his own. The two former schemes may be safely neglected as not falling within the range of practical politics; the last two must be carefully considered, for they both profess to be in accordance with the Association proposals. Prof. Huxley writes (Times, December 6) that "after a most careful comparison of these [his own] proposals with those adopted by the Association at its meeting on June 14 last, I am unable to discover any incompatibility between them in principle or even, to a great extent, in practical working." He adds: "But the details are expressly left void." The Vice-Chancellor of the University, according to the report issued by the executive of the Association, stated that: "In his opinion the resolutions [i.e., those since adopted by the University Senate] were, in fact, wide enough to cover the proposals of the Association." He further explained "the reasons which had made it seem desirable to the committee that its resolutions should at present be embodied in as wide and general terms as possible." What is clear, therefore, is that in both cases we have schemes admittedly vague in character, which yet claim to cover the ground of the Association proposals. Indeed, while the chief failing of the Association scheme is that it is not half definite enough, such definiteness as it possessed is reduced to zero in the proposals both of Prof. Huxley and of the University Senate. Yet with all their vagueness, it is hardly possible to consider these proposals as consonant with "the professorial as distinguished from the federal university." If their wording carries any meaning at all, it points towards a federal university—another Gresham University with Burlington-gardens as its coping stone. The following clauses in Prof. Huxley's statement are deserving of special note:

"(b) Make the institutions which contain technical

*Why the late Government did not resummon this Commission, or at any rate invite its members to join the new Commission, is a mystery which only an "administrator's" mind can explain.

* This abuse of the word "democratic" is quite unjustifiable, until the Extensionists have demonstrated that the leaders of the democracy are incapable of appreciating the social value of the higher learning and research—are, indeed, desirous of extending the non-existent.

schools of theology, law, medicine, engineering, and so on, into colleges of the university. Let these examine their own candidates for degrees, under conditions determined jointly by them and the senate of the university; and present such as they declare fit to the university for ad eundem graduation.

"(c) Deal in the same way with institutions giving adequate instruction in the other categories of university work—if they so please; or let the university examine."

On the other hand, the preamble and resolutions of the University Senate distinctly refer to the ill-fated "revised scheme of the Senate." That scheme involved a federation not only of the London but of the country colleges. It was fully discussed in the ACADEMY at the time (May 2, 1891), and was practically rejected by the London teachers. To cite our article of that date:

"It is no wonder that such a scheme was rejected by the professorial bodies of King's and University Colleges, in the latter case by a unanimous vote. Even in the council of the latter college a modified approval was only carried by the casting vote of the president, or, as it might otherwise be expressed, by the vote of a member of the London University Senate."

The resolutions of the Senate's committee even went as far as to refer for the interpretation of certain of their clauses to sections of the "revised scheme," while there appears nothing in the resolutions themselves not consonant with that scheme. In vain we search either in the Senate resolutions or in Prof. Huxley's draft for clear and definite statements as to the position of Convocation; the relations of the university professors to the teachers in the colleges and institutions which are "to examine their own candidates for degrees"; the means, if any, by which the present squandering of funds in intercollegiate competition is to be checked; the powers, if any, which are to be given to the lay councils; and last, but not least, the manner in which the existing Senate is to be reformed. We are told, indeed, that the professoriate is to have "adequate representation," but even this is almost a minor matter compared with the question of Convocation members and the complete transformation of the existing body. It is startling to read, in the eloquent address of Prof. Weldon on the function of faculties in the new Burlington-gardens University, such phrases as the following, addressed to the senators:

"It appears from these revolutions that you are prepared to exercise in future not only that indirect control over teaching in London which is at present effected by means of your examinations, but also the more important function of the direct organisation and unification of such teaching." "You are prepared to exercise control over the teaching in such colleges," "I presume that teachers appointed by you" . . . and so forth.

Now either this "you" means the men who are to replace the present Senate, or else Prof. Weldon, and through him the executive committee of the Association, are proposing to place the teaching work of the colleges and ultimately their large resources under the control of a body the incapacity of which to appreciate the needs of higher teaching has led to the whole movement for a new university in London! To anyone who casually examines the names on the Senate of the University of London it might appear that the Fellows form a most distinguished group, to whom the control of teaching in London might be safely entrusted; but when we come to examine the names of those who habitually attend the university Senate, there is no evidence that we are dealing with a body in any way more distinguished than the lay councils of the colleges* it is to replace. It is further a body which, whatever examining experience it may have gained, is far from the equal of a lay council in experience of controlling a teaching institution. It is one thing to suggest that the appointment of teachers inside and outside the colleges shall be entrusted to a new body not biased by the Burlington-gardens traditions; it is another to propose that the control of the higher teaching in London shall be handed over to a vague "you" addressed primarily to the university Senators—and unaccompanied by a precise statement as to how that "you" is to be reconstituted. If the incapacity of the University Senate has led to the present movement, surely the exact manner in which that Senate is to be reformed ought to be stated, before a body like the executive of the Professorial Association expresses approval of resolutions so vague that they might well be interpreted as a Gresham University controlled from Burlington-gardens? The London teachers and the college councils must know under whose yokes they are putting their necks before they accept resolutions couched in the indefinite manner of the Senate, or in the vague phrases of Prof. Huxley with their complete want of detail. The time has passed when ambiguous phrases could help forward the university movement in London; what we want is a broad and generous plan, carefully worked out in all particulars—a scheme which might go on the statute book to-morrow, if its complete realisation must be deferred until the day when public opinion shall induce Burlington-gardens and one or more colleges to surrender their functions to a worthy body. That day would not be long delayed were the tying and untying of the public purse rightly directed. In this matter much power lies in the hands of the County Council, much in the hands of the Government, with its grants to the University and to the colleges, but most in those of the members of the Professorial Association, if they do not barter their birth-right for a mess of pottage. They represent educational opinion, an opinion which must and will be listened to if it strives for the highest and abides by clear and distinct principles. If the Association compromises with the university, and compromises with the colleges, and compromises with the medical schools, it may awake the spirit of compromise in the Royal Commission; but it will not have aided that Commission in the production of a report which will have value when Home Rule Bills are no longer the order of the day, and we have a Government with time and strength enough to pay attention to the higher education of the metropolis.

KARL PEARSON.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- AUMÜLLER, C. Les petits maîtres allemands. II. Jacques Bink et Alaart Claas (Clausen). München: Rieger. 12 M.
BERNARD, Marius. Autour de la Méditerranée. De Tripoli à Tunis. Paris: Renouard. 10 fr.

* Taking, for example, the attendance at the Senate for the years 1890 and 1891, and averaging where possible, we find that the Duke of Devonshire, Viscount Sherbrooke, Lord Rayleigh, Lord Acton, Dr. Williamson, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Goschen, Prof. Huxley, and Mr. Matthews never attended at all, while those who attended two-thirds of the total number of times, and practically ruled the University, were the following: Medicals, Sir James Paget, Sir George Buchanan, Dr. Pye Smith, Sir Richard Quain; Lawyers, Dr. Wood, Mr. Anstie, Mr. Ostler, and Sir Edward Fry; Scientists, Sir Philip Magnus, Sir Albert Rollet, and Sir John Lubbock; School Educationists, Mr. Fitch and Dr. Holden. I have no return of the committees attended, but I am credibly informed they would give a like result.

- BISMARCK. Politische Briefe. 4. Sammlg. Berlin: Steinitz. 5 M.
CLAUSSE, Gustave. Basiliens et mosaïques chrétiennes; Italie, Sicile. T. 1. Paris: Leroux. 15 fr.
FREYER, A. Die Handschrift d. Medantiner Osterspiels. Schwerin: Bärensprung. 4 M. 50 Pf.
GODET, Ph. Art et patrie. Auguste Bachelin d'après son œuvre et sa correspondance. Neuchâtel: Attinger. 4 M.
GOUNY, E. Les Latins: Plaute et Térence, etc. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
GRAUL, R. Max Liebermann, m. Radierungen. Wien: Gesellschaft f. vervielfältig. Kunst. 12 M.
JAY, Raoul. Etudes sur la question ouvrière en Suisse. Paris: Larousse. 3 fr. 50 c.
LECOMTE, le capitaine. La Vie militaire au Tonkin. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 10 fr.
LÖWIS OF MENAR, C. V. Die städtische Profanarchitektur der Gothik, der Renaissance u. d. Barocco in Riga, Reval u. Narva. Lübeck: Nöhring. 36 M.
MENANT, J. Les Yézidis. Episodes de l'histoire des adorateurs du diable. Paris: Leroux. 3 fr. 50 c.
MEYER, A. G. Lombardische Denkmäler d. 14. Jahrh. Giovanni di Balduccio da Pisa n. die Campionesen. Stuttgart: Ebner. 18 M.
SAITSCHIK, R. Die Weltanschauung Dostojewski's u. Tolstoi's. Neuaufl. Schupp. 2 M.
SCHIFF, dat nye, vom Narragonien. Die jüdische niederdeutsche Bearbeitg. v. Sebastian Brants Narrenschiff (Rostock 1519). Hrsg. v. C. Schröder. Schwerin: Bärensprung. 7 M. 50 Pf.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- GLASSBERG, A. J. Sichern B'rith Larischonim. 1. Bd. Berlin: Bibliogr. Bureau. 4 M.

HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, ETC.

- FLACH, Jacques. Les Origines de l'ancienne France. 10e et 11e siècles. II. Les Origines communales; la féodalité et la chevalerie. Paris: Larousse. 10 fr.
GRIGER, L. Berlin: 1688—1840. 1. Bd. 2. Hälfte. Berlin: Paetel. 7 M.
GRÄNNER, A. L. Geschichte der lutherischen Kirche in America. 1. Thl. Dresden: Naumann. 9 M.
KRETSCHMER, K. Die Entdeckung Amerika's in ihrer Bedeutung f. die Geschichte d. Weltbildes. Berlin: Köhl. 60 M.
MAYER, H. Geschichte der Universität Freiburg in Baden in der 1. Hälfte d. 19. Jahrh. 1. Thl. 1806—1818. Bonn: Hanstein. 2 M.
OLDENBURG, E. Zum Wartburgkriege. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 30 Pf.
PHILIPPSON, M. Friedrich III. als Kronprinz u. Kaiser. Berlin: Grote. 6 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BAILLON, H. Histoire des Plantes: monographie des conifères, gnéacées etc. Paris: Hachette. 8 fr.
BREXTANO, F. Ueb. die Zukunft der Philosophie. Wien: Holder. 2 M.
CLAUS, C. Beiträge zur Kenntnis der Süßwasser-Ostracoden. Wien: Holder. 27 M.
DWELSHAUVERS, G. Les Principes de l'Idéalisme scientifique. Paris: Fischbacher. 6 fr.
FORTSCHRITTE, die, der Physik im J. 1886. Red. v. B. Schwalbe. Berlin: Reimer. 24 M.
GROBEN, C. Beiträge zur Kenntnis d. Banes v. Cuspidaria (Nesera) cuspidata oliv. Wien: Holder. 9 M.
HERMENJAT, L. Werther et les frères de Werther: étude de littérature comparée. Paris: Fischbacher. 4 fr. 50 c.
SAINT-SIMON, E. Ecrits inédits de, p. p. F. Faugère. T. 8 et dernier. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHILOLOGY, CLASSICAL ARCHAEOLOGY, ETC.

- COARUS papyrorum Aegypti. T. III. Papyrus grecs. Fasc. 1. Le Papyrus d'Hypprie contre Athénogène, p. p. Eugène Revillout. Paris: Leroux. 40 fr.
DARMESTETER, James. Le Zend-Avesta: traduction nouvelle. 2e Vol. Paris: Leroux. 20 fr.
EUBENGHE, archéologique, der römischen Quartalschrift zu de Rossi's LXX. Geburtsart. Hrsg. v. A. de Waal. Freiburg-i. B.: Herder. 16 M.
GODEFROY, F. Dictionnaire de l'ancienne Langue française. 71e fasc. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.
KAYSER, K. Das Buch v. der Erkenntnis der Wahrheit od. der Ursache aller Ursachen. Aus dem syr. Grundtext ins Deutsche übers. Strassburg: Trübner. 15 M.
KÖRTE, F. Ueb. das Bildnis Alexandere d. Grossen. Berlin: Reimer. 3 M.
PSICHARI, J. Etudes de philologie néo-grecque. Paris: Bouillon. 22 fr. 50 c.
ROST, P. Die Keilschrifttexte Tiglat-Pileasers III., nach den Papierabklatschen u. Originalen d. Britischen Museums neu hrsg. Leipzig: Pfeiffer. 20 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"W. B. SCOTT'S AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL NOTES."

London: Dec. 17, 1892.

In the Book of the Prophet Blake, and in the chapter entitled Aurigues of Innocence, will be found these words:

"The poison of the snake and newt
Is the sweat of envy's foot:
The poison of the honey-bee
Is the artist's jealousy."

It is not this latter poison which exudes from the reopened grave of "a painter who could not paint." A humble but early commentator on the sacred text in the first year or so of its ever-blessed revelation may perhaps be permitted to append the following additional couplet—apocryphal in the canonical sense, deniable or disputable in none.

DEC. 24, 1892.—No. 1077.]

"The poison of the parasite
Is the steam of sewers at night."

I am sorry to be compelled, like that memorable athlete of the (Grace-Walking) faith, Brother Zephaniah Stockdologer, to "sing another little hymn." But Mr. Minto, like Colonel Quagg, insists on it. Tu l'as voulu, George Dandin. Et tu l'auras.

In a letter (ACADEMY, December 10) which halts between inadequate apology and tremulous defiance, Mr. Minto gives himself away and throws up his case by one candid and creditable admission. "Of course," he confesses, "I owe Mr. Swinburne an apology for printing anything about him at all." Of course he does; and by no manner of means to Mr. Swinburne alone. But the apology comes just a little too late: the recognition of duties and decencies incumbent on an editor and natural to a gentleman should have preceded rather than followed the issue of a book in which those duties are set at naught and those decencies are trampled underfoot. And when apology comes halting after time on so fragile a crutch, it should at any rate be straightforward, honest, and ingenuous. Reverse each one of these three epithets, and you will find the three most appropriate to Mr. Minto's attempt at half-hearted apology and impossible self-exculpation. Had he done what he admits—when driven by compulsion to admit it—that he must apologise for having failed to do; had he submitted to me the proofs of the passages in which my name had been taken in vain by the hypocrite whose true nature it was left for him to reveal, I should simply have desired that every such passage should be cancelled.

Mr. Minto very truthfully observes that the "allusions" to my humble self are—happily for me—few and trivial. Mr. Minto very impertinently attributes to my remarks on these "allusions" the quality of "fury"—which he is apparently unable to distinguish from the more appropriate emotion of disgust. And Mr. Minto very disingenuously evades the point at issue by citing a single passage, harmless enough in itself, and affecting astonishment that it should excite any sense of irritation. That the whole tone, the whole accent, the whole spirit of W. B. Scott's "allusions"—to adopt the comically inappropriate euphemism devised by the obliquely apologetic dexterity of Mr. Minto—can by no possibility be mistaken for anything other than insolent, impertinent, presumptuous, and malicious, the dullest kind of letters could not conceivably fail to recognise. And though Mr. Minto has chosen to assume the grotesque and graceless mask of such a miserable dullard, he can hardly hope that the disguise will impose upon any reader. He can hardly hope that his excellent contributions to criticism, his admirable evidences of scholarship, can be universally or even generally forgotten. Brutus may have successfully assumed the disguise of a drivelling idiot to impose on the credulity of Tarquin: Mr. Minto must not hope to follow that legendary example with any chance of success. To say that I "repeat in effect" what Scott lyingly records, and that the viperish backbiter "did not see" a good-humoured little jest "in its true inwardness" (a phrase which I will assume to be good Scotch: it certainly is not good English), is to play the part of a born fool very awkwardly indeed. I must congratulate him on his double failure in the attempt to represent himself as an idiot, and in the attempt to play the part of an equivocator. He cannot execute that favourite political performance, the double shuffle, with plausible or tolerable grace: he should take lessons from some past-master in the priestly art of procreation—if any such representative survives of such grand old liars as the proverbial and immortal Escobar.

There is one passage, however, in Mr. Minto's otherwise disingenuous letter, which I am happy to recognise as creditable to the writer. It is impossible that even the reptile rancour, the omnivorous malignity, of Iago himself could have dreamed of trying to cast a slur on the memory of that incomparable lady whose maiden name was Siddal and whose married name was Rossetti. To one at least who knew her better than most of her husband's friends the memory of all her marvellous charms of mind and person—her matchless grace, loveliness, courage, endurance, wit, humour, heroism, and sweetness—is too dear and sacred to be profaned by any attempt at expression. The vilest of the vile could not have dreamed of trying "to cast a slur on her memory."

For one thing she did they would not take the life of Syceorax: for one thing apiece they have written I will not bear more heavily than I can help on the writer and the editor of William Bell Scott. I am content to overlook the rather serious provocations and offences of Mr. Minto in consideration of the exquisite drollery, the farcical gravity of his high-toned and pathetic protest against my "gross and unmeasured" vituperation of "a dead man" whose posthumous calumnies absolutely seethe and reek with equal and impartial impertinence towards the dead superiors who had preceded and the living superiors who survive him. And towards the worthy Scotus himself I cannot bring myself to feel the due austerity of scorn deserved by such thankless and rancorous conceit, when I read his estimate of his obligation to the eminent artist whose generous kindness condescended to illustrate the text supplied by him,* and the register of his apparent opinion that he was neither poetically nor socially (God save the mark!) inferior to any one of the three persons to whom the volume thus beautified by a better man's genius was inscribed. When we hear a man gratuitously bragging about his social position, we may not feel inclined to exclaim with Charles Lamb, "Do let me feel that gentleman's bumps"; but we must naturally feel disposed to say, "Do let us look at that gentleman's quarterings." The House of Malagrowther, for aught I know, may be able to show quarterings with princes—that is a matter for the College of Heralds to decide—but until Garter King-at-Arms has spoken we may surely be permitted to doubt whether a Mac-Malagrowther, by right of the appropriate bar sinister in his shield, can claim precedence as a descendant of Crusaders.

Such revelations of character as abound throughout these two repulsive and amusing volumes are from one point of view as significant as they are insignificant from every other. This sinister old satellite of more or less notable or memorable contemporaries is undoubtedly unworthy of any further commemoration than may be conferred by an epitaph of which I freely make a present to his executors:

"Here lies no envious man! restrain surprise:
For in this grave † incarnate Envy lies."

And, indeed, for my own part, in the teeth of this detestable autobiography, I am fain to believe that his better moods, however transient and untrustworthy, were genuinely cordial and

* "I was never sure," says the grateful old scribbler, "that he quite made out what any of the poems was about." The fault, in that case, must of course have lain with Mr. Tadema—evidently a person of deplorably defective intelligence.

† Query—"from this grave"?

loyal while they lasted. I have had letters from him which I can hardly realise as having been written by the hand which laid bare the nakedness of a soul so mean in its malignity and so graceless in its egotism. But after all it is of no particular importance whether a little more or a little less than justice be done by the few who may remember him to the memory of a far from memorable man. A much more serious question is this: whether it is or is not to be tolerated that the name of any private gentleman who may ever have had any acquaintance with a secret scribbler or forger of such reminiscences as might be panned from memory in the pantry by an eavesdropping footman should be dragged into such unenviable publicity as must associate it with the name of so discreditable and disagreeable a parasite. I may be told that I have not much to complain of; but I make no personal complaint. I simply desire to enter my protest, futile and fruitless as it may be, against the public violation of privacy and the public prostitution of confidence. Whether this offence be committed by a liar or by a truth-teller, the offence against honour, against courtesy, and against society is the same.

A. C. SWINBURNE.

London: Dec. 16, 1892.

My attention has only now been called to two articles published in THE ACADEMY for December 3 and 10; the first being a review by Mr. William Sharp of the Autobiographical Notes of the late Mr. William Bell Scott, edited by Prof. Minto, and the second being Prof. Minto's rejoinder to the review. Both these articles relate in part to my deceased brother Dante Gabriel Rossetti.

I read Mr. Scott's book soon after it came out, and felt very much inclined to say nothing about it in print; but it seems to me that I could not continue wholly silent, without appearing to shirk a duty which becomes incumbent upon me, now that the book, in its relation to my brother, is made a subject of controversy. I loved and honoured Mr. Scott from the time when first I knew him, towards 1848, up to his death in 1890; yet I cannot ignore the fact that, whatever the reason on his part, some of his statements affecting my brother are, according to my view of them, unkind, unhandsome, inaccurate, and practically incorrect and misleading. The sanctity or the superstition of an olden friendship withholds me from saying a word of harshness regarding Mr. Scott. I will, however, with your permission, set down a few particulars, though these will mainly concern myself. My primary object in writing them is not to vindicate myself, who have not been assailed in any tangible way, but to suggest to the reader that, if Mr. Scott's neutral-tinted allegations concerning me are the reverse of trustworthy in detail, some of his dark-tinted allegations concerning my brother deserve to be perused with considerable suspense of judgment.

To take an illustration. Mr. Scott says (vol. ii., p. 179) that in April 1874 my brother wrote from Kelmscott, asking Scott to lend him £200 to meet a momentary need. Mr. Scott sent him a cheque for that amount, but it was immediately returned with thanks, on the ground that my brother had meanwhile received other money, and no longer needed the cheque. So far nothing appears but what does credit to the friendliness of Mr. Scott without besmirching the memory of Dante Rossetti. But Mr. Scott adds the following words:—

"He had by that time lost nearly every old friend save myself: did he now suspect that I was among his enemies, and had he done this to try me? I fear this semi-insane motive was the true one."

Now for my own part I cannot see the least reason for supposing that this was the true motive; and, as I would like readers to be equally sceptical regarding Mr. Scott's inference, I proceed to show that his mode of representing some other facts is anything but correct.

Vol. i., p. 277.—Mr. Scott says that I visited him in the first year—i.e., 1848—of his acquaintance with Dante Rossetti and his circle; “in the summer of 1848 he [myself] appeared in Newcastle,” where Scott was then domiciled. This is totally incorrect. I never appeared in Newcastle, nor visited Scott, till the autumn of 1850, when I halted at Newcastle on my way back to London from Edinburgh. Then Mr. Scott proceeds to say that, when I was leaving at the close of this visit, mis-assigned by him to 1848, I introduced the subject of the magazine named The Germ. “He [myself] suggested that the [pre-Raphaelite] brotherhood was going to print something I might hear of.” This again is totally incorrect. My visit, having really taken place in the autumn of 1850, was subsequent to the birth and death of The Germ, which was begun late in 1849, and ended in the early spring of 1850. I have thus demonstrated (to any one who does not discredit my positive assertion) that in this anecdote Mr. Scott was certainly wrong as to both time and place. Moreover, I could not in 1848, even elsewhere than in Newcastle, have spoken about the project of the forthcoming Germ, for no such project in any way existed until 1849 was well advanced. I am not now aware that I spoke to him about the project in any place or at any time.

Vol. ii., p. 128.—Mr. Scott here makes some observations on reviews, written by personal acquaintances of my brother, upon his volume entitled Poems, 1870. With this matter Mr. Sharp has dealt; and I would not add any remark upon it, were it not that Mr. Scott has cited something that I said or wrote, confirming (as he considered) his own views. It is quite true that from first to last I advised my brother to care nothing about who reviewed his poems, or how they might be reviewed; I would tender the same advice to any other author, and, in reference to all my own small literary performances, I have invariably acted upon it. I must, however, dissociate myself from the tone of what Mr. Scott has said, affecting my brother, as to “working the oracle,” or, as some current writers have agreed to term it, “nobbling the press.”

Vol. ii., p. 172.—“William, who was made seriously ill by his brother's state”—i.e., his illness in the summer of 1872. This is a testimonial to my fraternal affection, and as such I would willingly accept it. But it is not a fact. I was not seriously ill: needed no doctor and no curative treatment, and pursued (with casual interruptions, not grounded upon ill-health) my ordinary official and other occupations.

Vol. ii., p. 174.—“His brother William had been so prostrated by anxiety, loving Gabriel much and fearing him not a little, that F. M. Brown took all business matters out of his hands.” I scarcely know what is meant by saying that I feared Gabriel not a little; I feared him not at all, but I feared for him at that date (1872) and at other later times. It is wholly erroneous to say that Mr. Ford Madox Brown took all business matters out of my hands; but most true that he was the kindest and most thoughtful of friends and advisers both to my brother and to myself. It was I who managed my brother's money affairs in 1872, when he was disabled by illness, and for some months away in Scotland. I alone, for instance, transacted the whole matter of turning his collection of blue china into money. The fact is that, as I had at that date no banking account of my own, while Mr. Brown had an account at the London and Westminster Bank, St. James's-square, the funds accruing from the sale of the china, and perhaps some other funds proper to my brother, were placed in the bank just mentioned, in the joint names (if I remember right) of Mr. Brown and myself; certain it is that I took, from first to last, an active part in dealing with the money, so as to keep my brother's affairs properly in train until he returned from Scotland, and settled for a while at Kelmscott.

Prof. Minto writes, “I am most willing to prune [the two volumes of their mis-statements], but I must first have the mis-statements pointed out.” I have here pointed out some of the mis-statements, and should be glad to see these, and others far more important, pruned away as early as opportunity may arise.

W. M. ROSSETTI.

THE OBIT OF ST. COLUMBA.

Youghal: Dec. 17, 1892.

Mr. Anscombe still refuses (ACADEMY, December 10) to substantiate his fundamental assumptions that the original Computus of Iona was based upon Alexandrine epacts. Apparently, he misunderstands his position. I demanded evidence to which I am plainly entitled. In lieu, I am presented with queries respecting the Cycles of 19 and 84! The device is too transparent. Collateral matter of the kind I decline to be enticed into; otherwise, Mr. Anscombe might fence with the question until the Greek Kalends. When he propounded the dictum that St. Columba died in 580, Mr. Anscombe, it is to be presumed, was prepared to prove it: Quod gratis asseritur gratis negatur. He can scarcely complain if an adverse judgment be formed from finding it necessary to goad him to a sense of what lies upon him. Accordingly, until the requisite data are produced, this discussion must close so far as I am concerned.

His four “important” statements regarding the Annals of Ulster Mr. Anscombe makes no pretence to maintain. But he is maladroit enough to aggravate his default. Maguire states (ACADEMY, December 3) that the Battle of Kildare was fought on Tuesday, August 27, 781. In that year, however, August 27 fell on Monday; the true date was 782. Mr. Anscombe, nevertheless, will have it (ACADEMY, December 10) that Maguire was a “practised annalist,” who gave “the century, the year, the month, the day of the month, and the day of the week”!

Mr. Anscombe will not admit that he confounded the Cycles of 28 and 19. Well, here is what he did. The Annals of Ulster have: “[563] Kal. Jan., 2 f., 1. 21.” The correct description of 563 is Kal. Jan., 2 feria, Solar Cycle 12. The Annals have 1. 21 by mistake; eleven years lower [574, 2 f., 1. 23] they give the correct figures, 1. 23. Now, every worker at first hand knows that the soli-cyclic numeration is not once employed in these Annals. In ignorance of this and of the cabalistic l(un)a, and finding that $(574+9) \div 28$ leaves 23, he applied the formula to 563. The result is “Solar Cycle 12” vice “moon 21.” But, needless to say, 21 and 23 stand beyond the reach of emendation— $(563+1) \div 19$ leaves XIII. (Golden No.)=epact 21; $(574+1) \div 19$ leaves V.=epact 23. Comment is superfluous.

The taunt of having abandoned his Iunifallen equation has fallen unheeded upon Mr. Anscombe. Similarly, the A.P. of Nennius = A.D. 29 is left to its fate (as a set-off, we are promised something anent St. Patrick!). In connexion herewith, I am challenged to “demolish” figures respecting the Easter of 631. In that year, according to Mr. Anscombe, moon 24 = April 1; moon 14 = Sunday, Ap. 21. To test the second equation: What is the lunation of Ap. 21 (xi., Kal. Mai.), G. No. V., by computistic rules? (Mai. in Kal. 121–11 + 23) ÷ 59 leaves 15—that is, the Computus assigns moon 14 to Saturday, Ap. 20; moon 15 to Sunday, Ap. 21. This calculation, it will comfort Mr. Anscombe to learn, is confirmed by the four Calendars in Hampson, the comparative Calendar in Bucherius, and the perpetual Calendar in Ideler—all of which place V. (to mark new moon) at Ap. 7. On the other hand, Mr. Anscombe, in his “full knowledge of the significance of the epact,” “subjected” the April moon of V. “to the strain of the embolisms.” Thereby he gave it 30 days instead of 29, assigned new moon to April 8, and created a brand-new Cycle of 19! Mirus calculandi preceptor.

B. MACCARTHY.

P.S.—In my letter in the ACADEMY of December 3, p. 509, col. 2, l. 25, for “later” read “earlier”; and l. 72, for “Mennius” read “Nennius.”

DANTE'S “GUIZZANTE.”

Hôtel de Provence, Cannes: Dec. 19, 1892.

Prof. Fredericq's note on the above subject in last week's ACADEMY shows that, in adopting the statement that “Cadsand has never been within the boundaries of Flanders,” I committed a serious error. I am much obliged to Prof. Fredericq for drawing attention to the fact. The contention that “Guizzante” cannot on geographical grounds be identified with Cadsand must consequently be withdrawn. The failure, however, of that particular portion of the argument does not in the least affect the real point at issue, viz., the identity of the name “Guizzante” with Wissant. That I may fairly claim to have conclusively proved by the evidence of Villani, coupled with the parallel Provençal and Old French forms, which I adduced in my letter in the ACADEMY of December 10.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

Paris: Dec. 19, 1892.

Allow me to supplement Prof. Fredericq's reply to Mr. Toynbee by maintaining, as I had already done in Notes and Queries, that Guzzante—this, not Guizzante, is the general reading—is Cadzand. That Wissant was an important haven in Dante's time is undisputed, but proves nothing, for Cadzand was still more important, being the chief trading port of Northern Europe. Wissant, moreover, required no dikes to keep out the sea, which must have long been retiring, and was soon destined to leave it dry; whereas the region between Bruges and Cadzand, was in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries the scene of great activity in the construction and repair of dikes. It is likely enough that Dante—who, as Mr. Gladstone has shown, usually chose his similes from spots he had visited—witnessed that activity; and that when he says “i Fiamminghi tra Guzzante e Bruggia . . . fannolo schermo,” he means by fanno not merely “make,” but “are making.” To justify Wissant, on the other hand, we must suppose that “tra Guzzante e Bruggia” is a periphrasis for Flanders, in which case Antwerp would have been a better terminus than Bruges, and that Dante referred to Flemish embankments in general, which is unlike his customary precision. If, on the contrary, he refers to the high-banked dikes between Bruges and Cadzand, his second simile, the embankment of the Po at Padua, is thoroughly in keeping with the first.

Mr. Toynbee cites Villani in proof that the Italian form of Cadzand was Gaggiante; but

* See Todd Lectures, Vol. III., pp. 348-9.

† Med. Aevi Kalend.

‡ De Doct. Temp., p. 153.

§ Handbuch, etc., Vol. I., p. 194.

according to the Inventaire des Archives de Bruges (1879-82), that form from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century was "Cazzante." Probably Danto, mistaking the first sound, wrote "Gazzante," which a careless or ignorant copyist turned into "Guzzante."

Thus Cadzand answers all the conditions of the simile; for it needed protection against the inroads of the sea, and it was in Flanders, the left bank of the Scheldt being called Dutch or States-Flanders till 1791, and not being joined to Zeeland till 1815.

J. G. ALGER.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO PETER.

Trinity College, Dublin: Dec. 19, 1892.

It seems worth while to jot down a few points in which the account of the Passion known to Cyril of Jerusalem suggests the use of the Gospel of Peter.

In Cyril's Thirteenth Catechetical Lecture, § 24, we have ἐσταυρώθη τὴν ἡμέραν αὐτὴν ἀπὸ δὲ ἑκτῆς ὥρας σκότος ἐγένετο ἕως ἑνῆδεκα ἡμέρας ἀπὸ δὲ ἑνῆδεκα πάλιν φῶς. Cf. Peter, § 6: τότε ἡλίου ἐλαμψε καὶ εὐρέθη ὥρα ἐνάτη. This reappearance of the sun is not mentioned in the Canonical Gospels.

In Cal. xiii. 25 we have: ἐν ἁγίῳ γὰρ ἡμέρα καὶ ἡμέρη, αἱ μὲν γυνῆκες αὐτῶν ἐκόπτοντο καὶ ἐκλαίον, ὡδυνῶντο δὲ ἀποκρυβέντες οἱ ἀπόστολοι. Cf. Peter, § 7: καὶ τετραμέντοι κατὰ διάνοιαν ἐκρυβόμεθα; and also § 12, where the women say: εἰ καὶ μὴ ἐν ἑκτῇ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἡ ἑσταυρώθη ἰδοὺ ἠθύνει καὶ αὐταὶ καὶ κόψασθαι.

Again in Cal. xiii. 26, we find the remarkable word λαχμός, which occurs in Peter, § 1. Cyril says: καὶ λαχμός περὶ τοῦτου γίνεται τοῖς στρατιώταις; he speaks, indeed, as if λαχμός was the word used in some familiar account of the Passion, for he cites 1's. xxii. 19, διμερίσαντο τὰ ἱμάτια μου ἑαυτοῖς, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν ἱματισμὸν μου ἔβαλον κλῆρον, and then adds, what would be a quite unnecessary comment if he only had the Canonical Gospels in his mind, κλήρος δὲ ἦν ὁ λαχμός.

Mr. Rendel Harris suggests (Gospel of Peter, p. 86) that the expression σύρωμεν (or ἄνωμεν? cf. Eus. II. E. ii. 23) τὸν ἰδὸν τοῦ θεοῦ in § 3 is a reminiscence of Isa. iii. 10 (LXX). It may be noted that this verse is applied to the circumstances of the Passion by Cyril (Cal. xiii. 12).

Cyril does not, indeed, mention the Gospel of Peter as a book to be avoided in Cal. iv. 36, where he warns his hearers against extra-canonical writings; but he constantly declaims against Docetic notions of the Crucifixion which seem to have been prevalent (see Cal. xiii. 1 and 37).

J. H. BERNARD.

Bodleian Library, Oxford: Dec. 18, 1892.

My corrected proof last week missed the press: for εἶδε read ἔδωκε; for "p. 18 of the Doctrine of Addæus" read "p. 10"; and add μετὰ to the elided prepositions.

EDWARD W. B. NICHOLSON.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

TUESDAY, Dec. 27, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Astronomy," I., by Sir Robert S. Ball.
WEDNESDAY, Dec. 28, 4 p.m. London Institution: "Combustion: Slow, Rapid, and Explosive," I., by Prof. Vivian Lewes.
THURSDAY, Dec. 29, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Astronomy," II., by Sir Robert S. Ball.
FRIDAY, Dec. 30, 4 p.m. London Institution: "Combustion," II., by Prof. Vivian Lewes.
4.30 p.m. Geographical: "All the World Over," by Mr. John Coles.
SATURDAY, Dec. 31, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Astronomy," III., by Sir Robert S. Ball.

SCIENCE.

EGYPT AS A ROMAN PROVINCE.

Essai sur la Province romaine d'Égypte depuis la Conquête jusqu'à Dioclétien. By Abdallah Simaika. (Paris: Thorin.)

THE volume which Dr. Simaika has just published ought to receive a hearty welcome on several accounts. In the first place, it supplies a want. We have histories of Pharaonic and Ptolemaic Egypt, and Mohammedan Egypt has found more than one historian; but Roman Egypt has hitherto been neglected. In spite of the materials which have accumulated of recent years, and have given us a fresh and vivid insight into the social and economic condition of the country under the Roman empire, in spite, too, of the labours of scholars like Letronne, Mommsen, and Wilcken, a systematic account of the Egyptian people during a long and important period of their history has never been hitherto attempted. The second part of Sharpe's History of Egypt is the nearest approach to it.

Then, secondly, Dr. Simaika's work is written with French lucidity. In clearness of arrangement and thoroughness of treatment it leaves nothing to be desired. Geography, agriculture, commerce, social and economic conditions, justice, civil and political administration, and military organisation, all alike receive due attention. The author has gone to the best authorities, and his references are numerous and exact.

In the third place, it is gratifying to find a native Egyptian, whose Coptic faith guarantees the purity of his blood, devoting his attention to the past history of his country, and more especially to that portion of it which has been neglected by European scholars. The "Essay," as Dr. Simaika modestly terms it, is a good augury for the future; and we hope it will prove but the beginning of a long series of researches by the Egyptians themselves into the past annals of a country whose history has been in so large a measure the history of the world.

But it must not be imagined that, because the book is learned and full of industrious research, it will, therefore, be found dull even by that nondescript person, "the general reader." It is interesting in manner as well as in matter, and henceforward ought to form as much a part of the literary luggage of visitors to the Nile as the Histories of Brugsch or Sharpe.

I do not think it will be long before a second edition is called for. In view of this, I would urge the author to read through the back numbers of the Revue Egyptologique, in which he will find many articles by Prof. Révillout bearing upon his subject. Prof. Mahaffy's Memoir on the Petrie Papyrus appeared too late for him to profit by it; and the second part of the Memoir is still in the press. When it appears, it will be found to contain important additions to our knowledge of the administrative system of Egypt which was begun under the Ptolemies, and continued under the Roman emperors.

One of the chief sources, however, of our knowledge of the economic and administrative condition of Roman Egypt is to be derived from the "ostraka," or inscribed potsherds, of which so many hundreds have now been discovered at Elephantine, Karnak, Koptos, and other places. Unfortunately, comparatively few of them have as yet been published. Those from Elephantine, which are preserved in the British Museum, have been deciphered and edited by Dr. Birch in the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology for March, May, and June, 1883, and a few from Karnak and Dakkeh have been published by Dr. Wilcken and myself e.g., in the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology for May, 1887. My own collection of ostraka numbers about 1200, the complete editing of which will be necessarily a work of time. The series begins in the time of the Ptolemies, and ends in the reign of Aurelian. For the most part the ostraka are receipts for the payment of taxes, but among them are private memoranda and accounts, and even letters. One of those from Karnak, in my possession, is a request from the clerk to his "master Isidore" that he should bring him a "commentary" on the first book of the Iliad. Of some others from the same locality I gave an account in the Jewish Quarterly Review two or three years ago. They show that, in the reign of Ptolemy, Physkon, the collector of the taxes for the sacred domain of Amon at Thebes was a Jew called Simon, the son of Eleazar. Simon himself could not write Greek, but the Hellenisation of his family proceeded rapidly, and his son who succeeded him in his office was not only a Greek scholar, but also bore a Greek name.

Perhaps I cannot conclude this review better than by giving translations of two of my ostraka. They will at all events give an idea of the contents of this curious class of ancient documents:

"Marcus Clodius Alyras, through his son Panos, for the month Epeiphi of the first year of Aurelius Antoninus and Aurelius Verus, the lords (and) emperors, has registered on behalf of the assessment of late-paid taxes (ἐλά[α]ρ[α] τ[α]λ[α]) for the month Khoiak of the 23rd year of the deified Antoninus, 14 drachmae of debased silver. (Dated) the first year of Aurelius Antoninus and Aurelius Verus the lords (and) emperors, the 10th day of Epeiphi. Horos has signed (the receipt)."

"For Heracianus 37 Egyptian beans (κοκ[κ]ας) from the newly-planted ground; also five beans from the estate called Pikeraiou; 3 (measures) of wine and 2 of vinegar for filling 5 cups. I have also bought double jars for 5 drachmae, and have given the double-jars to Orion the scribe."

What can be meant by the διπλοκεράμια or "double-jars"?

A. H. SAYCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LIBRARY OF MENDES.

52, Margaret-street, London, W.: Dec. 20, 1892.

WE now learn from M. Naville's statement to the Egypt Exploration Fund, that that society has a site of the highest possible value in their hands. The library of Mendes has been found, and is full of carbonised papyri, the only form in which papyri can be preserved in the damp Delta. These papyri are in distinct rolls, and are therefore much better preserved than those of Tanis, which were in a mere peaty-looking stratum when I found them. Yet the latter were saved, and opened without any appreciable loss, and highly valuable and unique works have been published from them. The Mendes rolls of papyri are, moreover, stated to be legible; and the specimens which I saw in a dealer's hands in Cairo from there were in excellent condition, firm and glossy, though of course excessively fragile.

It is now essential that a thoroughly skilled worker be sent to rescue all that can be obtained, though a great part has been destroyed in the "cleaning" of the chambers by the finder. Every document should have its position recorded, as the collocation of them may throw light on their arrangement.

Let us hope that nothing more will be "cleaned" by explorers in the name of science, after the fashion that this library has been so far dealt with.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

SIR ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, as we learn from Nature, has undertaken to write the Life of Sir Andrew C. Ramsay, his predecessor in the Geological Survey. Sir Andrew Ramsay spent nearly the whole of his scientific career in the service, so that the record of his life and the story of the progress of the Survey are closely bound together. This is the third member of the staff of the Survey whose memoirs Sir Archibald Geikie will have written, the two others being Edward Forbes (whose life he wrote in conjunction with the late Prof. George Wilson) and Sir Roderick Murchison.

A COURSE of two lectures to young people will be given, on behalf of the Royal Geographical Society, by Mr. John Coles, map curator to the Society, on December 29 and January 5, at 4.30 p.m., in the Hall of the University of London, Burlington House. The title of the lectures is, "All the World Over"; and they will consist of an exhibition of lantern slides, with explanation and anecdotes.

FINE ART.

ART BOOKS.

Drawing and Engraving: A Brief Exposition of Technical Principles and Practice. By Philip Gilbert Hamerton. (A. & C. Black.) In this volume Mr. Hamerton has collected, in a revised and augmented form, and with the addition of numerous plates very helpful to a full understanding of the technical details with which he deals, the excellent articles on Drawing and Engraving which he contributed to the last edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica. Written under a constant need for compression, the book is far from exhaustive; but it is eminently instructive and suggestive, and will form a useful introduction to the arts which are its subject. In the chapter on "Primitive Drawing" we have interesting references to design among the Egyptians and Assyrians; and the vase painting of the Greeks is treated more in detail, and illustrated with some good examples—among them a very fair coloured reduction from the famous Camirus Amphora, representative of the fully developed method of the Rhodian artists of about B.C. 350. Mediaeval illumination is next briefly reviewed; the Renaissance, with its draughtsmanship "at once more scientific and more ideal" than any that preceded it, is touched upon; and following chapters deal effectively with "The Picturesque," with "The Law of Progress in Drawing," and with "Drawing for Photographic Purposes." In the portion of the book devoted to engraving the author is thoroughly on his own ground. No writer of our time has the power of describing a technical process with more lucidity than Mr. Hamerton, and the accounts of the different methods of engraving are given with admirable accuracy and conciseness. Even a process so little known as "Pyrogravure"—a modern improvement on the old "poker-work," in which a decorative design is burnt into a wooden surface by means of a platinum point kept incandescent by a current of carburetted air—finds its place in the volume. Necessarily, little space has been devoted to an historical survey of the progress of engraving in its several methods; but we should have welcomed some reference, at least, to the early wood-engraving of Italy—as it appears in such works as the Hypnerotomachia, and the 1488 Petrarch of Venice—which, in its aims and technique, differed greatly from that current in the North. Among other interesting matter in the Appendix are notes upon Turner's idealisation of the landscapes which he professed to depict, illustrated by sketches, by Mr. Hamerton, of the "St. Cloud" in the vignettes to Scott and the "St. Germain" in the Rivers of France, with, for comparison, topographical sketches of the actual scenes. The numerous plates of the volume, including Amand Durand reproductions from Schongauer, Van Leyden, Dürer, and Rembrandt, add greatly to its beauty and serviceability. Among the examples of modern line-engraving, the publishers are fortunate in having been able to include two of William Miller's original plates from Turner's vignettes to Scott, which, however, are printed too heavily and blackly; and one of the most charming illustrations in the book is Mr. Frank Short's "Evening Tide at Rye," an excellent example of the right application of mezzotint to landscape.

Angelica Kauffman. By Frances A. Gerard. (Ward & Downey.) Miss Gerard has evidently taken a good deal of pains in writing this book and compiling the appendix, which includes a list of Angelica's paintings and the engravings from them, a guide to the houses she decorated, and many other pieces of information which will be useful to all interested in the history of the celebrated artist who, in her day, turned the heads of so many men, including perhaps that of Sir Joshua Reynolds. For those who care for the romantic elements in her history, this book will not, of course, compare with Mrs. Ritchie's charming story, though it may fairly be presumed to cling a little closer to facts. It pretends, indeed, to do no more than to give in as few words as possible the truth of the case, and no doubt may be generally accepted as reliable. The carelessness, however, that is shown here and there makes us fear that Miss Gerard's authority, especially in the spelling of names, is not to be accepted without corroboration; and the impression which the book leaves is that she has undertaken a task for which she is not quite fully equipped.

Dawn of Art in the Ancient World. By W. M. Conway. (Percival.) Mr. Conway tells us that "the kernel" of his book "is the substance of three lectures, delivered at the Royal Institution in January, 1891." Whatever may have been its origin, it is charmingly written, and in spite of its small size, carries the reader over a large tract of ground. From the ages of stone and bronze we are taken to the civilisations of Egypt and Chaldea, and to the culture and art of which we are the heirs. Even the cats of Egypt have a concluding chapter to themselves, and Mr. Conway shows that they are well worthy of the honour. Mr. Conway's information is accurate; he has taken note of the latest discoveries, and the suggestions which he makes from time to time show that he is not content to take his learning at second-hand.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A ROMAN INSCRIPTION FROM CARLISLE.

Christ Church, Oxford: Dec 15, 1892.

Some readers of the ACADEMY may be interested in a Roman inscription found a few weeks ago at Carlisle. The exact provenance is Gallows Hill, where a Roman cemetery exists close to the London road. The excavations necessary for a new row of houses along this road led to the discovery of several interments, and, in particular, of an inscription, 31 × 20 in. in size, lying face downwards over a wooden coffin. The text, which is imperfect at the end, reads:

D	M
	FLAS	ANTIGONS PAPIAS
	CIVIS GRECVS	VIXIT ANNO
	PLVS MINVS LX	QVEM AD
5	MODVM	ACCOMMODATAM
	FATIS ANIMAM	REVOCAVIT
	SEPTIMIADON

The lettering is clear and, except at the end, quite certain: there appear to be no stops. The reading is equally plain: D(is) M(anibus), Fla(vi)us Antigonus Papias, civis Gr(a)ecus, vixit annos plus minus lx, quem admodum (?) accom(m)odatam fatis animam revocavit septimiodon . . . ? Quem admodum may also be read quemadmodum or quem ad modum. The seventh line and whatever followed have been "chadded" off.

The inscription is one of the rare examples of fourth century tombstones, of which we have very few attested specimens in Britain. This date, though not expressed on the stone, can be deduced from the following details:

1. The name Flavius, popularised by the Flavian dynasty of the Constantines, is exceedingly common in the fourth century. The late cemetery at Concordia contains a large proportion of Flavii (C v., Cagnat année épiqr. 1890 n. 143 foll, 1891 n. 101 foll.), and the index to the fifth volume of the Corpus shows sixty Christian Flavii out of 180 occurring in the volume. The name was adopted even by barbarian kings.

2. The abbreviations, Flas Antigons for Flavius Antigonus, are thoroughly characteristic of the fourth century. I do not know that these actual forms occur elsewhere; but we have such parallels as Iulians (C. xii. 5351), Ians for Ianuaris, Februs for Februarius, habt for habeant, Debres for Decembres (C. xi. 399) and even R.P.R.S.R.TA for respublica Romanis restituta (C. viii. 10293). All these belong to the system which resulted in epus for episcopus, and differ entirely from the earlier abbreviations by initial letters or syllables.

3. The use of civis to denote nationality is also common in later times, and may be illustrated from any volume of the Corpus. There are six or seven examples among the British inscriptions alone, and the use spread even into literature, as civis Gothus in Sidonius (Ep. vii. 6, 2) shows. Civis Graecus in the present case need not refer specially to Greece. A Christian inscription found in Hungary (C. iii. 4220) mentions a civis Graecus ex regione Ladicena—i.e., from Phrygia.

4. The formula plus minus, though as old as the XII. Tables, is rarely used on tombstones in reference to age until the fourth century, and is, indeed, almost exclusively a Christian formula.

5. The lettering and general fashion of the inscription also strongly point to the date suggested. In particular, the letters F L S M (not here given in facsimile) are in favour of it.

It may, then, be concluded that the stone was cut in the fourth century. It might, a priori, indeed, be possibly later; but as the Roman occupation of Britain ended about 400 A.D., it is difficult to put the inscription into the fifth century, and there is no reason not to assign it to the age of the Constantines, which it best suits. One may go further, and conjecture that it is possibly a Christian monument, though the evidence for this is less conclusive than that for the date. But plus minus is, I think, rightly reckoned by epigraphists as more or less characteristically Christian, and the occurrence of DM on a fourth century Christian inscription need cause no surprise. Ferdinand Becker (die heidnische Weiheformel D.M. auf altchristlichen Grabsteinen, Gera 1881) gives about 100 examples, mostly from Rome and its neighbourhood; and, though his list is not above criticism, many additions may be made to it. Examples occur in Gaul (C. xii. 490, 4059, 2114, 2311), in Africa (Eph. vii. 429; C. viii. 11897, 11900, 11905, 12197; Cagnat année épigr. 1891, n. 136), and elsewhere, for instance at Aquileia (Pais 349, Arch. épigr. mitth. iii. 50); and the list could be considerably increased. The earliest datable examples seem to be two Roman ones (de Rossi i. 24 and 1192), one of which is dated A.D. 298, and after that time instances appear to be fairly frequent. No certain example occurs in Britain, but that is because our known Christian tombstones are all later than the Roman evacuation of the island.

The concluding formula seems to me also to savour much more of Christian than of Pagan epitaphs. I cannot, indeed, explain it with certainty; the spacing of the letters allows quem admodum to be read as one, two, or three words. On the whole, it appears safest to read (as suggested above), quem admodum and translate, "whom, a soul wholly resigned to death." For fata in this sense we may compare in fata concessit on an Arles tombstone (Le Blant 514=C xii. 674). The nominative to revocavit must then have come in the missing part. For that word itself, one may compare such expressions as evocatus a domino (C. x. 1192), revellens coelo animum (Le Blant 409), ad patriae sedes civis opima rediis, remeans e corpore, de oc mundo revertentem; and an inscription found at Vienna in Gaul (C. xii. 2058) which may have been slightly distorted in copying, Severianus qui religionem devota mente suscepit, sic quem anima ad authorem dm remeante terrena membra terris reliquit, &c. What precisely stood in the seventh and any following lines, I do not know. A natural item would be the date of death, which early Christians sometimes stated in its fullest details of year, day, and hour; so de Rossi 596 (A.D. 411) nonu kal. oct., die Satur(ni), ora prima. Another interpretation deserves notice. Mr. Rushforth has suggested that revocavit animum may be an alternative for reddidit animum "he died." In support of this sense of revocare, he quotes from Du Cange the African Gesta purgationis Felicis (Migne viii., better in Routh reliquiae sacrae iv. 290) where reddere, tradere, restituere, revocare, appear to be used indifferently of "giving up" certain books. The date of this fragment is given as A.D. 314; but the use of revocare may be a mere Africanism, and the only parallel I can find is a doubtful passage in the later African Corippus (Ioh. ii. 344) where the MS. reads captivos revocat, "let him give up the captives," altered by editors to captivos revocent, "let the ambassadors reclaim the captives." Perhaps some reader of the ACADEMY can either abolish or establish this suggested meaning for revocare. I do not, however, think that the precise explanation of the phrase alters its general resemblance to a Christian (not a heathen) formula, and I incline therefore to consider this inscription as an addition to the scanty group of Roman Christian monuments in Britain.

I have gone at some detail into the items of the inscription, because those who have hitherto noticed it seem to me to have missed its real interest and to have made untenable assertions.

F. HAVERFIELD.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE annual exhibition of works by Old Masters and Deceased British Artists at the Royal Academy will be opened on Monday, January 2. The private view is fixed for Saturday next.

LAST week we were misled into stating that the Art Journal would henceforth be published by Messrs. Boussoad, Valadon & Co. As a matter of fact, Messrs. J. S. Virtue & Co. remain proprietors and publishers; it is only the editorship that has changed, having passed to Mr. D. C. Thomson. The January number will have for frontispiece an original etching by Mr. Macbeth, entitled "Flora"; and articles on "Baldini's at Florence," by Mr. Humphry Ward, and on Coate, the home of Richard Jefferies. The most noticeable change is that it is now printed on hot-pressed paper.

By what is generally described as a "slip of the pen"—in reality, by momentary deception of memory—we said last week that the noble Rembrandt, "The Hundred Guilder Print" in the Fisher Sale, realised about five hundred pounds. We recollected afterwards that it was seven hundred and forty. History must not be written inaccurately.

It is announced that Mr. E. Burne Jones has presented to the Luxembourg three drawings sent by him to the last Champ de Mars Salon, which the authorities wished to purchase.

THE STAGE.

ON Monday next, on the night of Boxing Day, as usual, Sir Augustus Harris brings out at Drury-lane that gigantic "annual" which poor Mr. Blanchard is no longer here to write. There will this year be another pantomime in Sir Augustus's immediate neighbourhood: the enlarged Olympic, with its considerable stage, naturally lending itself to this sort of entertainment. At the Surrey, of course, something in the way of popular spectacle and jest is always done at this season; and in Islington—which, since the present management has flourished at the Grand Theatre, has earned some right to its title of "merrie"—there will doubtless be a pantomime of formidable attractiveness; for, at the Grand, they know how to manage things.

MUSIC.

VERDI'S "REQUIEM."

THIS work, written nearly twenty years ago in memory of Alessandro Manzoni, has not met with general acceptance in this country. Verdi is essentially a theatre composer, who, even when setting to music the solemn words of the Mass for the dead, could not shake off the influence of the stage. And not only this, but in certain places the music becomes melodramatic. There is a touch of the latter quality in Berlioz's grand "Messe des Morts," but there the strength and earnestness of the music help one to forget it. The "Dies Irae" is, perhaps, the severest test of a composer's powers: the drama of the last judgment, with its trumpet summons and scenes of terror, offers many a dangerous moment; realism easily gets the upper hand, and when this is the case the effect is manqué—and it is so with Verdi. The "Dies Irae" phrase proper has a certain power and solemnity; but it is not rendered more intense by skilful development, so that, at last, the impression which it made is weakened. The "Rex tremendae" phrase, again, is bold, but its last stave is the same as the first. The trumpet summons is poor, and later on frequent chromatic scales and big drum will not atone for lack of deep thought: it is at such moments that the melodramatic element makes itself felt. The opening page of this long movement recalls first, Berlioz's "Marche au supplice" in the "Symphonie Fantastique," and then, when the voices enter, the composer's own "Aida"; and it must be confessed that neither work carries with it any very solemn associations. The "Recordare" is clever, but the character of the music does not suit the words; the "Qui Mariam" section is weak. There is a cold formality about the "Domine Jesu." The "Sanctus" is decidedly effective, except the preamble, which is commonplace; but the composer would have done well not to raise expectations by describing it as a "Fuga a due Cori"; as such, after the exposition, it is disappointing. The "Agnus Dei" strikes us as one of the most original and effective numbers of the whole work; the plaintive voice parts, for the most part in octave and unison, are supported by an accompaniment of admirable character and colour. The orchestral colouring, indeed, throughout the Requiem is one of its most striking features. The concluding number, on the whole, is exceedingly impressive. Verdi wrote the Requiem for a special occasion; but, judging from his setting of the words, we cannot believe that he could have been naturally drawn to them. Because we do not sympathise with the spirit of much of the music, nor feel that it is sacred in the sense of Mozart's or Cherubini's "Requiem," or, to mention a modern writer, Dvorák, Verdi's work must not be dismissed as that of a second-rate composer. Although unequal, it displays genius of a high order, and its revival by the Bach choir is welcome. That a "Bach" society should perform a work by Verdi matters little; but seeing that so many important works of the Saxon master still await a hearing, the rest of the programme might perhaps have been devoted to him. The performance was, on the whole, good. The solo vocalists were Miss A. Williams, Miss Brema; Messrs. Shakespeare and Andrew Black. The last named sang with special feeling. Miss Brema was heard to great advantage, also, in a dramatic "Scene der Marfa," composed by Dr. Joachim. Dr. Stanford, as usual, was the conductor.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

NATIONAL

All the Profits are divided among the Assured.

FOR MUTUAL
LIFE ASSURANCE.

PROVIDENT

PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED,
£4,000,000.

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.

PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.

INSTITUTION.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with provision for Old Age.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

CADBURY'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE, THEREFORE BEST.

NO CHEMICALS USED.

"The typical Cocoa of English manufacture. Absolutely pure."—The Analyst.

"We have examined the samples brought under our notice, and find that they are genuine, and that the Cocoa Essence is just what it is declared to be by CADBURY BROTHERS."

The late Editor of the Sanitary Review, writing on "The Consumption of Cocoa," warns the public against the use of foreign Cocoas containing alkali, and makes the following allusion to the firm of CADBURY BROTHERS:—"It is the aim and practice of this famous firm to send out Cocoa absolutely pure, of the highest quality which art will permit."

CADBURY'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE, THEREFORE BEST.

NO CHEMICALS USED.

The Editor of the Medical Annual speaks in the highest terms of CADBURY'S COCOA as a beverage and a food for invalids on account of its absolute purity, high quality, and great solubility; and counsels the Medical Profession to remember, in recommending Cocoa, that the name CADBURY on any packet is a guarantee of purity.

CADBURY'S COCOA.—"A Food alike suitable for building up the growing body, and for repairing the waste which is incidental to all the processes of life."—Health.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1078.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1892.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PAGE

JEFFERIES'S TOILERS OF THE FIELD, by E. PERCELL	599
EPINASSE'S LIFE OF VOLTAIRE, by F. HAWKINS	600
WEDMORE'S RENUNCIATIONS, by GEORGE COTTEWELL	601
COMPTON'S EUROPEAN ADVENTURERS IN HINDUSTAN, by H. G. KERNE	602
NOLDEKE'S SKETCHES FROM EASTERN HISTORY, by A. W. BENN	603
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP	603
GIFT BOOKS	605
NOTES AND NEWS	606
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	607
ORIGINAL VERSE: "OUTSIDE THE GATE," by Miss F. PEACOCK	607
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	607
ART AND BOOK SALES	607
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	608
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Date of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales , by Prof. Skeat; "W. B. Scott's Autobiographical Notes," by Prof. Minto and A. C. Swinburne; Hakluyt Editing—a Correction , by E. Delmar Morgan; The London University Problem , by T. Tyler	608
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	610
PHIOLOGICAL BOOKS	610
CORRESPONDENCE—
Note on some of Jaimini's Sūtras , by Col. Jacob	611
PHIOLOGY NOTES	611
SCIENCE NOTES	611
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	611
THE EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND	612
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Roman Inscription from Carlisle , by Robinson Ellis	615
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	615
MUSIC NOTES	615

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING AND SHORTHAND
WORK of every description—Literary, Scientific, Legal, &c.—undertaken. Large, highly trained staff. LECTURES REPORTED VERBATIM, moderate terms. Translations—Miss ASHWORTH'S Type-Writing and Shorthand Offices, 28, Victoria Street, S.W.

UNIVERSITY TYPE-WRITING
OFFICE, OXFORD (10, King Edward Street).—MSS. of all descriptions typed and prepared for the press. Literary, Scientific, Medical, and Foreign MSS. carefully copied and revised by experienced typists. Notes taken at the Bodleian. Shorthand Clerk and Typist sent any distance by train. Translations.—For price list and information address the Secretary.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE of a Collection of BOOKS
(Ancient and Modern) in Antiquarian, Historical, Biographical, and General Literature: including Library Editions of Standard Works. Gratis.—FRANCIS EDWARDS, 83, High Street, Marylebone, London, W.

THE TRUTH about STAMMERING.—
Any one interested will receive the latest information and important books on the Cure, on loan, post free, without charge.—THURIEL, Messrs. Deacon's, 154, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.

AN ENGLISH GENTLEMAN, now at the World's Fair, Chicago, is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as COMMISSION AGENT. Special qualifications for Works of Art.—Address, in first instance, M. GRIFFIN, 13, Ashurst Street, Battersea, S.W.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74 NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

Recently published, crown 8vo, 6s.

DISTINCTION: and the Criticism of Beliefs.

By ALFRED SIDGWICK.

"The whole book is very fresh in thought and expression, and shows many old questions in new and interesting aspects. Take for instance, the treatment of controversy in Chap. IV, and elsewhere. The discussion of this subject is original and admirable, and seems to me to be one of the most attractive portions of a book which is excellent reading throughout."

"One of that rare but ever-timely class of books which, the most penetrating and surest thinker finds it no waste of time deliberately to peruse. The book is pregnant with suggestion, and, though likely to be most appreciated by the philosophically trained student, will be found full of instruction by serious readers of all classes. The illustrations employed are culled from many departments of familiar experience."

"The volume teems with suggestive thought, both for theoretic consideration and for practical application; the positive results at once enrich philosophic literature in a hitherto neglected department, and are not incommensurate with the effort by which they have been evolved."

"This is a clever and readable book. It is not a text-book of logic, but a shrewd discussion that plays round some very difficult problems, approaching them with a studied air of carelessness, but with more skill and knowledge than are to be found in many more pretentious volumes. The whole spirit of the book is healthy."

"Will certainly prove a valuable aid towards accuracy of thought and accuracy of expression."

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council is prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR of LATIN. The stipend of the Professor will be £350 per annum. Applications together with testimonials, must be sent in before January 10th. For further information apply to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, University College, Cardiff, November 20th, 1892.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.

The SECOND TERM will begin on January 20th. The College supplies for persons of either sex above the ordinary school age, the means of continuing their studies in Science, Languages, History, Literature, and Theory of Music. The Chemical, Physical, Electrical, Engineering, Geological, and Biological Laboratories are open daily. The Engineering Department includes Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Mining Engineering, Surveying and Architectural Work; and special arrangements for practical work have been made with various Engineers in and near Bristol. Several SCHOLARSHIPS are tenable at the College.

ENGINEERING EDUCATION.

Professor—J. RYAN, M.A., LL.M. (Camb.), D.Sc. (Lond.).

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.—Courses of Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Mining Engineering. Mineralogy and Applied Geology for Civil and Mining Engineers. Facilities are offered in the way of College Scholarships, Engineering Works' Scholarships, and special arrangements for entrance into professional life. CALENDAR, containing full information, price 1s. (by post, 1s. 3d.). Applications for Vacancies should be made as early as possible to the Secretary, from whom Prospectus and particulars of residence in Clifton may be obtained. JAMES RAFTER, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

FACULTY OF MEDICINE.

The Council is about to proceed to the APPOINTMENT of a PROFESSOR of ANATOMY and a PROFESSOR of PHYSIOLOGY. The stipend in each case will be £350 per annum. Applications, together with printed copies of testimonials, must be sent in on or before February 10th, 1893. For further particulars apply to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, University College, Cardiff, Dec. 15th, 1892.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT.

The Royal Naval School. About TWENTY FELLOWSHIP and EXTRANEOUS SCHOLARSHIPS, £50 to £20, offered in April. Full particulars of Head Master.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The SECOND TERM of the Nineteenth Session in the Department of Science, Technology, and Arts begins on TUESDAY, January 10th. The Classes prepare for University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine, as well as for various Professions. Prospectuses of Day and Evening Classes may be had post free from the Secretary. The Hall of Residence in connection with the College is now open.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, West Kensington.

—An EXAMINATION for filling up about FOUR VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 14th JANUARY NEXT.—For information apply to THE HURSTON, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

Price 2d., by post 2d.

MODERN VIOLIN MAKERS AND DEALERS.

By the AUTHOR of "OLD VIOLINS and their MAKERS."

See MONDAY'S Issue of "THE BAZAAR," which also contains many other interesting articles, and hundreds of announcements of all kinds of Property for Exchange, Wanted, or for Sale by Private Persons. Price 2d., at all Newsagents and Bookstalls. Office, 175, Strand, London.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

or the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum. N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in one Subscription, and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS. Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms. Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices. LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

THE CITY BRANCH

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited. Is Now Removed from 2, King Street, Cheapside, to 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C. (MUSSEX HOUSE EXPL.)

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY. 10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER. Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited, 30 to 31, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON; 241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 18, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HEER, HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary book illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Price on application.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.'S Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process, For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Book Illustrations, Original MSS., Designs, Maps, Manufactures, Photographs, Machinery, Views, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c. at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application. Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.—THE THIRTY-FIRST WINTER EXHIBITION OF SKETCHES and STUDIES is now OPEN, 3, PAUL MALL EAST. From 10 till 5. Admission 1s. Catalogue 6d. Agents: R. P. & Co., 17, W. S. S. Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—The EXHIBITION of WORKS by OLD MASTERS and deceased British Artists will OPEN on MONDAY, JANUARY 2nd, and JARVIS 1893. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 6d. 15, Pall Mall, London.

STANDARD WORKS FOR THE LIBRARY.

Prof. MOMMSEN'S HISTORY of ROME to the TIME of AUGUSTUS. Translated by Dr.
DICKSON. The Popular Edition. 4 vols., crown
8vo, 16s. 6d.

* Also sold separately as follows:—Vols. I. and II., 21s.;
Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., 15s.

THE ROMAN PROVINCES. Being the History of Rome from Caesar to Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by the Rev. F. W.
DICKSON. 2 vols., 8vo, with Maps, 36s.

The HISTORY of ROMAN CLASSICAL LITERATURE. By R. W. BROWNE, M.A., Ph.D., late Prebendary of St. Paul's, and Professor of Classical Literature in King's College, London. A New Edition.
1 vol., demy 8vo, 9s.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY.
From the German of Professor MAX DUNKER. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. In 6 vols., demy 8vo. Each Volume can be obtained separately, 21s.

THE HISTORY of the RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CRESSY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon.
A Popular Account of the Primary Principles and Formation and Development of the English Constitution, avoiding all Party Politics. Fourteenth Edition. Crown
8vo, 6s.

DEAN HOOK: his Life and Letters.
Edited by the Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS, Vicar of Woolbeding, Author of "Life of St. John Chrysostom,"
&c. The Popular Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Index and Portraits, 6s.

BISHOP THIRLWALL'S LETTERS to a FRIEND. Edited by the late Dean STANLEY.
A much Enlarged Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, with a Portrait, 6s.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY. By WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK, late Dean of Chichester. ST. AUGUSTINE to JUXON. 12 vols., demy 8vo, 9s. Each separately (with the exception of III., IV., VI., and VII.), 15s. The New Series begins with Vol. VI. Vol. XII. is the Index.

THE HEAVENS. By Amedee Guille-
MIN. In demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. With 2 Portraits, 6s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL.
From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW
SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

THE HISTORY of the THIRTY YEARS' WAR. From the German of ANTON
GINDELY, by Prof. TEN BROOK. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, 24s.

THE LETTERS of HORACE WAL-POLE, FOURTH EARL of ORFORD. Edited by PETER CUNNINGHAM, F.S.A. In 9 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, 25 5s.

THE HISTORY of the GREAT
FRENCH REVOLUTION. From the French of
M. THIERS. By FREDERICK SHOBERL. With 41
Fine Engravings, and Portraits of the most Celebrated Personages referred to in the work, engraved on Steel by William Greatbatch. In 5 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

THE FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES of the WORLD. By Prof. CRESSY. Library Edition, in demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. Popular Edition, crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S PUBLICATIONS.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

JANUARY.

THE SOUTH MEATH ELECTION. By J. E. REDMOND, M.P.
THE INCREASE of INSANITY. By W. J. CORBET.
ABDUR RAHMAN KHAN. By Sir LEZEL GRIFFIN,
K.C.S.I.
TIERRA DEL FUEGO. By D. R. O'SULLIVAN.
THE DEARNESS OF CHEAP LABOUR. By DAVID F.
SCHLOSS.
MICHELANGELO. By HERBERT P. HORNE.
POLITICS and FINANCE in BRAZIL. By an ENGLISH-MAN.
SMALL FARMS. By Miss MARCH-PHILLIPS.
SILVER UP TO DATE. By MORETON FREWEN.
THE BENEFITS of VIVISECTION. By A. COPPEN JONES.
GHOSTS and their PHOTOS. By the Rev. H. R. HAWES.
SOCIAL POLITICS in NEW ZEALAND. By Sir JULIUS VOGEL, K.C.M.G.

W. H. HUDSON, C.M.Z.S.

IDLE DAYS in PATAGONIA. By W. H. HUDSON, C.M.Z.S., Author of "The Naturalist in La Plata." With numerous Illustrations by A.
Hartley and J. Smit. Demy 8vo. [In January.]

H. CUMBERLAND BENTLEY.

SONGS and VERSES. By H.
CUMBERLAND BENTLEY. With Illustrations by Finch Mason. Crown 8vo, 4s. [Ready.]

THE REV. H. N. HUTCHINSON.

EXTINCT MONSTERS. A Popular
Account of some of the Larger Forms of Animal Life.
By the Rev. H. N. HUTCHINSON. With numerous
Illustrations by J. Smit and others, and a Preface by Dr.
HENRY WOODWARD, F.R.S. Demy 8vo, 12s.

The MORNING POST says:—"This is quite one of the most successful of recent undertakings in the field of popular science. . . . The beasts which Mr. Hutchinson so graphically describes, and which in many cases are so vividly represented by Mr. Smit and his colleagues, have never been seen in the flesh. . . . The volume is the best proof that has yet been forthcoming of the success of the science of paleontology as now pursued by its leading votaries. The letterpress is clear without baldness, and scientific without obscurity, and the plates are excellent. It is a book to be read by young and old, and is as entertaining as it is of educational value."

JAMES FITZMAURICE KELLY.

THE LIFE of MIGUEL DE CERVANTES SAAVEDRA: A Biographical, Literary, and Historical Study, with a tentative Bibliography from 1585 to 1892, and an Annotated Appendix on the "Canto de Caliope." By JAMES FITZMAURICE
KELLY. Demy 8vo, 16s.

The TIMES says:—"A very elaborate and painstaking biography of the immortal author of 'Don Quixote.' . . .
Mr. Fitzmaurice Kelly's knowledge of his subject is unimpeachable, and he has devoted much pains to its exposition."

The NATIONAL OBSERVER says:—"Mr. Kelly writes with sense and spirit and learning, and there is no good Cervantista but will rejoice in his book."

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

ELIZABETH GODFREY.

'TWIXT WOOD and SEA. By
ELIZABETH GODFREY. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

The GLASGOW HERALD says:—"The story is told in so simple and natural a style that one cannot fail to be impressed by it."

The SCOTSMAN says:—"The interest . . . is real, and grows from volume to volume, and the story from beginning to end is a piece of good, well-conceived, honestly-elaborated literary work. . . . We could easily believe ourselves to be reading a genuine autobiography."

THOMAS HARDY, J. M. BARRIE, MRS. OLIPHANT, &c.
STORIES from "BLACK and WHITE." By THOMAS HARDY, J. M. BARRIE, Mrs.
OLIPHANT, W. E. NORRIS, W. CLARK RUSSELL,
GRANT ALLEN, Mrs. LIXAN LINTON, and JAMES
PAYN. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

The SCOTSMAN says:—"The book, as a whole, is delightful, the variety in style and temper adding a further charm to the substantial power and skill that each tale manifests."

CAPTAIN L. ANDERSON.

THE STORY of ALLAN GORDON.
By Captain LINDSAY ANDERSON, Author of "A
Cruise in an Opium Clipper." Crown 8vo, 5s.

The WORLD says:—"It cannot fail to interest."
The COURT CIRCULAR says:—"Full of thrilling adventures."

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

Three New Novels, at all Libraries.
WOLFENBERG. By Wm. Black.
3 vols., crown 8vo.

THE MYSTERY of ST. DUN-STAN'S: a Realistic and Sensational Story of Fleet Street in 1724. By THOMAS WRIGHT, Author of "The Life of William Cowper," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

The PREACHER'S DAUGHTER
By AMELIA E. BARR, Author of "Jan Vedder's Wife," "Friend Olivia," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"The finest Gift-book of the Season."—Daily Chronicle.
THE CAPITALS of the WORLD.

In Two Volumes, superbly illustrated, handsomely bound in half-morocco, bevelled boards, gilt edges.
Price THREE GUINEAS NET.
"One of the most acceptable gift-books of the season."—Times.
"In no similar work have artistic excellence and descriptive power been more liberally put at the service of the world's capitals."
Standard.

SEVENTH EDITION, JUST READY.

TEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY in the MAHDI'S CAMP, 1882-1892. From the Original Manuscripts of Father Joseph Ohrwalder, late Priest of the Austrian Mission Station at Delen, in Kordofan, who recently escaped, with Two Sisters of Mercy, on Camels, from the Sudan. By Major F. R. WINGATE, R.A., Director of Military Intelligence, Egyptian Army, and Author of "Mahdism and the Egyptian Sudan." Illustrated by Photographs, Maps, and Special Drawings by Walter C. Horsley. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

STORIES TOLD in an AFRICAN
FOREST by GROWN-UP CHILDREN of AFRICA.
By A. J. MOUNTENEY JEPHSON, one of Mr. Stanley's Officers, and Author of "Emin Pasha and the Rebellion at the Equator." With numerous Illustrations from Drawings by Walter W. Buckley. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.
"One of the best of the Christmas books."—World.

SIX YEARS of ADVENTURE in CONGOLOD. By E. J. GLAVE, one of Stanley's
Pioneer Officers. Illustrated with 75 Woodcuts and Penand-Ink Sketches. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

PREACHERS OF THE AGE.—NEW VOLUME.

CHILDREN of GOD. By the Rev.
EDWARD A. STUART, M.A., Vicar of St. James's,
Holloway. With Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo,
cloth, 3s. 6d.

TEN CENTURIES of TOILETTE.
From the French of A. ROBIDA. By Mrs. CASHEL
HOEY. New Edition. Small post 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"Wonderful pictures in colours of the fashions of a thousand years."
Truth.

THREE NEW GIFT BOOKS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.
MISTRESS BRANICAN. By Jules
VERNE, Author of "Five Weeks in a Balloon," &c.
Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.
"A winter without a book by Jules Verne would scarcely be intelligible."—Globe.

SANDY CARMICHAEL. By C. J. Hyno,
Author of "The Captured Cruiser," &c. With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.
"One of the best stories we have read."—Spectator.

THE PRICELESS ORCHID: a Story
of Adventure in the Forests of Yucatan. By PERCY
AINSLIE, Author of "Lost in Japan," &c. With 8
Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.
"There is not a dull page in the book."—Guardian.

FASHIONS OF TO-DAY.
NEW YEAR'S NUMBER.
NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

Containing—
PRESENTATION PLATE—New Portraits of Princess Marie of Edinburgh and the Crown Prince of Roumania.

TWO COLOURED PLATES and about 40 Illustrations of "Fashions of To-Day."

THEATRICAL DRESSES, with Portrait of one of our leading Actresses.
Also ARTICLES by Miss ESME STUART, the Author of "How to be Happy though Married," Madame de BRONTELLES, HERMANN
KLEIN, MARY E. CALTON, and the EDITRESS, with Chapters of a Serial Novel by Lieut.-Col. WARBURTON, entitled "The Gift of his Life."

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.
SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.
JANUARY NUMBER.
Beautifully Illustrated.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1892.

No. 1078, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Toilers of the Field. By Richard Jefferies. (Longmans.)

THIS is a book to be deplored and deprecated, a desperate attempt to make hay while the sun shines, out of weeds, rushes, and rubbish, old and new. The only scrap of fresh matter we find is a "True Tale of the Wiltshire Labourer," written years ago for a local newspaper, but somehow never printed. It is a powerful, one-sided sketch, after the manner of La Terre, but frequent imitation of this manner has since reduced its directness to a suspicion of brutality. With this exception the book is entirely made up of reprints, or reprints of reprints, under a capital fancy title, The Toilers of the Field, which suggests a separate, authentic, homogeneous book.

The work has, however, a certain curious value. It is in two parts. The first consists of some unimportant early stuff; the second of some trivial posthumous matter. It therefore represents the sweeping out of the workshop before the real work began, and the cleaning up of the rubbish after the work was over. Of the real work there is no trace. That it was good work I know both from the extracts I have seen and from the evidence of the critics. Jefferies in his prime is to me as yet but a name; free from the glamour of his genius, I am therefore able to judge calmly these bye-blows of his pen. The sole notice they call for, the sole feeling they rouse, is one of astonishment that their writer ever became famous. In themselves they are just the harmless, amateur, ordinary stuff to which one is indulgently indifferent.

There is nothing or very little in them of the real Jefferies. Possibly he may have been somewhat over-rated—indeed, I notice that his warmest admirers are town-bred Arcadians whose suffrages are suspicious—but surely he cannot have been like this. Of course, knowing what he became, one can now pick out the germs of his future success, but here they are only such germs as lie unnoticed in most amateur work.

The three letters to the Times, written in 1872, should have been placed first. They were on the Farmers v. Labourers controversy, and differ in no respect from the other plain, sensible, unpretending letters which intelligent farmers and squires are always writing to that journal. Next we have five articles printed in Fraser's Magazine in 1874, no doubt accepted by the editor in spite of their literary imperfections, as the artless work of an agriculturist, and so an opportune contribution to the topic of the hour. They seem to have attracted no attention. I have read them all, but it was a pure waste of time. Save here and there some happy touches of description, and the healthy, straightforward tone that pervades them, they have no value. Of literary art there is as yet no trace; in fact, some parts read much like a schoolboy's essays: for instance, the prolix platitudes about the woodshed (pp. 5 and 6). Repetitions abound, made worse by the fact that the same matter occurs again and again in the different fragments in this collection. There is an extreme want of proportion, of arrangement of matter, and of calculation of effect, all which betray the journalistic, unliterary hand. With most of the writer's practical views one naturally concurs; but they have since that day been more fully developed, probably by himself, certainly by others, and have become commonplaces. Such contemporary interest as they may have had they have lost—twenty years have entirely changed the situation. But have they even historical value? Well, no doubt we should prize a clear, full, impartial view of rural life at that transitional epoch (1872-74) when the Education Bill, the Labourers' Union, and the agricultural depression were beginning to act and react upon one another. But Jefferies does not give a clear full view, and, besides, he is distinctly one-sided. In the Times letters he is pleading, and very fairly, the cause of the farmers; and many of the most weighty and positive statements which he there makes, he flatly contradicts in the Fraser articles, where he is painting the labourers in lurid colours to suit the eye of magazine readers. I do not say that he was unconscientious, but simply that his judgment is not to be trusted: not one word against him as a man of sense and feeling, but merely that he possessed, at all events then, neither ripeness of knowledge nor the breadth of understanding fit to grapple with hard problems or to draw wide inferences. His picture of the Wiltshire peasant is of course drawn from life, and intrinsically true so far as it goes; but he is dealing with the darker side of rural life, and reminds us a little of the old books about American slavery. In "John Smith's Shanty" and the "Wiltshire Tale" (which completes the first part) he gives a powerful, though somewhat theatrical, fancy sketch of the horrors of village existence. These didactic tales, like Miss Martineau's novelised Political Economy, are too controversial to convince, though in the main, I have no doubt, founded on fact. Jefferies understood the peasants thoroughly: he saw and told the truth about them. He knew well that their trumpeted wrongs were partly their own fault, partly due to economic conditions, that every amelioration of their condition they owed to the unthanked benevolence of the Squire and Farmer, and to the untiring, the great-hearted, the splendid enthusiasm of the Country Parson; he knew that their only enemies were themselves, their only tyrants their fellows who had managed to scramble over their heads: in short, there is hardly one of the monstrous lies current in '92 which he did not expose in '74. But, true as it is, was it worth reprinting? So much has since been written, and so much better written, that only those believe the lies who find it their interest so to do. A good deal of truth, and no little nonsense has appeared about these Wiltshire rurals. This is hardly the place for my own experiences, which are confined to the last two years, but I may shortly say that they are the natural sequence of the situation twenty years ago as Jefferies describes it. My first impressions were wholly unfavourable—cunning, greed, churlishness, impurity, and utter meanness of mind and heart. One man, whom I understood was indigenous, puzzled me so much by his bold, manly friendliness that I said at random, "one would have thought you came from the Thames valley." He did; and black indeed were the tents of Kedah as he painted them. The Labourers' Union and the Franchise have achieved the moral degradation of the men—not the women, who have kept their heads. The sordid impulses on which Jefferies dwells have now a wider field; sordid aims, sordid principles are now openly avowed without the urban revolutionary's veil of political cant. The question has nothing to do with politics. We find some rustics supporting an ultra-Radical squire from purely Tory motives, personal loyalty, gratitude, and admiration; these are moral motives. We see others, in the very teeth of the Labourers' Union, voting against him and Primrose Leaguers from democratic motives—hatred of so-called tyrants and spurious independence which never forgives a kindness. Among the town agitators there is always the redeeming grace of noble politic ideals, however distorted or lightly held; the middle-aged peasant thinks that he sees through this farce: to him his newly acquired power is simply a tool to be craftily used to gain his petty ends and vent his petty spites. It is no matter of politics, but of a passing phase of social deterioration. These men were unprepared for the strain of modern town-ideas; naturally their old conventional morality has broken down under it. But the phase will pass. The Education Act has done more than Jefferies hoped, even for Wiltshire. True, it teaches little that is not straightway forgotten, but it has done something better. My first impressions have been toned down by one reassuring discovery: that the lads, and even the young men, are simply a different species to their fathers. Many bad tendencies, some old, some new, are at work among them; but ignorant as they are, the mystic barriers of the three R.s no longer cut them off from civilisation: an educated, well-informed man is no longer a hated alien, but a more perfect edition of themselves. They are less suspicious, less servile, less insolent. Some bumptiousness and self-assertion may be expected just at first; but I am convinced that the effect of the Act will be, not to unsettle the peasants and set them against their natural leaders, but to draw closer the distinct classes which from climatic and economic conditions must in our rural districts ever remain distinct. If agriculture revives or is revived, there is a great future before the peasants. And to return to the Academical sphere whence I have strayed, let me add that it is not to the universities and city polytechnics, but to the peasants of the next century, grounded in the village school, nurtured to a sane and healthy life, ruminating the secrets of Nature while busied with their ancient craft on Nature's holy ground, that I look for the next outburst of original English genius.

But since Jefferies' time the village life of the Western down-country has been much more fully studied, perhaps by no one so acutely as by the author of a modest novel, called Dark, which has lately appeared. It seems to continue his observations in his own spirit down to the present date, and its sound views would have had his cordial support. The progress in popular knowledge of, and interest in, rural affairs during the last twenty years which it marks, is apparent when we note in Jefferies' Frazer articles, how he laboriously describes the commonest and broadest features of rustic life, now familiar to every city-pent reader, as if he was dealing with the huts, the implements, the manners and customs of New Guinea or Tibet.

Little need be said of the second part of the collection. It consists of papers printed posthumously in Longman's Magazine. They should never have been printed at all, since they were evidently fragments and failures which the author had deliberately suppressed. Clearly Jefferies never lost the directness, the vigour, nor the awkward transitions of his earlier style; but to judge by these specimens, he had acquired much more grace and colour. His observation had become more subtle, his presentation more florid, his tints more glowing and varied. In this he was probably carried along by the wave of popular admiration, and I should expect to find in his longer books the descriptions, however admirable individually, somewhat overpowering as a whole. But there is not a doubt that he could both see and describe, as very few can, so long as he kept to his own field. But when, as in the article on "The Trafalgar Square Lions," he lets pictorial verbiage hurry him into unknown regions, he is simply lost. The lions are not all he pretends. They are not "the only work of art in the open air" in London. It is not true that "nothing disfigures them," "that they are no more touched than Time itself by the alternations of the seasons," because, if I remember aright, they got dreadfully cracked by the frost, and had to be patched up. It is not true that Venetian architecture is "weak, feeble, mosaic, gimcrack." It is not true that London is everything—that "the cities know they are not real"—"that San Francisco thinks London; so does St. Petersburg"; that "the heart of the world is in London, and the cities with the simulacrum of man in them are empty." Thus probably thought young Dick Jefferies about his native Little Sotwell; thus wrote Mr. Jefferies, the admired author, about London. But he did not print it.

E. PURCELL.

"GREAT WRITERS."—Life of Voltaire. By Francis Espinasse. (Walter Scott.)

MR. ESPINASSE has long been an authority on the large subject of this little work. More than a quarter of a century ago, presumably at an early age, he conceived the idea of writing an elaborate biography of Voltaire in three volumes, to be brought out separately. The first, covering the story down to the iconoclast's expatriation to England, was published by Chapman & Hall in 1866. It betokened no ordinary research and insight, but had not a few drawbacks in the important matter of style. I remember that it had the honour of being noticed in the Fortnightly Review by Mr. John Morley, who, perhaps, found it of service to him in his own masterly study on Voltaire two or three years later. He said:

"It is unfortunately defaced with all sorts of mannerisms imitated from the illustrious author of Frederick the Great. It is not everybody who can bend the bow of Ulysses; and Mr. Carlyle's style, potent as it is in his own works, becomes in the hands of other people as the manna which was preserved in the wilderness until the next day after it descended from heaven. In style, as in other things, the corruption of the best is the worst. . . . We are always certain of one good thing: there can be no dulness in a Life of Voltaire, and this much can assuredly be said about Mr. Espinasse's first instalment. It is full of life and vivacity."

Mr. Morley's copy of the book, with his autograph, the date, and some notes in pencil for objections which he intended to take, is lying before me as I write. If appearances may be trusted, the author received but little practical encouragement to continue his undertaking, for the promised second and third volumes have not yet been printed.

Regarded as what it is, a biography of the strictly objective order, the latest addition to the "Great Writers" series has several points of excellence. It is generally up to date, accurate, impartial, and bright without any trace of affectation. Mr. Espinasse, far from being content to give us a mere abridgment of his old work, has evidently read and re-read Gustave Desnoiresterre's exhaustive eight volumes on Voltaire et la Société au Dix-huitième Siècle—to which, by the way, he pays a well-merited tribute—and the collections of letters that have come to light since 1866. He is no longer under the necessity of discussing the date of Voltaire's birth, which is now known to have been November 21, 1694. There is absolutely no truth in the story that the child came into the world in the previous February, that on account of his physical feebleness the baptismal ceremony was put off for nine months, and that his father, in order to avoid the penalties with which the clergy would have visited him for the delay, gave the registrar a false date. Though Mr. Espinasse does not reject it altogether, another well known story, to the effect that at the age of three, under the tuition of the Abbé de Châteauneuf, Voltaire learnt by heart Lourdé's impious Moisade, long attributed to Jean Baptiste Rousseau, is probably entitled to about as much credence. Be this as it may, he soon showed a tendency to break away from dogmatic theology, and was "in all likelihood a decided sceptic" when, at seventeen, he left the Collège Louis-le-Grand. In Mr. Espinasse's view, the prophecy alleged to have been uttered there by Father Lejay has "a strong look of being manufactured after the event." Did Voltaire, under the influence of the Duchesse du Maine, pen the satirical verses upon the Regency which led to his first exile from Paris? The point is not without interest, but Mr. Espinasse is unable to throw further light upon it. Old François Arouet's irritation at the leaning shown by his second son for literature and society, in preference to the study of the law, found vent in the following comparatively unknown letter to the President of the Chamber of Accounts in 1716:

"Perhaps, Monseigneur, even you may have heard that it has pleased the Regent to recall my son from his exile. The exile distressed me much less than does this precipitate recall, which will complete the ruin of the young man, intoxicated as he is by the success of his poetry, and by the praises and welcome bestowed upon him by the great, whom, with all the respect that I owe to them, I must regard as really poisoning him."

How far the prediction was borne out it is needless to say. Few could have been spoilt less than Voltaire was by early social and literary triumphs. From almost his youth onwards, the brilliant trifter of the drawing room was the most indefatigable of thinkers, students, and writers. Ill or well, he got through an amount of work that might have exhausted the energies of half a dozen ordinary men. He had all the strength of purpose and the patient industry required to bring his many-sided genius into full play. Nor was any of his labour thrown away. He won fame as an historian, a poet, a dramatist, a philosopher, a novelist, a critic, a pamphleteer, an exponent of science, and a writer of vers de société. He rose to the first place for the time being in European literature, filled the minds of more than one generation with his thought, and originated all that was rational in the movement which culminated in the Revolution. In one way his influence was pernicious enough; but even his adversaries may admit that he did yeoman's service for humanity, justice, toleration, and ordered freedom. His personal character showed a singular compound of greatness and littleness, and Mr. Espinasse has as much to say of the latter as of the former. He does not seek to excuse the poet's outrage upon decency in the "Pucelle," his readiness to tell a falsehood if circumstances invited it, or his want of self-respect and sincerity during his last visit to Berlin. Now and then, moreover, we have a widespread mis-statement about him set right, as when it is pointed out that in the second issue of the Henriade he did not, out of resentment for the Duc de Sully's behaviour to him after the Rohan-Chabot affair, wholly expunge from the poem the name of the great Sully. Mr. Espinasse's errors are few and unimportant; but it may be remarked that "Zaire" was not its author's "first striking success" at the theatre since "Œdipe"—for "Mariamne," reconstructed after its original failure, had appeared in the interim—and that he was not in his "twenty-fifth year" when he decided to change his name.

Voltaire's attitude towards religion is indicated with sufficient clearness in a brief space. Those who ignorantly rail at him as a mere scoffer and denier would do well to read what Mr. Espinasse says on this head. For a long period he recognised the claims of Christianity to the reverence of unbelievers themselves. In the "Épître à Uranie," for instance, he says of the Saviour:

"Ses exemples sont saints; sa morale est divine;
Il console en secret les cœurs qu'il illumine;
Dans les plus grands malheurs il leur offre un appui;
Et si sur l'imposture il fonde sa doctrine,
C'est un bonheur encore d'être trompé par lui."

In "Zaïre" and "Alzire," again, Christian piety is placed in the most attractive light. But the frequent abuse of their power by the clergy presently turned him into the opposite course, and the greater part of his old age was occupied in an attempt to destroy the creed on which that power rested. Mr. Espinasse thinks that if Bolingbroke's talk and the writings of the English deists contributed to Voltaire's armoury some new weapons for use in this attack, nothing that he read or heard during his English visit can have much strengthened the firm conviction which he brought with him of the falsity of the old theology. It may be doubted whether this represents the full extent of his obligation in the matter. Nearly all his weapons are those of the English deists, with the important difference, however, that they were rendered far more effectual by his blistering ridicule. Compared with the battering ram of Bayle, as Mr. Espinasse says, Voltaire's attack on the citadel of orthodoxy is that of modern ordnance. "Ecrasons l'Infâme!" was his war cry, which found echoes far and wide. The abomination in question has been supposed to be Christianity, or Roman Catholicism, or both in one. Mr. Espinasse more correctly defines it as superstition calling itself Christian, which demanded unquestioning obedience from all men, whether in Paris, in Vienna, or at Geneva, visiting disobedience with secular punishment in this world, whenever possible, and with threats of everlasting torture in the other. Except in England, Protestantism was no less given to persecution than Romanism. In his anti-Christian fervour, be it remembered, Voltaire did not become irreligious. Beneath the superficial levity of his character there was a deep undercurrent of simple reverence. He was an ardent theist, not only in theory, but in a good deal of his practice. Paradoxical as it may seem, he was one of the devoutest of men. At Ferney he would rise at daybreak, toil up a hill to see the sun rise over Lake Leman, and then, with his meagre figure bent before the scene, give vent to such exclamations as "Almighty Framers of the skies, I bow down and worship Thee!" Mr. Espinasse says:

"Voltaire's theism was one not only of the head but the heart. Looking at the heavens and the earth, from the galaxy to the worm, he recognised everywhere the handiwork of a Deity, and sometimes, both in prose and verse, he breaks forth into almost Psalmist-like praises of the wisdom and beneficence of the Creator, and thanks Him for the existence which has allowed the sons of men to contemplate the grandeur and beauty of creation."

Nor did he neglect any good opportunity of preaching his faith, some parts of which may now seem a little antiquated. For the atheism afterwards professed by his sometime disciples—Diderot, d'Alembert, Holbach, Helvétius, Raynal—he had nothing but detestation and contempt. In the Dictionnaire Philosophique, under the head of "Dieu," he strongly combated the Système de la Nature, asking whether it was conceivable that entities possessed of intelligence could be produced without intelligence. But atheism daily became more fashionable in France; and the patriarch, to his intense astonishment, found himself held up to scorn by the rank and file of the new school. "Voltaire," a strong-minded lady once remarked, "est bigot; il est déiste."

For the rest, Mr. Espinasse's monograph is by no means so comprehensive as the fulness of his knowledge on the subject had led us to expect. Without ignoring the difficulty, or rather the impossibility, of dealing with a great and momentous career in a comparatively limited compass, we think that he might have made a better use than he has of the space at his command, which amounts to about two hundred closely printed pages. In truth, he has gone to work on a mistaken principle. He aims at an unnecessary minuteness of biographical detail. It is hardly of importance to be told that on leaving Berlin in 1744, Voltaire spent a few weeks in Paris, and, after another sojourn at Brussels, returned once more to Cirey. Curiously enough, Mr. Espinasse, while deeming these things to be worthy of his attention, falls into many grievous sins of omission. He has nothing to say of the od on the riteless burial of Adrienne Lecouvreur, the usually misunderstood criticism on Shakspeare, or the poet's relations with Jean Jacques Rousseau and other great writers of the time. The ode just referred to is of particular importance, since it contained Voltaire's first open declaration of war upon the whole fabric of ecclesiasticism. In effect, as Condorcet says, he reproached the people with their cowardice in submitting to the "shameful yoke" imposed upon them by the Church.

"Ah, verrai-je toujours ma faible nation,
Incertaine de ses vœux, fléttir ce qu'elle admire?
Nos mœurs avec nos lois toujours se contredire?
Et le Français volage endormi sous l'empire
De la superstition?"

Penned as early as 1730, a quarter of a century or more before the cry of "Ecrasons l'Infâme" was raised, these lines necessarily created a profound impression throughout France. Besides losing sight of such matters, Mr. Espinasse has scarcely anything to say of the distinctive features of Voltaire's various sorts of work. What the author of the superb Essai sur les Mœurs et l'Esprit des Nations accomplished for philosophical history is just indicated; but we are not reminded of the exquisite brightness and grace of his society-verse, the vivacity of his correspondence, the peculiar sub-acid of his little tales, or the changes he imported into the French drama. His tragedies, though constructed on the Racinian theory, a lifelong admiration of which blinded him in some measure to the greatness of Shakspeare, differ from those of his predecessors in dealing with a wider sphere of human action, in showing a sense of the value of realistic touches, and inculcating the philosophy of which he was so determined a professor to the end. In one or two respects they may almost be regarded as marking the first stage in the transition from the "classical" to the "romantic," however much he would have shuddered at the prospect of the latter. On the subject of Voltaire's influence over the course of history, Mr. Espinasse is content to point in a single sentence to the altered position of the Church in France, and quote a few passages from Raymond's address at the Berlin Academy of Science in 1868, to the effect that the ideal benefits striven for by the illustrious Frenchman—toleration, spiritual freedom, human dignity, justice—have "become as it were an element of our natural life, like the air we breathe, on which we bestow a thought only when we are deprived of it." This may be excellent as far as it goes, but it is scarcely enough for what is intended to be more than a mere biographical sketch. Altogether, the book will hardly be of real use to the student unless it is read in conjunction with others.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

Renunciations. By Frederick Wedmore. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

WHAT Ben Jonson said about life is equally true of books: "In small proportions we just beauties see." It is not bulk that makes excellence. This dainty volume is an example of the degree of perfection to be found "in short measures." Instead of a single story, wearisomely spun out through three volumes, we have here three stories compressed into one slender octavo. Stories, however, they are not; for the mechanical involutions of plot are wanting, and no space is wasted on the trivialities which are so necessary to fiction. They are studies from the life, pictures that make plain to us some of the innermost workings of the heart. Of surplusage, in the shape of external incident, there is as little as possible. Such subordinate matter as is introduced has its artistic place and fitness in the rendering of the living experience depicted. The first of these studies, "The Chemist in the Suburbs," represents a phase of life in which few people would expect to find romance. Idealism, it is true, does not often consort with drugs and gallipots. But Richard Pelse was an idealist of a very pure type. The key to his character, and almost to his surroundings, is given in the epigrammatic sentence—"Richard Pelse was one of those poor men who are born cultivated: one of the cultivated who are born poor." He never knew his father. His mother was a small newsagent. From having been a druggist's errand-boy Pelse rose to be a druggist himself. His education was the result of his own exertions. It was the education of a man who was "born cultivated." After years of diligence he allowed himself a holiday, and went to Aix-les-Bains. In the garden of his hotel there "a vision of a tall white figure, of floating muslin, of pale-coloured hair," impressed him. The vision was "the lady of the dream of all his youth." His intended short stay of a day or two was prolonged, and he fell deeply in love. The girl was fascinated too; but when with honest candour he told her who and what he was, the instincts of her station—for she was well-born—asserted themselves. But her better instincts, her "naturalness, warmth, impulsiveness," again came uppermost—"such things," as Mr. Wedmore says, "had their rights"—and she determined that she would keep him and his secret to herself for the time. It was a short spell of happiness; but when the parting came her words of genuine tenderness were fraught with the worldly wisdom which told her, as she told him, "it could never, never be." He saw her once only afterwards. His shop was in Orchard-street: she lived with her parents close by in Manchester-square; and on a December night, when he sat alone in the parlour over his shop, the door was opened and the lady of his dream came in. It was another spell of happiness. She played for him a weird piece of Scharwenka's; and when she went away she kissed him, and spoke of coming back "many times." But she never came again. Instead of herself there was a note, the first words of which showed how little the dream had entered into her life. "Oh! Dick: It is of no use, you know." For Richard Pelse the dream was always to remain; but "in the closed piano there slept, for ever, Scharwenka's wild music."

It is conceivable that some people might ask where the idealism comes in. Here is a tradesman who, in spite of his higher tastes, still kept a shop and sold drugs; and here is a girl whose frankness and fondness did not prevent her from shunning what the world would have deemed a bad match. But it was precisely these circumstances that made the ideal possible. If Richard Pelse had been ashamed of his shop, or if Beatrice Image had consented to marry him, and had brought her light and somewhat flippant nature into his life, the ideal would speedily have waned. As it was, life for Richard Pelse was what his cultivated taste had made it. Before he met the lady of his dream he had gathered around him many of the refinements and treasures that appeal to men of imaginative parts and studious habits. His little library was a choice one, and included some rare first editions. In a cabinet he had stored some delicate specimens of china—Worcester, Chelsea, Nantgarw. These things expressed for him an elevation of life remote from common interests. But he was unconsciously feeling his way all the time towards some ideal beauty, some imaginary excellence, which it was necessary he should set up and worship. Not until he saw the vision of floating muslin and pale-coloured hair in the hotel-garden at Aix-les-Bains did his ideal take shape. Then it did, and it remained with him ever afterwards in the thought of Beatrice Image, as he imagined her to be. So all-sufficing to him was his dream that he left Orchard-street, left the neighbourhood of Manchester-square, and took a humble shop at Islington, where, among people he did not know, he could live his lonely but charmed life and be content. During that brief period of his troubled passion, his books and treasures had little attraction for him; but when his love recovered its true calm, they became dearer to him than ever. They had ministered to the growth of his ideal before it took shape, and they now derived from its clearer existence an added interest. The outer world drifted further away: his inner world became richer; and one conceives that the end was not a sad one. Thus Richard Pelse renounced much—for though the chief renunciation of his life was an involuntary one, it was, nevertheless, a great giving up—but did he not gain more than he lost?

The last of these three life-studies is a tragedy. Such story as there is in it must not be told here, for it is fitting that the reader should ascertain it for himself. It is only a short story, as length is measured by pages, but in point of the intense feeling compressed into its small space it is as long as a lifetime—as two intertwined and unsevered lifetimes. The renunciation we have here is that of the known, impossible for the unknown hope. Life sometimes develops crises in which the anxious and overborne spirit would welcome, if it might, a deliverance that would make an end of mortal hindrances and limitations. It is such a crisis that Mr. Wedmore depicts in "The North Coast and Eleanor." Here too, indeed, the renunciation which follows is involuntary; but it is a coming event which casts its shadow before in the growing readiness of the sufferers for the doom which overtakes them. Without realising that they go to meet their fate, they do meet it and accept it. Blind fate is always cruel, but in this instance it is kind also. It sanctions a mutual self-surrender which, under any loss final test, could not have been made. Poetic justice is done, by a compensation which promises to be everlasting, for a mortal loss. The skill with which this terrible passage of human experience is rendered will impress the critical and uncritical reader alike. It is a piece of vivid writing—not in the least overstrained or artificially sensational—which makes one see and feel the event as though it were entirely real and present.

Mr. Wedmore has placed between these more serious pieces a lighter one—a sketch full of delicate humour, made all the pleasanter by happy artistic touches in the people, the scenery, and the incidents. Kenyon, a minor poet "whose verse is much 'enquired for' at the Bodley Head," confides to Binns, a political leader-writer, the story of his having nearly fallen in love with a fascinating blonde, and of the catastrophe which nipped his tender passion in the bud. But Binns is an unsympathetic listener. He is a believer "in robust loves, rather than in sentiment combed out fragile and thin"; and he would rather—as he says—"clink glasses with my friend, and kiss the girl I love, than even be the author of your quite admirable 'Note' on the 'Essential Identity of the Ballade and the Chant Royal.'"

"A Confidence at the Savile" is delightful in itself, and is an excellent foil to the more important pieces on either side of it. The whole book belongs to the highest class of imaginative work in prose. The pieces are not ambitious: their limitations are obvious; but they are carefully and almost perfectly produced. There are book-lovers who arrange their books according to the affinities which might be ascribed to them. I should be disposed to place Mr. Wedmore's Renunciations by the side of Mr. Pater's Imaginary Portraits. There is this curious difference between the two works, that Mr. Pater's portraits are imaginary pictures of real people, while Mr. Wedmore's are real portraits of imaginary people; but both of them, and the later work as much as the earlier, are examples of a style which is at once graceful in form and imaginative in character.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

A Particular Account of European Military Adventurers of Hindustan. By Herbert Compton. (Fisher Unwin.)

THIS is a big book on a not very big subject. The adventurers, of whom Mr. Compton writes with so much research and spirit, played a part that was not without importance in the end of the great anarchy. With their mercenary swords they cut down some of the obstacles to progress, and prepared the way for a better organised system. A glimpse of such men, across the fogs of intrigue and the smoke of battle, gives encouragement to the student wandering in the dry paths of Indian history. For if, from time to time, he hears the voice of a brave free lance, a human interest appears to cheer him such as he cannot obtain from Mahratta or Pathan, from Nana Farnavis or Amir Khan. Nevertheless, nothing can disguise from the most ill-regulated and impatient mind that such appearances are but episodes in history; we must not waste all our small stock of time in their entertaining presence. If we may speak plainly without imputation of discourtesy to one who has evidently taken great pains for our instruction, we would say, "Something too much of this."

The book consists of 419 closely printed large octavo pages, without a scrap of index. Yet it only contains the biographies of three men, the Savoyard de Boigne, the Anglo-Hibernian George Thomas, and the Frenchman Cuillier, better known under his alias of Perron. But there is an Appendix containing short accounts of about fifty other adventurers; and the reader will probably be inclined to wish that all the narratives had been dealt with on the same scale. Certainly, the omission of rhetoric, reflexion, and repetition—those three R.s. of the inexperienced bookmaker—would have greatly reduced the bulk of the work; and perhaps it is not too much to hope that—in the event of a second edition being called for, as, let us hope, it will—an abridged issue may be found possible in the manner suggested by those friendly hints. Above all, let Mr. Compton not forget to give us an index, the absence of which is really a grave drawback in the case of a book too heavy (in mere bulk) to be read for amusement, and chiefly valuable as a work of historical reference. Lastly, let the map be carefully revised and pruned. It is a good idea to give the country affected by the story; but then it should be also the country of the time, not a crowded scene of canals, roads, and villages, which either had no connexion with the lives of the adventurers or possibly no existence in their day. The consequence is a confusion that is bewildering even to "a quiet eye," and is certain to give great trouble to an inexperienced and hasty student.

But it is pleasanter to praise than to find fault; and, fortunately for the critic, there is much to be said in recommendation of the book. Its physical bulk apart, it is agreeable reading, if only for the evident enthusiasm of the author. In the first nine chapters, devoted to de Boigne, a full and just account is given of that very remarkable soldier—remarkable even in the age of Maurice de Saxe and the great Friedrich. The next section is devoted to George Thomas, the marvellous Tipperary bog-trotter, who began life as a runaway cabin-boy and ended it as a monarch in exile. But here—if it be not a breach of literary modesty—one would like to refer the author to certain articles on the subject in the Calcutta Review, where he would have found facts, derived from local knowledge, that might have added to the value and interest of his story. The various relations between Thomas and the Begam Samru are as romantic as anything in fiction. Sir Walter Scott, in The Surgeon's Daughter, showed how such subjects might be treated, and one cannot help wishing that the adventures of the Irish Raja of Hansi might fall into the hands of Mr. Rudyard Kipling.

The life of M. Cuillier-dit-Perron does not offer the same opportunities of treatment. "A plain man of sense, a good soldier, but no genius" was his character, as noted by his patron and old commanding officer, de Boigne. On the retirement of the latter, Perron contrived to obtain the succession which made him a sort of viceroy in Hindustan. But he was not fitted for so great a place, either by natural character or by acquirements. He affected sovereignty, sending embassies to Napoleon, and alarming the English governor-general, the famous Wellesley, to an exquisite degree. And when the storm broke, the great general was found a mere Bombastes Furioso, devoid of internal resource and without friends or allies: riding about distractedly, "without his hat"; conjuring his lieutenant to remember that he was a Frenchman; and then, repairing, as a voluntary captive, to the British camp.

Such are some of the varied characters and shifting scenes that Mr. Compton has endeavoured to set before us in this valuable and industriously-composed volume.

H. G. KEENE.

Sketches from Eastern History. By Theodor Nöldeke. Translated by J. S. Black. (A. & C. Black.)

OF the essays composing this volume four deal with subjects of general interest. They are entitled "Some Characteristics of the Semitic Race," "The Koran," "Islam," and "King Theodore of Abyssinia." The others relate obscure episodes of Western Asiatic history, not less dreary, repulsive, and unprofitable than the incidents that ordinarily fill its blood-stained pages. Prof. Nöldeke is, according to Wellhausen, himself a first-rate Semitic scholar, the greatest living authority on Semitic history and philology; but his studies have not inspired him with any particular enthusiasm for the Arabs or for their prophet. Mohammed, according to this critic, was not a great man, and there was little of the heroic about his character. We have travelled a long way from Carlyle's overstrained panegyric on one who was steeped to the lips in unvaracity, and who at best was what old Mirabeau called his son, tout de reflet et de réverbère. But perhaps, he is not undeserving of a niche in any temple where Rousseau and Napoleon are worshipped. Even Carlyle had a suspicion that the Koran was poor stuff, but consoled himself with the belief that its literary merits were lost in the English translation. If so, it would be a unique example of a great book that was great only in the original; and one is much comforted to find Prof. Nöldeke speaking not very enthusiastically about the much vaunted beauties of the Arabic text. In truth, the military successes of Mohammed's first followers are far more difficult to explain by the ordinary laws of human agency than is the tedious forgery on which his claims to a supernatural mission were based; and Prof. Nöldeke, with characteristic sobriety, disclaims the pretension to solve this perplexing historical problem. The East Roman empire was by no means so corrupt or effete at the beginning of the second quarter of the seventh century as is commonly supposed: its armies had just come out victorious from a life and death struggle with Persia; and the Persian monarchy itself seemed a power of the first rank just before it went down like a house of cards at a touch of the Arab sword. But whatever may be the explanation of their first victories, the Arabs, like all Semites, failed to maintain and organise what they had so brilliantly won. Everyone knows how the Turks, who were to them what the Romans were to the Greeks, gave Islam a new lease of life, and opened out to it a fresh career of conquest. What has received less attention is the somewhat similar service rendered at an earlier period by Persia; for the glories of the Abbásid Caliphate were really due to a powerful reaction of the Persian race and the Persian spirit against their effete conquerors from the desert—a point well brought out by Prof. Nöldeke (pp. 83, 84).

The account of King Theodore, whom the author aptly characterises as a David at the beginning and a Saul at the end of his career, is highly interesting, both in itself and from its association with our own more recent history. Clearly the eight millions that the Abyssinian war cost England were not, as has been epigrammatically said, the postage of an unanswered letter. It was by imprisoning Rassam, who had actually brought him a letter from Queen Victoria, that Theodore provoked England into the war that resulted in his destruction. Prof. Nöldeke considers the Italian occupation of Massawa a wise measure, and augurs good results from it, both to Italy and Abyssinia.

"The establishment of the Italians on the Red Sea littoral," he observes, "and their policy there, which, though not free from many mistakes, has been on the whole very intelligent and effective, according to all appearance, promises a new era for Abyssinia. If Italy perseveres with firmness, prudence, and moderation on the laborious path on which she has entered, and if the policy represented by Count Antonelli and others is not frustrated by party exigencies or excessive parsimony, she may derive great advantages from her African enterprise. But Abyssinia will profit still more, though there be an end to the proud dream of an independent kingdom of all Abyssinia" (pp. 283-4).

In conclusion, a word of praise must be given to the exceptional skill with which Mr. Black has done his work as a translator.

ALFRED W. BENN.

NEW NOVELS.

Barbara Dering. By Amélie Rives. In 2 vols. (Chatto and Windus.)

One Way of Love. By Constance Smith. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Knight of the White Feather. By Tasma. In 2 vols. (Heinemann.)

Capt'n Dary's Honeymoon. By Hall Caine. (Heinemann.)

Narcisse. By Edmund Gosse. (Heinemann.)

An Exquisite Fool. By ———. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

Mrs. Bligh. By Rhoda Broughton. (Bentley.)

Once. By Curtis Yorke. (Jarrold.)

A Daughter of the South. By Mrs. Burton Harrison. (Cassells.)

Miss Dividends. By A. C. Gunter. (Routledge.)

THERE is no clue given by which the reader may find out if Barbara Dering is, or is not, a sequel. If proof of the art of writing a good sequel depend on the skill with which any hint as to a preceding record is veiled, Miss Amélie Rives—as Mrs. Chandler still prefers to be called—does not give us this proof. The reader who takes up this book cannot but surmise that it is the outcome of another novel or story by the same writer: while those who know her several books will soon perceive that Barbara Dering is the sequel to The Quick or the Dead. The last named was a strange story, strange in its inequality, its occasional literary power, and its crudenesses of thought and expression. Hitherto Miss Amélie Rives has not been among the authors who improve as they grow more experienced. She has done nothing more striking than her tentative Elizabethan tales, notably the charming "Farrier Lass o' Piping Pebworth"; and much the best of her romances is Virginia of Virginia. Perhaps none attracted more attention than The Witness of the Sun and The Quick or the Dead, though both were in every way inferior to Virginia. Still, it was in The Quick or the Dead that the young novelist—the American George Sand, as foolish admirers love to designate her—first showed her ability to grapple with the crucial problems of life: and though she still often mistook hysteria for real emotion, it was clear that she had carefully pondered and lovingly depicted the character of an American girl of a recognisable though rare type. The hero, Valentine, was a mere shadow of a man: the reflex, rather, of a woman's shadowy conception of a man. Even then, rough, brutal almost as was the delineation of the protagonist, James Dering, he stood out a living if an only half-revealed personality. But in Barbara Dering, where we have the story of the real Barbara in a real world, the author has found herself. It is a page from life, written by an actor, and not merely a spectator. How rarely men recognise a fellow-male in the pages of the lady-novelist: how often they are confronted either by an idealised portrait or by a fantastic monstrosity! One cannot but wonder how women will accept Barbara's lover-husband. Will he seem too brusque, too brutal, too lacking in fine perceptions? Possibly: but he is that comparatively rare and therefore interesting creature in fiction—a man. Barbara herself is a charming and finely drawn character; her friend Eunice, though more shadowy, is yet true to life, and pathetically typical of a large class of high-natured women unsuitably wed. The secondary personages, however, are not so happily depicted. Mrs. Crosdill—familiar figure!—belongs now to the "lower walks of the drama": even Godfrey Bransby, who just escapes being as admirably typical in kind as is "Jock" Dering, is overdrawn. Though the story has little plot-interest save of the domestic kind, that interest is strong and well-sustained. After Barbara Dering, Miss Amélie Rives' severest critics may reasonably expect really notable work.

Many readers will welcome a new novel by the author of The Repentance of Paul Wentworth. Miss Constance Smith writes good English, good sense, and a good story. She has insight into the realities of ordinary life, and is not afraid of the commonplace. The hero of One Way of Love, Dr. Thornhill, is avowedly a commonplace individual, one who could never become distinguished by any thoughts or actions of his own, one who has no tastes in art or literature or science, who has no dissipations even; who is not unusually attractive in appearance or manner; yet who, with all his voluntary and involuntary renunciations, is interesting because of his humanity. This novel, though much too long, deserves to succeed as well at least as the author's excellent Riddle of Laurence Havilano.

The saving grace of Tasma's new book is that the story is not overwhelmingly Australian. The colonial novel is fast becoming as wearisome as the political or Irish-historical novel. Mere locality soon palls; and there is, for instance, no reason why A Knight of the White Feather should not be English or Scottish, Welsh or Irish, Canadian or South African, as much as Australian. Fortunately, a story by the author of Uncle Piper and of The Penance of Portia James is always worth reading. The accomplished lady who so consistently retains her now familiar pen-name not only knows how to construct a plot and tell a story, but can make the narrative attractive by many touches born of native insight and genuine culture. There is less of this accidental charm in her latest book than in its predecessors, but possibly this will be no drawback to its success, as the class of readers to which the ordinary "circulating-library novel" appeals cares for "go" mainly and little for style. But how welcome would it be if so pleasing a novelist as Tasma would, for once, depict life, say, in the Belgium she knows so well, without even a hint of the too familiar aspects of Australian society or an allusion to the overwritten "Bush"! It would be unjust, however, to let the possible reader of this clever story be turned aside by whisper of the word "Australian," associated now with so much that is merely stupid and uninteresting. It is Australian in the best sense, but it is primarily a good novel. The end is unconventional, but has that convincing touch about it which is perhaps the rarest feature of ordinary fiction.

The three stories in Mr. Hall Caine's book are, together, as characteristic as anything he has done. The first, that which gives its name to the volume, is an exceptionally able and attractive comedy of Manx life and manners. It is written with vigour, skill, knowledge, and sympathy. The plot and the method of the narrative are so akin to the method of dramatic representation, that one naturally inquires whether Capt'n Davy's Honeymoon be the narrative outcome of a play or the finished study for a play in narrative guise. Mr. Hall Caine's keen insight into certain natures, his genuine humour and not less genuine pathos, his intense human sympathy, are all revealed here. But when we turn to the second story, "The Last Confession," it seems to me that we have this able and often powerful writer at his worst. It is difficult to imagine a more morbid tale. True, the author expressly states that his "hero," a physician, is over-wrought by hard work and anxiety, but his own sympathies are clearly with this almost impossible doctor. No sane man or woman, surely, could for a moment endorse this physician's absurd views as to the absolute sanctity of life in all possible circumstances? His American friend may have been too lax in this respect, though I admit that my sympathies are with him; but this doctor is weaker than water, hysterical as the worst of his possible patients, almost inconceivably lacking in manliness. If Mr. Hall Caine meant "The Last Confession" to be an analytical study in mental disease, he should have made his intent a little more obvious. The third story is interesting as the study, apparently, for A Son of Hagar. Though it does not appeal to the present writer as it seems to have appealed to many others, he certainly prefers it to the novel itself, which in his opinion was Mr. Caine's sole failure. What a relief to turn from these two over-wrought tales, particularly from "The Confession," to the northern vigour and noble and strenuous emotion of The Bondman or The Deemster—what a relief, even, to recur to the vivid actuality of the tragi-comedy of "Capt'n Davy's Honeymoon."

The first essay in fiction by a critic of distinction is sure of a cordial welcome, whether it prove that its author has the faculty of story-telling or that he has not. Narcisse is written with grace, with reserve, with real charm. It is so much more a work of art than the ordinary tale, that it ought, perhaps, to be noticed separately from this batch of new novels. The plot is of the simplest, and the flow of the narrative is equable if quiescent; but, partly because of this, partly from other inferences, the present writer does not note any unmistakable evidence of a faculty for fiction. Narcisse is of the class of Mr. Walter Pater's Denys l'Auxerrois, Mr. Frederick Wedmore's Pastorals of France, and the like. If it has their grace, their subtle refinement, it has also something of their remoteness from the rude air of life as we know it. But, nevertheless, Narcisse Gerbillon, the young pupil of Richier, the sculptor of Lorraine, is real; his beautiful sweetheart, Rosalie Mercillat, is even more vividly real; and Bar-le-Duc, the quaint mediæval French town, lives in the mind, touched with that gracious light such as Claude of Lorraine himself loved to endow his sea-set cities with. Narcisse has the reticence of the creative artist: hence his secret, that of his White Maiden, a mechanical contrivance in the guise of a carved skeleton. If only he had taken Rosalie into his confidence from the first, the tragedy of his life would have been avoided. Mr. Gosse's still romance, if I may use the epithet thus, may not appeal to many readers, but it will have a singular charm for those who do care for it at all. I find that, recalling it, many passages have quietly sunk into the memory: haunting reminiscences of an antique day, set against a background of narrow quaint streets, gargoyled towers, and close-clustered spires, in white relief upon the blue noons of Lorraine summers, or dark against the suave yellow of such a soundless afternoon as that of Pentecost whereon the story opens.

The anonymous author of An Exquisite Fool has no need to fear publicity. His, or her, study of contemporary life is distinctly beyond the general level of such work. There is no mistaking the touch of a writer to the manner born; and though the style of An Exquisite Fool is by no means uniformly good, it has ease, grace, charm occasionally, even distinction. The story itself is wrought of few incidents and a meagre plot. It might be described as a variation of the Enoch Arden episode. George Lidderdale loves, or thinks he loves, Euphemia Bromley, though the beautiful Euphemia has a grown-up daughter who is in her turn wooed by one Hugh Severno. Unfortunately, Euphemia, before she became Mrs. Bromley, was the wife of a Richard Craven, whose cardinal sin was poverty, and whose disappearance enabled the fair hedonist to change her estate and enjoy liberally the flesh-pots provided by Mr. Bromley. Naturally, as the reader would guess at once, Mr. Craven turns up once more when least wanted. Euphemia would be glad if her friend and admirer would wed her daughter, but Mr. Lidderdale finds the mother more alluring than Miss Helen. Here are the loose threads of what the author of An Exquisite Fool has spun into an interesting romance. There are three living personages—Lidderdale, Euphemia, and Richard Craven; and three vague semblances of persons—Mr. Bromley, Helen Bromley, and Hugh Severno. The background is Baden-Baden. When the book is laid down, the story finished, the reader will wonder who is the exquisite fool. Presumably it is Euphemia, who with all her beauty and wit is certainly foolish enough in the conduct of her life; yet it may almost as well be George Lidderdale, who is a hero after M. Bourget's heart—one who would an' who would not, and is at last calmly set aside as an inferior card, while Fate plays an unexpected and final trump.

Miss Rhoda Broughton is so skilled a craftswoman that she could scarce do otherwise than write an entertaining story. To the present writer, this short romance of a middle-aged woman's heart seems distinctly the best book she has given us; certainly it must at least rank next to Naney. It has nothing of the vulgarity of sentiment which repelled many in Dr. Cupid; little of the gamesome freedom of style so much in evidence in her earlier writings. In many respects it has the charm of Alas! perhaps the most restrained of her novels. Anne Bligh is unquestionably one of Miss Broughton's happiest creations. She must win all hearts by her fine womanly steadfastness; and there will surely be none who grudge her her ultimate welfare with Sir Robert Coke, the sculptor, who certainly would be much better off with Mrs. Bligh than with winsome Pamela. But why does so able a writer of English still scatter foreign words and phrases through her text? Sometimes the result is particularly unfortunate, as, for example, "replies Mrs. Bligh, though not expansively, for, indeed, she is of almost as boutonnée a nature as Cordelia." Nor, again, is it well to introduce our old friend the terra-cotta and dry-land joke, even though accompanied by a rider witnessing to its "chestnutcy." There is more humour in Sue Mulholland's remark about so-and-so being clever but abdominally small, when she had "abnormally" vaguely in mind.

A distinguished author, reviewed above, spells "grisly" "griesly." If "griesly" be significant of something more horrible than the more familiar "grisly," then by all means let it be applied to Curtis Yorke's Once. I have not read this lady's Hush; but if it be as griesly as Once, she must have a pretty taste in murder and sudden death. Once, all the same, is a clever and an interesting story. It is a pity it is so sanguinary in hue. The mad and otherwise not particularly attractive clergyman might well be spared; the sufferings of a leading personage from angina pectoris might be less obtrusive; the harrowing process in general might with advantage be more controlled. But the author of The Wild Ruthvens must gang her ain gait, I suppose. Yet, if she wish to be as horrific as Sheridan Le Fanu, let her study that writer's masterpiece, and observe with what art he enhances little commonplace things into the very insignia of terror, with what reticence in tragic episode or incident he creates the ever-growing dread of Uncle Silas.

Of the two American volumes next under review, one is readable mainly for its pleasant style, the other for its exuberant sensationalism. Mrs. Burton Harrison is not, it is true, seen to such advantage in "A Daughter of the South" and its six companion-tales as in her admirable story The Anglomaniacs; but her sketches are bright, clever, and entertaining, by virtue of the writer's craft, if not by that of their inherent interest. On the other hand, no one looks to Mr. Gunter for literature. In Mr. Potter of Texas, Mr. Barnes of New York, and Miss Nobody of Nowhere, he contents himself with a stirring melodramatic story to tell, confident that his "tens of thousands" will not be too exigent in the matter of style. "It's the butter we want: how it's spread is all one to us." Miss Dividends is a capital story of its kind. The Mormon society background, with its Danite atrocities, is touched anew, though not with the skill of Dr. Conan Doyle. There are fine "Adelphi" possibilities in such episodes as the vengeance of Bishop Lot Kruger over the ronegated ex-Bishop Travenion.

WILLIAM SHARP.

GIFT BOOKS.

Randall Davenant: a Tale of the Mahrattas. By Capt. Claude Hay. With Illustrations by Alfred Johnson. (Frederick Warne.) The author is to be commended for breaking new ground. Not only does he carry us back into the middle of last century, but he boldly lays the scene in the heart of Native India. It is true that, at the beginning, we are introduced to Clive, and are allowed to be present at the capture of Gheria by the English; but the entire interest of the book centres round the Mahrattas, who are, we fear, but a Tennysonian name to the present generation. But at this period they dominated the entire peninsula—from Delhi to Tanjore, from Calcutta to Bombay. They were still united under the rule of the Peshwa, and only failed to subjugate their Muhammadan rivals through the superior military talent of Ahmed Shah Durani. The battle of Panipat (1761) was really no less decisive for the fate of India than the battle of Plassey fought just four years earlier (1757); and our author has wisely made it the culminating point in his story. Of course, the young hero must have a Mahratta comrade of his own age, with a most suspicious knowledge of English. Together they pass through many hair-breadth adventures, which do not seem to us to pass the bounds of verisimilitude. On one little point, however, we have a bone to pick with the author. Like a good Wykehamist, he places his hero in College at Winchester, with not a few lifelike touches of reminiscence; but if he had thought twice, he would not have made the Head-master usurp the prerogative of expulsion, always reserved to the Warden. We could have wished, too, that he had given some hints to the illustrator for the frontispiece.

Out of the Fashion. By L. T. Meade. (Methuen.) We have not for a long time met with a fresher, brighter story than Out of the Fashion. It describes the fortunes of four girls who are left almost penniless by an absconding father, and, with the help of a rich old lady, who has taken a fancy to them, set up a boarding-house for ladies. The four girls and the old lady are individualised with grace and vigour. Whether the author would succeed as well if she attempted more ambitious work may be doubted; but we should like her to make the attempt. We should like a full and particular account of the fortunes of the boarding-house; we should like to meet again some of the characters so clearly and easily outlined in this sketch, and study them more minutely. The author seems a little afraid of letting herself go altogether, and reins in her imagination just when grace and piquancy are rising to poetry and passion. The six illustrations by W. Paget are excellent. Numbers 3 and 4 are the prettiest we have seen this season.

An Affair of Honour. By Alice Weber. Illustrated by Emily J. Harding. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) Although there is nothing in the story or the characters to remind one of the Little Lord Fauntleroy, Alicia has so high a heart and so sweet a disposition that we should not be surprised to learn that they were distantly related. But Alicia is more credible and her story also, though neither are in the least commonplace. It was perhaps scarcely probable that that most excellent Faunshawe would have left all the doors unlocked on that particular night after the picnic, when Alicia was obliged to go all the way down the garden in her nightgown in order to take a slice of cake to Mr. Despair; and, except to bring dear Douglas upon the scene to fall in love with Christina, we do not quite know why poor Alicia should have caught a fever. But who would not pardon such artful, artless, artistic devices to get such a beautiful story as this is, and to meet such nice people as Tabitha and Faunshawe, and Mr. and Mrs. Meadows, and Robin and Christina, or even Mrs. Bailey, who is the least interesting of them all. But there are excuses for Mrs. Bailey, for she had married the wrong person, and the right person's name was Squills—which is a melancholy one to reflect upon all your life long. The real interest of the book is centred in Mr. Despair; but he is a secret which nobody ought to know till they have got well into the book, an enterprise which we recommend many persons to undertake. The pictures are nice also, though the faces are not so good as the gestures.

The Book of One Hundred Riddles of the Fairy Bellaria. By Charles G. Leland. (Fisher Unwin.) We do not know which most to praise, the ingenuity or the patience of the author of these hundred riddles. Why his head did not turn right round several times before he got to the ninety-ninth, we shall never understand. We know that ours did before we had read forty-seven; and all our ingenuity and patience was absolutely exhausted, and has shown no sign of returning since. However, a high-school girl who has just got first class honours in the Cambridge Local after two attempts got right through and said she liked it; and since then we have taken a few of the riddles in small doses without any bad effect, and have persevered till our eried duties are fulfilled. Our verdict is that the verses are better than the pictures, that it would not have taken a fairy to guess most of the riddles, and that the fairy Bellaria was little better than a murderer. If she meant to kill him, why did she put him to so much torture first; and, besides, it wasn't fair, for she could see all the questions and answers forming themselves inside him.

A Long Chase. By K. M. Eady. (Sunday School Union.) We can heartily recommend this "Story of African Adventure" to boys of all sorts and conditions. It contains a midshipman, and a colonel, and a Zulu king, and describes very briskly and cleverly a series of thrilling adventures among Arab slave-traders in Central Africa. It cannot be denied that the escape of all the heroes with whole skins is somewhat improbable; but boys will like this. The singular manner in which the mishaps of the various heroes so dovetail into each other as to result in general salvation will strike the schoolboy as delightful. It is, in fact, a positive pleasure to read a book in which things turn out so well in the end. We are reconciled to life, or at least forget for an hour or two its provoking and proverbial uncertainty.

The Grand Chaco: a Boy's Adventures in an Unknown Land. By G. Manville Fenn. (Part-ridge.) Mr. Manville Fenn can always be trusted not only to interest boys, but also to do his work in a manner that satisfies the critic. We have already noticed a story of his about the Mutiny; and here, recurring to an earlier subject of his own, the central figure is a natural history collector, who is of course accompanied by the usual healthy English boy. As usual, also, with Mr. Manville Fenn, a second boy is introduced not so good and not so English, in order to set off the real hero. The scene is laid in the comparatively unknown regions of inland South America; and we are treated to adventures with jaguars and snakes and floods and Indians. The chief novelty is a wild puma, that attaches itself to the hero, and makes itself useful when the party gets lost.

The Clock on the Stairs. By Alice Weber. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) Miss Weber is obviously an old hand. She can write a children's story with unaffected vivacity. The account of "The Four P's"—Pamela, Phyllis, Paul, and Patty—is strictly a story for children, and does not attempt to include more than the child's world; but for this reason grown up people who like children will like the book, and be delighted with its pleasant style, its gentle but merry humour, and its sound simple morality. The illustrations are above the average.

An Unexpected Hero. By Elizabeth J. Lysaght. (Blackie.) As usual, Mrs. Lysaght gives us a tale distinguished by originality and thoughtfulness. It is, indeed, almost more than a tale for children, though children are the principal characters. Aunt Hesther and Uncle Blake are drawn with a subtlety and insight which young children will scarcely appreciate. But Elsie and Wilfred and the dog, Dr. Watts, will be appreciated by the most juvenile readers: and the interest of the story is cunningly sustained by the author to the very end, when a startling but entirely satisfactory winding up is provided. The two illustrations by S. T. Dadd are executed with his characteristic grace and vigour.

A Woman Without a Head. By the late Mrs. Mackarness. (Hutchinson.) It is scarcely necessary to recommend a story by the author of "A Trap to Catch a Sunbeam"; and the object of this story—to insist upon the misery caused by thoughtlessness—must at once gain the approval of a sensible reviewer. We are pleased to note also that the thoughtlessness which breaks hearts and ruins homes is traced to its ultimate root of selfishness: of unwilling-ness to take the necessary pains to make oneself a comfort and not a nuisance to those about us. Mrs. Mackarness had the rare gift of describing the quiet currents of domestic life with sympathetic vividness. The print and paper of the book are more than ordinarily excellent, but the illustrations are decidedly poor.

The Robber Baron of Bedford Castle. By A. J. Foster and E. E. Cuthell. (Edinburgh: Nelson.) Mr. Foster's "story of the thirteenth century" begins after the death of King John. Boys will be glad to hear that the tale is not interrupted either by historical or antiquarian disquisition, and is most of it pure jam of fiction without any dry bread of instruction. We can recommend it as a wholesome, well-written book for boys.

The Bushranger's Secret. By Mrs. Henry Clarke. (Blackie.) Our title promises us a story of Australian life, and the promise is well kept. The tale is perhaps a trifle commonplace, but it is a workmanlike performance, and will satisfy any intelligent boy. There is plenty of incident, a well managed plot, and a good moral, earnestly and pointedly conveyed. The two illustrations by W. S. Stacey make us wish for more. Mrs. Clarke is so obviously a conscientious painstaking author that we hope she will attempt more ambitious work.

Nearly Bedtime (Second Series). By H. Mary Wilson. (S.P.C.K.) This continuation shows no falling off. The second story in particular, "The Old Sword-hilt," is a charming little tale. The series contains four stories, just long enough, as the title indicates, to be told to a child at one sitting. The writer thoroughly understands her business, and is simple without being foolish, and serious without being dull.

Cyril's Promise. By W. J. Lacey. (Edinburgh: Nelson.) "Total abstinence from strong drink, and repression of the liquor traffic, must be the corner-stones of real social reform." To enforce this moral, Cyril's Promise is written; and it will be found by some readers not quite successfully to avoid the snare of representing mankind as divided into abstainers, drunkards, and worldlings: the worldlings, moreover, or moderate drinkers, would seem as a class almost more irreclaimable and certainly less interesting than the drunkards. Our author, however, strives to be temperate; and though he implies that because we are virtuous there must be no more ale, he does not positively deny virtue to the imbibor of alcohol. His tale, too, is written with more than average ability and strength of style: the character of the hero is consistently and clearly drawn, and the reader who does not stop to quarrel with the politics will find himself keenly interested in the fortunes of the various characters. If we grant the moral, the book is a good one, and moral and all it is worth reading.

The Way She Trod. By Harriet E. Colville. (Nisbet.) This is a mixture of sermon, novel, and philosophical treatise, which cannot, from the literary point of view, be judged a success. Its main object is to insist that salvation is "to know" with absolute conviction that our sins are forgiven. The philosophy and romance of the book are merely baits on the hook of this creed. The creed, we fear, is essentially intolerant. It limits God's ways of coming to man's heart. It tends to disparage the everyday ordinary help of God by which we all of us live and move and have our being. It lands us in the impossible position that for Canon Liddon's Sermons God's is the glory, for Kant's Critique Kant's is the glory. We may, however, admit that Miss Colville enforces her creed with honest earnestness, and with far more charity and tolerance and knowledge than its advocates usually display.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WHATEVER may come of the project for building a new chapel at Winchester, the quincentenary of Wykeham's foundation will at any rate be celebrated by the publication of an illustrated volume, containing memorial verses in English, Greek, and Latin (and possibly also in other languages), with an historical sketch by Mr. S. R. Gardiner. It may be remembered that, on the occasion of the four-hundred-and-fiftieth anniversary, Lord Selborne wrote an English poem, which was turned into Greek by the late Bishop of St. Andrews.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN is preparing for publication a volume which will throw new lights on a side of Mr. Ruskin's character little known to his readers. This work, which will include many anecdotes, both pathetic and humorous, never before published, is being compiled by Mr. Arthur Severn, whose recollections of Mr. Ruskin date from his own boyhood. The illustrations will comprise various characteristic sketches made by Mr. Severn when accompanying Mr. Ruskin on his driving tours.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN has also in hand a Life of the late Lady Waterford, by Mr. Augustus J. C. Hare.

THE Gifford Lectures, which Prof. Edward Caird delivered at St. Andrews during the years 1890-92, will be published immediately in two volumes, under the title of The Evolution of Religion. The subject is divided into three parts. In the first, the author gives an explanation of the principles upon which his own view of religion and its history is based; in the second, he describes the main stages in the development of pre-Christian religions, dwelling mainly on those higher forms which still survive as recognisable influences in modern life; in the third, he confines himself to treating Judaism and Christianity from the point of view of development. The work will be issued by Messrs. James Maclehose & Sons, of Glasgow.

BISHOP BARRY's Bampton Lectures for 1892, entitled Some Lights of Science on the Faith, will be published by Messrs. Longmans in the course of January.

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON have ready for issue a volume of selections from the writings of John Law, mystic and nonjuror, entitled Characters and Characteristics. The selection has been made by the Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte, minister of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, who also gives an introduction and a bibliography.

AMONG the books which Messrs. Bentley will publish during January is A Visit to Java, by Mr. W. Basil Worsfold, illustrated with numerous sketches. The author, who has made a special study of colonial questions, will discuss, from the latest official reports, the peculiar methods of administration adopted by the Dutch.

MR. BARRY PAIN is writing a new story of school life for Chums. The first instalment will appear in the number published on January 11.

A SECOND edition of Mr. Zangwill's Children of the Ghetto, in three volumes, will be published early in the new year.

THE members of the Harleian Society have had issued to them this week two volumes of Marriage Licences, from 1660 to 1679, being those which were not included in Colonel Chester's extracts from the Office of the Vicar-General of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Society has also just issued to members of its Register section the Registers of Burials at St. James, Clerkenwell, from 1551 to 1665.

MR. LEONARD A. WHEATLEY, for nearly forty years connected with the firm of Messrs. Williams & Norgate, has acquired the business of Mr. Frederick Norgate, of 7, King-street. Mr. Wheatley will add to the publishing business that of importer of foreign books, in which his long experience should stand him in good stead.

MR. FREDERIC HARRISON will deliver the annual address to the London Positivist Society on January 1, at 7 p.m., at Newton Hall, Fetter-lane; and on the preceding evening, at the same place, at 8 p.m., Mr. Harrison will lecture on "Womanhood."

THE programme of papers to be read before the Indian section of the Society of Arts during the ensuing session is as follows: January 12, at 4.30, "Upper Burma under British Rule," by Mr. H. T. White; January 19, "The Currency Problem," by Mr. J. Barr Robertson; February 16, "Ten Years of Progress in India," by Sir William W. Hunter; March 9, "Caste and Occupation at the last Census of India," by Mr. J. A. Baines; April 6, "Australasia as a Field for Anglo-Indian Colonisation," by Sir E. Braddon; April 27, "Indian Manufactures," by Sir Juland Danvers; May 11, "Agrarian Legislation for the Deccan, and its Results."

WE have received the Almanach de Gotha for 1893 (Gotha: Justus Perthes), which has now been published continuously for 130 years. The principal changes are the disappearance from the Appendix of the notes on the precious metals (which used to be supplied by the late Prof. Soetbeer), and of the chronicle of events of the preceding twelve months. However, by reason of certain additions—such as a complete list of all Roman Catholic bishops—the volume still consists of about 1300 pages. The changes among crowned heads are shown, as usual, by engraved portraits of the King and Queen of Wurtemberg, the Grand Duke of Hesse, and the Khedive of Egypt. It is with no desire to depreciate the value of this indispensable work that we draw attention to certain errors in the section relating to Great Britain. On p. 853, the definition given of the British Empire would exclude the Channel Islands and Man; it is not constitutionally correct to say that the succession to the throne is hereditary in the House of Guelf; the categories given of peers omit those of the United Kingdom, the only class of peerage now conferred; it is very ancient history to say that the parliamentary franchise depends upon the ownership of a house or the payment of £10 rent. On p. 856, we find the strangely worded statement that the Judges of the Court of Appeal of England and Wales, who are not peers, are entitled to a seat without a vote in the House of Lords. On p. 858, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is wrongly described as the appeal court for testamentary and matrimonial causes in England and Ireland. On the following page the Geological Survey is oddly mistranslated "Triangulation"; while the Ordnance Survey seems to be omitted altogether. On p. 867, Dean Vaughan is described as the "treasurer" of the Temple.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

LORD KELVIN has promised to deliver the Boyle Lecture at Oxford next summer, in connexion with the University Junior Scientific Club, and has chosen for his subject "Magnetic Waves."

WHEN the Cambridge University Musical Society celebrates its jubilee next June, it will be proposed to confer the honorary degree of Doctor of Music upon the five following composers: Max Bruch, Saint-Saëns, Tschaikowsky, Boito, and Grieg, who have promised to attend and each conduct one of his works.

THE following memorial, signed by the presidents of many learned societies and other representatives of science, has been presented to the Royal Commission on the Gresham University:—

"The undersigned desire hereby respectfully to record their strong opinion that the foundation of a teaching university for London, without due provision being made for higher education and original research, would be unworthy of the metropolis, and would entail the neglect of an admirable opportunity for promoting the advancement of science and learning."

ON the occasion of the Galileo tercentenary at Padua, honorary degrees were conferred upon many of the delegates present from other universities, and also upon the following seven representatives of different nations, each distinguished in the studies to which Galileo devoted himself: Lord Kelvin, Newcomb, Helmholtz, Tisserand, Schiaparelli, Bredichir, and Gyliden.

THE University of the City of New York has conferred the degree of D.D. upon the Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the delivery of his first lecture at Berlin. Dr. Schaff was born at Coire, in Switzerland in 1819, and went to America in 1843.

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD has published, in pamphlet form (Smith, Elder & Co.), an address on "The Future of University Hall," which she delivered to meetings held last month at Manchester, Liverpool, and Leeds. It gives a detailed account of the work done during the past three years at University Hall, Gordon-square, and also at the subsidiary hall, or annex for social purposes, in Marchmont-street; and appeals for further funds to support and develop the undertaking. Annual subscriptions are needed to the amount of £1000, besides a fund for building extension in Marchmont-street, where it is hoped that all the "residents" may ultimately be housed.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

OUTSIDE THE GATE.

To England. II.

I DREAMT last night that I was dead,
And passed beyond the bounds of sight,
Into that glorious land of light.
But still my heart remained with you,
And it was false that you had said,
And all that I had told you true.
My love was stronger far than death,
Though you had deemed it little worth,
It had outlasted time and earth.
You cast it carelessly aside,
It was not worth a moment's breath,
And I that would have gladly died
To know that you had trusted me,
Had done with earthly care and strife,
Had passed away from out your life,
And now upon the heavenly shore,
I watched until the time should be
When I might clasp your hand once more.
I stood without the golden gate,
And one came forth and bade me in,
"From thee hath pass'd away all sin."
I answered, "Nay, let me remain
Without the door; I fain would wait
For one I loved on earth in vain,
To join me here, I would not be
In heaven, while he is yet below."
The angel answered, "Be it so.
Thou hast thy choice, thy love is great.
I will pray God to turn to thee
That soul for which thou here dost wait."
His voice then ceased; and others came
And passed within those portals wide.
I patient waited there outside,
Waiting to enter heaven with you;
For love must always be the same,
How could you doubt such love was true?

At length you came unto the gate;
I spoke your name; you turned aside.
Why should I think because I died,
That you would deem my love was true?
I had my choice, I chose to wait,
I longed to enter heaven with you.

Then spake the angel, "Never pain
May enter in this golden door,
May ever cross this threshold o'er,
Thou lovest this soul, and thou wouldst wait,
And thy long waiting is in vain,
And now, alas! it is too late.

I may not let thee enter in.
If he had taken thee by the hand,
And smiled on thee, thou now wouldst stand
Beside him here for ever more.
But since his trust thou couldst not win,
Thou must remain outside the door."

FLORENCE PEACOCK.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE December number of the Economic Journal (Macmillan's)—which, by the way, concludes the second volume of this periodical—contains an article upon "Silver in India," by Mr. F. C. Harrison, of Calcutta, who has previously contributed two most ingenious papers, entitled, "An Attempt to estimate the Circulation of the Rupee." On the present occasion he discusses the situation from several points of view. With regard to the effect upon the government and the official classes, we suppose that there will be no differences of opinion. As to external commerce, it seems possible that he may have exaggerated the consequences of the drop in silver upon the present depression in trade. The failure of mercantile firms, and the closing of exchange banks, are by no means unprecedented phenomenon. But to us, his examination of the results upon the peasant is by far the most instructive part of his article. Mr. Harrison sums up thus:

"The cultivator gets a better return for the part of his produce that he does not consume, and buys in a cheaper market articles he does not produce. Skilled labour is similarly better off. Unskilled labour is too poor to derive much benefit from the fall in articles of foreign manufacture, and has to pay more dearly for food. The classes of skilled artisans and common labourers (without land) may, roughly speaking, be set against one another; and the broad result is that the native population is better off than in 1873."

Turning to future policy, Mr. Harrison inclines in favour of closing the mints to the free coinage of silver, partly as a mode of unobtrusively increasing taxation. But he evidently regards this measure as a mere temporary palliative, which would enforce the serious consideration of the whole question by England and the Continent generally.

ART AND BOOK SALES.

How completely and absolutely the attempt to deery French eighteenth century furniture in favour of old English or older Italian has failed! There were sold last week certain pieces of the best French sort, in the rooms of a house in Hyde Park-gardens, with the results which we proceed to chronicle:—A Louis XV. parqueterie commode, £215; a Louis Quatorze marqueterie writing-table, £100; a large Louis Quinze marqueterie writing table, £810 (Wertheimer)—a price, we note, not so very substantially below that paid for a little thing of Marie Antoinette's in the Hamilton Sale; a Louis XV. escrutoire in marqueterie, with falling front and the mounts of the kind absurdly but popularly styled "or moulu," but really "or ciselé," £1010 (Wertheimer); a pair of angular Louis Quinze encoignures, 190 guineas; a pair of fine Louis XVI. Sèvres vases (bleu du roi), 150 guineas.

At Sotheby's last week there was a remarkable book sale. Bewick's Land Birds and Water Birds—a good thing, of course, but one that has been of late absurdly overrated—fetched £17, the very copy, let it be observed, which so lately as in 1888 sold for exactly double the money. The first edition of Cowper's Poems fetched £10 5s.; Tom Hood's copy of The Christmas Carol, with an autograph letter from Dickens, £10 10s.; the first edition of Goldsmith's Deserted Village, £10; and a fine and large copy of the first edition of Gray's Elegy written in a Country Churchyard, £48. The chief excitement, however, of the sale was reserved for the day before Christmas Eve, when the original MS. of Poems by Two Brothers was knocked down, after a spirited competition, to Messrs. Macmillan & Bowes, of Cambridge, for the sum of £480. It was announced by the auctioneer that the legal representative of Lord Tennyson claimed copyright in three of the poems in the MS. which had never been published.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ALEXANDRE, Arsène. L'Art du rire et de la caricature dans tous les Temps. Paris: May & Motteroz. 10 fr.
 DAIN, F. Erinnerungen. 3. Buch. Die letzten Münchener Jahre (1854–1863). Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel. 10 M.
 DELORME, Amédée. Nouvelles militaires. Paris: Charles-Lavauzelle. 3 fr. 50 c.
 INDY, Vincent d'. Chansons populaires recueillies dans le Vivarais et le Vercors. Paris: Lechevalier. 2 fr.
 LAOMINA, Bart. Catalogo delle monete arabe esistenti nella Biblioteca comunale di Palermo. Turin: Loescher. 25 fr.
 LERMOLIEFF, I. Kunstkritische Studien üb. italienische Malerei. Die Galerie zu Berlin. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 10 M.
 LIEZT'S, F. Briefe. Gesammelt u. hrsg. v. La Mara. Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel. 12 M.
 LOUIS, R. Der Widerspruch in der Musik. Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel. 2 M. 50 Pf.
 SEIDEL, P. Friedrich der Grosse u. die französische Malerei seiner Zeit. Berlin: Frisch. 16 M.
 TARNOT, L. Les écoles et les écoles à travers les âges. Paris: Renouard. 10 fr.
 WILSLOCKI, H. v. Aus dem Volksleben der Magyaren. München: Huttler. 7 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- STANOE, C. Die christliche Ethik in ihrem Verhältnis zur modernen Ethik: Paulsen, Wundt, Hartmann. Göttingen: Dieterich. 3 M.
 ZAHN, Th. Das apostolische Symbolum. Leipzig: Deichert. 1 M. 35 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BEYKERT, J. D., professeur au gymnase de Strasbourg. Notice biographique, lettres etc. 1793–4. Strassburg: Heitz. 3 M. 20 Pf.
 CORNILLON, J. Le Bourbonnais sous la Révolution française. T. IV. Paris: Lechevalier. 5 fr.
 CORRESPONDENZ, politische, Friedrichs d. Grossen. 19. Bd. Berlin: Duncker. 15 M.
 DUPRIEZ, L. Les Ministres. T. 2. Les Républiques. Paris: Rothschild. 10 fr.
 FORSCHUNGEN zur brandenburgischen u. preussischen Geschichte. 5. Bd. 2. Hälfte. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 6 M.
 GALILEI. Per il terzo Centenario della Inaugurazione dell' Insegnamento di Galileo Galilei nello Studio di Padova. Padova: Drucker. 15 fr.
 GROTEFEND, H. Zeitrechnung d. deutschen Mittelalters u. der Neuzeit. 2. Bds. 1. Abth. Hannover: Hahn. 10 M.
 HANSEEREGESSE. 2. Abth. 1431–1476. Bearb. v. G. Frhr. v. der Bopp. 7. Bd. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 30 M.
 HERTZBERG, G. F. Geschichte der Stadt Halle an der Saale. III. Halle: Waisenhauss. 7 M. 50 Pf.
 KANNOLESSE, O. Geschichte d. Krieger von 1666. 2. Bd. Basel. 5 M.
 LEORILLE, A. La Diplomatie française et la Succession d'Espagne. T. IV. et dernier. La Solution (1700–1725). Paris: Pichon. 10 fr.
 MOLANDON, Boucher de, et le Baron A. de BEAUCORPS. L'armée anglaise vaincue par Jeanne d'Arc sous les murs d'Orléans. Documents inédits. Paris: Baudoin. 5 fr.
 PERREAU, Joseph. Catinat et l'Invasion du Dauphiné 1692. Paris: Baudoin. 2 fr.
 REGESTEN zur Geschichte der Juden im fränkischen u. deutschen Reihe bis zum J. 1278. Bearb. v. J. Aronius. 5. Lfg. Berlin: Simon. 3 M. 20 Pf.
 VOLKHOLZ, R. Die Zerstörung Magdeburgs (1631) im Lichte der neuesten Forschung. Magdeburg: Faber. 3 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- AMALIZKY, W. Ueb. die Anthracosen der Permformation Russlands. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 15 M.
 BAUSCHINGER, J. Untersuchungen üb. den periodischen Kometen 1889 v. (Brooks). 1. Tl. München: Franz. 5 M.
 BISSAUDO, E. Anatomie du cerveau de l'homme. Paris: Masson. 80 fr.

- POELLIG, H. Monographie der Elephas antiquus Falc. führenden Travertine Thüringens, ihrer Fauna u. Flora. 2. Stück. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 12 M.
 REISS, W., u. A. STÜBEL. Reisen in Süd-Amerika. Das Hochgebirge der Republik Ecuador. I. Petrographische Untersuchn. 1. Lfg. Berlin: Asher. 10 M.
 SERRACH, K. v. Ueb. Vulkane Centralamerikas. Göttingen: Dieterich. 26 M.
 STRASSBURGER, E. Histologische Beiträge. 4. Hft. Jena: Fischer. 7 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- WENTZEL, G. Die Göttinger Scholien zu Nikanders Alexipharmaka. Göttingen: Dieterich. 12 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE DATE OF CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY TALES.

Cambridge: Dec. 19, 1892.

The date 1393, suggested in Chaucer Essays (p. 415), was shown by me to be wrong, because it rested on the assumption that the day mentioned in the Man of Lawes Prologue was April 28, whereas it was April 18. But this was not the only mistake. It was assumed that Chaucer spoke of the moon being situated in Libra in the Persones Prologue; whereas he merely means that Libra was ascending, which (at 4 p.m. on April 18) was the fact. There is nothing here to help us to the dates.

But if we look at the matter from a common-sense point of view, we must see that, as Chaucer did not begin his Legend till 1385, and must have taken some time over it, he could hardly have been writing the "Man of Lawes Prologue" till 1386, which is, I take it, the earliest year possible. But in 1386 (as no one, I believe, has observed) Easter Day fell on April 22, some three days or so after the pilgrims arrived at Canterbury. If Chaucer had meant to make them do this, we should have found, somewhere, some allusion to the near approach of this great Christian festival. Such a pilgrimage in Passion-week is impracticable. Hence, 1386 will not do; it is more likely that Easter was over, and that all the pilgrims were thus set free from their duties on that day.

Again, 1389 will not do, because April 18 was Easter Sunday (!), a day unsuited for travel and tales. In 1390, April 17 was Sunday, unsuited for arrival at the Tabard or for travel, whichever it was. In 1391, April 16 was Sunday; and if (as seems likely), April 16 was the day of arrival at the Tabard, it was not a fit day for it. Lastly, 1392 is surely too late.

In this way, the two remaining years are 1387 and 1388. In both years Easter was well over. But in 1388, April 18 was Saturday; only in 1387 does everything come right. In that year, April 16 was Tuesday, a good day for meeting; with four clear days ahead of them.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

"W. B. SCOTT'S AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL NOTES."

Aberdeen: Dec. 25, 1892.

"Tu l'as voulu, George Dandin. Et tu l'auras," says Mr. Swinburne, with a proud consciousness of his fine talent for invective. But I must disclaim the responsibility that he thrusts upon me. I would rather not be responsible for Mr. Swinburne's relaxations from the graver cares of adding to the imperishable wealth of English poetry. If he chooses at this festive season to play pantaloons, whacking promiscuously with a bladder, or to amuse himself and the public by "stock-dollaging" (in his own facetious phrase) the memory of an old friend whom he had more than once honoured with the most enthusiastic expressions of respect and affection, that is his own affair. He must not say that I "insisted on it." I neither wished it nor deprecated it. It is his own gracious humour entirely, his own singular goodwill and pleasure.

If I can properly be said to have "insisted" on anything in my previous letter, it was that Mr. Swinburne should specify the particulars of the "mendacity" with which he was pleased to charge Mr. Scott's reminiscences of himself. I did so because Mr. Sharp, perhaps not understanding Mr. Swinburne's playful humour, seemed disposed to take his reclamation in serious detail. Mr. Swinburne's first "little hymn"—if it is "impertinent" on my part to ascribe to it "the quality of fury," I hope I may without offence quote his own joyous description of it—surprised me not a little, because it was at Mr. Swinburne's own suggestion that I published with Mr. Scott's Autobiographical Notes certain "Memorial Verses" in a very different strain. I found among Mr. Scott's MSS. some letters from Mr. Swinburne which the autobiographer had considered worth preserving. I submitted them, as in duty bound, to Mr. Swinburne, who wrote to say that he saw nothing in the letters worthy of preservation. In this opinion I concurred; but he added, much to my satisfaction, that his Memorial Verses were wholly at my disposal, as "public evidence" of "his deep and cordial regard for his dear old friend"—the dear old friend whom he new belabours with such outrageously absurd epithets as "parasite" and "sinister old satellite." When "Stockdollager" wit sinks or soars to such a pitch of intemperate insolence, it can be answered only with silent disgust. But those who know the real relations between the two men must be more than astonished at Mr. Swinburne's audacity, and—must I say it?—ingratitude.

Mr. Swinburne seems to think that I am feigning stupidity in professing myself unable to comprehend what he complains of. In his precious "Stockdollager" phrase, I cannot be such a born fool as not to see it. We are all such as God has made us, but I can assure him that I pretend to no greater stupidity than is my natural portion. And Mr. Scott's reminiscences of him still seem to me, as they did at first, to be conceived in an affectionate and admiring spirit, and to have nothing "insolent, impertinent, presumptuous, or malicious" about them. Every one of them is made the occasion of a compliment. The boyish manners which impressed the grave middle-aged Scotchman unpleasantly at first are contrasted with the genius afterwards amply recognised. The statement, which is given doubtfully as hearsay, that he got no prizes at school except in French, is set down as a surprising thing in view of his marvellous powers of memory. Even the whimsical suggestion as to the way in which this prize-book may have affected English literature is a tribute to Mr. Swinburne's influence. I altogether fail to see how anybody but the most abject satellite, or perhaps a hasty reader misled by Mr. Swinburne's invective, can find in these trivial records any trace of an unfriendly or malignant spirit. As regards the "jokelet" which Mr. Swinburne accused his old friend of misunderstanding, I confess I could see only humorous magnanimity in the poet's affecting to take what was meant for the splendour of his verse as a tribute to the vanished lumen et decus of his hair. If there is any deeper quality in the jokelet, I must plead my Scotch origin as an excuse for not being able to see it. So kindly, indeed, when fairly interpreted, are Mr. Scott's reminiscences of the young poet who sought his friendship, and for whom as I can testify, he retained to the last an affectionate admiration, that I still cannot believe that the secret of Mr. Swinburne's extravagant outburst of bitter—or is it only jubilant?—recrimination is to be found in them.

But Mr. Swinburne protests against having anything said about him at all, true or untrue, complimentary or uncomplimentary, in a kindly vein of reminiscence or a malignant. All is alike impertinent. That is quite an intelligible position; and if Mr. Swinburne had confined himself to it, I should have been bound to accept my share of his rebuke with becoming respect, only claiming to be judged, in my discharge of a difficult and delicate editorial trust, by literary custom and precedent. But Mr. Swinburne has not confined himself to this position. He has chosen instead to revenge himself by a gleeful exhibition of his powers as a literary slogger. Apparently, he thinks my apology "half-hearted," and my defiance "tremulous," because I do not slog him in return. I am sorry that I cannot oblige him. I shall always continue to admire Algernon Charles Swinburne the poet; but I must sorrowfully admit that the comic freaks of Algernon Charles Stockdollar do not provoke me either to admiration or to imitation.

Side by side with Mr. Swinburne's letter in the ACADEMY is another in a very different tone from Mr. W. M. Rossetti. I am sorry that Mr. Rossetti should have been induced, contrary to what seems to have been his original intention, to join in the concerted attack on Mr. Scott's Autobiographical Notes. The inaccuracies that he points out shall certainly be corrected if I have an opportunity as editor. But he compels me to point out in reply that it is not by such inaccuracies that the fidelity of Mr. Scott's picture of one of the most fascinating and complex personalities in literature can possibly be judged. Of Gabriel Rossetti's fascination there is ample evidence in the record, in the bright charm of his familiar letters as well as in the wistful regret with which in later and darker days his old friend looks back to happier times. To find in Mr. Scott's protestations of friendship only "hypocrisy," and in his record of the weaknesses so strangely mixed with great and lovable qualities, only the voice of envy and jealousy, seems to me the very extreme of petty and small-minded perversity. Has it come to this, that we cannot, on pain of being accused of envious spite, admire a man's genius in art or letters without ascribing to him every virtue and physical perfection under heaven? To some of Mr. Scott's critics it seems to be proof positive of insufferable conceit that he dared to maintain an opinion of his own on the teaching of drawing in the presence of Mr. Ruskin. Such puerile hero-worship would banish all manliness from among us. Mr. Scott, whatever the worth of his achievement in art and letters, was at least self-centred and individual, and had the courage to be himself. There was no hypocrisy in his admiration of genius in others, as is abundantly shown by his remarks on the men of genius with whom his life brought him in contact; and his interest in the complexities of human character was not rooted in any jealous measuring of himself against others. In Gabriel Rossetti the same force of character that inspired his genius gave an emphasis to his faults. And in Mr. Scott's records of their friendship, taken as a whole, those faults are not unduly prominent. Such, at least, is the impression left on my mind after the close and repeated study of the records that has fallen to me as their editor. The faults have been forced into prominence, not by the autobiographer himself, but by the outcry of injudicious friends. I am sorry that any remarks in the Autobiography should appear to Mr. W. M. Rossetti unkind, unhandsome, or practically misleading. But I think I can appeal to him whether it is not the case that, throughout the sad change which came over his brother during the last few years of his life, Mr. Scott showed no lack of helpful friendship. And if Mr. Scott overstates the extent to which Mr. W. Rossetti's own health was affected by anxiety during his brother's dreadful illness, surely this is no evidence of ill-feeling.

But I must leave the construction of motives to readers of the Notes. My business as their editor is with the accuracy of their statements. I felt bound to protest when Mr. Sharp read into the Notes allegations and innuendoes which are not there. But I repeat that I am not only willing but anxious to correct any actual misstatements. Inaccuracies there must be in all human reminiscences.

W. MINTO.

London: Dec. 28, 1892.

A misprint in my letter of December 17 to the ACADEMY makes worse than pointless nonsense of an entire sentence. What I wrote was this:—

"For one thing she did they would not take the life of Sycorax: for one thing apiece they have written I will not bear more heavily than I can help on the writer and the editor of William Bell Scott's."

For this last word the printer has substituted the word "Scott"; thereby reducing that worthy man to the level of a fictitious character of a mere "Waverley," "Hamlet," or "Robert Elsmere."

A. C. SWINBURNE.

HAKLUYT EDITING.—A CORRECTION.

12, Rowland-gardens, S.W.: Dec. 17, 1892.

In 1882 the late Gen. Sir John Henry Lefroy edited for the Hakluyt Society a volume entitled The History of the Bermudas or Summer Islands, from MS. 750 of the Sloane collection at the British Museum. In his introductory remarks, our lamented colleague discussed the authorship of this MS., and from internal evidence attributed it to Capt. John Smith, the historian of Virginia.

Ten years have elapsed since the publication of Lefroy's work, and his conclusions have not, as far as I am aware, been questioned. It was only quite recently that Mr. Edward Scott, Keeper of MSS. in the Museum, while cataloguing the Sloane collection, came upon a MS. in the same handwriting as 750, signed by Nathaniel Butler. This MS., numbered 758, is described by Sir F. Madden in his catalogue as follows:

"1. Memoranda for 12 heads of Letters written by Capt. Nath. Butler while Governor of the Bermudas [autogr.] 2. A dialogical discourse of Marine affairs between the High Admirall and a Capitaine att sea, written in six dialogues by Capt. N. Butler in 1634, with a table of contents prefixed. 3. A diary of my personall employments from 10 Feb. 1639 to 2 May 1640, by the same Capt. N. Butler [autogr.]"

A comparison of the two MSS. establishes the fact of the identity of the handwriting. The one is a fair copy; the other a rough draft. Both, however, are written by the same educated hand, and the signature at the end of 758, "Nath. Butler," is genuine.

Had Gen. Lefroy seen the Madden Catalogue, he could not have fallen into the error of attributing the History of the Bermudas to Capt. John Smith, for Madden expressly states that its author was Butler. But at the time Gen. Lefroy edited his book, the Madden Catalogue, which only went as far as 1100 of the Sloane MSS., had been suppressed. The Ayscough Catalogue, then and still in use, is arranged according to subjects, and our two MSS. fall under separate headings—"Bermuda" and "Butler" occurring in different volumes.

Gen. Lefroy, basing his argument on 750, the only MS. known to him, found several passages in his History of the Bermudas identical with Smith's History of Virginia, Book 5, and came to the conclusion that Smith was the author of both works. But Capt. Smith was never at Bermuda, and there is reasonable ground for believing that many of the materials for the Bermuda portion of his work were supplied by Butler. At all events, Butler is mentioned in the list of authorities quoted by that author under his initials "N. B."; and as Butler is known to have visited Virginia in 1623, soon after his governorship of the Bermudas was at an end, he would most probably have met with Smith, who had returned to New England the previous year to lend his assistance in restoring the fortunes of that young colony, then at a low ebb. But even more conclusive proof is afforded by the date, for, according to Gen. Lefroy, Capt. John Smith died in 1631, while the writer of MS. 758 and, consequently, of 750, was living in 1640.

It may be worth mentioning that this Capt. Nathaniel Butler, who did good service as Governor of Bermuda from 1619 to 1622, and was afterwards (1638-41) Governor of (Old) Providence Island, is one of England's forgotten worthies, being passed over even by the Dictionary of National Biography. He appears to be the individual committed to Newgate in June, 1649, by the Council of State, for dispersing treasonable and scandalous books (Calendar of State Papers, Domestic)—by no means a singular instance of the way justice was administered in those days.

E. DELMAR MORGAN,
Hon. Sec., Hakluyt Society.

THE LONDON UNIVERSITY PROBLEM.

London: Dec. 28, 1892.

There is much to be said in favour of Prof. Karl Pearson's contention that "the incapacity of the University Senate has led to the present movement"—I should prefer to say, "has suffered the University to drift into the complications by which it is at present surrounded." Undoubtedly, the constitution of the Senate is the most vulnerable point in the university system. It is the Senate, or an influential section of that body, which for many years met all attempts at constitutional reform with unyielding resistance. From the same body has lately emanated a succession of "schemes of reconstitution" as unwise as they were impracticable. On the question relating to the Senate, Mr. Thistleton Dyer, Keeper of the Botanical Gardens at Kew, gave expression recently to sentiments with which I should, at least in the main, agree. Mr. Dyer, it may be observed, is a graduate of both London and Oxford, and not very long ago he was a member of the London Senate. That he resigned his seat in that body is not altogether surprising. He observes:

"I think it is generally admitted that the time has come when some change in the constitution of the Senate is advisable. At present it is an assembly of notables appointed for life. Many of them never attend, and some, appointed, apparently, on purely political grounds—and these are not always the least competent—never perhaps have attended. On the whole, the Senate, though individually eminent, is, it must be confessed, ill-informed on educational matters. As I have already hinted, it is apt, in consequence, to be somewhat timid and irresolute when it ought to act with decision; it is equally apt, I am afraid, to act with precipitancy when it ultimately realises the necessity of moving at all. . . . On the whole, it might be convenient to constitute the Senate something on the lines of the Hebdomadal Council at Oxford—a third to be appointed by the Crown, a third to be appointed by the Faculties, and a third by Convocation."

Though the causes are tolerably evident, it would, I am afraid, take too much space to set forth in detail how the internal condition of the University has become what it is. Certainly the University is far from being conformed to the ideal of its founders. It is unquestionable that they intended its situation to be eventually like those of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. But there was to be one important difference. Its colleges were not to be grouped together, even in the metropolis, but were to be scattered throughout the United Kingdom. The creation of an "Imperial Examining Board" was not contemplated. For a good many years, however, examinations have been held in the colonies; but it is very doubtful whether it would be worth while to continue them in future. The results are miserably insignificant; and, what is still more important, the examinations are not conducted under the practical control of the university officers. This may be seen from the evidence given by the Registrar before the so-called "University for London Commission." It is, however, the intention of the founders which places an almost insuperable difficulty in the way of transforming the University into a strictly metropolitan institution. The attempt to place colleges in London on a different footing from those in the provinces is at once resisted by the latter as a breach of their chartered privileges. It is of little use to suggest that there is a university at Manchester, and to mention possible or probable universities elsewhere. They know very well that, for a long time to come, the degrees of such universities are not likely to have the value and repute which London degrees have already attained, and which Convocation, at least, seems determined that they shall still possess in the future. The protest of the provincial colleges is legitimate, but to comply with it the London University of the future must be, in some sort, a federal university. Such a university is, however, an abomination to Prof. Pearson and his friends. One of them, with admirable alliteration, has called such universities "federal futilities." They want a university "on the broad lines of a Scottish university." If it is replied that the results attained by the Scotch universities are scarcely superior in quality to those exhibited by "Burlington-gardens" (their favourite designation of the London University), they then point to the German universities, whose success is found—to quote Prof. Ray Lankester—"in the contributions to science, the new knowledge created by the professor and his students, and in the spread of a love for producing such knowledge." The chosen model is the University of Berlin. At the risk of being called by Prof. Pearson a "polysynthetic opportunist," or something equally dreadful, I express the opinion that the ideal is impracticable. But, if this were otherwise, it must be recollected that a single quasi-German university would, in its results, differ very greatly from what is effected by the German university system. A German student here and there may pursue research mainly for the love of producing new knowledge; and no doubt similarly disinterested research is being prosecuted even in the London University, notwithstanding its unfavourable conditions, the Senate never having troubled themselves much about its internal development. It appears that two scientific prizes, open to all London graduates, are about to be established on the basis of funds supplied by Lord Derby and the late Lord Sherbrooke. But competitive prizes can scarcely supply what is needed. In Germany the great stimulus is supplied by the university system. The student looks forward to a "career." He hopes, by the publication of original work, to gain a footing in one or other of the universities, and eventually to secure an ordinary professorship. Conversing recently with a scholar, whose name is well known to the readers of the ACADEMY, on the vigour with which English studies are pursued in Germany, he said that this activity showed signs of decline, because posts in the universities which had been accessible were now supplied. The expectation of magnificent results from the establishment, if it were possible, of a single quasi-German university in London on a grand scale is, in my judgment, altogether chimerical.

I must close this letter without discussing the causes of the determined hostility to Convocation displayed by the "professorial" party, or showing how, in accordance with the intentions of the founders, and without turning all existing arrangements topsy-turvy, the University may give encouragement to higher instruction and research; a matter concerning which there are members of Convocation quite as solicitous as is Prof. Pearson or Prof. Lankester.

THOMAS TYLER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, Jan. 2, 4 p.m. London Institution: "Combustion: Slow, Rapid, and Explosive," III., by Prof. Vivian Lewes.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting, Ancient and Modern," by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.
8 p.m. Victoria Institute:
TUESDAY, Jan. 3, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Astronomy," IV., by Sir Robert S. Ball.
WEDNESDAY, Jan. 4, 8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Troilus and Cressida, chiefly from a Dramatic Point of View," by Miss Grace Latham.
THURSDAY, Jan. 5, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Astronomy," V., by Sir Robert S. Ball.
4.30 p.m. Geographical: "All the World Over," II., by Mr. John Coles.
6 p.m. London Institution: "Jewish Wit and Humour," by the Chief Rabbi.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting, Ancient and Modern," by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.
8 p.m. Viking Club: "Udal and Feudal," by Mr. C. H. E. Carmichael.
SATURDAY, Jan. 7, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Astronomy," VI., by Sir R. S. Ball.

SCIENCE.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

A Comparative Grammar of the South-African Bantu Languages. By J. Torrend, S.J. (Kegan Paul & Co.) Mr. Torrend must be congratulated on having finished the task which Bleek began. His Comparative Grammar of the Bantu or Kafir languages is complete in every respect, and philologists as well as practical students will be very grateful to him for it. The Bantu family of speech, which covers the whole of Central Africa, is one of the most remarkable linguistic groups that exist, and from some points of view is comparable only with the Indo-European family. Bleek's analysis of the Bantu noun was a new revelation in the science of language, and it has been a matter of constant regret that his death prevented him from applying the same analysis to the verb. That regret need be felt no longer; in Mr. Torrend the founder of South African philology has found a worthy successor. In the classification of the Bantu languages, which are arranged geographically, Mr. Torrend follows Dr. Cust, as well as in the bibliography of his subject. He has taken the Tonga dialect as the standard by which the general grammatical laws he has formulated may be judged. The Tonga, it may be observed, is spoken in the neighbourhood of the Victoria Falls. The book contains a useful index and two appendices, one consisting of "Ethnographical Notes in Tonga dictated by natives," and the other of specimens of Kafir Folklore. There is, besides, a long and interesting Introduction, in which the author discusses such questions as the origin and spread of the Bantu tribes, and the influence of other races upon them. The recent discoveries of Mr. Bent in Mashonaland will doubtless cause what Mr. Torrend has to say on these points to receive special attention. It is difficult, however, to follow him in his suggestion that the Ophir of the Old Testament was in Africa. The references to it in the Bible indicate that it was in Southern Arabia, but they further indicate that it was an emporium only to which goods were brought for exportation abroad, not that it was itself the locality in which gold and the other objects of trade were found. Mr. Torrend is no doubt right in seeking the original home of these in Africa. As he points out, the Periplus of the Erythraean Sea shows that commercial relations existed "from ancient times" between the Sabaeans of Southern Arabia and the natives of South-eastern Africa, and the curious relics discovered by Mr. Bent at Zimbabwe have marked analogies with South Arabian art. Mr. Torrend notes that sandal-wood is called li-gumi in the Bantu dialects of Senna and Lake Nyassa, so that if this wood is meant by the algum of Scripture (2 Chron. ii. 7) it is possible that the two words may be connected. Two other products of the East; kophim, "apes," and habhim, "elephants," which were brought to Solomon, bear names already met with on Egyptian monuments of the Old Empire.

A Grammar of the Khassi Language. By H. Roberts. (Kegan Paul & Co.) Philologically one of the most interesting of the Sub-Himalayan languages is the Khassi, and a Grammar of it from the competent hands of Mr. Roberts is very welcome. His work forms part of the Trübner collection of "Simplified Grammars," and the character of the Khassi language renders it particularly adapted to this method of treatment. As the language is spoken in the very centre of Assam, it has become of considerable practical importance; and a compact and clearly arranged Grammar of the kind, in which the reader is not troubled by superfluous information, ought to be acceptable to a numerous class of students. The Khassis are Mongoloid and on the racial side allied to the surrounding hill tribes. Mr. Roberts, however, assures us that "the percentage of words common to the Khassi and the rest of these mountain dialects is extremely small," and that "equally great also is the dissimilarity in many other points of grammatical detail." The language is isolating and prepositional, with aspirated sounds but no tones; the emphasis is on the penult in words of more than one syllable.

The Maori-Polynesian Comparative Dictionary. By Edward Tregear. (Wellington, New Zealand: Lyon & Blair.) This is a monumental work of which New Zealand may be proud. The amount of hard and conscientious labour involved in its compilation cannot easily be exaggerated. Mr. Tregear may claim to be at once the Johnson and the Skeat of the Maori language. The Maori words are exhaustively treated, examples of their use being given from time to time. Comparisons are added in each case with the other closely-allied languages of Polynesia, as well as with Malagasy, Malay, Fijian and other Melanesian dialects. Words of European origin adopted into Maori have been wisely excluded from the work. The mythologist as well as the philologist will find much to instruct him in it, an immense amount of curious information being given under the names of the gods. A key to the Maori words is printed at the end of the volume, and is followed by an interesting appendix containing the genealogies of various Polynesian kings and chiefs. They bear out Dr. Bastian's belief in the accuracy with which the genealogies of the principal Polynesian families have been handed down by tradition through a long series of generations. We must not forget to say that the references are complete and exact; the volume is handy and the type good.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTE ON SOME OF JAİMİNĪ'S SŪTRAS.

London: Dec. 13, 1892.

The editor of the Pārva-Mīmāṃsā-Sūtras with Śābara's bhāṣya, in the "Bibliotheca Indica" series, has appended to the commentary on 3. 4. 9 a long note announcing the omission of six aphorisms, supposed to follow the ninth, on the ground that Śābara did not explain them. Their omission from the bhāṣya is confirmed by Kumārila, who, in his Tantracārṭika (p. 915 of Benares edition), propounds the views of the learned of his day as to the cause of their absence. Some say that the Svāmī forgot them (!); others, that his comment on them has been lost; while others allege that they were passed over as worthless, as later additions, or as superfluous. Kumārila, however, annotates the six in his vārtika, and on that ground alone we might reasonably maintain that they form a part of Jaimini's work. Śāyana, too, in his more recent Jaīminīya-nyāya-māla-vistara, explains the missing sūtras, and allots to them four adhikaranas.

But the argument in favour of their genuineness is materially strengthened by the fact that one of them, namely "vidhis tu dhāraṇe 'pūrvavāt," is quoted by Śānkara in his Brahma-sūtrabhāṣya 3. 4. 20, and expressly ascribed to "śeṣalakṣhaṇa," which is the name given to the third chapter of Jaimini's Aphorisms. In the immediately preceding context, too, he quotes the Vedic passage "adhastāt samidham dhārayan, &c.," which this particular sūtra of Jaimini's is intended to elucidate, and which Śāyana also quotes under the same aphorism in his Nyāyamālavistara 3. 4. 15. Moreover, in Brahma-sūtrabhāṣya 3. 4. 19, which forms part of the same adhikarana as 3. 4. 20, Śānkara refers to the subject discussed by Jaimini in his 3. 4. 1-9, and so most naturally continues his argument by quoting one of the immediately succeeding aphorisms of Jaimini, bearing upon the question in hand.

To recapitulate, then, the case for the genuineness of the six sūtras stands thus: Śābara's work, as we now have it, ignores them altogether; while such respectable authorities as Kumārila and Śāyana explain all six, and Śānkara quotes one, and directly ascribes it to Jaimini. It may be added that Kumārila states that the six aphorisms are explained by all commentators of his time excepting Śābara. The question of their genuineness should therefore be considered as unmistakably decided in their favour.

As Prof. Deussen—who, in his German translation of the bhāṣya of Śānkara has so successfully traced most of the numerous quotations found there—failed to discover the source of this sūtra as quoted there, but referred to Jaimini 3. 4. 3 as the nearest approach to it, it is possible that other scholars also may be unaware of its existence as part of Jaimini's work. That I was able to trace it myself is owing entirely to the excellent edition of the Jaīminīya-nyāya-māla-vistara brought out recently in the Anandaśrama series of my friend Mr. Mahādeo Chinnāji Apté. This edition surpasses in some respects the more luxurious one of Profs. Goldsticker and Cowell, in that it gives Jaimini's aphorisms—which those scholars omitted—and appends complete alphabetical indexes to the aphorisms, to the adhikaranas, and to Śāyana's verses.

G. A. JACOB, Colonel.

SCIENCE NOTES.

A COMMITTEE has been formed with a view to the promotion of a memorial to commemorate the services to science of the late Sir Richard Owen. It is suggested that the memorial should be a marble statue, to be placed in the hall of the Natural History Museum, Cromwell-road, which already contains a sitting statue of Charles Darwin.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication An Account of British Flies, by Mr. F. V. Theobald.

NUMBER 24 of the Journal of the Straits Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.) contains an important article on the Sakai dialects of the Malay Peninsula by Mr. Hugh Clifford. The Sakai are one of the two aboriginal races of the peninsula, the other being Negrito, from whom they are physically distinguished as "a light-coloured, slenderly built people, with the wavy, abundant hair, and in many cases the drooping nose, of the Polynesian." They are split into innumerable clans, with mutually unintelligible dialects, many of which are greatly contaminated with Malay. But Mr. Clifford was able to study a tribe called Senoi, about 6000 in number, who still live comparatively isolated in the centre of the peninsula. Of their language he prints a brief glossary and grammar, with phonological rules. They cannot count beyond four; and there is good reason for thinking that their ancestors may have been the makers of those stone implements of which examples have quite recently been added to the Pitt-Rivers collection at Oxford. Mr. Clifford does not profess to have yet discovered affinity with any other language. The same author prints a collection of 114 Malay proverbs, with translations, none of which (he believes) has hitherto been published. There is also a bibliography of Malaya, from July, 1890, to June, 1891, compiled by Mr. C. Davies Sherborn, which covers forty-four pages. As the area includes Java, the great majority of the titles are in Dutch; and the compiler acknowledges his obligations to Mr. Martinus Nijhoff, of the Hague. Finally, we are compelled to notice the deplorable fact that wire-stitching has penetrated to Singapore. Quite apart from its mischievous effects on any scientific publication of permanent value, it must be singularly inappropriate in such a climate as the Straits.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE October number of the Indian Antiquary (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.) contains an article by the editor, Major R. C. Temple, entitled "The Order of Succession in the Alompra Dynasty of Burma." Starting with the rule in Manipur—that the brothers of a reigning king succeed in order of seniority, in preference to sons—he shows that instances of the same rule are to be found in the ancient history of India: e.g., among the Valabhis, and the Eastern and Western Chalukyas; and also in the modern chiefship of Maler-Kotla, in the Punjab. As to this last, however, is not the case merely one of ordinary Muhammadan inheritance? He then sets out in a table the full pedigree of Alompra or Alaungpaya, the founder of the last Burmese dynasty, showing that the succession had at least a tendency to follow the same rule. Incidentally he gives a good deal of curious information about the names of the Burmese princes. They used to take their titles from an estate given for maintenance when they had attained their political nonage. We observe that Major Temple uses the Anglo-Saxon þ for th, writing the familiar name of Theebaw as "þibò." He also tells us that Theebaw and his queen Sūpāyālay were known to the British soldier as "Theobald and Sophia." Finally, he compares the succession in the Anglo-Saxon and early Scottish monarchies, where (as is well known) an uncle was often preferred to a son. We may also mention, in this number of the Indian Antiquary, a careful paper on a Tamil historical inscription of the eleventh century, by a native scholar, V. Kanakasabhai Pillai; and a review of Führer's "Monumental Antiquities of the North-Western Provinces," by Mr. V. A. Smith, who (we are glad to see) protests against the forms "jungal" and "quli."

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, Dec. 13.) Dr. E. B. TYLOR, president, in the chair.—Mr. Arthur J. Evans read a paper on "The Prehistoric Interments of the Bahl Iossi Caves near Mentone, and their relation to the Neolithic Cave-burials of the Finalese." He described the recent discovery of three skeletons in the Cave of Barma Grande, and showed that the character of the sepulchral rites practised, the relics found, and the racial type of the human remains, agreed with the earlier discoveries made by M. Rivière and others in the same caves. Mr. Evans, however, opposed the theories that had been put forward as to the Palaeolithic date of "Montone man." The bones of extinct Pleistocene animals and implements of the Mouster and Magdalenian types found in the cave-earth above the interments proved nothing, for the simple reason that they were interments. No remains of extinct animals had been found in actual juxtaposition with the skeletons. On the other hand, the complete absence of pottery, of polished implements, and of bones of domesticated animals in this whole group of interments, and the great depth at which they occurred, proved that the remains belonged to a very early period. Evidence was here supplied of an earlier Neolithic stage than any yet authenticated. Still, the remains belonged to the Later Stone Age and to the days of a recent fauna. Mr. Evans compared some bone ornaments found with the so-called hammer-heads of the chambered barrows of Scandinavia and the decorative system with that found on Neolithic pottery in Northern Europe. He further showed that interments of the same tall dolichocephalic race in a more advanced stage of Neolithic culture were to be found in the cave-burials of the Finale district further up the Ligurian coast. The physical form and the character of the sepulchral rites was essentially the same, only the skeletons were here associated with polished axes, pottery, and bones of domesticated animals. The direction from which the new civilising influences had come was indicated by imported shell ornaments from the Southern and Eastern Mediterranean: in the Montone Caves the imported shells were from the Atlantic. In conclusion, Mr. Evans showed that the later Finale interments exhibited forms of pottery and implements identical with those of the Italian terramare of the other side of the Apennines, and included ceramic shapes which seemed to be the prototypes of vessels found in the early Sikel tombs of Mykenæan age. The Italic culture here revealed fitted on not only to that of the early pile-settlements of the Po valley and the lake-dwellings of Switzerland, but might be traced to the Danube valley, to Thrace, and the Troad. Among other parallel forms, owl-like idols, bearing a strong resemblance to those described by Dr. Schliemann from the site of Troy, had been found by Padre Morelli, of Genoa, in one of the Finale caves.—Dr. H. Colley March read a paper, in which he sought to prove that the peculiar features of Polynesian ornament are due to a mythology which is, in the main, a symbolism of origin and descent. Thus regarded, unattractive and bewildering designs are resolved into emblems of divinity and demonstrations of lineage. He traced the evolution and defined the attributes of Tiki, explained the nature of oromatus and the meaning of unus, described the various methods of recording pedigrees, whether along a male or along a female line, and illustrated the mythical use of tapa and sinnet. He discussed, as modes of origin, totemism, gemmation, and generation, of which Polynesian examples were given, tabulated the kinship of the superior gods, set forth in full the Tane cult, especially in relation to the axe and the drum, and endeavoured, in conclusion, to account for the development of the complicated Mangaian adze.

ASIATIC.—(Tuesday, Dec. 13.)

LORD NORTHBROOK, president, in the chair.—The Rev. C. J. Ball raised the question of the origin of the Semitic (Phœnician) alphabet. So far, the Egyptian Hieratic theory, though doubted and even denied by some eminent scholars, had held the field; but the lecturer himself thought that the resemblance of the old Hieratic Egyptian characters were in many instances so vague as to be imperceptible, except to those who, on other grounds, maintain the priority of the Egyptian language and system of writing to those of primitive Babylonia. For some years past Mr. Ball has held the contrary opinion, as indicated by him in the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, June, 1890. If the Egyptian hieroglyphic script were not originally indigenous, but an importation from the land of Shinar, it is evident that any instances of fairly apparent similarity between the derived Hieratic characters and Phœnician letters may be due to the ultimate origin of both in the Accadian syllabary. Mr. Ball showed on the blackboard the likeness of some of the hieroglyphic Egyptian alphabetic signs and corresponding Babylonian symbols, by examples taken from a list which he drew up more than a year ago. He then, after a few remarks on the prime identity of the old Chinese hieroglyphs with those of Babylonia, proceeded to state his views on the origin of Semitic alphabetic writing. He claimed for his theory (1) that it preserved recognisable echoes of the familiar names of the letters (aleph-alpha, beth-beta, &c.), whereas the Egyptian theory is obliged to sacrifice them at one stroke; and (2) that it exhibited prototypes sufficiently similar for precisely those letters in the case of which the Egyptian comparison most conspicuously failed. It was further argued that diversity of forms was, in some instances at least, based upon a real diversity of source; and that in many instances the Phœnician letter plainly represents what may be called the common element in the number of characters indicative of the same initial sound (Amlaut). Thus, a character might be regarded as a sort of generalisation from a number of related syllabic signs, which might have concurrent uses for a time, or in different localities. The lecturer maintained that signs representing simple open syllables like ba, ya, da, are already virtually alphabetical. The Cypriote, Japanese, and other derived systems of writing were adduced in illustration; and it was suggested that the strong tendency of Accadian to drop the final consonants of shut syllables, and the phonetic spelling of closed syllables by resolution into two open ones, e.g., lig, li-ki, shid, shi-ti, as well as cases like ag (from gag), a-ka, u-lu from (ghul), i-li from (gil) had a good deal to do with preparing the way for the so-called alphabetic writing. The doctrine of an "inherent a," as we see it in the Devanagari alphabet and in the Ethiopic syllabary, where, moreover, all words are signified by modifications of the consonants according to a regular scheme, and indeed the omission of vowel signs from the Phœnician alphabet itself, may be considered to corroborate this view of the letters having been at the outset open syllables, that is to say, syllables which were either such primitively, or had become such in process of the wear and tear of the original language. Mr. Ball's paper will appear in an early number of the Journal of the Society.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL.—(Monday, Dec. 19.)

H. S. ASHBE, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. Henry B. Wheatley read a paper on "The Present Condition of English Bibliography, and Suggestions for the Future." After reviewing the materials already existing for a general bibliography of English literature, Mr. Wheatley urged that the society should undertake the work of a complete bibliography, which, he maintained, might be accomplished by well-organised co-operative effort within a reasonable time.—A discussion ensued, in which several members took part.—The society now numbers upwards of 170 members. It was announced that the council had decided to issue an early number of the Transactions. Several donations to the Bibliographical Library were reported.

ARISTOTELIAN.—(Monday, December 19.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair. Miss E. C. Jones was elected a member. Prof. A. G. Greenhill read a paper on "The Measurement of Space, Time, and Matter." The paper discussed the borderland which lies between the measurement of space, time, and matter, as constituting mathematical science, and the definition of these three things, for which the mathematicians look for assistance to the philosophers. For mathematics, space, time, and matter constitute the three indefinable qualities of nature; but although incapable of definition, they are capable of measurement by means of the units of length, time, and weight. The paper examined the various units of measurement, with a view to showing their arbitrary character.—A discussion followed, in which Colonel Allen Cunningham, Mr. Hebbel, and Prof. Hudson (of the Mathematical Society) took part.

FINE ART.

THE EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

THE sixth ordinary general meeting of the Egypt Exploration Fund since its incorporation as a society (the tenth since the foundation of the Fund in 1883) was held on Wednesday afternoon, December 14, in the large room of the Zoological Society, 3, Hanover-square. Mr. E. Maunde Thompson, principal librarian of the British Museum, and a vice-president of the Fund, was in the chair, in the unavoidable absence of the president, Sir John Fowler, Bart., who was confined to the house with a severe bronchial attack. There were present:—Prof. Reginald Stuart Poole, vice-president of the Fund; Mr. H. A. Grueber, hon. treasurer; Judge Baylis; Mr. W. Fowler; Mr. T. Farmer Hall, and other members of the committee, together with many subscribers and others interested in the work of the society.

The proceedings were opened by the chairman, who called upon the secretary to read the minutes of the last general meeting, the list of members of committee who were retiring in rotation, and the list of members recommended for re-election. M. de Morgan, Directeur Général du Service des Antiquités en Egypte, was recommended for election as a new member of the committee, and Prof. Reginald Stuart Poole was proposed as hon. secretary to succeed the late Miss Amelia B. Edwards. This motion was proposed by the Rev. F. C. Norton, and seconded by the Rev. Dr. A. H. Kellog. Before putting the resolution to the meeting, Mr. Maunde Thompson expressed his opinion that no one had greater claims on the society or would do the work of hon. secretary more efficiently than Prof. Poole, who had consented to undertake the task. He added that the work of the Fund being a large undertaking, the post of hon. secretary was no sinecure, but entailed a large amount of correspondence, especially with persons abroad. Mr. Poole, after over forty years' service, was leaving the British Museum, and would, therefore, now have some leisure to attend to the work of the Fund. The Rev. A. H. Kellog, in seconding the resolution, remarked that, as an American, he could speak with knowledge of the confidence placed in the direction of the Fund by his countrymen.

Major-Gen. Sir Francis Grenfell (late Sirdar of the Egyptian Army) then asked leave to say a few words before the resolution was put to the meeting. He remarked that it was unnecessary for him to speak of Prof. Poole's appointment, but he wished to point out the great advantage of adding M. de Morgan's name to the committee. He spoke as a ten years' resident in Egypt and a former member of the committee of the Boulak (now Ghizeh) Museum; and though he had no personal knowledge of M. de Morgan, he felt sure from all he had heard that it would be beneficial to associate his name with that of the Fund, not only for the sake of the Fund itself, but also for other learned societies interested in the work. The resolution was put from the chair and unanimously carried.

Mr. Maunde Thompson then proposed the election of Mr. Charles Dudley Warner as vice-president honoris causa for the United States of America, to succeed the late George W. Curtis. He read the following extract from a letter written by the Rev. Dr. W. C. Winslow (vice-president and hon. secretary for America): "Be good enough to present the name of Charles Dudley Warner, of Hartford, Connecticut, as that of an eminent man who is worthy to be honorary vice-president of our society. I had the good fortune to graduate at the same college (Hamilton, founded in 1812) with Mr. Warner, and to receive with him in 1886 an honorary degree, that of Ph.D., his being L.H.D. L.H.D. stands for Litterarum Humaniorum Doctor or doctor of polite letters, and for your Litt.D. It is the degree Columbia at its centennial gave to our dear friend, Miss Edwards, and to myself."

Mr. Thompson said that he did not think the meeting could do better than follow Mr. Winslow's suggestion, and elect Mr. Charles Dudley Warner as vice-president honoris causa for U.S.A.

Miss Maitland (Principal of Somerville Hall, Oxford), in seconding the resolution, said:—"It gives me great pleasure to second the resolution proposed, but I regret that the task has not fallen into worthier hands. In speaking before this meeting, I feel that I am speaking as one ignorant and unlearned, and yet, perhaps, it is possible that I may represent in my person a type of supporters of the Fund of whom there are many both in England and America. It has already been mentioned how largely our American brothers and sisters have forwarded the work of the Fund. I must say for myself that my first interest in Egyptology was aroused by the writings of our late honorary secretary, whose death we all so deeply deplore, and whose charming individuality afterwards greatly added to the interest which I then felt in the subject itself. By her untiring devotion, and by her undying enthusiasm for the cause which she had taken up, and which she defended with such eloquence and such power, she inspired all those who heard her, or who had the great happiness of knowing her, with enthusiasm in that for which she gave up so much during the later years of her life. She was the heart and soul of our cause. About twenty-five years ago, one of our poets wrote:

'Great were his fate who on the earth should linger,

Sleep for an age, and stir himself again,

Watching that terrible and fiery finger

Shrive the falsehoods from the souls of man.'

Something of this sort has been revealed to us in these times. The book of the past has been reopened for us, and the pages have been turned back, so that during the past twenty-five years we have known more and more of the past and of the past civilisations, of the great story of how man built up civilisations, which then passed away, of how he has planned and how he has failed; we have learnt facts about these early days, about the civilisations of Egypt, of Assyria, of Phœnicia, which could not by any possibility have been known to previous generations; and much of this knowledge has been made easy for those of us who are ignorant and unlearned both in England and America, by the work of our late secretary. I am sure I may say with truth, that there has been added to the lives of many persons, both in England and America, a fresh interest, a new pleasure, an experience which they never expected to enjoy, mainly arising out of the work of the Egypt Exploration Fund. It is perhaps natural, in America even more than in England, that a deep interest should be taken in the records of the past. There is no doubt that in America the interest in the work of the Egypt Exploration Fund is extremely keen. As has already been mentioned to this meeting, you have only to glance at the balance sheet in order to see how true this is. There are no links that bind the Old World to the New closer than the literary links; no friendship closer than literary friendship. When Miss Edwards visited America at the request of many known and many unknown friends, she aroused and renewed and refreshed the interest already created in that country in the work of the Fund; and I think I may truthfully say that there was no friend she made on that visit with whom she had more pleasant intercourse than with the gentleman we are now asked to appoint as honorary vice-president, Mr. Charles Dudley Warner. Mr. Warner's name is known to all circles in England. The Fund during the last year or two has suffered heavy losses. Mr. Lowell, among our American friends, was an unspeakable loss. It was once quaintly said of him that 90,000,000 of people held him in affectionate regard—that is to say, the whole of the English-speaking race. It was perhaps an exaggerated compliment, but there was something of truth in it. Mr. Warner is not so well known on this side of the ocean which divides the two continents, but for all that he is well known. His literary work—its humour, delicacy, power, fertility of imagination, and finish—is known to every one of us; and I believe I am right in saying that he has been a supporter of the Fund from the time it was started in America. I have great pleasure in moving that Mr. Charles Dudley Warner be elected as honorary vice-president to succeed the late G. W. Curtis."—The chairman then put the resolution, which was unanimously carried.

Prof. R. S. Poole next expressed his thanks to the meeting in the following words: Ladies and Gentlemen, "I only wish to say one word in acknowledgment of the honour you have done me in electing me to this office. I am perfectly aware that the labours of the late honorary secretary were exceedingly arduous. Miss Edwards had extraordinary zeal, great enthusiasm, and unlimited energy. Happily she has left not merely the remembrance of that energy, but in addition she has left a secretary, Miss Paterson, trained by her, and perfectly competent to carry out the duties of the position in a satisfactory manner. Therefore I do not feel that the post is a difficult one, though it is an invidious one; and I shall do my best in your service to carry on the administration of the Fund and, as far as possible, to knit closer the relations between ourselves and our friends—our kinsmen—in America, and with the distinguished person in Egypt who has been elected by the meeting, and who will, I am sure, do all that is possible to look after our interests. I agree with what Sir Francis Grenfell said and am confident that the compliment so charmingly paid to M. de Morgan will be well appreciated. He is a generous man, and so far as lies in his power he will, I believe, be a very efficient helper to the Fund."

His Honour Judge Baylis, on proposing the re-appointment of the honorary auditors, said: "It is my pleasing duty to propose that Mr. J. Hilton and the Rev. R. M. Blakiston be reappointed honorary auditors. I do not know whether you have in your hands the balance sheet, but I think it must be gratifying to every member to see that we have accumulated funds amounting to about £4,300 after payment of all expenses, and after meeting of all liabilities. It has not happened to be the good fortune of every association to be similarly financed; but if any one thing tells us of the very great interest which is felt in this Egypt Exploration Fund, it is the fact that we have so many subscribers and so many contributors of one sort and the other, and that we are in this flourishing condition. And I would say further that it is gratifying to all Englishmen to see the active assistance which we are receiving from our American friends. You will find, if you look at the list, that no less than £1350 has come from this source through Dr. Winslow's hands—a very large sum indeed to come from America. This fact, I think, should be very gratifying to all of us as showing the deep interest which America has in the old country and in its undertakings. Now, with regard to the auditing, you may, of course, be quite sure that the work will be well done by Mr. Hilton and Mr. Blakiston. It has been well done on former occasions, and, therefore, we have every reason to expect that it will be equally well done in future. I have no doubt that they go through with the greatest care all the receipts and other figures and see that they are correct and accurate in every particular. With regard to the expenditure, that is a matter in your hands. In this connection I should like just to say a word or two in regard to the work which has already been accomplished. Since the Fund was founded in 1883, under the presidency of Sir Erasmus Wilson, now, unfortunately, no longer with us, your committee has issued what are called Memoirs—ten Memoirs—and if you look at the titles of these publications you will see that they refer to some of the most interesting places in Egypt, commencing with one dealing with Pithom. In regard to this Memoir, I am sure that it is gratifying to you that a third edition of Pithom was published in 1887. I only say this in order to show that the money expended in this manner has been well spent, and that you are justified in seeking support from others and in saying to them, 'Come and subscribe.' The very works themselves, I find, are worth the subscription. I won't detain you any longer. You can by referring to your papers, pretty well see for yourselves how the various publications have sold, the number which has been published, and other particulars. Then, as I say, have already been published, and we are going to issue more. I have very great pleasure in proposing the reappointment of Messrs. Hilton and Blakiston as auditors."—The motion was seconded by Mr. Hollier Gosselin and carried.

The hon. treasurer, Mr. H. A. Gruber, then read his financial report for the year 1891-92 and presented the balance sheet: "The balance sheet which it is my duty to lay before you this day shows that the finances of the Egypt Exploration Fund remain in a sound and satisfactory condition, and that, in spite of the very trying year that we have passed, they continue to make steady progress. As in former years this state of affairs is due to the labours (now unfortunately at an end) of your late hon. secretary, Miss Edwards; to the continued indefatigable zeal of your hon. treasurer for America, the Rev. Dr. W. C. Winslow; to the hearty co-operation of the several local honorary secretaries, and to many individual members of the Fund. The chief items of the balance sheet now in your hands may be thus briefly summarised. First, as to our expenditure and liabilities. The total expenditure for the year 1891-1892 has been £2474 15s. 5d., which sum is made up as follows: (1) For M. Naville's expenses connected with his excavations at Tmei-el-Amdid, Baghieh, and Tell-Mokdam, £365 17s. 1d. (2) For Count d'Hulst's work at Behbeit-el-Hagar, £527 15s.; this last sum includes Count d'Hulst's salary for the greater part of the year. (3) For the transport of the sculptures found at Abnās in the previous season from London to their several destinations in England, America, and Australia, £351 17s. 6d. In my report of last year I mentioned that this amount was outstanding, as it was incurred after July 31, 1891. (4) For two casts of the capital of the column from Abnās which was presented to the British Museum, £9 16s. 0d. These were given to Chadwick Museum, Bolton, and the Fine Art Museum at Adelaide, as the columns which those institutions received were quite perfect minus the capital in each case. (5) For the Survey Fund, £681 19s. 2d., which sum includes £234 for the salaries of Mr. Newberry and Mr. Fraser; and £447 19s. 2d., which represents, besides the general expenses in Egypt, those of the artist, Mr. W. M. Blackden, and the tracer, Mr. Howard Carter, who gave their valuable services to the Fund. (6) For publications, £192 5s., which was incurred in the completion of the printing and the carrying through of the plates of Bubastis, in printing of the extra special report, and other expenses connected with packing, labelling, &c. (7) For the customary outlay connected with rent of offices, secretarial salaries, printing circulars, stationery, advertising, postage, &c., £315 5s. 4d. The somewhat large sum of £84 19s. 8d. for sundry office expenses was partly incurred in connexion with the establishment of the offices of the Fund at 37, Great Russell-street, consequent on the death of Miss Edwards. The total receipts for the same period have been £2673 15s. 8d.—viz. (1) By subscriptions and donations, £2331 2s. 11d., which may be thus subdivided—(a) through your late hon. secretary, Miss Edwards, £370 5s. 7d.; (b) through the bankers, the local hon. secretaries, and the treasurer, £499 12s. 2d.; (c) through the Rev. Dr. W. C. Winslow, from America, £1350; (d) from M. and Mme. Hentsch, of Geneva, their handsome yearly donation of £30; (e) from contributions to the Survey Fund, £81 5s. 2d.; (f) from the sale of publications, £185 4s. 1d.; and (g) from special contributions towards the expenses of the transport of antiquities, £157 8s. 8d.—of this sum the trustees of the British Museum generously contributed £100. On comparing our financial position of last year with that of the previous one, we arrive at the following results:—The gross expenditure for 1890-1891 was £2517 15s. 1d. as against £2474 15s. 5d. for 1891-1892; and the gross receipts over the same periods were £2902 18s. 8d. as against £2673 15s. 8d. It will thus be seen that there has been a falling off of nearly £100 in our receipts during last year as compared with the previous one. This deficit may be attributed mainly to one item only—viz., to the special contributions for the Survey Fund in this country—last year they amounted only to £41 5s. as against £180 9s. 10d. in the previous year. It is true that the large sum collected under this heading in 1890-91 was almost entirely due to Miss Edwards's personal efforts and to the effect caused by her lectures; yet it is a serious matter that this source of our income should show such a serious decline, as the Survey is now in full working order, and in consequence is likely to prove henceforth an important item in our expenditure. I bring this to your notice in the hope that those who did so much out of personal regard to Miss Edwards may also extend their liberality out of regard to her memory. Any falling off upon any other items has been more than counterbalanced by the increased subscriptions received from America through Dr. Winslow. In 1890-91 these subscriptions were £1050, but last year they amounted to £1350, just £300 more. This amount includes the subscriptions to the Survey as well as for excavation. Anyone who knows the difficulty of keeping up such a subscription list as ours, and in maintaining interest in the working of the Fund, can well understand the labour that it has entailed; and I think, therefore, that Dr. Winslow is deserving of your special thanks. The result of the foregoing figures shows that on the 31st July, 1891, our cash balance at the bank was £1172 8s. 1d., and at the same time in 1892 it stood at £1371 8s. 9d. I cannot conclude my report to you without some reference to the great loss which we have sustained this year—a loss which must be present to the minds of all at this meeting. I need scarcely say that I refer to the death of our devoted hon. secretary, Miss Edwards, who was the very soul of the Egypt Exploration Fund since its foundation. From the time that I undertook the duties of treasurer, now nearly five years ago, I was in almost daily correspondence with Miss Edwards, and no one is better able than I am to testify to her great devotion to the work of which she was the actual founder. It is, indeed, a great crisis in the history of the Fund, and one which will require the best efforts of all who have the cause at heart to tide over. The greatest tribute that we can pay to her memory is to preserve what she has built up, and to carry out at our best what, during the last years of her life, was her constant care and thought."

Mr. Pollard moved the adoption of the report as follows: "The report we have just heard has, I think, three points of great interest. In the first place, it shows that there has been an increase in the amount subscribed since last year. I do not wonder at the number of our subscribers increasing when the excellent works which have been produced are borne in mind. Then I am very glad to find that our American friends are such large contributors. I can bear testimony to the very great and intelligent interest which they have taken in all that concerns Egypt. I visited many during this last spring, and could not help being struck with the interest and enthusiasm which they displayed on this subject. I should like to congratulate the committee upon having obtained for us such excellent quarters for our new office. I think it will be a great improvement having one office instead of two, and that it will tend to reduce our expenses, and to further our work."

Mr. William Fowler seconded the adoption in the following words: "I have great pleasure in seconding this motion. There is really very little to say upon it beyond what has already been said by the last speaker. Our funds are in good order, and we are especially indebted to our American friends for their condition. But I should not like to second a motion of this sort on the present occasion, without adding a word or two with regard to the great event of this last year, namely, the lamented death of Miss Edwards. I think it is nearly twenty years ago since I met her on the lake of Como, at a time when she was thinking of going to Egypt shortly afterwards. When I was in Egypt in 1888 I remember writing a letter to the Times with regard to the condition of some monuments I visited. This letter caused a good deal of interest in her mind, and from that time I had several communications from her, and especially when I helped her to raise a larger sum for the Fund than she had at that time contemplated. And every time I met her, here or elsewhere, I was deeply impressed, alike by her intelligence and by her earnestness in this work. In my opinion she was a rare and extraordinary woman, and my view about her has been intensified very much by reading her last work which came out, I believe, a year ago. I consider that book a most extraordinary work, and well worthy of perusal by anyone who has not yet read it. I read the book twice myself, and was deeply impressed by it. I feel that we have lost what we cannot replace, and I feel sure that we shall all desire to carry on the work so dear to Miss Edwards. I suppose that practically the point of greatest interest and importance now is the Survey which is going on; and, with regard to that, I do not see why there should not be a considerable increased subscription in this country. It is usual when there is a good deal of money in hand to say that you do not want any money, but I do not think that this would be the general feeling on this subject. At this moment we want our subscriptions kept up and increased, for the purpose of continuing the Survey. My own interest in the matter has, I think, never waned since the time when I read the Thousand Miles up the Nile, and went a good way myself up the river in the year 1886. I am going, I hope, to Egypt again next month, and if I can be of any service to the Fund in any way while there, I shall be only too glad. While I have great pleasure in recording this resolution, I do so at the same time with deep regret that I shall never see again in this room the lady whom I so much admired."—The resolution was agreed to.

Then followed the address from the chair: We have now arrived at that stage of our proceedings at which you will regret the absence of Sir John Fowler. Had he been in the chair to-day, he would have been certain to give you a most eloquent and instructive address. Called upon almost at a moment's notice to take the chair in his absence, I cannot promise to speak with one-tenth of the eloquence or the knowledge which he would have displayed. First let me say, in regard to the removal of our offices to their new quarters at 37, Great Russell-street, and to the concentration of all secretarial matters in the hands of Miss Paterson, that I think it will be of very great advantage to us to have our headquarters situated in that place. You have heard that our funds are flourishing, and I think they certainly are. On the other hand you have heard that the money coming in for the Survey has not been as plentiful as might be wished. I think that is accountable for in this way: not by any falling off in the work of the Survey, but by the fact that English and American people are practical, and generally like to see something for their money. Perhaps this is a somewhat gross way of putting it, but no volume of surveys has yet appeared, though one is on the point of appearing. The tombs of Beni-Hasan have been explored by Messrs. Newberry, Fraser, and Blackden, and Mr. Newberry, to whom the editing has been intrusted, will, before leaving the country, pass the first part for the press; and I think that when the volume is in the hands of experts every one will be satisfied by the way in which the work has been done. Those who have seen the plates of the wall paintings at Beni-Hasan will admit that nothing could be better. The Survey will be carried on at Tel-el-Amarna this season, where most interesting tablets have been discovered, showing the diplomatic and domestic connexions between the kings of Egypt, Babylon, and Assyria. As to the general work for the past year, we shall presently hear from M. Naville what he has done. He has excavated at Tmei-el-Amidid, Baglieh, Tel Mokdam, and Behbeit-el-Hagar. I shall leave it to him to give you detailed accounts of this work. Count D'Hulst will continue the work upon which he has been engaged during the past year. M. Naville will continue the great work he has before him, but one must admit and confess to the meeting that at the present moment we do not know exactly where the site will be which he will excavate. We must leave it in his hands—and I am sure we could leave it in no better hands—to arrange this with M. de Morgan. M. de Morgan has shown a most friendly disposition in regard to the work of the Fund, and I am sure will do everything in his power to give us a suitable site. With regard to the members of the society, let me say one or two words. We number now nearly 1500 members and subscribers. I believe there is a difference between the two. I do not think that any society can show such an enormous and rapid development as this, taking into consideration the few years in which it has been in existence. I think everyone will admit that this large number of 1500 supporters is a matter of very great congratulation. Interest in the study of antiquities has grown within the last twenty years at an enormous rate. This we must attribute partly I think to improved general education—to higher education, and more exact scholarship, and, undoubtedly, also to the better education of women. And there is no falling off in the attractions of other branches of the study of antiquities; in fact there has been an increase. Amongst other things, the foundation of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies proves this. But with the study of the antiquity of Egypt, I feel that there is something more than the interest which accompanies mere antiquity, or that which gives a charm to the aesthetic side of antiquity, so strongly prominent in regard to the antiquities of Greece. In the antiquities of Egypt we have first of all the enormous antiquity of the place, which in itself must ever have a great attraction for humanity; and, in addition, there is the fact of the association of this land with previous ages of men and civilisations which have since passed away—which is always a fact which must always appeal in the most powerful manner to our natural feelings of humanity. And then there is another very strong interest—the domestic interest. No one, I think, can go through the galleries of our British Museum and see the Egyptian collections of ancient domestic implements, the toys of children, the wine cups, and so forth, and know that they have been used by people living thousands of years ago, who felt like ourselves and had the same feeling as ourselves, but must be touched and affected, quite apart from the feelings aroused by purely aesthetic considerations and by considerations of mere antiquity. To the attractions of Egyptology have also to be added the interest and fascination derived from the great part which its people have played in Biblical history. We never know what may be found in Egypt. I have already referred to the Tel-el-Amarna tablets showing the connexion between the Babylonians, the Assyrians, and the Egyptians. And, as you know, some two years ago we recovered in Egypt a lost work of Aristotle, on the Constitution of Athens. I am quite sure of this, that sooner or later, we shall find records connected with the people of that country older than anything which has hitherto been found. It must come. Only a corner of Egypt has yet been explored, and what we have already found is an augury of something far better in the future. In conclusion, I would remark upon our losses during the year. Three old and important names in this society have disappeared. Miss Edwards, whose lamented death has been referred to already; Mr. G. W. Curtis, our vice-president; and Prof. Hort. In regards to Miss Edwards I think it would be presumptuous in me to attempt to add anything to the eloquent and touching words of Miss Maitland. Let me only say that I feel on this occasion that silence is more eloquent than words. She was truly animæ divindum nostras, and her connexion with Egypt is not severed by death. Her name will still be connected with the professorial chair which she founded at University College, to which she has also left her archaeological collections; and I think we may congratulate ourselves that the first occupant of that chair is Mr. Flinders Petrie, whose devotion to the cause of Egyptology has been the admiration of us all. Prof. Hort I knew personally; and we must all deplore his death, not only on personal grounds, but because he was a man whose scholarship was very great. His great work in connexion with the revision of the Bible is well known to all of us, and we all know, also, his great learning with respect to Egypt, and his great interest in the work of the society. He, for one, shared my feeling that some day we should find in Egypt far older evidences of antiquity than anything which has ever yet been brought to light."

The secretary (Miss Paterson) then read her report: "It is not necessary for me to give you any account of M. Naville's excavations during last season, as he will himself tell us the results of that campaign, and our chairman has just mentioned the sites upon which he worked. I will, therefore, pass on to speak of the Archaeological Survey.

"At our general meeting in March, Mr. Newberry gave us a full report of the last season's work of the Archaeological Survey officers. Since that meeting Mr. Newberry and Mr. Griffith have been engaged in preparing the MSS. and plates of the two volumes on Beni-Hasan for the press, and it is hoped that the first volume will be issued in a few weeks. An explanation is due to subscribers to the special Survey Fund for our delay in issuing the first Survey volume, which should have been distributed in the early spring. There have been many reasons for this delay; but the mention of one or two of the chief causes will, I feel sure, convince you that the delay was unavoidable. To begin with, it was found impossible to complete the first volume until the texts, &c., to be published in the second, and even the third volume, had been carefully studied, for the inscriptions of one tomb throw much light on those of another belonging to the same place and period; and even the tombs at El Bersheh are intimately connected with those of Beni-Hasan. The very fact that Mr. Newberry brought back last year some fourteen thousand square feet of tracings will give you some idea of the time required to prepare them for the press. Secondly, as soon as the first batch of MS. had been despatched to the printers, a fresh and serious delay arose, for it was found necessary to cast fresh type in order to obtain the proper characters and signs for the accurate transliteration of the texts. These difficulties have, however, now been overcome, and it only remains to push the work through the press as quickly as possible. The first volume of Beni-Hasan will be presented to all persons who subscribed £1 or more to the Survey Fund previous to July 31, 1891 (i.e., for the year 1890-1), and all subsequent subscribers may purchase it for 20s. The second volume of Beni-Hasan, to be issued in the summer of 1893, will be presented to subscribers to the Survey for the year 1891-2 (i.e., between Aug. 1, 1891 and July 31, 1892); and the third survey volume (on the tombs at El Bersheh) will be presented to such subscribers for the current year 1892-3 in the autumn of 1893.

"Two members of the Archaeological Survey staff are already in Egypt, namely, Mr. Percy Buckman (artist) and Mr. Howard Carter (draughtsman). The site of Tel-el-Amarna and the tombs which adjoin it will provide material for this season's work, and promise results of peculiar interest, both historic and artistic. As there are forty-six inscribed tombs, for the most part untouched, we cannot hope to do more than begin out work there during this season. Mr. Percy E. Newberry and Mr. John E. Newberry (architect), will shortly join Mr. Buckman and Mr. Carter; but it was not considered advisable that Mr. Percy E. Newberry should leave England until the first volume of Beni-Hasan had passed through the press. A complete set of the proofs of the plates for this Memoir are laid upon the table for examination by subscribers.

"Besides the ordinary annual report of the general meeting and the scientific annual memoirs, the committee have decided to issue a popular account of each season's work, under the title of "Archaeological Report of the Egypt Exploration Fund." This report will also contain notes on the general progress of Egyptology during the year, notices of recent publications on this science, and an archaeological map of Egypt, kept up to date as regards the identifications of lost sites. It will be uniform in size with the special extra report published in 1890-91. While on the subject of publications, I will mention that the delay in presenting subscribers to the general fund with the Memoir for 1891-2 has been caused by the scarcity of material from the excavations at Ahnas-el-Medineh. It has now been arranged, however, to include in M. Naville's Memoir on Ahnas a short account of the scenes and inscriptions in a highly interesting tomb at El Kab, copied by Mr. J. J. Tylor, and I trust this volume will soon be in the press.

"Mr. Blackden, who acted as the artist on the survey staff last season, has lately sent over some copies of Coptic paintings from the walls of a quarry above Dér Abu Hannes. They represent (1) the archangel, Gabriel, appearing to the high priest, Zacharias, in the temple, and prophesying the birth of John the Baptist; (2) Zacharias coming out of the temple, with his hand to his mouth to show that he is dumb, and making signs to the people who are waiting for him outside; (3) the meeting of Zacharias and his wife, Elizabeth; (4) the archangel, Gabriel, appearing to Mary, and telling her of the birth of Christ. These paintings were previously copied by Sir J. Gardner Wilkinson during his last visit to Egypt."

The chairman, before calling upon M. Naville, made a remark with regard to the distribution of antiquities, stating that hitherto there had generally been something to distribute at the general meeting, but on the present occasion there was not very much as yet—chiefly small collections from El-Bersheh and Tel-Mokdam—and that these required further examination before they could be distributed. He therefore merely took the general sense of the meeting, and asked its sanction for the committee to make the distributions later. This was agreed to.

M. Naville then read his paper, which will appear in an early number of the ACADEMY, and concluded it by saying:—"I am sorry that my campaign was not more successful; but you must remember that excavations are largely matters of fortune, and that the very people who make definite offers about investigations and excavations are those who never tried their hands themselves. I hope on another occasion I shall be able to make you a more satisfactory report."

The chairman asked the meeting to pass a vote of thanks to M. Naville for his paper, and said he thought they would do this more readily when they heard that M. Naville had come from Switzerland especially to be present at the meeting. The motion having been seconded, was put to the meeting and carried. A report from Count D'Hulst was laid upon the table. Prof. Poole then proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman. The proposal was duly seconded and carried by acclamation.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ROMAN INSCRIPTION FROM CARLISLE.

Trinity College, Oxford: Dec. 27, 1892.

May not the passage "Vixit annos plus minusve quem ad modum accomodatum fati animam revocavit," mean "behind sixty years more or less, for it was so that when his spirit was prepared to meet its destiny, he recalled it to life (and did not die)." Quem ad modum would thus explain vixit annos plus minusve. He was often on the point of death, but so often recovered when he seemed ready to die, that he lived to the advanced age of sixty or thereabouts.

It appears to me incredible that quem should be separated from ad modum, or mean anything but "as," "as indeed"; and not less improbable that revocavit animam should = reddidit animam "he died," as suggested by Mr. Rushforth.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

PART I., No. 2, of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal contains three papers of numismatic interest. Major H. G. Raverty, from his unrivalled knowledge of the history of Khwarazm, supplies dynastic and other information about some of the Muhammadan coins collected by the Afghan Boundary Commission. Mr. W. Theobald describes a coin of Arakan, with a bull on the obverse, and on the reverse a symbolical object resembling the trisul of Siva, though possibly of Buddhist origin. Babu M. M. Chakravarti writes about the very rare gold medals called Rama-tankis, of which no less than five are in his possession. They are all of the same type, and were found near Puri in Orissa. On one side they have Rama and Sita, seated on a throne and surrounded by attendants; and on the other a series of figures carrying fans. The legends, if any, are most obscure. There is no evidence that they were ever issued as coins. The Babu conjectures that they were coronation medals, struck for distribution among Brahmans. Their date is also doubtful, though probably none are older than the fourteenth century. At present they are highly valued, and even worshipped, by Hindus of the Vaishnava sect.

The first edition of Edward Burne-Jones: A Record and Review, having been exhausted soon after publication, Messrs. Bell, in view of the exhibition of that artist's work at the New Gallery, have arranged to issue a second and cheaper edition immediately.

The Art Journal for the new year starts with a new editor, Mr. David Croll Thomson vice Mr. Huish. The colour of the wrapper is changed from buff to a greenish grey, and the paper appears more highly pressed than before. Otherwise there is little note of alteration, the etching (an original one of a girl with dogs by Mr. R. W. Macbeth) being no better printed than usual. An excellent article by Miss Julia Cartwright on Mr. Burne-Jones, and another on "Tardini's at Florence," by Mr. Humphry Ward, lead the way to other interesting papers.

MUSIC.

THE Musical Times has issued a special Beethoven number, full of welcome details concerning the master, illustrations, &c. The facsimile from a pocket-book of the year 1795 forms an attractive page. There is also the picture of Therese Gräfin von Brunswick, the famous "Unsterbliche Geliebte," with the inscription which she wrote on the back of the frame when she gave the painting to Beethoven. Sir G. Grove contributes an interesting paper on "The Birds in the Pastoral Symphony." Mr. J. Bennett, in his cleverly written introductory article, tells us, in reference to Beethoven's later works, that "it is conceivable that the language of music was too weak for the burden of the thought." Why did he not also suggest that the forms of music may have proved fetters?

ELLIOT STOCK'S MAGAZINES FOR 1893.

NOW READY FOR JANUARY, 1893, COMMENCING A NEW VOLUME.

Price One Shilling

THE ANTIQUARY:

A Magazine Devoted to the Study of the Past.

Edited by Rev. J. C. COX, LL.D.

CONTENTS.

- NOTES of the MONTH. (Illustrated.)
NOTES of the MONTH FOREIGN.
EXCAVATIONS at SILCHESTER in 1891. By W. H. St. John Hope, M.A.
RESEARCHES in CRETE.—V. The Isthmus of Hierapytna. By Dr. F. Halbherr. (Illustrated.)
THE HASTINGS MUSEUM, WORCESTER. By John Ward. (Illustrated.)
NORMAN WORK in the NAVE TRIFORIUM of BEVERLEY MINSTER. By John Blagden, F.R.I.B.A. (Illustrated.)
QUARTERLY NOTES on ROMAN BRITAIN.—No. VIII. By F. Haverfield, M.A., F.S.A.
THE MONUMENT of JOHN LORD L'ARCY and MEINHILL, SELBY ABBEY CHURCH. (Illustrated.)
NOOKS and CORNERS of MEREFORDSHIRE. (Illustrated.)
RAGGED RELICS. By Rev. C. N. BARNHAM.
IMPORTANT ARCHAEOLOGICAL DISCOVERY at GORING, SUSSEX. By JOHN SAWYER.
PRELATES of the BLACK PRIARS of ENGLAND. By Rev. C. F. R. PALMER.
PUBLICATIONS and PROCEEDINGS of ARCHAEOLOGICAL SOCIETIES.
REVIEWS and NOTICES of NEW BOOKS. "Castrology, or the History and Traditions of the Canadian Heavens."—"Select Historical Documents of the Middle Ages."—"Primitive Man in Ohio."—"A Calendar to the Feet of Fines for London and Middlesex, from Richard I. to 1834."—"A History of the Earlier Formularies of Faith."—"A Formulary of the Papal Penitentiary in the Thirteenth Century."—"Sussex Folk and Sussex Ways."—"Bygone Leicestershire."—"Books in China, and other Bibliographical Papers."—"Dale and its Abbey."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE DECEMBER NUMBER COMMENCED A NEW VOLUME.

Published Monthly, price Sixpence.

THE BOOKWORM:

A Magazine of Old Time Literature.

CONTENTS of No. 62 for JANUARY, 1893.

- AN ALMANAC of THREE CENTURIES AGO. GLEESON WHITE.
OUR NOTE-BOOK.
UNPUBLISHED LETTERS of BYRON.
A NEW YORK BOOK SALE FIFTY YEARS AGO.
THE MS. of "POEMS by TWO BROTHERS."
BOOK BORROWERS.
THE KELMSCOTT PRESS.
THE BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.
ARCHBISHOP WILLIAMS.
THE PRESERVATION of AUTOGRAPHS.
MISCELLANEA.

THE JANUARY NUMBER NOW READY.
COMMENCING A NEW VOLUME.

Price Threepence.

THE FIELD CLUB:

An Illustrated Magazine of General Natural History.

FOR SCIENTIFIC and UNSCIENTIFIC READERS.

Edited by Rev. THEODORE WOOD.

CONTENTS.

- HOW do YOUNG BIRDS LEARN to SING? By G. W. BULMAN, M.A., B.Sc.
MIMICRY. By the Rev. F. O. MORRIS.
BIRD-LIFE of the NORFOLK BROADS. By the Rev. M. C. H. BIRD, M.A.
THE SLEEP-MOVEMENTS of FLOWERS. By J. H. A. HODGKINS, F.R.H.S.
CORRESPONDENCE.
NOTABILLA.
MEETINGS of SOCIETIES.
OBITUARY. The Rev. A. H. WRATISLAW.
NATURAL HISTORY QUERY.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

NATIONAL

All the Profits are divided among the Assured.

FOR MUTUAL
LIFE ASSURANCE.

PROVIDENT

PROFITS ALREADY DECLARED,
£4,000,000.

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,500,000.
PAID IN CLAIMS, £8,300,000.

INSTITUTION.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost with provision for Old Age.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

JOURNAL OF EDUCATION,

No. 282, for JANUARY.

THE HEAD MASTERS' CONFERENCE.
A BILL TO PROMOTE SECONDARY EDUCATION IN ENGLAND.
THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS. By DOROTHY BEALE.
THE PSYCHOLOGY OF PERSONAL INFLUENCE. By SARAH COBBETT.
TEACHER'S SORE-THROAT. By Mrs. EMIL BEHNKE.
SYMPATHETIC COMPELSION; or, How Not to Compel. By T. H. NIXON.
CORRESPONDENCE—
The Secondary Education Bill and the Teachers' Guild; Anticlerical Language Teaching; Modern Greek; Physical Education; "Beating Down" the Salaries of Assistant Mistresses on "System"; The Training of Secondary Teachers; An Education Circle; The Resolutions of the Teachers' Guild on the Organisation of Secondary Education; Voice Production for Infants.
REVIEWS AND MINOR NOTICES.
ELEMENTARY EDUCATION, 1892.
TECHNICAL EDUCATION.
THE TEACHERS' GUILD OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.
OCCASIONAL NOTES: FOREIGN NOTES.
SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES.
OBITUARY—G. A. SCHRUMPF.
OUR TRANSLATION PRIZE AND EXTRA PRIZE.

Price 6d., per post, 8d.

Office: 86, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

THE EXPOSITOR.

Contents of JANUARY Number. Price 1s.

PAUL'S CONCEPTION OF CHRISTIANITY.—I. The Sources. By the Rev. Prof. A. B. BRUCE, D.D.
THE PARABLE OF THE UNJUST STEWARD. By the Right Rev. W. BOYD CARPENTER, D.D.
THE DIFFICULT WORDS OF CHRIST.—I. The Children at Play. By Rev. JAMES STALKER, D.D.
EXEGETIC STUDIES ON THE LORD'S PRAYER. By the Ven. F. W. PARRAR, D.D., F.R.S.
EVANGELIUM SECUNDUM PETRUM. By Rev. J. O. F. MURRAY, M.A., Dean of Emmanuel College, Cambridge.
THE LATE PROFESSOR HORT. By Rev. J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, M.A., Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, and by Rev. Prof. W. M. RAMSAY, M.A.
APOLOGISTIC ARGUMENT FROM THE NAMES IN ROMANS XVI. By Rev. ALEXANDER MAIR, D.D.

HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE BOOKMAN:

A Monthly Journal for Book-readers, Book-buyers, and Book-sellers. Price 6d.

Contents for JANUARY.

PORTRAITS OF THE LATE SIR WILLIAM OWEN and of MR. RUDYARD KIPLING.
VERY FAR OFF. By JANE BARLOW.
GEORGE HENRY LEWES.
THE SUPPRESSED WORKS OF RUDYARD KIPLING.
UNPUBLISHED LETTERS OF GEORGE ELIOT.
MR. HOLE'S ILLUSTRATIONS TO "A WIDOW IN THIRUS."
THOMAS CARLYLE TO THOMAS AIRD.
NEW BOOKS, NOVEL NOTES, &c.

Publishing Office, 27, Paternoster Row.

FOR CONTENTS OF

THE ANTIQUARY, BOOKWORM, AND FIELD CLUB,

See Mr. ELLIOT STOCK'S Advertisement, page 615.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART

Now ready, price 1s.

For JANUARY, containing—

THE PORTRAITS OF LORD TENNYSON. By THEODORE WATTS. With 9 Illustrations. "Tennyson" (about 1851), by G. F. WATTS, R.A.; "Tennyson" (about 1871), "Tennyson," Medallion by the late T. Woolsea, R.A.; "Tennyson," Bronze Medallion by Prof. LEGROS; "Tennyson" (about 1876), bust by the late T. WOOLNER, R.A.; Cartoon from "Punch," by J. TENNIEL; "Come into the garden, Will," Cartoon from "Punch," by LINLEY SAMMONS; "Tennyson" (about 1880), Etching by Prof. HICKOKER, R.A.; and "Tennyson" (1890), Pencil Drawing by R. LEHMANN.
"AFTER the FESTA." Original Etching by DAVID LAW, R.P.E.
CURRENT ART. By CLAUDE PHILLIPS. With 6 Illustrations.
DESIGN. By WALTER CRANE. With 9 Illustrations by the Author.
WHEN the WORLD WAS YOUNG. Painted by E. J. POYNTER, R.A. With a Sonnet by Miss ELLEN THORNTON FOWLER.
"AFTER the FESTA." Note on Frontispiece.
HENRY G. HINE, V.P.R.I. By FREDERICK WEDMORE. With a Portrait of H. G. Hine, V.P.R.I., and 6 Illustrations of his Works.
THE BELLEVUE ART GALLERIES and MUSEUM, GLASGOW. By OWEN FLEMING. With 3 Illustrations.
CAROLS OF THE YEAR, JANUARY. By A. C. SWINBURNE. With an Illustration by W. F. BARTRICK.
EDWARD BURNE-JONES, A.R.A. With 4 Illustrations.
OUR ILLUSTRATED NOTEBOOK. With 8 Illustrations.
THE CHRONICLE OF ART: ART IN DECEMBER.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London

Now ready, price 7d.

CASSELL'S MAGAZINE

For JANUARY, forming the SECOND PART of the ENLARGED SERIES, containing—

IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED. By ALFRED S. ROBBINS. Illustrated.
IN THE UNITED STATES WEATHER OFFICE. Illustrated from Photographs.
THE SEVEN AGES OF MAN. Illustrated from Modern Life. (In Photographs by Messrs. Boring & Small.)
MARQUETTERIE WOOD STAINING. By E. CROSSLEY. Illustrated.
THE YOUNG CONSCRIPT. For Violin and Piano-forte. By J. M. BESTLEY, Mus. Doc.
STUDENTS' DAY at the NATIONAL GALLERY. By FRANCES A. GERRARD. Illustrated by T. W. Coudery.
FORTUNES IN FACES. By the Author of "How to be Happy though Married," &c. Illustrated.
HOW a WILDERNESS BECAME a GARDEN. A Talk about Ferns. Illustrated.
A GOSSIP FROM BOOKLAND.
NEW PRIZE COMPETITIONS.
CHIT-CHAT ON DRESS.
THE GATHERER.

SERIAL STORIES.
A ROMANCE OF MAN. By C. E. C. WIGGALL, Author of "The Temptation of Dulce Carriers." Illustrated by Hal Ludlow.
RICHARD JENKINS, MASTER. A Story of Adventure. Illustrated.
COMPLETE STORIES.
MR. MEAKIN'S LOOKING GLASS. Illustrated by Sidney Paget.
LADY JANE'S REBELLION. With Illustrations by Gordon Browne.
THE NEASENBURGE ELECTION. Illustrated by Arthur Hopkins, R.W.S.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

Monthly, price 3d.; or, post free, 3d.

THE POSITIVIST REVIEW.

Edited by E. S. BEESLY.

CONTENTS OF JANUARY NUMBER.

HOME RULE FOR LONDON. By FREDERIC HARRISON.
THE USE AND ABUSE OF EXPERIMENTS ON ANIMALS. By Dr. J. H. BRIDGES.
PAYMENT OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT. By THE EDITOR.

REEVES & TURNER, 106, STRAND.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

The JANUARY Number which commences a New Volume, contains—THRENOLOGY. Alfred, Lord Tennyson. By ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
(1) FALSE DEMOCRACY. By W. S. LILLY.
(2) SHAM EDUCATION. By Professor MAHAFFY.
(3) TRAINED WORKERS FOR THE POOR. By Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
IRVING'S "KING LEAR": a New Tradition. By EDWARD R. RUSSELL.
THREE WEEKS IN SAMOA. By the Countess of JERSEY.
"ARCHITECTURE a PROFESSION OF AN ART"? By the Right Hon. Lord GRIMTHORPE.
HAPPINESS IN HELL: a Reply. By the Rev. Father CLARKE, S.J.
MODERN POETS and the MEANING OF LIFE. By FREDERIC W. H. MYERS.
URMI, a POISONED QUEEN. By Miss CORNELIA SOMMER.
THE SILVER QUESTION and INDIA. By General Sir GEO. CHESNEY, M.P.
A REFORMATION OF DOMESTIC SERVICE. By Mrs. LEWIS.
THE PRIEST in POLITICS. By MICHAEL DAVITT.
OU ALLONS-NOUS? By Mons. YVES GUYOT (Deputy).
ASPECTS OF TENNYSON.—II. By THE EDITOR.
London: SAMSON LOW, MARSTON & Co., Ltd.

NOW READY.

JANUARY, 1893.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Edited by ARCHIBALD GROVE.

No. 44.

SCOTLAND'S REVOLT against HOME RULE. By R. WALLACE M.P.
IRELAND'S REPLY. By JOHN E. REDMOND, M.P.
THE FAITH CURE. By Professor CHARCOT.
THE MASTER BUILDER. By HENRIK IBSEN. (A New and Unpublished Play. Scene from Act II.)
ON BIMETALLISM. By ALFRED DE ROTHSCHILD.
ENGLISH SONGS and BALLADS. By the Hon. ROBERT NOEL.
A NEW POOR LAW. By the Rev. J. FROME WILKINSON.
REAL STUARTS or BOGUS STUARTS? By ARCHIBALD FORBES.
"WOMEN, CLERGYMEN, and DOCTORS": a Reply. By Canon WILBEFORCE.
WEBSTER, LAMB, and SWINBURNE. By WILLIAM ARCHER.
A BISHOP ON BUDDHISM. By Professor MAX MÜLLER.
LITERATURE } By H. D. TRAILL.
AND
THE DRAMA. } By L. F. AUSTIN.
LONGMANS, GREEN & Co., London.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR JANUARY.

THE TSAR ALEXANDER III. By E. B. LANK.
THE FINANCIAL ASPECT OF HOME RULE. By J. J. CLANCY, M.P.
JOURNALISM as a PROFESSION. By M. de BLOWITZ.
TEMPERANCE REFORM—
I. THE ATTITUDE OF the ADVANCED PARTY. By W. S. CAINE, M.P.
II. THE DEADLOCK. By GEORGE WYNDRAM, M.P. (With a Note by the Bishop of Chester.)
PESSIMISM and PROGRESS. By the Rev. S. A. ALEXANDER.
THE MEDEVILLE COUNTRY-HOUSE. By MARY DARMESTETER.
THE ENGLISH PARLIAMENT. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.
WHY DO MEN REMAIN CHRISTIANS? By the Rev. T. W. FOWLE.
THE SOCIAL CONDITION OF LABOUR. By E. R. L. GAILL.
Isauster & Co., Limited, Covent Garden, W.C.

FOR CONTENTS OF

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW,

See Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL'S Advertisement, page 504.

On 6th January, 4d., post-free 4½d.

THE "BUILDER."—JUBILEE NUMBER.

(1842—1892).

Ten beautiful and interesting large plates. Art-lovers should write for particulars to the Publisher of "THE BUILDER," 46, Catherine-street, W.C.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s. post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John, by ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

MARK TWAIN says

OF PROF. LOISETTE'S SYSTEM OF MEMORY—
"I had before been able, like most people, to store up and lose things in the dark cellar of my Memory, but he showed me how to light up the cellar. It is the difference—to change the figure—between having money where you can't collect it, and having it in your pocket. The information cost me but little, yet I value it at a prodigious figure."—Prospectus post free from Prof. A. LOISETTE, 37, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

Now ready, 5s. net.

CLARKE ASPINALL:

A Biography.

By WALTER LEWIN.

London: E. W. ALLEN, Ave Maria Lane.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, can be obtained, post free, on application to
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

BREAKFAST OR SUPPER.

E P P S'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING

C O C O A

BOILING WATER OR MILK.

BINDING SECT. JUN 3 , 1966

University of Toronto Library

DO NOT REMOVE
THE CARD
FROM THIS POCKET

Acme Library Card Pocket
LOWE-MARTIN CO. LIMITED

